(7.) It furthers their prayers; when men are all of one heart, there is much sweetness and strength in their prayers. Acts iv. 24, "They lifted up their voice to God with one accord;" all their hearts were as one heart; and ver. 31, "When they had prayed, the place was shaken, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost;" here was a sweet and efficacious prayer, all their hearts were in the prayer, and all were filled with the Holy Spirit. Matt. v. 23, 24, "If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave thy gift, go, and first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." Whilst divisions are amongst brethren, a prohibition lies against our sacrificing, but when there is peace and unity, then heaven is open for acceptance of our prayers. 1 Cor. vii. 5, Paul knew what an enemy contention was to divine duties; and therefore would not have married parties refrain the use of the marriage-bed, without consent of each other; if it were upon will and humour, it would not further, but hinder their prayers. So in 1 Pet. iii. 7, husbands must dwell as men of knowledge with their wives, honour them, though the weaker vessels, look at them as coheirs of the grace of life; and why? that their prayers be not hindered: if there be dissensions, their prayers will suffer; but if there be love, oneness of heart, their prayers will be more spiritual, fervent, and prevalent.

(8.) It is an honour to the Lord Christ, that christians do agree; they are members of his body, and it is a disparagement to the Head to have the members fall out, rend and tear one another; this makes strangers speak and think evil of the way of Christ; hereby he is dishonoured; but when there is one heart among his disciples, when they love one another, and are peaceable, it is a glory to Christ. John xiii. 35, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another." Christ would be known in the world, and have his disciples known from all others; and how? by love. Chrysostom observes, He saith not, by miracles and wonders men shall know you to be my disciples; no, they are laid by: but by love. That is a glorious grace, it shows forth Christ, and who are his; it is not greatness of power, but greatness of love, which declares who are the disciples of Christ, and which honours Christ, 1 John iii. 10.

(9.) Sympathy with each other. If there be one-heartedness among men, what is the burden and comfort of the one, is the burden and comfort of the rest. As in marriage, the sorrows are divided and joys doubled which fall out to persons in that condition, and the reason is, because they are one flesh, and have quasi animam unam, as it were one soul: so where there is oneness of heart, there is a choice sympathy, the blows, wounds, losses, griefs, infirmities of one, are the blows, &c. of all the rest. When Peter and John had been imprisoned, brought before the council, threatened, they went to their own company, and told them how they had been used, and they were affected with their sufferings, and fell to prayer with them. Acts iv. 23, 24. How sensible were the rich christians of the burdens of the poor, pitying and relieving them! ver. 32. And when Peter was in prison, the church sympathized, Acts xii. 4. But where this is wanting, I mean sameness or likeness of spirit, there will be a rejoicing at their sufferings and wrongs, and mourning or envying at their good. They that are divided from others too off glory in the infirmities of others; and if God's hand be upon them or theirs, they say it is a just judgment of God upon them for their judgments, opinions; and so add affliction to the afflicted.

(10.) What evidence of being in the covenant of grace, if there be not union of the heart within itself, union of it to God, and others? what satisfaction can a man have of his being in covenant with God? Here this one-heartedness is prefixed as the first thing we should look at; and so in Jer. xxxiii. 39, "I will give them one heart and one way." Men that want this one-heartedness, cannot but suspect themselves, be jealous of their condition; if it be not in some measure in us, inchoatively and tending to increase, we are not the Lord's, 1 John iii. 18, 19.

(11.) It makes willing to do one for another. How forward was Jonathan to speak and do! &c. Amanibus facile fit omne difficile. Things difficult become easy where love exists; and the ground of it is, Cor est ubi omot, non ubi animat. The heart is where it loves, not where it lives.

1. Helps to unite our hearts.

1. Consider many things are darkly laid down in the Scriptures, and the scope of God and Christ therein is not to cause contention, difference, and censuring, but to unite us more strongly in those things which are clear, and to cause a forbearance of one another in things which are dark and doubtful: Phil. iii. 15, 16, "If in any thing ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you. Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing." Saith Paul, I confide not in my own works or righteousness, but look at Christ alone; I labour to win Christ, and be found in him; I press after him, and none but him, and mind nothing else as a means of salvation. If any be otherwise minded, through ignorance, or weakness of faith, (as many were, who affected mosaical rites and ceremonies,) God shall reveal even this unto you; he will make known the truth unto you. Nevertheless, though there be differences, let us forbear one another therein; and whereto we have attained, let us walk harmoniously and peaceably together, minding the same things. What is clearly held out unto us in the gospel let us consent in, and walk answerably; in what is dark, doubtful, let us forbear each other, and stay till God reveal more. If we cannot unite in all, let us unite in what is clear. Things fundamental, and absolutely necessary, are most clearly laid down in the word; they are expressly commanded, or held forth in Scripture, whether they be matters of faith or practice; they are not things drawn out by remote consequences, and strength of men's parts, but immediately from, or in, the word; and in these most may or do agree, not being many in number: so far as we have attained in these, let us walk; and, as king James saith, in other things place may be given to christian liberty: and let us take heed how we charge men to hold fundamental errors; when fundamentals are few, Rom. x. 9; 1 John iv. 2, and men's errors are extra-fundamentals.

2. Divine Providence hath ordered it so, that there should be difference and inequality in the naturals and spirituals of christians, that so they may have a greater tendency and fitness for union. As in a ship, or house, all pieces of timber must not be of the same length, height, and breadth, but differing; that so they may fit their several places, and conduce to make up a more goodly fabric: so among men, some have great natural and spiritual abilities, some lower degrees of both, some lesser than they; and this is the will and wisdom of Divine Providence, so to dispense and dispose, that all may fitly fall in together, and make the more glorious structures for heaven. John tells you, 1 Epist. ii. 13, of fathers, young men, and little children, who differed in their naturals and spirituals, yet lived lovingly and peaceably together, and made up a church for Christ. If we quarrel because there be differences of judgment amongst us, we cross the intent of Divine Providence, and quarrel with that, which hath so dispensed his gifts and grace, and given them out unequally. When we see one man white, another black, one tall, another low; shall we quarrel because both are not white, both of one equal height: one hath sore eyes, another sound, the veil is fully drawn off one's heart, half way off another's; and this is the Lord's doing, it is that we may the better join together.

3. Seek the good one of another, and that indifferently. Selfishness and partiality undo and divide, they have private ends, ways, means, and move upon sinister respects: whereas if we had more self-denying, impartial, and public spirits, to mind the welfare of others, we should quickly attain to some good degree of this oneness of heart. 1 Cor. x. 24, "Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth:" it is not a flat prohibition from seeking a man's own good, but he should rather seek the good of others than of himself; as Paul did, ver. 33, "I seek not mine own profit, but the profit of many." If this were in practice, it would let in our hearts and spirits into the bosoms of others, and make us one-hearted with them. Phil. ii. 20, Paul speaking of Timothy, who sought the good of the Philippians, saith, "I have no man like-minded:" the word is ισόβουλος, of equal mind; so that Timothy and the Philippians were aquamimes, of equal mind; his heart, his soul was in theirs, and equal, yea, one with theirs; and what then? "who will naturally care for your estate;" the workings of his soul for their good were like the workings of a father towards his children natural, which are most strong, constant, and delightful. When men's hearts are equal, too, one with the hearts of others, they act naturally for their benefit; but when men seek the hurt of others, black their names, greater their infirmities, catch advantages against them, they are unnatural, men of other and bitter spirits.

4. Lay aside the wisdom of the flesh, and exalt the wisdom of the Spirit. Fleshly wisdom makes and maintains divisions; Rom. viii. 7. Φρόνημα της σαρκος εχθρα εστις θεου, it is "enmity against God," and all the ways of God; it subjects not to them, neither can do it, but opposes continually. And as it hinders union with God and his ways, so it doth with the children of God; it keeps them from one-heartedness, it makes breaches, and maintains them when made. It was such wisdom separated Paul and Barnabas, and kept them, being separated, at a distance. The fleshly mind pulls up, Col. ii. 18, and so the heart cannot lie even with another's; but spiritual wisdom is of another nature: Prov. xii. 18, "The tongue of the wise is health;" others' tongues are "like the piercings of a sword," they wound; but the spiritually wise they heal wounds, make up breaches, they pacify wrath, even the wrath of great ones, Prov. xvi. 14. Men think themselves wise in these days, but what is the wisdom of most? is it not such James speaks of, "earthly, sensual, devilish," because it is joined with bitterness, envying, strife? see James iii. 14, 15. And then he tells you the nature of spiritual wisdom, ver. 17, "That is from above, first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy." There is nothing in it but what tends to oneness of heart; it is "pure," there is no mixture of fleshly wisdom in it: it is "peaceable," averse from contention, studious of peace; "gentle, and easy to be entreated," not harsh and self-willed, but pliable to that which is good; "full of mercy and good fruits," it is ready to help and do for others in their necessities; "without partiality," without wrangling, judging; "without hypocrisy," it is real in what it doth.

Rom. xv. 2.
"Let every one of us please his neighbour for his good."

5. Humility; where that is it draws the heart of God to it, Isa. lvii. 15, God dwells with the humble spirit; and surely it will gain the hearts of men to it: Prov. xxix. 23, "A man's pride shall bring him low," it will make God and man against him; "but honour shall uphold the humble in spirit," both God and man will support, speak well of, do good to and close with him. It is pride only, chiefly, that makes contentions, Prov. xiii. 10; men's lusts lift them up, divide themselves, and cause divisions amongst others; therefore, James iv. 1, "From whence come wars and fightings amongst you? come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members?" Proud men have many lusts and much war, and when they agree not with themselves, how can they agree with others? we should therefore purify our hearts from such lusts, and humble ourselves in the sight of the Lord, ver. 8, 10, and then our hearts would close better. It is men's proud lusts that dissolve union, that make war and breed confusion, blind men's eyes, and engage them in errors; but the humble man that hath had his heart broken, and hath let them out, he is readiest to unite with others; he stands not upon his will, his credit, he hath low thoughts of himself, and high of others. Hence Paul bids the Colossians "put on humbleness of mind," chap. iii. 12; and 1 Pet. v. 5, Peter bids them "be clothed with humility," that is the most becoming garment and least offensive of any. The man who walks with that garment on will not wrong any man in thought, word, or deed: he judges not others, but himself; he bears the burden and infirmities of men, and so gains upon and gets interest in the hearts of others.

6. Consider we are brethren, called and pressed unto peace and mutual agreement in the gospel. Moses thought the name brethren sufficient to reconcile the two struggling Hebrews: Acts vii. 26, "Sirs, ye are brethren;" what! your hearts, heads, and hands divided? think how near you are and dear you should be one to another. The word brethren should draw our hearts together, and make us desirous of peace. 1 Tim. vi. 1, 2, servants must not despise their masters, but count them worthy of all honour, because they are brethren; and we should not despise and contend one with another, because we are brethren, endued with divine nature, and brethren of Christ, Heb. ii. 12, "The Prince of peace," Eph. i. 6; Partakers of "the gospel of peace," Eph. vi. 15; and are called of God to peace, 1 Cor. vii. 15; Col. iii. 15; and it is peace that we are pressed unto, Rom. xiv. 19, "Let us follow after the things that make for peace;" see 2 Tim. ii. 22; Heb. xii. 14. We should pursue peace with all men, but especially with those who are our brethren in Christ; they make up the body of Christ, in which the Spirit of Christ lives; therefore, Eph. iv. 3, Paul counsels them to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace;" the Spirit hath united men to Christ, and peace is the bond which keeps the Spirit among them. When the Corinthians brake the bond of peace, saying, "I am of Paul," &c. the apostle told them they were carnal, not spiritual, 1 Cor. iii. 1. There should be no strife among brethren, but this, viz. who should be most loving and peaceable.

II. Preservatives of one-heartedness.

1. Look much at the gifts, graces, and excellences which are in others, not at their weaknesses and imperfections; let the bright side of the cloud be in your eyes, not the black side; and this will keep your hearts united. Peter eyed the "like precious faith" which was in the christians, with his and other apostles', 2 Pet. i. 1; and John takes special notice of the graces which were in the fathers, young men, little children, in the elect lady, and Gaius, and that kept his heart united to them. When men's persons, parts, or graces are slighted, it breaks the bond of peace, divides hearts and spirits. The apostle bids us "honour all men," 1 Pet. ii. 17; esteem them if there be any worth in them, take notice of it, and honour them answerably: if there be great sins and weaknesses in them, are they greater than thine own? if they be or be not, grieve for them, be not angry with them.

2. Lay aside all provoking, dividing names, terms, and speeches. Those names of Petrians, Paulians, Johannites, in the primitive times, did hurt; which Epiphanius observing, would not give way that there should be any name added to the christian name. Those names of Lutheran, Zwinglian, Calvinist, bred divisions among the protestants; and surely discriminating names have made divided hearts among us. So reproaching and bitter words have kindled a fire which might be put out, if all men had such spirits as Calvin had, who professed if Luther should call him devil, yet would he have a reverend esteem of him, and acknowledge him a worthy servant of the Lord's. If we would have our hearts kept in firm union, we must use soft tongues and gentle words, Prov. xv. 1; xii. 25.

3. Ever make the best construction of men's words and actions; that will preserve peace and oneness of heart. When other interpretations are put upon the words and actions of men than were intended, this sows the seed oftentimes of bitter contentions and great evils. John ii. 19, 20, with Matt. xxvi. 61, Christ speaks there of the temple of his body, the Jews interpret it of the temple that was forty-six years a building, and bring it in against Christ, as matter worthy of death. If we shall force the words or acts of others, and fetch senses, intentions out of them, which the authors aimed not at, we shall never maintain peace with any.

4. Get much love and exercise it; that makes hearts one, and preserves them being one. 1 Sam. xviii. 1, Jonathan loved David as his own soul; so, ver. 3, David loved Jonathan as his own soul; they two had as it were one heart and one soul. If there were love among us, it would cover a multitude of sins, and not discover one; it would make up breaches past, and prevent breaches for the future. The very nature of love consists in union; Amanus est in amato, He that loves lives in the loved, the heart of the loved is his habitation; and love is very forward to do any kindness for those it relates to. That chapter, 1 Cor. xiii. had need be new studied in these divided times. Whatever the knowledge of faith be, if we have not love, the text saith, we are nothing. He saith not, we are little, but plainly, we are nothing. Many among us are very bitter, uncharitable, and go among men for some things, and some bodies, but in the judgment of God they are nothing: if you have little love, you are little ones; if great love, great ones; if no love, nothing. It is love that Christ specially looked at, and called for, in Peter; "Peter, lovest thou me more than these," &c. Christ measures men by their love; and no marvel, love is the fulfilling of the law, Gal. v. 14; and if we serve one another by love and fulfil the law, where can the breach be made, how can the offence come in? "Love behaves not itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil;" this grace binds a man to his good behaviour, and will keep peace with all men: hence is it, that whereas once we are bid above all things to take the shield of faith, Eph. vi. 16, we are twice bid above all things to put on love, 1 Pet. iv. 8; Col. iii. 14, "which is the bond of perfectness;" that is, both in regard of man and God: love knits the members of Christ together, and so perfects his body; it unites us to God, and so causeth the perfecting of divine love in us; 1 John iv. 12, "If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us;" see ver. 17.

5. Be willing to learn one of another; that will endear our hearts each to other, and keep them in oneness. The scribes and Pharisees thought they knew the law better than Christ; they would not learn of him, and so never heartily closed with him, but were peremptory in their own opinions, and tenacious of traditions, and by this means were enemies to truth, and those who were one-hearted in the truth. Col. iii. 16, they were to teach and admonish one another; yea, chap. iv. 17, they must "say to Archippus, Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfil it." Their willingness to learn one of another, preserved them in order. And those that do teach, should willingly and meekly instruct "those that do oppose, if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth," 2 Tim. ii. 24, 25; for the promise is, Isa. xxix. 24, that those who have "erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine."

6. See God's presence and nearness to us; that is a means to preserve us in a one-hearted condition. When the Master is present the servants are quiet, and keep so. James v. 9, "Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned;" and what should prevent this, and keep them in brotherly love? "Behold, the Judge standeth before the door;" he is ready to come in, to examine you thoroughly, what the differences are, what the words, acts, thoughts are; he is in you all, through you all, observes every rising of the spirit, all workings there; and above you all, and will reckon with you.

III. Inducements to one-heartedness are these:

1. That great apostle Paul saith to the Ephesians, chap. iv. 3-6, "Endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit;" and why? "There is one body, one Spirit, one hope, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all." Here are seven ones, and every one a strong argument to move to unity and one-heartedness: one body, orderly united: one Spirit, which enlivens, enlightens, strengthens, sanctifies, comforts; and this Spirit is not contrary to itself, but one and the same, a Spirit of love and peace: one hope among you of immortality, glory, and eternal excellences: one Lord Christ, who rules over you, whose servants you are: one faith, one Christ that you believe in, one rule that you walk by: one baptism; you are all baptized in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost: one God and Father; there is but one God whom ye serve, and he is the Father, you are his children in his family; will you fall out? if you were of diverse families, had diverse fathers, diverse gods, that might be excusable.

2. Christ hath taken our nature upon him, and as to unite man and God together, so to unite man and man together in himself; hence, Gal. iii. 28, "Ye are all one in Christ Jesus;" and Rom. viii. 17, "Joint-heirs with Christ;" and Eph. ii. 6, said to "sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." This should move us to live and love, as those who have such high privileges by Christ: and it is observed, Christ being united to us, bears with more in us than we can with one another; when we are in that condition as we can endure one another no longer, I mean dead, and must be buried out of the sight of the living, Christ then is united to our corrupt bodies: when Lazarus lay stinking in the grave, Christ loved him.

3. If you love them who are of your own opinion only, and love you, what do you more than others, than Pharisees, than publicans? Matt. v. 46, "If ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even publicans;" the worst of men, "the same?" "And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others?" publicans do it, all sorts will do that; and know, if you be one with men, and love them because they are of your opinion, it is the opinion, and not the men, you love; if of another opinion, then you cannot close with them and love them. But Christ would have you do more than others, more than publicans, he would have you "love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you, and persecute you." Why can you not love men who have the same graces with you, as well as those who have the same opinions with you.

4. It is the fulfilling of a prophecy, Isa. xi. 6-9. By wolf, leopard, lion, bear, and asp, are meant frenzied, choleric, strong, rigid, and hurtful men; by lamb, kid, calf, cow, and ox, the weak, meek, laborious, and useful; and these should dwell together, eat together, and lie down together. Their natures should be so altered by the gospel and Spirit of Christ, that the fiercest should be as meek as a lamb, and live in peace with the rest of the believers; they should come to the state of innocency, in which no creature should have preyed upon another, but all have lived harmoniously and sweetly together. So should it be under Christ; ver. 9, "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain," there shall be no hurting nor destroying in the whole church. The Jews, because they see not this fulfilled among us christians, take offence, and say, that therefore Christ is not yet come; that our Christ was not the true Christ; for yet the lion tears, the wolf devours, &c. A sad thing to cause Jews to deny Christ, and to blaspheme, because we are like lions, bears, wolves to one another. Let us remember the prophecy in Zeph. iii. 9.

5. Consider what oneness of spirit is amongst the enemies of God.

(1.) Devils. Seven devils dwelt together peaceably in Mary Magdalene, Mark xvi. 9; a legion in another, Luke viii. 30; the man was unquiet, but the devils were very quiet in him; though hundreds, yet there was no dissension. The devil's kingdom is an undivided kingdom, Matt. xii. 26; and all the devils in the world drive on the same design unanimously, they all seek to hinder the conversion, comfort, and salvation of sinners, they all labour to draw men to perdition.

(2.) Wicked men. Mahometans are of one heart in their Mahometanism. Papists, what a multitude of orders and differences among them, and yet all are one-hearted in popery and superstition; Rev. xiii. 3, 4, "All the world wondered after the beast, and worshipped the dragon and the beast." Herod, Pilate, the gentiles, and people of Israel, were gathered together against Christ, Acts iv. 27. And when they built Babel the people were one, Gen. xi. 6. Read Psal. lxxxiii. 3—9. Shall wicked men and devils be one-hearted, one-spirited in sinful practices, in false ways, and shall not those who are godly?

6. Where oneness is not, there will be divisions and offences; as amongst the Corinthians, they were the most divided church we read of, and their offences did most abound: and how sad it is to offend any who belong to Christ, hear Christ himself telling you, Matt. xviii. 6, "Whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea." So heinous a thing is it in the eye of God, that a man were better die any death than offend the godly, the meanest of the godly; what then if he offend the greatest and most of the godly? it were better a great millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depths of the sea.

7. The Lord Christ may own them at the last day for sheep, whom you look upon and carry yourselves towards like goats, and those he may judge sound sheep, you have judged infected; and what shame will that be to those who have so foully mistaken! The Pharisees thought themselves skilful in the law, and judged the people cursed that followed Christ closest, John vii. 49; but those people were dear to Christ. When the blind man saw, and saw more than the Pharisees, they cast him out, but Christ received him, John ix.: so, many that now are cast out, as factious, seditious, erroneous, schismatical, ere long Christ will own; and then how will they blush who have reproached them, persecuted them, judged them unworthy of any liberty or being amongst them! God takes the foolish to confound the wise, the weak to confound the mighty, the base, despised, and things which are not, to bring to nought things which are, 1 Cor. i. 27, 28.

8. Where unity is amongst the saints, there the presence of the Lord Christ is. Matt. xviii. 20, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them:" where there is most unity, there God delights most to be. Jerusalem was as a city compact together, Psal. cxxii. 3, had God's presence in a special manner; and it represented the church under the gospel, which when it is fitly framed together, then it is an habitation for God, Eph. ii. 21, 22. The curtains of the tabernacle where God was present must be coupled together, Exod. xxvi. 3: the hearts of men must be knit together, if they would have God and Christ among them. The Jews affirm, that where two sit together, (that is, agreed, having one heart,) and speak of the law, Divinitus habitat inter ipsos, the Divinity dwells among them.

I shall end this point with that of Paul, Phil. ii.

1, 2, "If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind."

Obs. 3. This one-heartedness is the gift of God, not the work of man. "I will give them one heart;" they cannot make their hearts one, but I can; it is a work not to be accomplished by force of man, but by the free grace of God: Jer. xxxii. 38, 39, "They shall be my people, and I will be their God: and I will give them one heart, and one way." When God is God in covenant with a people, then will he freely give and work this one-heartedness; he doth not force it, but freely work it. Men attempt, by compulsory acts, to make men differing in principles and practices to be one-hearted, and to go one way; but such attempts seldom take any good effect; men's judgments and consciences will not be forced. Bodinus in his fourth book of his commonwealth, saith judiciously, if a prince, persuaded of the truth of his religion, would draw his subjects therunto, being divided into sects and factions, he must not therein use force. (for the minds of men, the more they are forced, the more froward and stubborn they are, and the greater punishments that shall be inflicted upon them, the less good is to be done; the nature of man being commonly such, as may of itself be led to like of any thing, but never be enforced so to do,) but without fainting, to profess his religion, devoutly serving the Almighty God, whereby he shall turn the wills and minds of his subjects unto the imitation and admiration of himself. Theodosius the elder, who found all the provinces of his empire at the beginning of his reign full of Arians, whose strength and power was so grown and increased under three or four Arian emperors their favourers, as that their doctrine was not only by eight councils confirmed, held at Tyre, Sardis, Syme, Milan, Seleucia, Nice, Tarsis, Ariminum, (where six hundred bishops were of their opinion, and but three, of name, which held the contrary,) but that they punished also others their adversaries, of opinion contrary to themselves, with confiscations, proscriptions, and other most grievous punishments; yet would not this good emperor either force or punish the Arians, though he deadly hated them; but granted unto both the Arians, and other the catholics, their churches, and suffered them in every town to have two bishops, of either religion one: and though at the importunate suit of the catholic bishops, he commanded certain edicts to be published against the Arians, yet he was contented to have the same held in suspense, and not to be put in execution, as his letters to Ambrose declare. Theodoric king of the Goths, though favouring the Arians, would not yet enforce the consciences of his subjects, nor have them tormented for their religion, lest under the pretence of impiety, he should have seemed to have taken the spoil of their goods to bend their minds, which could by no threats or commands be constrained to bend; for thus he writes unto the senate of Rome, Religionem imperare non possumus quia nemo cogitur ut credat invitus, We cannot control religion, because no one can be compelled to believe against his will. He saith also, No man is to be forced; the private exercise of his religion is to be yielded, if it cannot be publicly professed without sedition; otherwise men will become atheists, and so, having lost the fear of God, and trod underfoot laws and magistrates, will practise all impieties and villanies. Mr. Forbes being sent for to the king of Sweden, when he was victorious, and asked by him what government he should set over Lutherans, Calvinists, papists, whom he had conquered; his answer was, You have conquered their bodies with ease, but you will find it a hard work to conquer men's judgments and consciences. What ill effects the forcing of men's spirits brought forth, you may read in that learned and judicious treatise of Sir Simon D'Ewes, entitled, The Primitive Practise for preserving Truth.

You know who said it, In things of the mind, we look for no compulsion, but that of light and reason.

He is not a loving father, but rather a step-father, who will compel his children to eat of that meat which is against their stomachs, when there are variety of dishes to feed upon which are suitable to them. Wise physicians persuade, do not force their patients to take physic. It is good to cure errors which are in men's minds, and to save their souls, but in God's way, James v. 19, by conversion, not by compulsion, by the power of the word, not the edge of the sword; this makes hypocrites, that saints. That conscience is not obstinate, which useth means to know truth. If God hide it from, it liveth under the power of conscience, and is not turbulent.

These things I speak, not to make way for licentiousness, that whatever opinions men hold, think, say, or practise, they may be free; but merely, that consciences truly tender, may not be forced. It is one thing to restrain men's practices which are idolatrous, blasphemous, against pure worship, the power of godliness, and peace of the state; another, to force men to that their judgment and consciences are against. I pleaded not ever for a toleration of all, neither do, but only that those whose lives are holy, peaceable, and differ in judgment from others in some things, may not be forced to conform or depart.

"I will put a new spirit within you." The word spirit notes sometimes the soul: Acts vii. 59, saith Stephen, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit;" 2 Cor. vii. 1, "Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit." Sometimes for the heart and affections: 1 Kings xxi. 5, "Why is thy spirit so sad?" said Jezebel to Ahab; that is, why is thy heart so heavy? Acts xvii. 16, Paul, "his spirit was stirred within him," when he saw their idolatry, his affections moved him to speak and dispute with them. Sometimes for the faculties of the soul, viz. understanding, will, and conscience: 1 Thess. v. 23, "I pray God your whole spirit, and soul, and body be preserved blameless;" by "whole spirit," the understanding, will, and conscience may be meant: Prov. xviii. 14, "A wounded spirit who can bear?" that is, a wounded conscience. Sometimes for the gifts and graces of the Spirit; Gal. iii. 2, "Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?"

"New," is in Scripture sometimes that which is totally new for matter; Deut. xx. 5, a new house; Judg. xv. 13, new ways; 1 Sam. vi. 7, a new cart; 1 Kings xi. 29, a new garment: sometimes for that which is renewed; 2 Chron. xx. 5, "Jehoshaphat stood before the new court," that is judged to be the priests' court, renewed in its building, or use, after some public profanation; so it is called a new ship or garment, that is altered and changed: sometimes for that which is excellent and admirable; Mark i. 27, "What new doctrine is this?" it is admirable and excellent doctrine; so the "new name," Rev. ii. 17; iii. 12; that is, an excellent and admirable name: sometimes for that which is diverse from what it was before, especially in regard of qualities; Mark xvi. 17, "They shall speak with new tongues," which, Acts ii. 4, are called "other tongues," tongues which had other gifts and graces in them.

By "new spirit" here is not meant a new soul, or faculties, for substance, or the inward form of it, but the same soul altered in the frame, renewed in the qualities, thereof. It hath other excellent qualities in it, which it had not before, even the gifts and graces of the Spirit; hence it is called the new birth, or birth of the Spirit, John iii. 6; "the new man," Eph. iv. 24; the "new creature," Gal. vi. 15. Not only faith and love, mentioned Gal. v. 6, but all divine qualities man is capable of, are included in this "new spirit."

1. The understanding is enlightened with divine light, which it had not before. Acts xxvi. 18, "To open the eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light:" The gentiles were blind before God gave them this new spirit, which brought new lights unto their minds. Eph. iv. 18, "Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart;" but when they had put on "the new man," ver. 24, in the next chapter, ver. 8, Paul saith of them, "Ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord;" the Lord by his Spirit had brought in marvellous light into their understandings, and scattered their darkneses. This Paul calls God's shining into the heart, 2 Cor. iv. 6; John, Christ's giving an understanding, 1 John v. 20; and Luke, an opening of the understanding, Luke xxiv. 45. All which phrases, as they suppose oldness of darkness, so a renewing of the understanding with newness of light; and this light is "the light of life," John viii. 12, brought into the soul by "the spirit of wisdom and revelation," Eph. i. 17, 18.

2. This "new spirit" hath influence into the will, and alters that which in itself is corrupt, and carryeth the soul the wrong way. Eph. ii. 3, "Fulfilling the desires of the flesh," τα θελήματα της σαρκός, the will of the flesh. Paul acknowledgeth nothing to be in the wills of men naturally, but fleshly corruption; and whatsoever that put them upon, that they did, and with delight, fulfilling the wills of the flesh; but when this "new spirit" comes, it alters the will, breaks the principle of stubbornness in it, purges the pollution and corruption out of it, and makes it pliable unto the will of God. "Ezek. xxxvi. 27, "I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes." God's Spirit will so alter our spirits, so transform and renew them, that they shall be inclined to, and carried on in, the obeying of divine statutes. Before, they went on in the ways of sin, with strength, constancy, and delight; now they move with new strength, constancy, and delight in that which is good. This "new spirit" bows the will to the law of righteousness, so that it obeys and commands well.

3. The affections are renewed. Ezek. xxxvi. 26, "A new heart also will I give you;" that is, your affections, which are now corrupt and inordinate, shall be changed and regulated; they shall of sinful be made holy, of earthly be made heavenly, of unrighteous become righteous. Eph. v. 9, "The fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness, righteousness, and truth:" When the Spirit of Christ comes and makes our spirits new, there is truth for the understanding, goodness for the will, and righteousness for the affections; and Gal. v. 22, 23, the fruits of the Spirit refer most to the affections, as, "love, joy, long-suffering, gentleness, meekness, temperance." Now the old affections and lusts of the flesh are crucified, Gal. v. 24, and the new affections are set "on things above," Col. iii. 2.

4. The conscience is renewed. Before it is defiled, and acts according to that false or dim light which is in the understanding; but when this "new spirit" comes in, the conscience is awakened, purged, and acts upon divine grounds. Heb. x. 22, "Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience." The Holy Ghost, like water which washeth away the filth of the body, cleanseth the conscience from the blindness, impurity, and deadness which are in it, so that it, being endued with new qualities, becomes a pure, 2 Tim. i. 3, and good conscience, 1 Tim. i. 5, and acts new, not in a natural, but sanctified manner.

5. The memory is renewed and made able to retain good things. Before, like a strainer, it let the milk go, and kept the hairs and druff; like a boulder, it let the fine flour go, and kept the bran; but having a new quality in it, it is retentive of good: 1 Cor. xv. 2. Ye are saved by the gospel, "if you keep in memory what I have preached;" they had memories enabled to do it. Many a poor soul that is converted, when it comes to practise, remembers truths better than those of able memories.

These renewing and refining qualities make up the new man, and here are called a "new spirit."

"Spirit." 1. Because they are from the Spirit, that is the Author of them: John iii. 6, "That which is born of the Spirit is spirit;" it hath the qualities and graces of the Spirit, the Spirit begets its own likeness in the soul, as a father doth in the body.

2. In opposition to the flesh. These new qualities are contrary to those of corrupt nature, which the Scripture calls "flesh," and therefore fitly called Spirit, Gal. v. 17, "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh."

3. For that they make us spiritual. They have such operations in us, and honour us with such a denomination: 1 Cor. ii. 15, "He that is spiritual judgeth all things."

4. Because they are chiefly seated in the most spiritual part of a man, the soul and faculties of it are the subject thereof.

"New." 1. In opposition to the old corruptions which were in man before, which the Scripture calls "the old man;" Eph. v. 22, "Put off the old man, which is corrupt;" and ver. 23, 24, "Be renewed in the spirit of your mind; and put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." Here it is called "the new man," (which is the same with the "new spirit,") in opposition to "old man."

2. For that it comes a new way into man. Had not Adam sinned, we should not have needed such ordinances as now we have, to work this "new spirit" in us; it is not by generation, but regeneration; it is not from nature, art, afflictions, ordinances, but the Spirit in ordinances.

3. Because it is wrought anew in us. No man hath aught of this "new spirit" in him naturally, but an old and contrary spirit; Rom. viii. 7, the wisdom of the flesh is enmity to God. This is totally new wrought, and therefore is called a creation, Eph. iv. 24.

4. From the effect. It makes us new; 2 Cor. v. 17, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature;" 1 Pet. ii. 2, those endued with this "new spirit" are called "new-born babes."

5. Because it is ever vigorous, fresh, and lively, not decaying. So I find the words new interpreted by a late divine, and applied to the "new man;" and he thinks the new heavens and the new earth spoken of, Isa. lxvi. 17; lxvi. 22; Rev. xxi. 1, (whatsoever is meant by them,) that the title "new" seems to import the admirable excellency and continuance thereof, never to alter or decay, but to remain before the Lord.

Quest. 1. Whether was this promise fulfilled among the Jews, or in times of the gospel?

Ans. Many of the fathers refer the fulfilling of it unto the times of the gospel; but it being primarily made unto the Jews, we have just cause to think that it was in part fulfilled amongst them after their return from Babylon. So gracious a promise being given out by God, made known by Ezekiel, it is not likely they would neglect, having been so sorely afflicted in Babylon; but would improve, and press the Lord for the accomplishment of it: and, without dispute, many of them had this "new spirit," for after they came again to Jerusalem, they had such a hatred of idols, and love to truth, that they stood out to death for the law and religion of their God, as is recorded in the Maccabees.

Quest. 2. Whether is this "new spirit" given or wrought all at once?

Ans. This "new spirit" consists in those new qualities which are put into man, and the several qualities are wrought in at once, but they are wrought up by degrees; a man hath all graces at once in semine, radice, habitu, the seed, root, and habit; and this grace is called the law in the mind, Rom. vii. 22; the law written in the heart, Heb. viii. 10; the divine nature, 2 Pet. i. 4; Christ formed in us, Gal. iv. 19; the inward man, Rom. vii. 22; seed, 1 John iii. 9. Now this seed, this inward man, this Christ, this divine nature, are growing, this law receives addition; 2 Pet. iii. 18, "Grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ;" 2 Cor. iv. 16, "The inward man is renewed day by day;" there is an addition of more strength, more degrees are added to those new qualities, the inward man grows stronger and better: so chap. iii. 18, we "are changed into the same image from glory to glory." When men are changed, and this "new spirit" is put into them, it is glory; and there is a progress in this glory, they go from one degree of glory to another.

Obs. 1. This "new spirit" is a great mercy, it is a renewal of the image of God in a man, knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness, Col. iii. 10; Eph. iv. 24. It is that makes a man good, and acceptable to God; it was the Holy Ghost and faith made Barnabas "a good man," Acts xi. 24. Till a man have some new qualities in him, this "new spirit," he is flesh, displeasing unto God; John iii. 6, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit," and so acceptable to God; then the tree is good, and the fruit good also, Matt. vii. 17, 18. It is that weakens and wastes sin in us; 2 Cor. v. 17, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away;" old customs, practices, principles, corruptions, they are decaying, the old heaven is purging out. It is an argument of God's love in the covenant of grace towards a sinner, and evidence that thou art in that covenant; it is the promise of the new covenant, to give this "new spirit;" it is that makes us honourable and glorious. When we have this "new spirit," we are partakers of the divine nature, and "born of God," 1 John iii. 9; and that is honourable, ver. 1, and glorious, 2 Cor. iii. 18. It is a choice comfort to the man that hath it, more than thousands of silver and gold, more than a world to him; no such comfort to him as this. It is life; Luke xv. 24, "This my son was dead, and is alive again." The dead prodigal, when he had this "new spirit," had a new life, and this was a sweet, a great comfort to him, to his father, to others. It is that gives you title to the kingdom of heaven; John iii. 5, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water," &c.

Quest. How doth this "new spirit" act and discover itself in that man where it is ?

Ans. 1. It begets a noble ingenuity in the soul, to maintain the condition it puts into; it will shun whatever is contrary to it, or offensive to the Lord who gave it: 1 John v. 18, "Whosoever is born of God sinneth not, but keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not." he hath a nobleness of spirit, and keeps himself from sin and Satan; and things they propound are too low for him, too base. Joseph said, "How can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?" Gen. xxxix. 9. Neh. vi. 11, "Should such a man as I flee." So saith the man endued with this "new spirit," Should such a man as I sin? God hath made me spiritual, and I will not embase myself to carnal things: 1 Pet. i. 14, "Not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts."

2. A strong impression made upon the soul, so that it cannot but follow after Christ. Before, the heart could not but look downwards, pursue the creature, but now it doth the contrary. Acts xxvi. 18, "To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God." When the turn is once made, they cannot but mind the light, and follow after God and Christ. When Elijah threw his mantle upon Elisha, he had such an impress made upon his spirit, that he must leave all, and follow him. The needle is unquiet till it come to the northern point; so a soul, till it come to Christ, when it is anointed with these new qualities, &c.

3. Seeth every thing with a new eye; there is divine light, the light of life in the soul, John viii. 12; and "the life of God," Eph. iv. 18. Before, they are alienated from it, but now, having this "new spirit," they partake of it, and not only live the life of God, but look upon things as God doth; they see sin exceeding sinful, Rom. vii. 13; grace to be free, glorious, exceeding rich, and abundant, Eph. i. 6: ii. 7, 8; 1 Tim. i. 14: they behold Christ in another manner than ever before; 2 Cor. v. 16, "Henceforth know we no man after the flesh; yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more." Since we have had an eye to see spiritually, and the eye renewed to see more spiritually into the death of Christ, what satisfaction, peace, life, grace, salvation, glory, it hath wrought and brought! We know no man after the flesh, for their present honour, external excellences, no, not Christ; we look not upon him as poor, mean, afflicted, contemptible, but we see and judge spiritually, we look at what is divine in him, in others, in all. So for God himself; Jer. xxxi. 34, when he should put his law in their inward parts, then they should all know him, that is, in another manner than ever; they should see not only what an infinite Excellency he was in himself, but what a Father of mercies and God of consolations he was in Christ.

4. It makes a spiritual war in the soul. This "new spirit" sets upon the old man, the old spirit, and maintains a mighty war against the same, bringing under and captivating the flesh, with its lusts, members, wisdom, and strong holds. There was a natural war in the man before, between sin and the conscience, but this is a spiritual war; and it is known thus:

(1.) The whole frame of the soul is against sin, not the conscience alone, the understanding, will, affections, conscience. A drunken man may speak against drunkenness, and yet the frame of his heart be towards it; a covetous man may condemn covetousness, yet the frame of his spirit may be to it. Col. i. 21, "Enemies in your mind by wicked works;" a man being without this "new spirit," is an enemy to God, Christ, truth in his mind, by wicked works, the frame of his mind is against them; but being endued with this "new spirit," he is reconciled to God, and so an enemy in his mind to wicked works. So for his will, Rom. vii. 19, "The evil which I would not, that I do;" his will was against evil; so for his affection, ver. 15, "What I hate, that I do:" so for conscience, while it is natural, it restrains a man, and makes him say, I dare not do it; but when sanctified, it causes a man to fight against sin, and to say, I cannot do it; Gal. v. 17, "Ye cannot do the things that ye would:" the new nature is universally through a man, and where it is, it opposes. When Lot was in Sodom, he was vexed with all the sinful ways of the Sodomites; and when this "new spirit" is in a man, it is vexed with all the ways of the flesh.

(2.) This "new spirit" wars against sin as sin. The unsanctified conscience never doth so, therefore is carried against sin upon consideration it is a great sin, it brings damage, &c.; Darius, when Daniel was in the lions' den, Dan. vi. 18, his conscience troubled him; but if the sins be lesser, as omission of duties, vain thoughts, lusts, those beginnings of sin, they are dispensed with: but this "new spirit" is against every sin, be it little or great; it knows it is a breach of the law against the holy God, defiles, cost the blood of Christ.

(3.) By the weapons which are used. This "new spirit," where it is, useth spiritual arguments against sin, as God's love, God's dishonour, Christ's death, sense of pardon, the sealings and comforts of the Spirit, communion with God and Christ, love of holiness, the nature of grace, and scope of the gospel: see Col. iii. 4, 5; 1 John iii. 3; 2 Cor. vii. 1; Tit. ii. 11, 12. But an unregenerate heart, a natural conscience, uses arguments fetched from the curses of the law, terrors of death, fear of hell and damnation, shame of men, loss of friends, estate, the sovereignty of God over them.

(4.) By the continuance of this war, a hypocrite, that hath only a natural conscience, may go on skirmishing against sin a long time, but not for ever. An unenlightened, unsanctified conscience will either grow weary, or be bribed, or extenuate sin, or grow hard, seared, and commit sin without reluctance; but a man possessed with this "new spirit" will hold out the war to the end of his life; he grows not faint, he will not be bribed with aught, or all the world, flesh, and Satan have, to make a truce with sin; sin is sin to him, and shall not be lessened, he will fight it out, and die in the fight, rather than yield: Rom. vii. 24, "O wretched man!" saith Paul, "who shall deliver me?" &c.; 2 Tim. iv. 6, 7 "I am now ready to be offered, I have fought a good fight."

(5.) By the event. The man without this "new spirit," by all his combating against sin, gets it more restrained, and so more quiet, but not mortified; but where this "new spirit" is, there sin is wounded, crucified; Gal. v. 24, "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts" thereof.

(6.) It works and acts in a new manner. Rom. vii. 6, Paul speaks of serving them in the "newness of the spirit, not in the oldness of the letter:" when you were under the law, that showed you your duty, provoked corruption, gave you no power to subdue the one, or do the other, and all the service then was after the old man, with much earthiness, difficulty, dulness, untowardly, inconstantly, and no better than dead works; but now you are under the gospel, the spirit hath begotten a new life in you, beautified you with new qualities and principles, laid in new strength, therefore now serve the Lord in newness of the spirit. And that is, of a "spiritual understanding," Col. i. 9; of "a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices," 1 Pet. ii. 5. They being spiritualized, served the Lord in a spiritual manner, they had more spiritual conceptions of God and his worship, and put out more spiritual acts.

(2.) More readily. When this "new spirit" is in a man, he is like a ship which hath all its tacklings and sails up, and is ready to sail immediately; such a man is "prepared unto every good work," 2 Tim. ii. 21. Rom. i. 15, Paul was ready to preach the gospel; and ready to be bound and suffer. Acts xxi. 13; and the Corinthians had a ready mind, 2 Cor. vii. 19. Where this spirit is, there the wheels are oiled.

(3.) More delightfully. Rom. vii. 22, "I delight in the law of God after the inward man." Christ's yoke is easy, his commands are not grievous, the ways his wisdom prescribes "are ways of pleasantness," Prov. iii. 17; and Paul counted all the pains he took, hard things he suffered, but a recreation, Phil. iii. 8, "That I may win Christ;" he had as much pleasure and delight in them as men have in any games.

(4.) More beautifully. Before, they bungled, but now, they act more comely, they pray and sing with the Spirit, and with understanding, 1 Cor. xiv. 15. Rom. xii. 8, he gives with simplicity, rules with diligence, shows mercy with cheerfulness; and, Cant. vii. 1, "How beautiful are thy feet with shoes, O prince's daughter!" the ways of the church are beautiful, actions comely.

(5.) More evenly and constantly. 2 Pet. i. 4, this "new spirit" is called "the divine nature," both because it is from God our Father, because all the children have it, because it cannot be altered, and also because it acts like nature, constantly, strongly; the eye is not weary with seeing, nor the ear with hearing.

(6.) It propounds new ends to itself, viz. God's glory. Before, a man's self was his centre and end; this "new spirit" came out from God, and works for God and to God; now it sees the nature of divine grace, beholds glory in that grace, and answers God's end; it doth act to the praise of the glory of his grace.

(7.) Makes cheerful and thankful. Col. iii. 10, after he had spoken of the new man, ver. 16, he tells them of singing with "grace in their hearts to the Lord." 2 Cor. v. 17, when old things are gone, and all new, &c. as in a house, when all is renewed in it, beautifully trimmed, &c., it cheers.

You have mention of "a new song" six times in the Psalms, xxxiii. 3; xl. 3; xli. 1; xxviii. 1; cxliv. 9; cxlix. 1; once in Isaiah xlii. 10; twice in the Revelation, v. 9; xiv. 3; sung with new fervency, as new things use to affect most; sung with the motions of the new spirit of grace, which mindeth more the new benefits by Christ, and the new covenant, than those by creation.

The twenty-four elders sang this new song, Rev. v. 9; the hundred and forty-four thousand redeemed from the earth learned it; it was a song of the new mercies given in redemption, justification, sanctification.

A new song, that is, an excellent song, with singular cheerfulness, made upon the giving in of some new mercy. [1.] New, because the singers Non vulgare sed eximium. It. were new, they had a "new spirit," a spirit of grace and glory in them. [2.] The matter of it was new, Christ's incarnation, passion, doctrine, miracles, ordinances, promises, church, kingdom, but especially the opening the book and redemption by his blood.

Obs. 2. This "new spirit" is the work of God, and not of man; the Lord alone is the author and cause of it, man's will contributes nothing to it. "I will put a new spirit within you;" you oppose, resist, but I will overcome all that opposition and resistance, and plant new qualities, put a "new spirit" within you; I will work powerfully, efficaciously, so that the work shall proceed. The Arminians hold that the operation of God in the conversion of a sinner, or putting in this "new spirit," is moralis suasio, not realis efficientia, moral persuasion, not a real efficiency; that he doth not work immediately upon the mind and will, causing us to believe, to come to Christ, to live holily, but only propounds truths, which is sufficient that the understanding and affections are renewed with such power of God, and his grace, as cannot be withstood, but the will is quickened resistibili modo, in a manner which may be resisted; that, however it is sometimes renewed in the affectionate part of it, yet it continues unrenewed in the willing and nilling part thereof, secundum modum libertatis, according to the measure of liberty; that the grace of God doth nothing but accompany the will, consenting that all things supposed on God's part needful to the co-working this "new spirit," and regenerating the heart, yet a man may go without it, and still be as he was; that this "new spirit," and work of conversion, depends not upon any necessary causation or infallible event, from the intention or operation of God, but merely upon the will of man, and so is wholly contingent, and uncertain: all which are croneous.

The papists also hold that there is free will in man before he hath this "new spirit," which doth concur and co-operate with God in the putting in this "new spirit" as an efficient cause thereof; and they pronounce him anathema in the council Sess. 6. de Justif. Can. 4. of Trent, that says the will is merely passive in this work. Our divines hold it, and not only they, but the Lord himself; and if it be his judgment, how impious is that canon which puts an anathema upon the Lord. We cannot John xv. 5. Without me ye can do nothing, therefore all is from Christ. make our spirits new, nor any part of them; Deus est causa totius entis, God is the cause of all being, of this new spirit, of every quality in it, and every degree of every quality; Phil. ii. 13, "It is God which worketh in you, both to will and to do of his good pleasure." The will to have this "new spirit" is not from man's will, but from the grace of God; and that grace, when it is working and entering into the will, though the will of itself oppose it and reject it, yet because of the mighty power of God in the work, and strong intention of God to effect such a work, it cannot impede the introduction and forming of this "new spirit." It is called the circumcision of the heart, and is attributed to God, Deut. xxx. 6. It is not in the power of man to circumcise his own heart, God only doth it; and that he acts powerfully in this work of a "new spirit," see Ezek. xxxvi. 27, "I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them." Though Satan, the god of this world, have got possession of a man, fortified himself in the strong holds which are in man; yet the Lord will bring in his Spirit, throw out Satan, throw down his holds, and cause a man, by the power of his Spirit and grace, to walk in contrary ways to what he did. Man in Scripture is said to be dead, and dead men neither desire, nor work their own resurrection; John v. 25, "The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God." It must be a mighty and powerful voice which reacheth to a dead soul, and fetcheth it out of that condition; and when God speaks and works efficaciously to that purpose, the soul can no more withstand it than Lazarus could the call and power of Christ. Therefore saith Christ, John vi. 37, "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me;" they shall not prevent it by the liberty of their wills, the event is infallible, the causation necessary; otherwise God's election should be frustrate; for if man by his free will could keep out this "new spirit," and null all the operations of God about the working of it, what should become of his elect? his giving of men to Christ would be to no purpose.

Quest. Whereas they say, Propound suitable objects, and men will take them; as, propound honey to a bee, grass or a green bough to a sheep, and they will receive them; so let man have fit objects propounded to his understanding and will, and he will then close with them: and this is all which is done in the work of grace.

Ans. 1. See how derogatory this is to the Lord, that no more is given to his Spirit in working than is given to Satan. He propounds objects suitable to the sons of men, and if the Spirit propound divine objects, so doth Satan: Gen. iii. 5, "Ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." If the devil's objects be received or refused at the pleasure of man's will, so shall the Spirit's.

2. What suitability is there between our carnal heart, and the spiritual high things of God? 1 Cor. ii. 14, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him;" men must be made spiritual before they can discern or close with spiritual things. Honey is the proper food of a bee, and grass of a sheep, but spiritual things are not the proper food of a carnal heart; new wine is not for old bottles.

3. If suitable objects would do it, Christ propounded as suitable truths as ever any did, yet the Jews were not taken with them, John vi. 44: not any man, be he never so rational, have he never such rational objects propounded, that will hear, or can come.

Quest. Is it not in man's power to do aught towards the working this "new spirit" in himself? it seems otherwise, for the Lord saith, Ezek. xviii. 31, "Make you a new heart and a new spirit."

Ans. 1. Such phrases in Scripture import not liberty and power in man to do such things, but show his duty, and misery that he cannot do them. Man, having fallen, should set himself in the condition God placed him first in, he should cast away his sins, regain that image of God he hath lost, yet all his endeavours will not reach it: a man may with as much facility make a new sun, a new heaven, a new earth, a new world, as a new heart and "new spirit" within himself. David knew it, and therefore prayed, Psal. li. 10, "Create in me a clean heart," &c.

2. Neither is this command of God in vain, for the Lord gives what he commands; "Make you a new heart and a new spirit," saith God, here is his command; and in the verse we are on it is said, "I will put a new spirit within you;" so that, when a thing is commanded us to do which we cannot do, we are to look at the Lord to do it, who hath therefore made gracious promises to his people for that purpose. Man is commanded to fear God, Eccles. xii. 13; Isa. viii. 13; 1 Pet. ii. 17; and God hath promised to put his fear in his people's hearts; Jer. xxxii. 40, "I will put my fear in their hearts, and they shall not depart from me;" Hos. iii. 5, "They shall fear the Lord and his goodness." Prov. iv. 5, 7, we are bid to "get wisdom and understanding;" Isa. i. 17, "Learn to do well;" and the promise is, Isa. liv. 13, "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord." 2 Pet. iii. 18, we are commanded to "grow in grace;" but we can no more make grace to grow in our hearts, than the gardener can make the tree to grow in the orchard; therefore the promise is, Psal. xcii. 12—15, "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree; he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon. Those that be planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God. They shall still bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and flourishing; to show that the Lord is upright." Col. iii. 5, "Mortify your members which are upon the earth," that is the command, and, Micah vii. 19, "He will subdue our iniquities."

3. "Make you a new heart," that is, declare you have a new heart wrought in you. Saith Junius, God makes the new heart εργασία, by effectual working, man doth it φανέρωσι, by manifestation.

"I will take the stony heart out of their flesh." אבן לב cor lapidis. The word "heart" hath been opened formerly, and by it we comprehend and mean the understanding, will, affections, and conscience.

"Stony," or stone heart, or stoniness of heart. It is a metaphorical expression, taken from the nature of a stone, and notes out the spiritual stoniness and hardness which is in the heart.

1. A stone is senseless, and stirs not; Exod. xv. 16, "They shall be as still as a stone;" such is a stony heart; it is cor sine sensu, a heart without feeling, as in Nabal, 1 Sam. xxv. 37, "His heart died within him, and he became as a stone," senseless.

A stone feels no weight; lay the heaviest burden upon it, smite the hardest strokes, it is not sensible of any. Let a stony heart have a world of sin, and guilt in it, lying upon it, yet no feeling of it; Eph. iv. 19, "Who being past feeling have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness;" they had lost all sense of evil in sin, and went on without any check. Let men swear, lie, deceive, whore, &c. they feel no evil in it; let them be upon the pikes, like the young man in Proverbs chap. vii. going as "an ox to the slaughter, as a bird to the snare, they know not that it is for their lives;" tell such of danger, they are not sensible.

The Jews had stony hearts, and see how senseless they were, Matt. xiii. 15, "This people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with," &c. This is five times more mentioned in the New Testament, Mark iv. 12; Luke viii. 10; John xii. 40; Acts xxviii. 26; Rom. xi. 8, fetched all from Isa. vi. 9.

Hence those expressions, "The unjust knoweth no shame," Zeph. iii. 5; they cannot blush, Jer. vi. 15; "they are impudent children," Ezek. ii. 4; their "brow brass," Isa. xlviii. 4.

2. It is hard and yields not; strike a stone oft, it yields not to the stroke. In Job xli. 24, speaking of the Leviathan, he saith, "His heart is as firm as a stone; yea, as hard as a piece of the nether millstone;" brass, arrows, darts, and spears, are as stubble and straw to him, they will not enter. So is it with a stony heart, nothing enters; Zech. vii. 11, "They refused to hearken, and pulled away the shoulder, and stopped their ears, that they should not hear. Yea, they made their hearts as an adamant stone;" and that is lapis indomabilis, it will not yield at all. No reproofs, threatenings, afflictions, judgments, did prevail with their stony hearts; therefore, Isa. i. 5, saith God, "Why should ye be stricken any more? ye will revolt more and more." Man's natural heart is an unteachable, intractable heart; no prayers, no tears, no truths, no arguments, no mercies, no judgments will conquer it; it is inexorable: Isa. xxvi. 10, "Let favour be showed to the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness."

Hence two things:

(1.) Tenacity of opinions, principles, and conclusions, though never so false and corrupt. Jer. viii. 5, "They hold fast deceit;" chap. iv. 14, "O Jerusalem, how long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee?" They thought their worship was right, that God was pleased with their inventions and additions, that the Lord would not depart from the temple, &c.

(2.) Obstinacy in their ways, continuance in their old practices. Jer. xvii. 23, "They obeyed not, neither inclined their ear, but made their neck stiff, that they might not hear, nor receive instruction;" chap. v. 3, "They have made their faces harder than a rock, they have refused to return;" Judg. ii. 19, "They ceased not from their own doings, nor from their stubborn way."

3. Man's heart resists. Lam. iii. 16, "He hath also broken my teeth with gravel stones:" while a man thinks to break the stones with his teeth, they conquer by their hardness, and break the teeth. Adamants and other stones repel the force of the stroke, and oft break the instrument which strikes them; so do stony and hard hearts; Matt. xxiii. 37, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I," &c. When Christ preached unto them, they yielded not to his doctrine, but resisted, and sought the ruin of his person; Luke iv. 28, 29, "All they in the synagogue, when they heard these things, were filled with wrath, and rose up, and thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the brow of the hill, that they might cast him down headlong." Here was the stoniness of their hearts made evident fully, they would not receive Christ, but kill him. Such hearts make men possessed with them.

(1.) Contradictory to the truth; their tongues are busy. Rom. x. 21, the Jews are called "a disobedient and gainsaying people," they contradicted the prophets: 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16, "They mocked the messengers of God:" so Jer. xlv. 16, "As for the word which thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken unto thee. But we will certainly do whatsoever," &c.

(2.) Contentious. Rom. ii. 8, "Unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth:" hard hearts yield not to the truth, but contend against the truth. The Pharisees and others did not only cavil at Christ's doctrine, but plotted, acted, and contended against it and him: John xi. 47, 48, the chief priests and Pharisees gathered "a council, and said, What do we? If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him," &c.; ver. 53, "From that day forth they took counsel together for to put him to death." God told Jer. miah that the Jews should fight against him, Jer. i. 19; and xxvi. 8, 9, you shall find it made good; when he had prophesied against their carnal confidence in the temple, they were gathered together against him, laid hands upon him, and threatened him with death.

4. A stone hath a strong tendency downwards. Exod. xv. 5, "They sank into the bottom as a stone:" stones hasten downward to the bottom, and they move not upwards at all; if by force you throw a stone upwards, it falls down again with swiftness. Such is the nature of a stony heart, it moves not God or Christ-ward, but sin and hell-ward; that is the proper motion of it, being weighty, and cannot but move downward: Prov. vii. 27, speaking of the adulteress, whose heart is hardened in wickedness, he saith, "Her house is the way to hell, going down to the

with greediness:" there is a strong inclination to, and greediness of, committing sin, and every sin is a step to hell: Prov. ii. 18, "Her house inclineth unto death, and her paths unto the dead." Ezek. iii. 7, it is said, "All the house of Israel are impudent and hard-hearted:" and Ezek. vi. 9, their heart is said to be whorish; and why whorish? because it leads to death and hell, as the whorish woman's house doth. A stony heart is an earthly heart, and so an enemy to the cross of Christ, Phil. iii. 18, 19; that is, to all of Christ, it looks not upwards.

Obj. It is said, a stony heart is not yieldable, teachable, receives not impression of any thing: Did not the stony ground receive the word? Matt. xiii. 20; if so, how is it true which hath been affirmed?

Answe. 1. It is said by Matthew, the seed "fell upon stony places," chap. xiii. 5, and "upon a rock," Luke viii. 6; it fell not into the stones, or into the rock: but some fell not only on the good ground, as Luke hath it, but into the good ground, as Matthew relates it, chap. xiii. 8.

2. There is a double reception of the word. First, a superficial, and secondly, a solid, reception of the word, which the place holds out; for that seed which fell upon stony places "lacked moisture," saith Luke, had "no deepness, no root," saith Matthew. It affected the natural fleshiness of the heart, but the spiritual hardness in it suffered it not to root, to enter, abide: the novelty and rationalness of the word caused them to rejoice, but the spiritualness of it was opposed by their stony hearts. Secondly, the solid reception is, when there is a deep impression made upon the heart, a thorough entrance into it, so that it roots, abides, and brings forth fruit: James i. 21, he calls it "the ingrafted word;" now it cannot be ingrafted into a stony stock, there is no life, no tenderness in such a stock; it may be pronounced to such a heart, it cannot enter, unite, and grow.

"Out of their flesh." Flesh is sometimes put for corruption, or corrupt nature; Rom. vii. 18, "In my flesh dwelleth no good thing;" so it is not taken here: sometimes for the body of man; Psal. xxxvii. 3, "There is no soundness in my flesh," that is, in my body: sometimes for the whole man; Rom. iii. 20, "By the law shall no flesh be justified in his sight;" and so in Luke iii. 6, "All flesh shall see the salvation of God;" and thus it is taken here, "out of their flesh, it is out of them, out of the whole man."

Obs. 1. Men's hearts naturally are stony and hard. Some diseases are hereditary, even the stone in many persons. This stoniness is so in all, not a man born but hath a stony heart, a stony spirit; Ezek. iii. 7, "All the house of Israel are hard-hearted," young and old.

There is a natural hardness of the heart, and a contracted. Original sin, which is common to all, and comes with all, makes the heart hard; and actual sins make the heart stony, very hard; every sin contracts more stoniness, and where sin abounds, there stoniness abounds: hence the Scripture speaks of hearts like adamants; Zech. vii. 12, "They have made their hearts as an adamant" by their sins, they have brought their hearts to such a high degree of stoniness; Isa. xlviii. 4, "I knew that thou art obstinate, and thy neck is an iron sinew, and thy brow brass;" which sets out the great hardness they had contracted by their sin. Is there any thing harder than stone, iron, and brass? unto these are their hardened hearts, necks, and brows compared.

(1.) The spiritual hardness spreads itself into the understanding. Rom. xi. 7, "The rest were blinded."

Blindness respects the mind, the understanding, and it is such a blinding as burdens; their ignorance and unbelief blinded and hardened them. In the night we have the hardest frosts, &c.

Heb. v. 11, the apostle tells the Hebrews, they were "dull of hearing;" they had been long taught, yet scarcely understood the principles of religion: Luke xxiv. 25, "O fools, and slow of heart to believe."

(2.) Into the will and affection. Saith Christ, "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life," John v. 40; there was a stone, stubbornness and obstinacy, in their wills. Did not Christ preach powerfully and spiritually? did he not command, threaten, promise, present strong arguments, tender the greatest mercies, bear with the greatest patience, weep over Jerusalem with the most pathetic and sacred tears, saying most compassionately, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem," yet Jerusalem would not? Do not the ministers of Christ now beseech you, in his stead, to leave your sinful courses, and to come in, yet, &c.?

(3.) Into the conscience. Paul tells you of "conscience seared with a hot iron," 1 Tim. iv. 2. When any part of the body is seared with a hot iron, it grows hard, and feels nothing; such were the consciences of men then, and are now; they are so brawny and stony, that tell them of danger, judgments, death, hell, eternal damnation, that their sins are great, grievous, subjecting them every moment to all the vengeance of an infinite Deity, they are not troubled at it; tell them that all the curses in God's book due to sinners will come upon them, their hearts fail them not, their consciences are still, &c.

Now this stoniness of heart is a great evil; it is unthankful, what mercies soever it hath given in, insensible of all spiritual good, it is unyieldable to any ordinance, it resists the truth, and Spirit of truth; Acts. vii. 51, "Ye still-necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost; as your fathers did, so do ye." It is contradicting, and contending against the Lord and his ways; it is tending swiftly to destruction, for it is impenitent, it neither will nor can repent.

Obs. 1. It is the Lord that takes away the stony heart out of men; I will do it. It is not in the power of man to remove the stone out of the heart; he may get the stone out of the kidneys, out of the bladder, but not out of the heart. We may all say, "Who shall roll away this stone?" as they said, Mark xvi. 3; and the answer must be, Not an angel, not any creature, but only the Lord. God tells them that they should take away all the detestable things out of the land; but he would take away the stone out of their heart, and the stony heart out of them.

It is the work of free grace. Nothing is in a stony heart to move God to take it away, but enough to move God to destroy it, and him that hath it; it is merely good will puts him on to do it.

It is the work of omnipotent power to do it. Some read it, aufferam, I will take away; some, removebo, I will remove; some, extraham, I will draw out of you, intimating, there must be a mighty power to do it; when you would remove a great stone, you bring a strong team, and tacklings, to draw it out of its place, so here.

It is a great mercy to have this stone removed. The stone in the heart is a great plague, yea, greater than all the plagues of Egypt; Pharaoh's hard heart was worse than all them; the removal, therefore, of it, is a greater mercy than the removal of all those judgments.

It is a heart incapable of reproof; that profits not by any means of grace whatsoever, that is not kindly affected with the greatest mercies or judgments. It is a heart that hates holiness, and the power of godliness, a heart that pleaseth itself in the ways of wickedness; it is a heart the devil lives in, and works his will by.

Quest. Whether doth God remove the stone totally out of the hearts of his people at first conversion, or while they are in this life?

Ans. God doth this work gradually, it is not all done at once. The apostles were converted, yet all hardness was not out of their hearts, Mark vi. 52; viii. 17. Stones are digged out of the quarries by degrees, and rocks hewn in pieces in time: so is it here, God breaks and separates the stoniness of the heart, some one day, some another day, and it is doing all a man's life: as a man subject to the stone and gravel, voids some one day, some another, and is not perfectly cured till death, so in this spiritual stoniness. Neither let any say, Then the heart is stony still, and in the same condition it was before. Not so; for though there be some stoniness in it, yet is it not stony; there is softness introduced, and the denomination is from that, "I will give them an heart of flesh."

Quest. If there be stoniness in the hearts of those that are in covenant with God, how shall I know the difference between the stoniness in the godly and that in the wicked?

Ans. 1. The stoniness of the wicked grows greater and greater, every day they are more stony, they grow "worse and worse," 2 Tim. iii. 2 2 Chron. xxxviii. 13; but the stoniness in the godly ²² grows less and less, they use all means to abate it; in the one it is incurable, in the other it is curing.

2. That in the saints is rather accidental than essential, an external crustiness rather than an intrinsic hardness. It is an iciness, not a true stoniness: water may become ice, but not stone; it will thaw and melt again, it freezes and thaws oft; not so with a stone, or iron, they have intrinsic, essential hardness.

3. The godly feel the stone in their hearts, complain and cry out of it as a grievous evil; but the wicked feel it not, in them it reigns, is in full power and strength; Eph. iv. 19, they are "past feeling."

4. The stoniness in the godly is rather a stoniness against sin, than a stoniness of sin; he is faeile to good, but obstinate to evil; Gen. xxxix. 9, "How then can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?" Psal. cxix. 115, "Depart from me, ye evildoers; for I will keep the commandments of my God;" he had strong temptations to sin from the wicked, but he would not be drawn by them. But it is otherwise with the wicked, they are obstinate to good, and prone to evil; "they work all uncleanness with greediness," Eph. iv. 19; and cease not "from their stubborn way," Judg. ii. 19. So the Samaritans, who were fallen to false worship, said, in the stoutness and pride of their hearts, "The bricks are fallen down, but we will build with hewn stones," Isa. ix. 9, 10; and Mal. iii. 13, their words were stout against God. And Saul, a wicked king, it is said, he "rejected the word of the Lord," 1 Sam. xv. 23. The builders who had stony hearts rejected Christ the Corner-stone, Matt. xxi. 42; "lawyers rejected the counsel of God," Luke vii. 30.

"And will give them an heart of flesh." We have opened the word "heart" before, at the beginning of the verse, and showed it comprehended understanding, will, affections, and conscience.

"Flesh." Here it is set in opposition to stony, and differs from the word "flesh" mentioned immediately before: there "flesh" implied substance, their persons; here it implies a quality, tenderness, softness. Flesh is in itself a tender thing; sin hard-cns it, and makes it stony, but God would take out the stoniness, the hardness thereof, and make it tender and soft.

There is a double tenderness spoken of in Scripture :

1. A natural tenderness. 2 Chron. xiii. 7, "When Rehoboam was young and tender-hearted, and could not withstand them;" he was not hardened in wickedness, but being young, had a natural tenderness, which made him facile and yieldable to the onsets of others: but this is not the tenderness we are to speak of.

2. A spiritual tenderness. Eph. iv. 32, "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted." A mother hath natural tenderness to her child; have you answerable spiritual tenderness, such as is in the Lord, who is said to be full of pity and tenderness, Jam. v. 11; and this is the tenderness here meant.

This spiritual tenderness is a gracious disposition of the heart, wrought by the Spirit, easily admitting or receiving whatever spirituals are propounded unto it.

It is a gracious disposition, not natural, nor moral; neither parents nor education convey aught unto it. Grace is a tender thing, and makes tender; Luke i. 78, it is called "tender mercy of our God," and that makes a tender heart, a gracious disposition in it like itself.

Wrought by the Spirit. It is not the law works it; that may break the heart into pieces, as a hammer doth a stone, but not melt it and make it tender; it is the gospel and fire of the Spirit in it which produceth that effect; not the plough, but rain, which softens the ground: David saith, Psal. lxxv. 13, "Thou makest it soft with showers." The Corinthians' hearts were not tables of stone, but fleshy tables; the Spirit had made them such, and written the gospel in them, 2 Cor. iii. 3. The Galatians received the Spirit, not by the preaching of the law, but by the preaching of faith, Gal. iii. 2, and that Spirit made their hearts tender. When Job was in his great afflictions, they softened not his heart, but he saith, God made soft his heart, Job xxiii. 16; that was, by his Spirit.

Easily admitting or receiving. This is the formal, intrinsic nature of this tenderness, that it is like wax taking in impressions. The stony heart yields not, but resists; this resists not, but yields; like Gideon's fleece, it drunk in the dew as fast as it fell, Judges vi.; like the soft earth, which drinks in the rain, not like the rocks and mountains, which shoot it off, Heb. vi. 7. Hence saith Moses, Dent. xxxiii. 3, speaking of saints who have tender hearts, and sit at God's feet, "Every one shall receive of thy words." And Paul, speaking of a natural man, 1 Cor. ii. 14, he saith, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit;" his heart is stony, not tender, and so without a capacity of receiving whatever spiritual things are propounded. It is ready to say, as Samuel, "Speak; for thy servant heareth," 1 Sam. iii. 10. Let God, or any from God, offer any spiritual things unto a tender heart, it is ready to receive them; Acts ix. 6, saith Saul, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" propound what thou pleasest unto me.

Discoveries of this tenderness:

1. It is affected with, and mourns for, that hardness which remains in it, that it is not more tender and wrought upon by the mercies, ordinances, judgments of God. David was sensible of his hardness and deadness, and therefore cries off to God for quickening; Psal. cxix. 154, "Quicken me according to thy word;" "Quicken me according to thy judgments," ver. 156; "Quicken me according to thy loving-kindness," ver. 159.

2. It feels the least sins and risings of corruption; as some bodies are so tender, that they discern any distempers stir in them presently, others are hardy, and discern little, till it come to some dangerous disease. It is not so here, a heart spiritually tender is sensible of the least sin; the least mote in the eye, crumb in the windpipe, are troublesome to them; and so the rising of corruption, the very being of sin in the heart, is troublesome to a tender heart; Paul saw and felt the "law in his members, warring against," &c.

3. It hearkens and yields to reproofs. Salt will not enter into a stone, but into flesh, seasons it, and makes it savoury. Reproofs are salt, they enter into fleshy and tender hearts: Prov. xvii. 10, "A reproof entereth more into a wise man than an hundred stripes into a fool;" his heart is tender, and a reproof presently makes impression, the door opens and it goes in: whereas the heart of a fool will not be beat open with many stripes; nec credit, nec cedit, neither does it believe nor yield; but the tender-hearted, wise, and godly, believe, and yield: David, Psal. cxli. 5, "Let the righteous smite me; it shall be a kindness: and let him reprove me; it shall be an excellent oil." Reproofs soften tender hearts, harden stony ones. Prov. xxix. 1.

4. It hath a lively sense of God's dishonour, and the saints' wrong.

(1.) Of God's dishonour. Psal. cxix. 136, "Rivers of waters run down mine eyes, because they keep not thy law." When David saw God's worship corrupted, heard his name blasphemed, beheld his law openly violated, his tender heart bled within him, melted into tears, and wept abundantly, that the infinite, holy, glorious, great God should be so dishonoured by sinful dust and ashes. And Psal. lxxix. 9, "The reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me;" David reprov'd men that reproach'd God by their lips and lives, and they reproach'd him for it. Lot's righteous soul was "vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked," 2 Pet. ii. 7.

(2.) It much feels the saints' wrong, and church's suffering. 2 Cor. xi. 29, "Who is offended, and I burn not?" When any member of the church suffered, Paul was afflicted, grieved, as a man burnt with fire, and the more tender the flesh is, the greater is the pain; and so in the heart, the tenderer that is, the greater sense and pain hath it of others' sufferings, especially the church's. Read Psal. lxxxix. and lxxx. and you shall see how greatly Asaph was afflicted for the miseries of the church; the saints suffered much without, and he suffered much within; they were broken in their states and comforts, and he was broken in his heart and spirit: so Jer. ix. 1, "Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people!" Acts xii. 5, when Peter, &c. As Christ was tender of the saints when persecuted by Saul, Acts ix. so every member of Christ, participating of his tenderness, feels in his degree the injuries done to the rest.

5. It trembles at the word of God. Isa. lxvi. 2, contrition of spirit, and trembling at the word, do go together; there is such majesty, authority, holiness, severity, and glory, in the word, that a tender heart trembleth at it. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 27, Josiah's heart was tender, he trembled and humbled himself before the Lord when the law was read before him. And those in Ezra "trembled at the words of the God of Israel," chap. ix. 4.

6. It is obedient unto the call and will of God. Let the Lord call, it saith, Here I am, what wilt thou have me to do? whither shall I go? I am ready for it. Abraham had a tender heart, and when God called for his Isaac, and bade him go and offer him upon mount Moriah, Gen. xxii. he had a tractable heart, he yielded presently to the Lord, without any dispute or delay. A tender heart is an obedient heart: Josiah was tender-hearted, and he did the will of God most thoroughly of any of the kings of Judah, none of them did reform so as he did, 2 Chron. xxxv. 18. David was a man of a tender spirit, and he fulfilled all the will of God, Acts xiii. 22.

7. It is tender towards others. A tender heart hath a tender tongue and a tender hand; the man that hath such a heart speaks evil of none, doth harm to none; such a one is merciful to his beast, much more to men; he pities those who are in a perishing way, and would pull them out of the fire; the law of kindness is in his lips, and actions of love are in his hands. Job's heart was soft, Job xxiii. 16; and you may find what his words and actions were, chap. xxix. 11—13, 15, 16; "When the ear heard me, then it blessed me;" he spake such comfortable words to them, gave them such good counsel, that they blessed him for it; and his actions were, delivering the poor and fatherless, helping the blind and lame, and making the widow's heart to rejoice. Tenderness of heart breeds tenderness towards others. It is said of Esau, he was red, "all over like a hairy garment," Gen. xxv. 25; he was red and rough, bloody and bitter. If there well there were no sons of Esau in our days, men bloody and bitter, seeking the ruin of plain-hearted Jacobs. If others, by their rough speeches and dealings, do show the hardness of their hearts, let us, by the softness of our tongues, and bounty of our hands, show the tenderness of our hearts. Eph. iv. 32, "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

8. It entertains and retains the motions and truths of God's Spirit. A tender heart will not suffer the Spirit to knock long at the door, and then go away grieved, but it opens quickly, and receives the message. When the Spirit came to Peter, Acts x. 19, 20, and bade him go to Cornelius, and preach Christ unto him, he went immediately. When the gospel was preached to the Thessalonians, in demonstration of the Spirit, it is said, they received it "with joy of the Holy Ghost;" that joy of the Holy Ghost may as well refer to the Holy Ghost itself, who rejoiced at their speedy receiving the word and Spirit in it, as to the Thessalonians, who had joy wrought in them by receiving of the word. 2 Cor. iii. 3, the Corinthians had fleshy hearts, and they are called "the epistle of Christ;" and why? because the Spirit had wrote the gospel in them with ease. Moses had much ado to write the law in the tables of stone, but the Spirit did it easily in the fleshy tables of their hearts. Those truths which are written in the heart, are held so fast, that men will rather lose their lives than lose them.

Obs. 1. A tender heart is a choice and great mercy; where this is, the understanding is apprehensive of divine things. The Lord Christ, who was without sin, and so nothing but tenderness, was quick of understanding, Isa. xi. 3; and the more free from sin our hearts are, the quicker our understandings will be. Matt. xiii. 15, where there is a gross and hard heart, there is an un-understanding heart, an unperceiving heart, Mark viii. 17; on the contrary, where a tender heart is, there is the clearest understanding.

The will is pliable to the truth of the gospel. Rom. vi. 17, "Ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you," and into which ye were delivered.

The conscience is awake, and will not endure the guilt of any sin to lie upon it. Peter had sinned, but he goes out and weeps bitterly.

The affections are lively, and stir much towards God. David had a tender heart, and how strongly did his affections stir after God! Psal. xlii. 1, 2, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God; when shall I come and appear before God?" lxiii. 8, "My soul followeth hard after thee;" and lxix. 9, "The zeal of thy house hath eaten me up." It is that the Lord intends to write his whole will in; Jer. xxxi. 33, "I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts;" first he will make them soft, and then write in the law and gospel. It receives discipline, correction; Jer. v. 3, "Thou hast stricken them, but they have refused to receive correction: they have made their faces harder," &c. A hard heart doth not receive correction, but a tender one doth.

Obs. 2. It is the gift of God, he gives this tender heart unto us. We can harden our hearts through sinning, but we cannot soften them, being once hardened, by any means we use. Tenderness of heart is a special grace, so is oneness of heart, newness of spirit, and all these are from God, who is styled "The God of all grace," 1 Pet. v. 10; there is not any grace but what is from God, he is the author of it. In this case of a heart of flesh, he puts his hand into the heart and pulls out the stone, and puts in tenderness. He that can turn stones into children, Matt. iii. 9, is he that turns stony hearts into flesh; and this he doth freely, there is no motive of his will; Phil. ii. 13, his working is of his good pleasure; James i. 18, "Of his own will begat he us." Not the pleasure of man, or his will, appears in this work, God consults not with man about it, but doth the work himself, "I will take away the stone," &c.; it is exclusive, and shuts out all: hence those sweet promises, Isa. xli. 18—20,

"I will open rivers in high places, and fountains in the midst of the valleys: I will make the wilderness a pool of water, and the dry land springs of water. I will plant in the wilderness the cedar, the shittah tree, and the myrtle, and the oil tree; I will set in the desert the fir tree, and the pine, and the box tree together: that they may see, and know, and consider, and understand together, that the hand of the Lord hath done this, and the Holy One of Israel hath created it."

God softens the heart by dropping his word upon it; Deut. xxxii. 2, "My doctrine shall drop as the rain," &c.; by the blood of Christ, by revealing his free grace, &c.

Ver. 20. That they may walk in my statutes, and keep mine ordinances, and do them: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God.

Here is the end of God's grace and goodness towards them, with an asserting of such to be his people, and his promise to be their God.

Obs. God multiplies mercies when he is in a way of mercy; when he is giving out promises, he gives not one, or two, but many. Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, there is a heap of promises: so in Ezek. xxxvi. 25—29, there are eight or nine promises together. Hos. xiv. 4—7, promise after promise is given out. Isa. lx. is full of sweet promises, one after another. This is a sweet subject to meditate upon, but I come to open the words.

Isa. xlv. 3, "I will pour floods upon the dry ground."

“That they may walk.” Walking here is metaphorical, taken from the motion of the body, moving by steps from place to place; and is applied to the conversation and life of man, in a spiritual sense, and imports progress in the way of God, Psal. exix. 1.

“In my statutes.” The Hebrew word חֻקֵּי chukkim, notes rites pertaining to the ceremonial law, called also ἐκαυωματα; and not only so, but chukkim includes the whole ceremonial law. The Seventy do sometimes translate it ἐντολαι, commandments, which mitzvoth properly signifies, containing the moral law, or ten commandments, and not ἐκαυωματα; but, Deut. iv. 40, they render חֻקֵּי by ἐκαυωματα, and צִוִּיּוֹת by ἐντολας, Eph. ii. 15, Paul calls chukkim, νόμον τῶν ἐντολῶν ἐν δόγμασι, The law of commandments in ordinances.

“Nine ordinances.” Mishphatim, מִשְׁפָּטִים koimata, judgments. These some refer to the outward policy of Israel, their civil estate, but statutes and ordinances are used promiscuously; and here by them I conceive is meant the whole law of God revealed.

This walking in his statutes is set out in holy writ by such expressions as these, viz. walking after the Lord, Deut. xiii. 4; walking before God, 1 Kings ix. 4; walking in the light of the Lord, Isa. ii. 5; walking in the truth, 3 John 4; walking in the name of the Lord, Micah iv. 5; walking according to rule, Gal. vi. 16; and, walking with God, Gen. vi. 9.

“Keep mine ordinances.” Keeping imports,

1. Remembering: Luke ii. 51, Mary “kept all these sayings in her heart.”

2. Holding fast: 2 Tim. i. 14, “The good thing committed unto thee keep,” that is, hold fast. Here we must take in both remembering and holding fast but in order to doing; men may know, remember, and hold fast the mind of God, but not do the same: Deut. v. 1, “Hear, O Israel, the statutes and judgments which I speak in your ears this day, and keep, and do them;” the Hebrew is, keep to do them.

“Do them.” Doing implies,

1. The performing and practice of them: Psal. xv. 4, “He that doeth these things shall never be moved.”

2. Fulfilling of things required: 1 Kings v. 8, saith Hiram to Solomon, “I will do all thy desire,” that is, fulfil thy desire. Both may be understood here, not simply to do, but to do exactly.

Obs. 1. The end of God’s giving us temporal and spiritual mercies is, that we should be obedient unto him. He gathered them out of Babylon, planted them in Canaan, gives them oneness of heart, newness of spirit, &c.; and why? that they might walk in his statutes, and keep his ordinances. God hireth us with mercies to do his will: Psal. cv. 43—45, “He brought forth his people with joy, and his chosen with gladness; and gave them the lands of the heathen: and they inherited the labour of the people; that they might observe his statutes, and keep his law.” 2 Sam. xii. 7—9, David was obliged by God’s bounty to obedience. Why did God so much for his vineyard, Isa. v. 2, but that it might bring forth grapes? the end of all mercies and means afforded us, was to make it fruitful in obedience: all in God’s works and in his word are so many inducements to obedience. God hath given us the earth, and fulness of it, and the end is to provoke us thereby to walk in his statutes; he hath given us his good word, choice ordinances, heavenly counsels, precious promises, profitable commands, holy examples, and his end in all these is to quicken us up to obedience. It is the end of election, 1 Pet. i. 2; it is the end of redemption, Luke i. 74, 75; it is the end of our new creation, Eph. ii. 10. Paul beseeches the Romans by the mercies of God, to present their bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God. Our mercies should prevail with us; we are planted in a good land, we have the dews of heaven, and fatness of the earth. God hath done great things amongst us, and for us, we have had wonderful deliverances, and shall not we be encouraged thereby to walk in the statutes of our God? Deut. xi. 7, 8, “Your eyes have seen all the great acts of the Lord which he did; therefore shall ye keep all the commandments which I command you this day.” Let the great things we have seen and heard put us upon obeying the Lord, and so obeying him that our obedience may be, (1.) General; God requires you should “walk in all his ways,” Deut. x. 12. (2.) Hearty, yea, with the whole heart, Deut. xxvi. 16. (3.) Constant, Deut. iv. 9; Gal. vi. 9. (4.) Willing, cheerful, Phil. ii. 14; Deut. xxviii. 47. (5.) With strength and courage, Josh. xxiii. 6. If we do not walk in the statutes of the Lord, and keep his commands, we know not God, 1 John ii. 3, 4; we do not love God, 1 John v. 3, nor Christ, John xiv. 15; our prayers will be unfruitful and unsuccessful, 1 John iii. 22.

Obs. 2. Note, that walking in God’s statutes, keeping his ordinances, and doing his will, do evidence the work of grace in the heart, and what the man is. God would give them oneness of heart, newness and tenderness of spirit, that they might walk, keep, do, &c. If then they did so, this declared what was within. Luke i. 6, “Zacharias and Elisabeth were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless;” their walking witnessed their righteousness: see 1 John iii. 10; ii. 29. Luke vi. 44, whatever the fruit is, such is the tree; figs do not grow upon thorns, nor grapes upon brambles, where you find grapes it is a vine: and not only doth God and Christ know them, but, Matt. vii. 16, “Ye shall know them by their fruits;” not by their leaves, but their fruits; not some few actions, but by a daily observation of them. Sometimes delay and time, and always attention, is required to discern them: 2 Tim. iii. 5, “Having a form of godliness,” &c. this may be discerned, for, ver. 9, “Their folly shall be manifest to all men.” James ii. 18, works are the glass, picture, child of faith: Adam begat a son after his image, and faith begets children after its own image: Abraham’s offering of his son declared his faith, Heb. xi. 17. Works justify faith, and faith justifies the man. Some doubt whether works will prove grace, whether sanctification will evidence justification; but John tells us there is a witness of water, as well as of blood, and of the Spirit, 1 John v. 8. If the law written in books may be known, and the sense of it evidenced by commentaries, surely the law written in the heart may be known and evidenced by works.

Obs. 3. Grace in the heart will appear in the life. If there be a new spirit, a tender heart, there will be walking in the statutes. A new spirit cannot be imprisoned within, but it will break out into action; when the seed is sown in good ground, it will not lie long under-ground, but spring forth, Mark iv. 20; grace is light, and that will manifest itself, ver. 21, 22. God hath determined that hidden things shall be manifested; grace cannot always be hid, 1 Pet. ii. 9; such virtue will out, 1 Thess. i. 5—7. The Corinthians were the epistle of Paul written in his heart, read and known of all men. The Romans’ faith was spoken of throughout the world, Rom. i. 8; that was, in all the churches of the world: so their obedience, chap. xvi. 19. There be divers things cannot be hidden, as the light, fire, life, the wind, a spring; and of this nature is grace, which is all those: it is light, and fire; John was a burning and shining light: it is life, Luke xv. 24; it is the wind of the Spirit, Cant. iv. 16; John iii. 8; it is a spring, John vii. 38. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, and it cannot but bring forth good fruit; Acts iv. 20, "We cannot but speak the things we have seen and heard." Paul, when converted, presently said, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" he would not be idle, but doing the will of the Lord Christ.

Obs. 4. It is not from man's strength but God's grace, that any walk in his statutes, keep his ordinances, and do them. I will take away the stony heart, give them an heart of flesh, and put a new spirit within them, that they may walk, keep, and do. Man is a feeble, impotent creature, he cannot think a good thought, make a hair white or black; and how then can he walk in the statutes of the Lord? Satan is powerful and politic, he makes strong assaults, and such, as that, if God did not assist by his grace, we should fall every moment; hence those expressions of David, Psal. cxix. 5, 35, 36. Moses and the covenant of works called for obedience, contributed no strength; but God in Christ gives strength to do what is called for: Ezek. xxxvi. 27, "I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them." See Heb. xiii. 20, 21.

Obs. 5. God's statutes and ordinances are to be the saints' way to walk in, and rule to walk by. Statutes, ordinances, are called ways, paths, Jer. vi. 16. Young men must cleanse their ways according to the word, Psal. cxix. 9. David would have his steps ordered by the word, ver. 133. The word is the way to walk in, and a rule to walk by; we must try all spirits and doctrines in it, Isa. viii. 20: 1 Thess. v. 21; 1 John iv. 6; Acts xvii. 11: all things we believe, Acts xxvi. 27; Eph. ii. 20; John xx. 31; Gal. i. 8: all things we practise, 2 Tim. iii. 15, 17; Eccles. xii. 13. Matt. xxviii. 20, what God and Christ command must we observe, not what others direct. Isa. viii. 11, walk not in the ways of this people; not in the light of our own fire, Isa. l. 11: not after customs of men, Acts xxi. 21.

Obs. 6. Those whom God reneweth by grace, giveth newness and tenderness of spirit unto, he looks they should make progress in his ways, keep in mind his ordinances, and do them exactly, fulfil them. Deut. vi. 17, "Ye shall diligently keep the commandments of the Lord, and his testimonies and statutes." Psal. cxix. 4, "Thou hast commanded to keep thy precepts diligently." The Hebrew is, valde, greatly; the Septuagint, vehemently; and the Vulgate, nimis, too much; which expressions show, that we should endeavour to the utmost to keep them. God expected they should keep the sabbath exactly, Isa. lviii. 13; and so the rest of his commands.

"They shall be my people, and I will be their God." These words have two things in them:

I. God's asserting them to be his people.

II. A gracious promise to be their God.

You have these words often mentioned in the book of God; once in Leviticus, chap. xxvi. 12; seven times in Jeremiah, chap. vii. 23; xi. 4; xxiv. 7; xxx. 22; xxxi. 1, 33; xxxii. 38: four times in our prophet Ezekiel, chap. xxxvi. 28; xxxvii. 23, 27, and here in this verse; once in Zechariah, chap. viii. 8; twice in the New Testament, 2 Cor. vi. 16, and Rev. xxi. 3: in all there are fifteen times set down; which intimates to us that there is great weight in them, that they are of great consideration and use.

יהוה יישיבם "They shall be my people." Hebrew is, they shall be to me for a people. And so, I will be to them Lelohim, for a God. I will show you,

I. What is implied in these words, "They shall be my people."

II. What in the other, "I will be their God."

I. "They shall be my people."

1. They shall acknowledge me to be their God, they shall not own any other god. There is difference between knowing and acknowledging; you may know such a one to be a child, but not acknowledge him to be your child: you may know such towns, countries, kingdoms, but not acknowledge them yours. This phrase, "my people," imports acknowledging God to be theirs: Psal. xlviii. 14, "This God," that dwells at Jerusalem, that breaks the ships of Tarshish, this God "is our God for ever and ever." Psal. lxxvii. 13, "Who is so great a God as our God?" Here is acknowledgment of God, not only to be great, but to be their God. Isa. xxv. 9, "This is our God; we have waited for him." Exod. xxix. 45, 56, "I will be their God; and they shall know that I am the Lord their God;" that is, they shall acknowledge me to be so; it is called vouching God to be their God, Deut. xxvi. 17.

2. They shall worship me only: Exod. v. 8, "Let us go and sacrifice to our God;" not to other gods. When a people is God's people, they are possessed with apprehensions of his glory, greatness, authority over them, and infinite worthiness to be honoured, adored, admired, and magnified by them; and will say, as it is Psal. xcv. 6, "O come, let us worship," &c.; and as it is Hos. xiv. 8, "What have I to do any more with idols?" They would not meddle with the worship of the nations, their own inventions, but they would worship God, and him only, Joel ii. 27; 1 Sam. xii. 24; Psal. cxlviii. 1; Rev. xix. 1.

3. They shall trust and rely upon me, and not on any other gods, or arms of flesh: Hos. xiv. 3, "Asshur shall not save us; we will not ride upon horses: neither will we say any more to the work of our hands, Ye are our gods: for in thee the fatherless findeth mercy." See Zeph. iii. 12: Psal. ix. 10.

4. They shall be a people unto me. When God takes a people to be his, they are holy unto him: Deut. vii. 6, "Thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God;" God separated them from the world and other nations, to be holy unto himself; therefore it follows, "The Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself;" see Lev. xix. 2. Hence they were called "an holy nation," Exod. xix. 6.

5. They shall hearken unto my voice, and do my will, and yield obedience unto me: Jer. vii. 23, "Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people;" Josh. xxiv. 18, "We will serve the Lord, for he is our God." See Deut. vi. 17; Psal. l. 7; lxxxii. 8, 13.

6. They shall love me, and lay out their strength for me: Deut. vi. 5, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might;" Mark xii. 30, is added, "with all thy mind:" if God be ours he must have all. See Psal. lxxviii. 28.

7. They shall stand for my glory, and make my name honourable: Isa. xliii. 21, "This people have I formed for myself; they shall show forth my praise."

II. "I will be their God." These are gracious words, and they do import much.

1. The free grace of God in pardoning their sins. Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, when he speaks of being their God, he tells them he "will forgive their iniquity, and will remember their sin no more." Psal. lxxxv. 2, "Thou hast forgiven the iniquity of thy people, thou hast covered all their sin." The word "forgiven," signifieth to lift up, and take away. Sin is a great burden; when God becometh a God in mercy to a people, then he takes off that great burden, he lifts it up, carries it quite away, and it is hid out of sight and remembrance, Hos. xiv. 4.

2. The presence of God amongst them. Lev. xxvi. 11, 12, the Jews were God's people, and he saith, "I will set my tabernacle among you, and will walk among you, and be your God, and ye shall be my people:" the tabernacle and walking were arguments of his presence, and evidenced him to be their God. God is essentially present every where, but especially present with his people; Rev. xxi. 3, no creature, no angel, no representation of God, but God himself shall be with them; as a father with his children, as a husband with his wife, God will not only be with them, but in them, 2 Cor. vi. 16, he "will dwell in them, and walk in them."

3. The peculiar and special care of God over them. Deut. xxxii. 10—12, the Lord was as tender to them, as any creature could be to her young: the eagle is very careful of her young, carrying them not in her talons, but on her wings; so God deals by his people, he preventeth harms that might befall them. He went forth before his people, and did march in the front of them through the wilderness, Psal. lxxviii. 7; lxxvii. 20. God doth provide for, and protect his people, Isa. xxvi. 20; Deut. xxxiii. 27; Psal. cxxv. 2. "Upon all the glory shall be a defence," Isa. iv. 5.

4. Deliverance, if in straits, dangers, misery. Exod. iii. 9, 10, "I have seen the oppression: come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people out of Egypt." Ezek. xxxvii. 12, "Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves." Where God is a God to any, he is a delivering God, he is affected with their condition and sufferings, Exod. iii. 7; Isa. lxiii. 9; 1 Sam. ix. 16; Isa. iii. 15.

5. Singular comfort. Rev. xxi. 3, 4, they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, be their God, and he shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, nor sorrow, nor crying, nor pain. See Isa. xl. 1; xlix. 13; xxx. 26; li. 3. He doth encourage and hearten them, Isa. xli. 10.

6. Speaking and pleading for them. Isa. li. 22, "Thus saith thy Lord the Lord, and thy God that pleadeth the cause of his people." Their cause is many times like to suffer, men are unwise, unfaithful, manage it strangely, but God will plead the cause of his people; and he will not do it faintly, as if he cared not whether his people should have the day or no; but to purpose will he do it: Jer. i. 34, "Their Redeemer is strong; the Lord of hosts is his name; he shall thoroughly plead their cause, that he may give rest to the land, and disquiet the inhabitants of Babylon." See Micah vii. 9; Joel iii. 2.

7. Exalting and honouring of them. Deut. xxvi. 18, 19, "The Lord hath avouched thee to be his peculiar people;" and what then? "to make thee high above all nations, in praise, in name, in honour." God makes his people renewed: Isa. xxviii. 5, he is "a crown of glory" unto them; Isa. lx. 19, "Thy God thy glory;" see Jer. ii. 11; Isa. xliii. 7.

8. Teaching and instructing of them. Isa. xxviii. 26, "His God doth instruct him to discretion." Isa. li. 4, "Hearken unto me, my people; and give ear unto me, O my nation: for a law shall proceed from me, and I will make my judgment to rest for a light of the people." See Deut. iv. 36; Isa. xlvi. 17.

9. Delight in them. Isa. lxxv. 19, "I will joy in my people;" no friends can rejoice more in one another, no bridegroom more in his bride, than God in his people; then he calls "his strength," and "his glory," Psal. lxxviii. 61; yea, "a crown of glory," Isa. lxii. 3, "Thou shalt be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God." No king can delight more in a crown than the Lord doth in his people, which are his crown. God's people are near unto him, Psal. cxlviii. 14; they are his jewels, Mal. iii. 17; his portion, Deut. xxxii. 9; his heritage, Joel ii. 17; his peculiar treasure, Exod. xix. 5. The Hebrew word אֲשֵׁר noteth an exquisite treasure, a thing very desirable, singular, and peculiar. Eccl. ii. 8, "The peculiar treasure of kings;" Aquila hath it, substance; Vatablus, a treasure entirely beloved: God's people are his choice treasure, dearly beloved. Things we delight in, we oft think upon, and speak of; and you may find this expression oft, viz. his treasure, or peculiar people; it is in Deut. vii. 6, "special people," it is the same word; so in Deut. xiv. 2; xxvi. 18; Psal. cxxxv. 4; Titus ii. 14; 1 Pet. ii. 9.

10. Blessing and communicating choice and satisfying mercies; where a people are his he will crown and load them with variety of blessings. Psal. iii. 8, "Thy blessing is upon thy people;" thy people are distinguished from all others, and thy blessings are distinct from all others. God's blessings note a plentiful bestowing of all good things, as appears, Gen. xxiv. 35; Eph. i. 3. Among his people are all his springs, the lower and upper ones. He blessed them with choice mercies: with his secrets, Psal. xxv. 14; with his name, Dan. ix. 19; Isa. lxiii. 19; the Shulamite was so called from Solomon, Cant. vi. 13; when God takes a people to himself, that people is married unto him, and it hath his name; the church is called Christ, 1 Cor. xii. 12; with his holiness, Heb. xii. 10; with the divine nature, 2 Pet. i. 4; with grace and glory, Psal. lxxxiv. 11; yea, with satisfying mercies, Psal. lxxv. 4; xxxvi. 8; he will satisfy them with goodness, Jer. xxxi. 14, with himself, Gen. xv. 1.

Obs. 1. God prepares a people for himself, and then marries that people unto himself; he gives them oneness, newness, tenderness of heart and spirit, and then they shall be his people, and he will be their God. Ezek. xvi. 6, 8, "When thou wast in thy blood, I said unto thee, Live. I spread my skirt over thee, and covered thy nakedness, and thou becamest mine." When Abraham was come out of his country, had left his idolatrous ways, walked uprightly before God, then he hears, I am thy God and the God of thy seed, Gen. xvii. 7. This is the way of Christ; Eph. v. 26, 27, he is sanctifying and cleansing of his church, that he may present it to himself a glorious church without spot.

Obs. 2. It is great happiness to have God to be our God. Many think happiness to lie in other things, but in nothing else, only in this, it consists. Psal. xxxiii. 12, "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord; and the people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance;" they are the blessed people. Psal. cxliv. 15, it is not thousands of cattle, full barns, laughter in the streets, peace and plenty, which make a people happy; the happiness of a people is, in having God to be theirs. Great parts, honours, friends, estates, do not make a man happy; but "happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God," Psal. cxlvi. 5. When God is the God of a people he will do great things for them, 2 Sam. vii. 23; he will show them the power of his works, Psal. cxi. 6; he will not leave his people, 1 Sam. xiii. 22. When heaven and earth shake, "the Lord will be the hope of his people," Joel iv. 16; the Hebrew מִתְּחִלָּה is, the place of repair, or harbour.

Obs. 3. It is free grace and favour that God doth take any people to be his, and becometh a God unto. People choose not God; he saith, "They shall be my people, and I will be their God." We are vile in our natures, wicked in our works, no loveliness or profitableness is in us, or by us; Ezek. xvi. 5, 6, when thy person was loathed, and thou wast polluted in thy blood, I said unto thee, Live. There is nothing in a nation that sets his heart to work to do a people good; it was not their greatness moved him, Deut. vii. 7, they "were the fewest of all people;" nor their goodness, for what was their father Abraham? Josh. xxiv. 2, 3, Terah, Abraham, and Nachor, were idolaters, "they served other gods," saith the text, "and I took your father Abraham:" so when God took his seed in Egypt, they were idolatrous, Ezek. xx. 5—7. There is no righteousness in people to move God, neither can any sin in them hinder God from putting forth acts of his free grace. Deut. xxxii. 10, speaking of Israel, "he found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness;" to which some allusion may be, Cant. viii. 5. God found out and took this people in a wicked, lost, distressed condition, and brought them out by his power, and made them his people by his grace; 1 Sam. xii. 22, it pleased the Lord to make them his people.

Obs. 4. God doth not equally dispense his grace and favour, some are his people and he is their God, others are not. Many nations were left, when the Jews were taken, yea, all other nations; Amos iii. 2, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth;" the Lord's favour fell upon the Jews, and not others. Some infer, from Gen. xxii. 18, "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed," that God loves all equally; at that time he did not. The words are a promise of what should be, not of what was, neither is it so now; for if he loves all alike, why doth he deny the means of grace to many nations? why doth he not bless and make the same effectual equally to all where they are? Besides, such an opinion overthrows election, God's dominion over the creatures, and his freedom in dispensation of grace and mercy, John x. 26; Acts xiii. 48.

Obs. 5. Those who are the Lord's have a strong ground to plead with God in prayer for any mercy. Where there is relation and interest, there is encouragement to ask; if God be ours and we his, surely we may plead with him for great things in our prayers. The people of God did so of old, Jer. xiv. 9; Psal. lxxx. 4; Isa. lxiv. 9; Deut. ix. 26; 2 Chron. xx. 12; xiv. 11.

Ver. 21. But as for them whose heart walketh after the heart of their detestable things and their abominations, I will recompense their way upon their own heads, saith the Lord God.

This verse is a threatening to those who should persist in their evil ways, yet a comfort to the godly, that the Lord would judge them and ease them of them.

"Detestable things and abominations." These words have been opened in ver. 18; and chap. v. 11; vii. 20.

"Heart of their detestable things." Hebrew is, Their heart going to the heart of their detestable things. Heart is sometimes put for the midst of a thing; Exod. xv. 8, "The heart of the sea;" which is called, Ezek. xxvi. 5, "The midst of the sea;" so their heart was in the midst of their idols, or amongst their idols; what was delightful in them, that was as the heart of the idol, and their hearts were carried thereunto. Or thus you may take the words, They conceived some deity to be in their idols, and they laboured to please and do those things that delighted the heart of that deity.

Those rites, ceremonies, ways, whereby they worshipped their idols, may be called the heart of their detestable things. It was a law among the heathens, that every god should be worshipped as he thought good, and the way prescribed by him of worshipping was as the heart and life of the idol and the idolatry.

"I will recompense their way upon their own heads." Of these words see what hath been said, chap. ix. 10; vii. 3, 4, 8.

Obs. 1. That when the Lord makes gracious promises to a people, they do not refer to and fetch in all. This observation rises from the two former verses and this laid together. God promises to give them oneness, newness, tenderness of heart, he promiseth that he will be their God, and they shall be his people. These promises were absolute, yet made good unto some of the captives, not unto all; "But as for them whose heart walketh after," &c. they should not come within the compass of them. Many promises of the Lord are delivered indefinitely, without restriction, and absolutely, without condition; and yet are made good only to some, even those who are given of the Father unto Christ. Many of these, after the captivity, never had these promises made good unto them, yet God was faithful in that some had the fruit and comfort of them.

Obs. 2. Tares, hypocrites, and naughty ones will be in the church always. Some had new spirits, tender hearts, and walked in God's statutes; others had old spirits, hard hearts, and walked after detestable things; some threw away all abominable things, and others their hearts went after them. They, coming out of Babylon, and laying the foundation of a new church, it was probable that none but choice ones should have been of it, or in it; but there were usurers, sabbath-breakers, and such as had mingled themselves with strange wives, Neh. v. and xiii. Ham was in the ark, Judas among the apostles, the church abounded with hypocrites in Christ's days; Matt. xiii. 30, there will be tares among the wheat to the end of the world.

Obs. 3. Afflictions, great and long, do not sanctify. They were to be in captivity, and that seventy years, yet, after their return, the hearts of many would be carried to their detestable things. It is granted, that after they came out of Babylon they never fell to idolatry, that is, the body of them did not, but doubtless some particulars did; their hearts went to the heart of their detestable things; when they saw some of the old idols, or relics of them, they were affected with them. Afflictions of themselves purge not out corruption, nor take the heart off from evil things.

Obs. 4. Men's hearts are in false ways and worship, they take pleasure in superstitious and idolatrous practices. Things invented by men, and brought into the worship of God, are pleasing to human senses, to carnal reason, men's corruptions, and so take their hearts. When the calf was made, Exod. xxxii. 19, they were greatly affected with it, and danced about it. 1 Pet. iv. 3, lasciviousness, lust, wine, revelling, banqueting, and idolatries, are joined together. False worship, and false ways of worship, are set out by such expressions as show their hearts were taken therewith, Numb. xv. 39; Isa. lvii. 5; lxvi. 3; Acts xvii. 16; 2 Kings xxi. 21; Psal. xcvi. 7; Ezek. xvi. 17—20.

Obs. 5. That which is an object of hatred to the godly, is an object of delight unto the wicked. In ver. 18, when the godly should come to the land again, they would take away all the detestable things, but the wicked, their hearts would go after them; the hearts of the one sort were for them, of the other were against them.

Obs. 6. God takes notice which way the heart looks, how it stands affected. "As for them whose heart walketh after," &c. see Ezek. xx. 16; xxxiii. 31. In chap. xiv. 3, 4, 7, thrice God observes, they had set up idols in their hearts. The heart is the principal thing in man that God calls for, Prov. xxiii. 26, and therefore he looks after it; Rev. ii. 23. "All the churches shall know that I am he which searcheth the reins and the hearts."

Obs. 7. Things men are much taken with, are detestable in the sight of God. They affected detestable things; Luke xvi. 15, that which is highly esteemed amongst men is abomination with God. When men bring into his worship things of their own, he accounts it iniquity, Exod. xx. 5; and the authors thereof, haters of him.

Obs. 8. Superstitious and idolatrous persons shall not go unpunished. "I will recompense their way upon their own heads." When they had made a calf, quickly after three thousand were slain for it; and though Moses mediated for them, yet God tells Moses that in the day he visits, he will visit their sin upon them, Exod. xxxii. 34; and ver. 35, "The Lord plagued the people, because they made the calf, which Aaron made." God is jealous, and cannot endure his glory should be given to another.

Obs. 9. Whenever God punisheth, or whomsoever he punisheth, he is just in his punishment. "I will recompense their way upon their own heads;" they shall have the fruit of their own labours, and it is certain: Thus saith the Lord, You think yourselves safe if you can avoid my stroke, that your false gods shall secure you; but it shall not be, "I will recompense your way upon your own heads." God may punish men sometimes less than they deserve, but never more; he is just, and returns their own doing upon them, Psal. vii. 16.

Ver. 22. Then did the cherubims lift up their wings, and the wheels beside them; and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above.

Here begins the fifth part of the chapter, which is a further description of the Lord's leaving the city.

The cherubims' wheels and glory were at the east gate of the temple, chap. x. 19, where you have the very words of this verse. Cherubims note out angels, and superior causes; wheels, inferior things, with the motions of them; and by "the glory of the God of Israel," is meant either the glorious Lord himself, or some visible sign of his glorious presence.

Obs. All things are under the God of Israel; he hath the eminence, he is above, wheels and angels are under him at his disposal; if he give out the word, the cherubims move, lift up their wings, and order the wheels.

Ver. 23. And the glory of the Lord went up from the midst of the city, and stood upon the mountain which is on the east side of the city.

Here you have God's departure from the city. To leave the temple was grievous; had he stayed at the gates of it, or in the city itself, any where within the walls, it had been merey; but he leaves the east gate, (which he calls the midst of the city,) and goeth forth unto the mountain, which showed God would now expose the city to the fury and spoil of the Babylonians.

"The glory of the Lord." Of this see before, chap. x. 4, 18, 19; ix. 3; viii. 4; iii. 23.

"And stood upon the mountain." There were many mountains about Jerusalem, Psal. cxxv. 2, it was compassed about with them. The mountain which the "glory" went to, and stood upon, was mount Olivet, or mount of Olives; Zech. xiv. 4, this mountain was before Jerusalem, on the east, and the glory of the Lord stood before at the east gate, whence it removed, and went up this mountain; for it was high and had ascents, 2 Sam. xv. 30.

The standing of the "glory" upon this mountain may be either to see the ruin and destruction of the city, and so to weep over it, as Christ did upon, or near, the same mount, Luke xix; or, secondly, to upbraid them for their wickedness there, because they did abominable things in that mount, whence it was called the mount of corruption, 2 Kings xxiii. 13; or, thirdly, to make it typical to represent the ascending of Christ to heaven, which was from that place, Acts i. 12.

These things being granted, yet I conceive there was somewhat else in it. The "glory" of God had made several stands before, which they had not much minded; now it goeth from the temple and city, to a high conspicuous mountain, that they might take notice of God's departure, repent of their sins, and use all possible means for recalling, recovering, and keeping the glory with them; and, Zech. xiv. 4, the promise is of returning and standing upon the same mount.

Obs. 1. God is unwilling to forsake that people he hath vouchsafed his presence and communicated his favour unto. No people in the world had God so nigh them as this people, Deut. iv. 7. Here God goeth out of the city, but not quite away, nor quite out of sight, he steps to the mountain over against the city: before, he had removed to the side of the temple, then from within the temple to the threshold, after that to the east gate, and from thence to the mount of Olives; and God paused at every stand, whether he should go any further. The Lord is loth to leave his people, they put him upon it; Ezek. viii. 6, "Seest thou the great abominations that the house of Israel committeth here, that I should go far off from my sanctuary?" they forced God out of all; whereas seeing him upon the leaving them, they should have purged the sanctuary from all idols and false worship, and have importuned the Lord to stay among them. When a friend is leaving his friends, what entreaties, what tears many times are used to stay him! Acts xxi. 12, 13; Jer. xiv. 7—9.

Obs. 2. God is not tied so to any place, or people, but when they grow wicked, and defile his worship, he may leave them, and the place where he hath recorded his name. Mount Zion God had chosen above all places to dwell there: Psal. cxxxii. 14, "This is my rest for ever: here will I dwell; for I have desired it." For ever, is a long time, in Scripture sense, and God had dwelt a long time with them; but now the time was come of his departure, now the holy temple, holy city, holy people, were all profaneness unto him, they had corrupted his worship, polluted themselves, and therefore he would leave them. The Jews thought because they had the temple and God amongst them, that therefore they were well and happy, though their worship were mixed and their lives wicked; but they were deceived. No particular visible church hath assurance of God's abiding longer with it than it keeps his worship pure, walks holily and humbly with him; when any corrupt his glory, his worship, then the glorious Lord and the glory of the Lord doth leave them.

Obs. 3. When God leaves a people, then protection of angels and comfort of creatures leave them also. The cherubims and wheels, together with the glory, left them, and went to the mountain. When the king goeth, the court removes, and the servants follow : when God is gone, we are left naked, lie open to all temptations and miseries ; we have no God to counsel, comfort, protect, or save ; and what a case is such a people in ! Jer. vi. 8, " Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, lest my soul depart from thee ; " and what then ? " lest I make thee desolate, a land not inhabited."

Ver. 24. Afterwards the spirit took me up, and brought me in a vision by the Spirit of God into Chaldea, to them of the captivity. So the vision that I had seen went up from me.

Here is the conclusion of this glorious vision our prophet had seen. The Spirit had carried him, not in body, but in spirit, unto Jerusalem, chap. viii. 3, and showed him how things were there, what God was purposed to do ; and now having seen and heard glorious and terrible things, the vision went up to heaven, he saw it no more.

Obs. 1. The Spirit can show us things at a great distance, as if we were present. The Spirit caused Ezekiel to see things at Jerusalem, when his body was in Chaldea. Our senses cannot discern far, but the Spirit knoweth all things, in all places, and can satisfy us with the knowledge of them, give us spiritual and prophetic eyes. Paul saith, 2 Cor. xii. 2, 3, that he " was caught up to the third heaven," but " whether in the body, or out of the body," he knoweth not, and being there, he " heard unspeakable words." The Spirit took him up, caused him to hear such things ; so did the Spirit here take up our prophet, and caused him to see such things.

Obs. 2. This vision was real, divine, no imaginary, feigned thing, not from his brain, but from the Spirit itself : therefore it is said, to put all out of doubt, " The spirit took me up, and brought me in a vision," and, " the vision that I had seen went up," which shows it was no human thing, but divine.

Obs. 3. The servants of God have glorious sights here sometimes, but they soon expire and come to an end. " So the vision that I had seen went up from me." He had seen the glory of God, the cherubims and wheels, and the man clothed with linen, viz. Christ, but here was no continuance of this glorious sight. Jacob seeth a ladder reaching up to heaven, angels ascending and descending, and the Lord at the top of the ladder, but this was only for a night, and then it ceased, Gen. xxviii. 12, 13, 16. Moses saw the Lord in the burning bush, Exod. iii. 2, but the sight lasted not. Isaiah saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, Isa. vi. 1. Peter James, and John, saw the transfiguration of Christ, Matt. xvii. ; and all the apostles " saw his glory, as the glory of the only begotten ; " but the vision went up from them.

Ver. 25. Then I spake unto them of the captivity all the things that the Lord had showed me.

Here you have what the prophet did after the vision : he had been in an ecstasy some time, and now being brought to his ordinary and pristine condition, he relates to the captives what he had seen and heard. Many of those in the captivity, and probably some of those elders which sat in the prophet's house, chap. viii. 1, thought them happy which were at Jerusalem, condemned their own act in coming to Babylon, judged their counsels foolish and weak, which they had about their coming thither, and blamed Jeremiah for exhorting them therunto ;

hereupon Ezekiel being returned, as he thought, from Jerusalem to Chaldea, speaks unto them what he had received concerning the destruction of the temple, city, land, and the miseries of the inhabitants, and thereby convinceth them that they were in a far better condition than those they had left behind.

" All the things." Things in Hebrew is, words ; now words are not shown but heard, how then doth he say, which he " had showed me ? " They were not mere words, but words vestita externo symbolo, clothed with an outward symbol. He had many types, viz. of a siege, of a razor and hair, of a chain, of six men with slaughter weapons in their hands, and of a caldron, which were visible words.

Obs. 1. When men have been in the hand and power of the Spirit, acted thereby, then are they fit to speak unto the people, " Then I spake unto them." When Moses had been in the mount, then was he fit to speak to those at the foot of the mount ; when the Spirit has irradiated the minds of men with divine light and truths, then are they meetest to communicate to others ; the apostles being filled with the Spirit, spake freely, boldly, Acts iv.

Obs. 2. God's prophets and messengers must speak unto those they are intended for. Ezekiel had his vision, and all the types in it, for the Jews, those of the captivity, not the Babylonians. God had a care of the captivity, that they might be instructed concerning his mind, and be undeceived in their apprehensions about the things of Jerusalem : " Then I spake unto the captivity."

Obs. 3. They must declare what they have heard and seen, not what is their own. What is man's is uncertain, unsatisfying, unsanctifying ; but that which is the Lord's is infallible, will satisfy and sanctify. Christ told the apostles the Spirit should take of his and show unto them, John xvi. 14 ; and Matt. xxviii. 20, they must teach the people to observe what he commanded them. 1 Cor. xi. 23, Paul received what he delivered : thus did Ezekiel, he spake what the Lord showed unto him.

Obs. 4. They must be faithful, speak all the things which are showed unto them. Thus did our prophet, he delivered unto them all the Lord had shown unto him, whatever he had seen or heard, that he faithfully giveth out. There must be no adding to the things of God, no detracting from them, no changing any of them, but what is the Lord's, that must be dispensed. Christ, who was sent of the Father, saith, " All things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you," John xv. 15 ; and Paul kept back nothing, but delivered all the counsel of God unto them, Acts xx. 20, 27.

CHAPTER XII.

Ver. 1—7. The word of the Lord also came unto me, saying, Son of man, thou dwellest in the midst of a rebellious house, which have eyes to see, and see not ; they have ears to hear, and hear not : for they are a rebellious house. Therefore, thou son of man, prepare thee stuff for removing, and remove by day in their sight ; and thou shalt remove from thy place to another place in their sight : it may be they will consider, though they be a rebellious house. Then shalt thou bring forth thy stuff by day in their sight, as stuff for removing : and thou shalt go forth at even in their sight, as they that go forth into captivity. Dig thou through the wall in their sight, and carry out thereby. In their sight shalt thou bear it upon thy shoulders, and carry it forth in the twilight: thou shalt cover thy face, that thou see not the ground: for I have set thee for a sign unto the house of Israel. And I did so as I was commanded: I brought forth my stuff by day, as stuff for captivity, and in the even I digged through the wall with mine hand; I brought it forth in the twilight, and I bare it upon my shoulder in their sight.

EZEKIEL, having been in a vision at Jerusalem, seen and heard many remarkable things, which he declared to them of the captivity, here the word of the Lord came afresh unto him, and he is put upon doing those things which might convince Zedekiah and others of the sad judgments coming upon them.

In the chapter are three things in general observable.

I. A prophecy of Zedekiah's carrying into captivity, with the citizens of Jerusalem, ver. 1—17.

II. The miserable condition of the people preceding and following the captivity of the king and people, ver. 17—21.

III. A confutation of those who mocked at the judgments of God threatened by the prophet, ver. 21. to the end.

In the first part you have,

1. A type set out in the first six verses.

2. The application of the type, from thence to ver. 17.

It is a question to whom these words of the Lord do refer, "Thou dwellest in the midst of a rebellious house," &c. Our prophet was in Babylon, and before the captives there; he was to remove in their sight, and this was not to give them hopes of any speedy return out of Babylon, but to quiet their disturbed minds; for these typical actions of the prophet in carrying out his stuff and digging through the wall, &c. have a double aspect, one towards them at Jerusalem, to evidence to them that their captivity was at hand, another towards these already in captivity, which was to comfort them, in letting them see what heavy judgments they had escaped, being safe there in Babylon, though burdened with some difficulties.

The scope is to show the certainty of their suffering and destruction at Jerusalem, and their advantage who were come to Babylon, and freed from the judgments which were coming upon the other.

"Thou dwellest in the midst of a rebellious house."

Hebrew is, a house of rebellion: family, nation, people, who are rebellious, embittering, exasperating.

"Which have eyes to see, and see not; they have ears to hear, and hear not." Some take the sight for the understanding, the ear for the will, for these two senses are the servants of those faculties, and as the eye and ear are delighted with light and sweetness, so the understanding and will; but these men were spiritually blind and deaf, they neither heard nor saw as they might have done. They might have seen God's goodness to them, in bringing them from Jerusalem, in causing them to hearken to Jeremiah's counsel, in planting them in Babylon, in procuring more favour from the Babylonians than the condition of captives did require; they might have understood by the prophet's visions, and words spoken to them, what the Chaldeans should speedily do to them in Canaan, what bloody and fiery judgments they were bringing upon the city, temple, people, and whole land.

They did not see inwardly, they considered not what God did, said, nor what they were to do.

Obs. 1. Wicked men neither see nor hear the things of God, neither mercies nor judgments are rightly discerned by them. They saw not the mercy they had in a strange land, nor the judgments they escaped in their own land. Mercies and judgments have much of God in them, they speak, and speak aloud; but wicked men neither see God, nor hear his voice, in his works, they are blind and deaf. When men see, hear, and do not profit by their seeing or hearing, then they neither see nor hear in Scripture sense: the more signs, threatenings, and judgments, the harder-hearted they grow, the blinder and deafer they are. We had need pray unto the Lord to open our eyes, that we may see what judgments, what mercies, we have had; that he would bore our ears, that we may hear his voice and repent of our wickedness.

Obs. 2. The cause of sinners' not seeing and not hearing is in themselves. "For they are a rebellious house:" their rebellion was the cause they neither saw nor heard; they did contrary to what God required, and so blinded their own eyes, hardened their own hearts: Isa. xxvi. 10, 11, "Let favour be showed to the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness; when the Lord's hand is lifted up, yet will he not see." I fear this is the case of many amongst us. God hath given men senses to observe his works and ways, but they either do not, or will not, observe them: they have eyes to see mercies and judgments, but they consider them not; they have ears to hear the voice of his rod and word, but they hear not; their eyes, ears, and hearts are taken up and exercised about other things, which is a dreadful evil.

"Prepare thee stuff for removing." Hebrew is, instruments; what instruments? such were seen in Matt. x. 10, a scrip, a coat, shoes, a staff, some add a girdle: but whether these were the instruments Ezekiel was to prepare, I make some doubt: this might suffice for his own travelling, but he was to remove his household stuff, ver. 5, 6; he was to carry it out through the hole of the wall, and bear it upon his shoulder.

This he was to do for trial of their spirits. They had not been affected with his prophesying, and therefore now a visible sign is added; and what then? "It may be they will consider." When they should see the prophet removing from place to place, dig through the wall, go out in the night, cover his face, &c. these things were likely to affect them: actions are more observable than words, they make deeper impressions. If some chief man in a city should pack up all his stuff, break through the walls of the city in the night, carry all he had away, what strange effects would it cause in the hearts of men!

Obs. 1. The Lord is very patient towards a sinful and rebellious people; he trieth variety of ways to do them good. Visions, prophecies, signs, they had before: here again the prophet must do strange things, to see if they will be apprehensive of danger, repent, and prevent judgments. This is the way of God with sinners, he waits, is bountiful, and would with his goodness and long-suffering draw sinners to repentance. Let others be like God; a minister should be patient, not strive, be gentle towards all men, not bitter, nor cursing, in meekness instructing, &c.

Obs. 2. Prophets must venture, though the success of their endeavours be uncertain. Go, prepare stuff for removing, remove, and from place to place, "it may be they will consider." Prophets and others should look at God's will, not success. Divine pleasure is warrant sufficient for any to act; let the issue be what it will, ministers, magistrates, parents, must do their duty: it may be good will come of it, "it may be they will consider;" it is not a word of doubting, but of hope and encouragement.

"Thou shalt bring forth thy stuff by day in their sight." The reason of this was, that so all might see, princes, nobles, and people, and be inexcusable if they did not take warning.

"Go forth at even." This was to show the stealing away of the king, nobles, and men of war by night, as it is 2 Kings xxv. 4, "The city was broken up, and all the men of war fled by night, by the way of the gate, between two walls, which is by the king's garden: and the king went the way toward the plain:" Jer. xxxix. 4, "They fled, and went forth out of the city by night," even Zedekiah with the rest.

"Dig through the wall," &c. To show what great straits they should be in, all gates should be beset, all known passages stopped, and they necessitated to break through the wall; and, ver. 7, Ezekiel saith, he did it with his own hand, "I digged through the wall with mine hand." In imminent danger any shift will men make, pull stones out of walls, &c.

"Thou shalt bear it upon thy shoulders." To show that the people and princes should carry away their precious things upon their shoulders.

"Thou shalt cover thy face, that thou see not the ground." Covering of the face was in use among the Jews and others.

1. In case of disappointment and shame they did it: Jer. xiv. 3, "Their nobles have sent their little ones to the waters; they came to the pits, and found no water; they returned with the vessels empty; they were ashamed and confounded, and covered their heads."

2. In case of sorrow and mourning: 2 Sam. xix. 4, when Absalom was slain, David covered his face, and cried, "O Absalom, my son!" so, in chap. xv. 30, David and the people had their heads covered, and wept when they went up mount Olivet.

3. In case of guilt and punishment for it: Esth. vii. 8, when Haman was accused by Esther, and to suffer for his villanous plot against the Jews, they covered his face, as not worthy to see the sun or earth. Here the prophet's covering was typical, and was to show not only what a dark, moonless night Zedekiah should choose to flee in, but what a dark condition he should be in when his eyes should be put out; therefore those words, "that thou see not the ground," are added, intimating, that though he were carried into Babylon, yet he should not see that land.

"For I have set thee for a sign unto the house of Israel." And, in ver. 11, I "am your sign." The word in Hebrew is מופת portentum, from יפה which signifieth something beautiful, specious, drawing to admiration; here it is put for a strange or wonderful thing, and is the same with oath, and is rendered "a sign," in this place and others; as in 2 Chron. xxxii. 24; Isa. viii. 18, "I, and the children whom the Lord hath given me, are for signs and for wonders:" there are both the words, and point out the same thing, and that is, a sign or token by which a future event of things is marked out. Isa. xx. 3, 4, his going naked and barefoot, was a sign and wonder upon Egypt and Ethiopia; and our prophet's digging the wall, carrying out his stuff, and covering of his face, made him a sign to the house of Israel; they would not believe that they should go into captivity, but this was a lively sign to convince them of it.

Obs. The Lord carrieth on his design in the world, oftentimes, by foolish, weak, and ridiculous means. The prophet must dig through the wall, carry out his stuff upon his shoulder, remove from place to place, and cover his face, that he see not the ground; these things seemed childish and foolish unto the Jews, they thought him a silly or mad man. So chap. iv, he must take a tile, picture Jerusalem upon it, he must build a fort, cast a mount, set a camp and battering-rams against it, he must also set an iron pan for a wall between him and the city, lie upon his left side, and then upon his right side, drink water by measure, and bake his bread in dung, &c.; all which seemed poor, ridiculous things in the eyes of the people, but there was weight in them.

"And I did so as I was commanded: I brought forth my stuff by day, as stuff for captivity," &c. In this verse is the obedience of the prophet to the type commanded, and in the two next, preparation to the application of the type.

Obs. from the 6th verse, It is man's duty readily to obey the Lord in whatsoever he commands; be they things of such nature as to seem ridiculous, unworthy a man, such as will expose him to scorn, disgrace, &c. yet he is bound to do them. Our prophet did as he was commanded, he stuck not at the doing those things which would make him a sign and fable in all Israel.

Ver. 8, 9. And in the morning came the word of the Lord unto me, saying, Son of man, hath not the house of Israel, the rebellious house, said unto thee, What doest thou?

God had appointed the prophet to do those typical things in their sight, and now he comes to inquire what the people did or said upon his so doing; and such was the blindness and stupidity of this people, that they did not so much as inquire of the prophet what these typical passages meant. The words in ver. 9, are an interrogation, and import a negative, not an affirmative; thus, "Hath not the rebellious house said unto thee, What doest thou?" No, I know it hath not; they dreamt rather of their own return out of captivity, than thought of their brethren's coming into captivity who were at Jerusalem; they rather derided the prophet for those strange acts, than consulted what they meant.

Obs. The Lord looks after his messengers, and messages sent by them, and will have an account what entertainment they have. The Lord commanded Ezekiel to go and do such things, which he did; and here he comes and inquires what was the effect of those typical actions, whether the people apprehended his meaning in them, or made inquiry after them; Have they come to thee, have they said, "What doest thou?" God minds the servants he employs, their words and actions shall not be in vain. He makes speedy inquiry here after all: "In the morning came the word of the Lord unto me, saying, Son of man, hath not the house of Israel said unto thee," &c. If they understood them not, it was their duty to come to the prophet for resolution, and his duty to resolve them.

Ver. 10—14. Say thou unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; This burden concerneth the prince in Jerusalem, and all the house of Israel that are among them. Say, I am your sign: like as I have done, so shall it be done unto them: they shall remove and go into captivity. And the prince that is among them shall bear upon his shoulder in the twilight, and shall go forth: they shall dig through the wall to carry out thereby: he shall cover his face, that he see not the ground with his eyes. My net also will I spread upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare: and I will bring him to Babylon to the land of the Chaldeans; yet shall he not see it, though he shall die there. And I will scatter toward every wind all that are about him to help him, and all his bands; and I will draw out the sword after them.

In these verses you have the application of the type to the prince, and all the house of Israel, which is in general laid down in ver. 10; then the common calamity of both, in ver. 11, "They shall go into captivity;" then a more special application of it to the king, in ver. 12, 13, where his bearing stuff upon his shoulder, his flight, digging through the wall, and covering his face, are set down, together with his apprehension, execution, deportation into Babylon, and death there.

"This burden." מִשָּׁרָה from שָׂרָה to lift up; word so rich in signification and efficacy, ut rix centum aliarum linguarum verbis explicentur ejus divitiæ, that scarcely can its riches be unfolded in a hundred words of other languages; it may be rendered, This burdensome doctrine, or prophecy, which these types do speak. By "burden," is meant the typical sign of captivity, which was a burden to the prophet to act, to open unto them, a burden to them to hear, and especially to bear. Grievous prophecies are called burdens in Scripture, Nahum i. 1; Hab. i. 1; so Isa. xv. 1; xvii. 1; xix. 1.

"The prince." It was Zedekiah, a wicked and timorous king. The Hebrew is, מִשָּׁרָה from שָׂרָה to lift up; either because he is lift up above the people, or should populi onera levare, ease and lighten the grievances of the people, as they in Exod. xviii. 22. But if they grow tyrannical, and impose heavy burdens upon the people, the Lord hath a burden for them; as here Zedekiah must dig through the wall, carry forth on his shoulder, flee, &c. This you may see fulfilled, Jer. lii. 7—11, where you have his flight mentioned, the Chaldeans' pursuit and apprehension of him, his carrying to Babel, where his eyes were put out, and after to Babylon, where he died.

"Say, I am your sign," &c. This relates to the few in Babylon: they conceived there should no judgment befall Jerusalem, nor the men there. By this typical work of the prophet, the Lord shows them their error, that it should not be well with them at Jerusalem: it is true they condemn you for removing into Babylon, and justify themselves, that they are the only people, righteous and acceptable unto me, and therefore are safe in Jerusalem. But you shall see, and they shall know, how vain and foolish their thoughts and reasonings are; as I have dealt with you, so will I do by them, they shall be made captives very speedily, and meet with sorer judgments than you did.

"My net also will I spread upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare." These words you have again in chap. xvii. 20. The Chaldeans here are likened unto fishermen, who usually dwell by the water-sides; now Babylon was among the waters, Euphrates and Tigris running by it, or through it; hence, Jer. li. 13, "O thou that dwellest upon many waters." They are fitly are they compared to fishermen, and the army was the net; a net spreads abroad, compasses, and catches: by this net was Zedekiah, the prince, city, and all precious things therein, taken.

"In my snare." Snare is for the land, and it is thought to be a hunter's snare, such as is set for wild beasts, which being hunted and chased hard, are driven into snares, and so taken; they are set secretly, catch suddenly, hold certainly. The Hebrew word metzulah, as Junius observes, signifies also a strong hold; and in this sense it may represent to us Babel, whither Zedekiah was carried, where he received judgment, and had his eyes put out, or that hold he was put into in Babylon.

Obs. 1. The great mercy and goodness of God, who takes occasion from their sin to afford them this mercy, the exposition of this type. They were stupid, and minded not the prophet and his actions, or, if they did, they derided him as a foolish or mad man, to do such things; hence the Lord is pleased to take an advantage to acquaint them with it: Have they not asked thee, "What doest thou? Say thou unto them, Thus saith the Lord; This burden concerneth the prince," &c. Hos. ii. 13, 14; Isa. lviii. 17, 18; Gen. xviii. 21, in those places God takes occasion from man's sin to show mercy. So in John xx. 25, 27, from Thomas's unbelief, &c. takes an opportunity to come and show his wounds, &c.

Obs. 2. To secure and confident sinners God will render judgment most certainly and impartially. Say to them, As I have done, so shall it be done unto them; whatever their thoughts are at Jerusalem, or yours here, their condition shall be like yours; have you been afflicted with war, famine, plague? have you lost the temple, city, your country and estates, are you brought into a heathenish land? so shall it be with them.

Obs. 3. The Lord hath burdens for princes; if they be wicked, there are burdensome prophecies against them, and burdensome judgments for them. Zedekiah did evil in the sight of the Lord, 2 Kings xxiv. 19, and you may see what burdens he had.

(1.) A burden of fear; he durst stay no longer; and, Jer. xxxviii. 19, "I am afraid of the Jews that are fallen to the Chaldeans, lest they deliver me into their hand."

(2.) A burden of shame; he covers his face, he will see none, nor be seen of any; he leaves Jerusalem in a shameful manner, carrying some burden upon his shoulder, as if he were some vulgar man; he is disguised, as being ashamed of a princely title.

(3.) A burden of flight; he is put to it to flee for his life.

(4.) A burden of darkness; in the evening, or night, he steals away.

(5.) A burden of difficulties; he must dig through a wall, go in by-ways.

(6.) A burden of sad judgments.

[1.] He is taken by the enemies.

[2.] His sons are slain before his face.

[3.] His eyes are put out.

[4.] He is led into captivity.

[5.] He is imprisoned till his death.

And why all these burdens? Because he had a burden of guilt in his conscience which was worse than all the rest, and that burden brings the burdens of judgment, for so it is called, 2 Kings ix. 25, when Jehu shot an arrow into the heart of Joram, a wicked king, he saith, "The Lord laid this burden upon him." Such a burden laid the Lord upon Jezebel for her whoredoms and witchcrafts; she is thrown out at a window, her blood sprinkled upon the wall, trod under foot by horses, and eaten up all by dogs, except her skull, feet, and palms of her hands.

Obs. 4. Sinful princes cannot escape the judgments of God, he hath nets and snares to surprise them, to hold them. Zedekiah thought by flight to get away, but the Lord spread out his net upon him, and took him in his snare. The Chaldeans' army was God's net and snare to catch sinners; Hab. i. 13, God makes men, yea takes them, as the fishes of the sea; and, ver. 15, "They catch them in their net;" meaning the Chaldeans, which troubled the prophet that such wicked men should catch and spoil the Jews: but the Lord knows how to make use of the worst men to execute his judgments. So the Goths and Vandals of old, Turks now, to scourge the christian world, &c. What base spirits hath God set on work to correct us! &c. If God will catch men, he hath nets; if he will hunt them, he hath snares.

Obs. 5. The Lord makes sinners' helps helpless. Zedekiah had some nobles, counsellors, friends, about him, a life or person-guard, bands of soldiers, but "I will scatter all that are about him to help him, and all his bands;" God would put him into a helpless condition, they should none of them be able to relieve him. Men are apt, in times of trouble, to look unto some helps and hopes, but they are vain things, soon blasted, scattered. Take heed of making flesh your arm, of creature-confidences. Wicked men expect help from things beneath, from those about them, but they are frequently disappointed, and so perplexed. Take David's counsel, 1'sal. cxlvi. 3, "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help;" ver. 5, "Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help."

Ver. 15, 16. And they shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall scatter them among the nations, and disperse them in the countries. But I will leave a few men of them from the sword, from the famine, and from the pestilence; that they may declare all their abominations among the heathen whither they come; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

In these two verses you have two great ends of God's judgments. The first is, that the wicked may be convinced, from what they have felt and seen, that it was the word of the Lord which they despised; that he spake by Jeremiah and Ezekiel; that they were his threatenings, and now made good by him, and this is in ver. 15. The second is, confession of their sin, and God's righteousness in his judgments, and this is in ver. 16.

Obs. 1. That sinners are of as little account with God as dust and chaff. This is held out to us in the words "scatter," and "disperse;" men are no more before God than a little dust before the wind, or chaff in a fan. The original word for disperse is, ריתו ventilavero; Jer. xv. 7, God said he would "fan them with a fan;" and, Isa. xl. 15, God counts the nations "as the small dust of the balance;" and, Isa. xli. 2, "gave them as the dust to his sword."

Obs. 2. Judgments produce those effects which mercies do not. They had great means and mercies at Jerusalem, in the land, city, temple, but under those they did not know, not confess, their sins, and give glory to his name; but when they were deprived of their mercies under sad and sharp judgments, they should do so: Isa. xxvi. 9, "When thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness;" ver. 16, "In trouble have they visited thee."

Obs. 3. The Lord in the midst of his judgments shows some mercy. "I will leave a few men." Hebrew is, men of number, that may quickly be numbered. Though many were destroyed by the sword, famine, pestilence, yet some would the Lord leave.

Ver. 17—20. Moreover the word of the Lord came to me, saying, Son of man, eat thy bread with quaking, and drink thy water with trembling and with carefulness; and say unto the people of the land, Thus saith the Lord God of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and of the land of Israel; They shall eat their bread with carefulness, and drink their water with astonishment, that her land may be desolate from all that is therein, because of the violence of all them that dwell therein. And the cities that are inhabited shall be laid waste, and the land shall be desolate; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

These words contain the second general part of the chapter, viz. the sad condition of the people, both before and after the captivity of the king. In ver. 18, a new type is commanded; in ver. 19, it is applied; and there you have the end of its application, which is desolation and devastation, and the procreant cause of both, viz. the violence which was amongst them. And in ver. 20, the end of God's putting them into such an afflictive condition, that they may know him to be the Lord.

"Eat thy bread with quaking." Fear and perplexity of spirit makes men tremble, and takes away the sweetness of any comfort present. The Hebrew is נרעש in commotione: cum tremore corporis, such quaking as the earth quakes with, or like unto corn and leaves: so should the prophet tremble, quake, in eating, looking this way and that way, as one affrighted.

"Drink thy water with trembling," &c. נרונה the Septuagint, μετα βασανς και θλιψως, with torment, affliction; the Vulgate is, in festinatione, in haste, as they did eat the passover. This eating and drinking with quaking and trembling, was to set out, either the great fear which should be upon them when the Babylonish army should besiege them, so that they should not enjoy the comfort of those creatures without great trouble; or the great famine which should be in the earth, which should cause great fear and trembling lest they should want, and die for hunger and thirst, lest others should snatch out of their hands, or pull out of their mouths, that little they had, and so they were full of care in their eating and drinking.

"Say unto the people of the land;" that is, those Jews who were in the land of Chaldea; he must tell the captives what should befall the Jews at Jerusalem, and in the land of Israel.

"They shall eat their bread with carefulness." נרונה it notes care, grief, fear, which commonly attend one the other. The Septuagint, μετα ενδειας, with want; before, they rendered this word μετα θλιψως, want is a great affliction.

"And drink their water with astonishment." נשאר from שם stupescere, admirari. The Septuagint hath it, μετ' αφανισμς, cum interitu, despairing of deliverance and life; Chaldee, cum stupore; the French, en desolation.

"That her land may be desolate." Judea was the choicest of lands, a paradise to other countries; it abounded with milk, honey, corn, oil, wine, cattle, silver, gold, and other precious things; but now it was to be laid waste; now it should be stripped of its inhabitants, of its plenty and treasure: the Hebrew is, a plenitudine sua.

"Because of the violence of them that dwell therein." הרס notes injury, tyranny, spoil. The Septuagint renders it, εν ανομια, because of the wickedness of them, &c.

Obs. 1. The Lord puts his servants oft upon troublesome service, and sad actions, for the conviction and benefit of others. Here Ezekiel must eat his bread with quaking, and drink his drink with trembling; he must dig through the wall, and bear his stuff upon his shoulder, go out at even, cover his face, remove his stuff, which were burdensome actions : and, chap. iv. he must lie upon his left side three hundred and ninety days, and then upon his right side forty days ; he must eat bread baked with cows' dung ; and, chap. v. he must shave his head and his beard, make himself bald and unsightly. So Hosea, he must marry a wife of whoredoms, chap. i. 2 ; and Jeremiah, chap. xxvii. 2, he must make yokes and bands, and put upon his neck. These things were to signify what God would do unto the nations, bring them into subjection to Nebuchadnezzar.

Obs. 2. It is divine pleasure, that when typical and dark things are given out to the prophets, that they should make them known to the people. Ezekiel must tell the people what was in it, that he ate his bread and drank his drink in such a manner ; so for his digging, and removing, he must tell them what mystery was wrapt up in it : " Say unto them, This burden concerneth the prince," ver. 10 ; and here, ver. 19, " Say unto the people," &c. It is the duty of those that are teachers in the church, to open things which are mysterious, what they mean and signify.

Obs. 3. God can mingle sorrows with our comforts, and make our choice comforts comfortless comforts. " They shall eat their bread with carefulness, and drink their drink with astonishment." God would bring an enemy to the gates of Jerusalem, and put them to such straits, that they should neither eat nor drink with any comfort ; fear, carefulness, and astonishment would be gravel in their bread, and gall in their drink. Adam's comforts in paradise were soon damped ; Gen. iii. 17, " In sorrow shalt thou eat ;" bread of sorrows was his bread, and is his children's bread to this day, only sometimes God puts in more sorrow than at others : there is " bread of affliction," 1 Kings xxii. 47 ; " bread of mourners," Hos. ix. 4. Here God would put in much sorrow, affliction, and mourning ; quaking, trembling, care, and astonishment, should possess them ; their plenty should be turned into scarcity ; for wine they should have water, and very little of that too ; for the finest of the wheat flour, they should have bran, and not their bellies full of that.

Obs. 4. It is sin, the sin of injustice, oppression, which causes God to lay waste a plentiful land. " That her land may be desolate from all that is therein, because of the violence of them that dwell therein." It is observed, that the Jews were, and still are, a covetous people : it was their covetousness put them upon unjust acts of oppression and violence, and God upon just judgments of famine and desolation : Psal. cvii. 34, he turns " a fruitful land into barrenness for the wickedness of them that dwell therein." Man's wickedness moves the Lord to lay plentiful and pleasant lands waste, yet it is made their act ; Zech. vii. 14, " They laid the pleasant land waste ;" they were the procreant cause, they begat sin, sin begat judgment, and judgment begat desolation.

Ver. 21—28. And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, what is that proverb that ye have in the land of Israel, saying, The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth ? Tell them therefore, Thus saith the Lord God ; I will make this proverb to cease, and they shall no more use it as a proverb in Israel ; but say unto them, The days are at hand, and the effect of every vision. For there shall be no more any vain vision nor flattering divination within the house of Israel. For I am the Lord : I will speak, and the word that I shall speak shall come to pass ; it shall be no more prolonged : for in your days, O rebellious house, will I say the word, and will perform it, saith the Lord God. Again the word of the Lord came to me, saying, Son of man, behold, they of the house of Israel say, The vision that he seeth is for many days to come, and he prophesieth of the times that are far off. Therefore say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God ; There shall none of my words be prolonged any more, but the word which I have spoken shall be done, saith the Lord God.

In these verses you have the third part of the chapter, a confutation of those who made an ill construction of the prophet's prophecies. One kind of men gave no credence at all to what was prophesied, but derided the prophets, saying, When were you in heaven, or who told you the mind of God ? You are deceivers ; if any such thing had been as you speak of, it had taken place ere this, but nothing is done, therefore we will not believe you. Another kind of men were persuaded the prophets spoke truth, but it was at a great distance, long ere it was to take place ; and therefore grew secure. Hence the Lord commands the prophet to let them know that his words should certainly and shortly come to pass. In the words consider,

I. A complaint of a proverb ; " What is that proverb that ye have in the land of Israel ?" ver. 22.

II. The mention of the proverb ; " The days are," &c. ver. 22, 23.

III. The confutation of it ; " I will make this proverb to cease, and they shall no more use it as a proverb in Israel." &c. ver. 23.

IV. A confirmation of that confutation,

1. From the Lord's proceeding with the false prophets, and their vain visions and flattering divinations ; they should cease, ver. 24. And,

2. From the promise of making good his word, and that speedily, ver. 25, 28.

I. A complaint of a proverb ; " What is that proverb that ye have in the land of Israel ?"

I shall open the word " proverb" unto you, שֵׁנַת which is from שָׁנָה signifying to bear rule, to reign, to excel ; and so a proverb is some notable speech, which excels others, and bears rule amongst men : " New wine is not for old bottles." " Do men gather grapes of thorns." " A little leaven leavens the whole lump." Mashal signifies κυρία ὑπόμνη, a lordly, authentic sentence ; as the Proverbs of Solomon, and such as these, viz. " The axe is laid to the root of the tree." " Where the treasure is, the heart will be also." " No man can serve two masters," &c. Or it is from the same root signifying to speak similes, or parables, adagies, or witty sayings. Hence the Septuagint renders it παραβολή, What is the parable which you have in the land ? The gospel expresses a proverb by the word παροιμία, John xvi. 25 ; 2 Pet. ii. 22. And the learned think παροιμίαν, to be ἀπο τοῦ ὄμιου. And Scaliger, l. 3. Poet. censet παροιμίαν διεῖ παρα τὸν ὄμιον, because it is a sentence that goes up and down by the way, it is common amongst men ; or thus, it may rather be so called, because it is præter viam, beside the common way of speaking ; having something mysterious, dark, and difficult in it. The Grecians say it is λόγος ὠφέλιμος ἐν τῷ ὄμιῳ ἐπικρύβει μετὰ πολὺν το χρησιμὸν ἔχων ἐν ἑαυτῷ, a speech useful for this life, having much good, and moderate darkness in it : they say also it is λόγος ἐπικαλύπτων το σάφι ἀσαφεί, a speech veiled ; light in a dark lantern. Some proverbs are obscure, and signify somewhat else than the words seem to express, as, " The dog is turned to his own vomit again ; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire,"

2 Pet. ii. 22. So that in Ezek. xviii. 2. "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge." Some are more plain and easy, as 1 Sam. xxiv. 13, "Wickedness proceedeth from the wicked;" so that among us, "Truth begets hatred; flattery, friends." Some were wicked and false, and such had this people among them: that in Ezek. xviii. 2, "The fathers," &c. and that in this place, are wicked proverbs.

11. The mention of the proverb; "The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth."

Herein lies the evil of this proverb: when the prophets at the command of God prophesied sad things, threatened destruction to Jerusalem, captivity to the people, &c. they, not willing to hear of such things, put off all by this proverb thus; If that the prophet's prophecy be true, it is not for our days, but the days of those who are long after, for the next, the second, or third generation after, as "the days are prolonged," say they; or if they be false, as it is likely, what need we fear, or care, "every vision faileth," they come to nothing, they are words, wind; and thus wickedly they put off prophetic threats, and deluded their own souls; they laid not to heart their sins, they used not any means to divert divine wrath, or to secure their own souls; and that because sinfully they prolonged or disannulled the prophecies.

Obs. 1. That men very wicked are very secure; they look for peace, liberty, and long life, even when they have greatly provoked the wrath of God against them. What if we have sinned by violence in the land, by corruptions and false worship in the church, and the prophets have thundered against us with threatening judgments; yet "The days are prolonged," we shall have peace, walk at liberty, and fill up the number of our days. So in chap. xi. 3, "It is not near;" desolation is threatened by the prophets from Chaldea, but is not near; "let us build houses" for our delight, and dwell in them securely, and take a course with Jeremiah, and those of his strain, which think to trouble us. Jer. vii. 9, 10, they did "steal, murder, commit adultery, swear falsely, burn incense to Baal;" yet came and stood in the house of God, and said, "We are delivered to do all these abominations:" the meaning is, Though we have done such things, and have been grievously threatened for them by the prophets, yet we are delivered from their threats, and are well, safe, without fear or danger, and shall go on in our old ways: when God's threatenings are deferred, out of mercy, that men may consider, repent, and prevent them, they think they will never come, and so grow more secure and more sinful. Eccl. viii. 11, "Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil;" they go on more freely, with more delight; this makes the Lord oft to remind sinners of the days of his wrath. Amos iv. 1, 2, "Hear this word, ye kine of Bashan, that are in the mountain of Samaria, which oppress the poor, which crush the needy, which say to their masters, Bring, and let us drink." They were secure, and, like kine, gored, trod under the poorer sort; and what must they hear? this, "The Lord God hath sworn by his holiness, that lo, the days shall come upon you, that he will take you away with hooks, and your posterity with fishhooks." So Zeph. i. 14, "The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly."

Obs. 2. Such is the corruption of man, that, being opposed, it swells higher, and vents itself oftentimes blasphemously. The prophets reproved them for their sins, threatened the sorest judgments for them, and how did they entertain those threatenings? their hearts boiled against the prophets and their messages; and they uttered it with their tongues, "Every vision faileth," there is no truth in the prophets, nor in their visions, they are liars, and their visions lies. This was not only contumelious to the prophets, but blasphemous against the majesty of God, and the truth of his word. Men that live under the word, if their corruptions and lusts be not weakened and mortified, they are ripened, strengthened, and grow to an insufferable height. Jer. xvii. 15, "They say unto me, Where is the word of the Lord? let it come now:" thou tellest us of the word of the Lord, but it is thine own dream; if it be the Lord's, let it come now and we will believe it; but if not, it is thine, and thou art a deceiver to tell us so. 2 Pet. iii. 3, 4, "In the last days shall be scoffers, walking after their own lusts, saying, Where is the promise of his coming?"

Obs. 3. That sinful words are of a spreading nature. They said, "The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth;" this wicked speech was become a proverb; it passed through the mouths of all sorts, young, old, great, small, learned, ignorant; it was in the city and country, a proverb in the land of Israel. The words of the prophet stuck not by them, they mocked at him, and made jests at what he said: Ezek. xxxiii. 31, "With their mouth they show much love;" in the Hebrew it is, they make jests; they made sport with the prophet and his threatenings; but this blasphemous proverb they took up, and conveyed from one to another all the land over, and made use of to disparage whatever he said. So that in Matt. xxviii. 13, when it was known that Christ was risen, money was given to the soldiers to say, "His disciples came by night, and stole him away while we slept;" this saying went abroad, "and is commonly reported among the Jews until this day," ver. 15.

Obs. 4. God takes notice of the ungodly speeches which are in men's mouths. They said, "The days are prolonged," &c.; God heard and observed what they said. Isa. lix. 3, "Your lips have spoken lies, your tongue hath muttered perverseness:" many think a lie nothing, and secret muttering against others nothing, but God observes every lie which is told, all whispering and muttering against others. Jer. xxxiii. 24, "Considerest thou not what this people have spoken?" if thou dost not, I do; they have said, "The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast them off." Jer. xlv. 25, God regards what men and their wives say, yea, what every one saith: and will come ere long in judgment to convince sinners of the hard speeches spoken against him, Jude 15, and to call men to an account for every idle word which they have spoken, Matt. xii. 36; therefore, Eph. iv. 29, "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers," and comfort to the speakers.

Obs. 5. The Lord hath an admiring indignation at the wickedness of his people. "What is that proverb that ye have in the land of Israel?" This interrogation implies admiration, and indignation. Admiration, that a people brought up in his house, which had had the law and prophets from the beginning, so many hundred years, should be so stupid, wicked, profane, blasphemous, as to think and say, divine threatenings were in vain, the prophets liars, and their prophecies lies. And it shows indignation: What proverb is this which you have taken up? What! a proverb which strikes at me, which makes me a false and lying God, which overthrows all religion? O detestable and vile proverb! What! shall all that I say by my prophets fail, and come to nothing, vanish into the air?

III. The confutation of the proverb; "Tell them therefore, Thus saith the Lord God, I will make this proverb to cease," &c.

This verse is a confutation of their sinful proverb, which the Lord tells them should cease, and that the days they thought prolonged were at hand.

"They shall no more use it as a proverb in Israel." יִשְׂרָאֵל which is, they shall no more proverb it, not with this proverb; others they might use; acute and wise sentences concerning man's life and manners, &c. of which nature proverbs are, God would not abridge them of; but this was a destructive proverb.

"The days are at hand;" Hebrew, have drawn near. That is at hand, or draws near, which is either presently to be done, or not far off. The time was not far now from Jerusalem's besieging, Zedekiah's taking, and the ruin of all; God's net was made, and his snare ready for them.

"The effect of every vision." Hebrew is דְּבַר the French, la parole, the word or thing of every vision; res omnis visionis, so Piscator; whatsoever the vision did present to the prophet, and he to the people, that should be.

Obs. 1. The thoughts and words of the wicked are differing and contrary to the thoughts and words of God. They thought of peace, God of war; they thought of liberty, God of captivity; they of long life, God of cutting them off; they said the days of judgment were prolonged afar off, God saith, "They are at hand;" they said, "Every vision faileth," God said, every vision should take effect; they thought and said, this proverb should continue, but God thought and said, it should cease and be used no more; 1 Thess. v. 3, men cry, Peace, safety, and God cries, Destruction.

Obs. 2. When sinners are exceeding wicked, and have provoked God grievously, as they did here by this blasphemous proverb, yet even then God shows mercy. They had provoked him into the field, &c.; God might immediately have slain them, but he forbears them still, admonishes them of judgment near at hand; Go, say to them, "The days are at hand, and the effect of every vision." God tries them yet longer, and labours to awaken them with consideration of the nearness of danger.

Obs. 3. Length of time doth not frustrate and null the threatenings of God against sinners. Jeremiah had prophesied above thirty years, had threatened sad judgments, and because they came not to pass in so long time, they conceived they would come to nothing; but whatever be the distance of time between a threatening going forth, and the execution of it, yet it shall not fall to the ground, but have its time of fulfilling, if repentance intervene not.

IV. The confirmation of the confutation; "For there shall be no more any vain vision," &c.

Here begins the confirmation of the confutation. False prophets, who had vain visions, told them it should not be as Jeremiah had prophesied; Jerusalem should not be destroyed, they should not go into captivity, but dwell safely there, and enjoy that good land; but what saith God? "There shall be no more any vain vision:" the Hebrew runs thus, There shall not be any more all vision of vanity. Some refer these words to the true prophets and their vision, but they are put hard to it how to make it out, how some of their visions have been vain, for that is implied when it is said, There shall not be any more all, or any, vain vision: as when God saith, I will smite you no more, it argues, God hath smitten. But thus I conceive it may be taken: if it refer to the true prophets, There shall not be any more all vision of vanity; that is, hitherto you have looked upon all the vision of Jeremiah as a vision of vanity; but it shall be so no more; you shall have visions that shall be real, and quickly take place: but I incline to those who judge the words meant of the false prophets who had filled the people with vain visions, but they should be no more; God would make good the visions he had given touching the king and people, temple, city, and land, and this would put an end to all the vain visions of the false prophets.

"Nor flattering divination." חֲלֹם חֲלֹמֵי חֲלֹמֵי divinatio blandientis; miksam is from חָסַם futura predicere, to foretell things to come, to divine good or evil: it is taken both ways, and when in the evil sense, it comprehends whatever is done by witchery, sorcery, astrology, or the like. 1 Sam. xxviii. 8, Saul comes to the witch, and saith, אֲנִי בָּאִים אֵלַי דִּוְיָנָא Divina quæso mihi in Pythone, "I pray thee divine unto me by the familiar spirit." So 2 Kings xvii. 17, "They used divinations," יִקְסוּ חֲלֹמֵי They divined divinations that were wicked ones. Hence חָסַם is put for a soothsayer, Josh. xiii. 22, "Balaam the son of Beor," חָסַם illum magum; and Numb. xxiii. 23, Balaam saith, בִּישְׂרָאֵל כִּי־אֵי־אֶחָד־יִקְרָא וְיִדְבַּר בְּיָמָיו "Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob, nor any divination against Israel:" no soothsaying, charming, prognostication, had power against Israel. The false prophets being addicted to magic, astrology, and such wicked arts, told them that whatever was prophesied by the other prophets of the king of Babylon's coming and taking Jerusalem, yet all should be well; which they gathered from the stars and planets.

Divinations were sometimes from the entrails of beasts or birds; as Ezek. xxi. 21, "The king of Babylon stood at the parting of the way, at the head of the two ways, to use divination; he consulted with images, he looked in the liver."

Lavater thinks their divinations were astrological, and that they had taken up the practice of heathens, who looked at and consulted much with the stars. Isa. xlvii. 13, "Let now the astrologers, the stargazers, the monthly prognosticators, stand up, and save thee from these things that shall come upon thee:" these things were spoken of Babylon, who made use of such artists, but in vain; and it was the use of the Jews to do so likewise; 2 Kings xvii. 16, 17, "They worshipped all the host of heaven, and used divination and enchantments:" to these the people hearkened; therefore, Jer. xxix. 8, "Let not your prophets and diviners, that be in the midst of you, deceive you."

Hence I might take a hint to speak against that part of astrology as unlawful, yea damnable, which is judicial and prognosticative. From the conjunction of planets, the benign and oblique aspects of them, men gather and foretell things to come; yea, some think that all material contingent accidents which concern man, are written in the face of heaven; and that God sets the stars in heaven to signify such things. If Deodate goes too far in his annotations that way, our learned divines in Gen. i. 14. their annotations on the place, correct that error, and give no allowance to judicial astrology; they say the place giveth no warrant to the presumption of prognosticators or judiciary astrologers, to foretell the fortunes of men, or fates of civil estates, by the stars; or to make any prediction of any other supernatural events from the face of the heavens, or the impression of the planets, or from the temperature, figure, colour, or posture of the celestial bodies; for such arts of divination are condemned by the word of God: Deut. xviii. 10, "There shall not be found among you any one that useth divinations, or an observer of times;" such men are bad; for, ver. 12, "all that do these things are abomination unto the Lord." Listen not therefore to their lying observations; it matters not what the conjunctions and aspects of planets and stars are, reason and religion will qualify them. If holy men have shut and opened heaven with their prayers, if they have cast out devils, they may stop the influence of stars. Stars are made for man, not man for stars. If the Lord be with us, let Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, &c. be against us. One of note saith of the astrologers and time observers, Either they tell you of things adverse or prosperous; if prosperous, and deceive you, you are miserable by expecting; if adverse things, and false, you are miserable by fearing: if they tell you true things, and not good, you are presently miserable before they come; if they foretell good things to come, your expectation will weary your hope, and your hope will devour, yea devour the future fruit of your joy. No regard therefore ought ever to be paid to those persons who pretend to impart a knowledge of future events.

"Flattering." הלק blandientis, nor divination of a flatterer; the Hebrew word originally signifies, smooth, plain, even, and properly refers to things which concern the touching, as any thin plate, butter, oil; and metaphorically is transferred to the speech, and instruments of it, noting out the sweetness, smoothness, and flattery thereof. Psal. v. 9, "They flatter with their tongues," Hebrew is the same, and may be rendered, they smooth with their tongue, and make smooth their tongue, that is, they give flattering and deceitful words: so the apostle hath it, Rom. iii. 13, "With their tongues they have used deceit. So Psal. lv. 21, "The words of his mouth were smoother than butter, but war was in his heart;" that is, his words were flattering and deceitful; the singular number is put here for the plural, flatterer for flatterers, they promised the people a happy condition of things, and fed them with smooth words: the Septuagint hath it τὰ πρὸς χάριτα, those things which seem gracious, which are acceptable and make way for favour, which please: the Vulgate reads it, neque divinatio ambigua, no more doubtful divination, such as the oracles were, which might be taken divers, yea contrary ways.

Obs. 1. False prophets have pretences and cunning ways to prevail with the people. The verse points out the practice of such; and what is that? they had visions and divinations, and when they came to the people and told them of these, they were taken therewith; Jer. xiv. 14, they prophesied lies in the Lord's name, they said he sent them, he commanded them, and so by these pretences made way for their lies. 1 Kings xxii. 24, Zedekiah smites Micaiah on the cheek, and saith, "Which way went the Spirit of the Lord from me unto thee." He pretended he had the Spirit, spake by it, and so gained upon those who heard him. Matt. vii. 17, "Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing;" they seem harmless, their countenance, words, and carriage do plead for them, and usher in their false opinions; no false teachers but have some pretences to ingratiate themselves with the people. Eph. iv. 14, Paul speaks of the condition of the people, how they were "carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive;" by mutual opinions and subtle sophisms, they cheated the people, as cunning gamblers at dice lie in wait to cheat young novices.

Obs. 2. That their visions and divinations are false and flattering.

(1.) False. They are called here, visions of vanity, there is no truth in them, no trust to be given unto them; the false prophets had their names from the falsehoods which they presented to the people. Sometimes they are said to "prophesy lies, false vision and divination, a thing of nought, the deceit of their heart," Jer. xiv. 14. Sometimes they are said to "make vain, and speak a vision of their own heart," chap. xxiii. 16; to "cause dreams to be dreamed," chap. xxxix. 8. They are called "foolish prophets, that follow their own spirit, and have seen nothing," Ezek. xiii. 3; that "have seen vanity, and lying divination," ver. 6, which is as nothing. There were many such prophets amongst them; and this is the way that antichrist worketh, now in times of the gospel; 2 Thess. ii. 9, 10, his "coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness." When Satan comes into a man, it is with efficacy, and there he works strangely and deceitfully; so antichrist, when he comes into the church or state, it is with efficacy; he pretends that all ecclesiastical power is his, he sits in the temple as God, and exalts himself above all that is called God, even above the civil powers, therefore, in ver. 9, is said to come "with all power." Of his "signs and lying wonders," you may see, Rev. xiii. 3, 13, 15, "And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness;" that is, with all the art and cunning to deceive, which an unrighteous heart, spirit, state, and policy, can afford.

(2.) Flattering. Jer. xxviii. 2—4, Hananiah, a false prophet, flatters them, and feeds them with vain hopes, saying, "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, I have broken the yoke of the king of Babylon: within two full years will I bring again into this place all the vessels of the Lord's house, and Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, with all the captives of Judah, that went into Babylon." Here were pleasing words, which lulled them in security. When Ahab had a mind to go up to Ramoth-gilead and fight, what said the prophets to him? 1 Kings xxii. 12, "Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper; for the Lord shall deliver it into the king's hand;" and when Micaiah a true prophet was called to speak, they would have corrupted him: say the messengers, "The words of the prophets declare good unto the king with one mouth: let thy word, I pray thee, be like unto the word of one of them, and speak that which is good." Foolish people think those words good which flatter and please them; but such words undo them. Ezek. xiii. 10, "Because they have seduced my people, saying, Peace; and there was no peace; and one built up a wall, and, lo, others daubed it with untempered mortar;" the true prophets threw down Jerusalem by their prophecies, but the false built up a wall, prophesied safety, deliverance, and others agreed with them, but this was flattery and their destruction: Prov. xxvi. 28, "A flattering mouth worketh ruin." This Paul knew, and therefore justifies himself, that at no time he used "flattering words," 1 Thess. ii. 5. If he should have pleased men, he should not have been the servant of Christ.

Obs. 3. Vain visions and flattering divinations of false prophets do cause people to be secure and fearless of divine threats. They regarded not what Jeremiah prophesied against Jerusalem, so long as Hananiah and such men prophesied the contrary; Ahab feared not scattering and falling at Ramoth-gilead, whilst the false prophets said, "Go, and prosper." Man's nature is apter to be secure than to fear, because pleasing things are sooner taken in than such as are averse to them.

Obs. 4. God hath his time to confute and confound visions of vanity, and divinations of flattery. "There shall be no more any vain vision." &c. When the Lord made good his word, brought Nebuchadnezzar to the walls of Jerusalem, gave it up into his hands, then were all the lying prophets confuted, and confounded with shame. Events discover visions, and distinguish prophets: Jer. xxviii. 9, "The prophet which prophesieth of peace, when the word of the prophet shall come to pass, then shall the prophet be known, that the Lord hath truly sent him." If it proved true that was prophesied, then was it a vision of God, if not, a vision of vanity, and this was the way for them to try the prophets by. Deut. xviii. 21, 22, the question is there, How shall we know whether a prophet speak of himself or from God? the answer is, Look to the event: if the thing he speaks come not to pass, it is not of God, it is a lie; shame and confusion to the prophet: when Ahab was wounded and fell at Ramoth-gilead, then the false prophets were confuted, and Zedekiah confounded, running into an inner chamber to hide himself. 2 Kings xxii. 25. Hence the Lord is said to frustrate the tokens of liars, to make diviners mad, to turn wise men backward, and to make their knowledge foolish. Isa. xlv. 25.

"For I am the Lord: I will speak, and the word that I shall speak shall come to pass." &c. In this and the last verse, the Lord promiseti to make good his word, and that without delay: it should not be prolonged as they imagined, but quickly take effect, and accomplish those ends it was intended for: I will confound the false prophets and justify the true; they speak and it never comes to pass, I will speak by my prophets, and it shall come.

In the words of this verse you have,

I. A reason, which first looks back to what was said in ver. 24. Vain vision and flattering divination shall cease; why? "I am the Lord;" and power is in my hand to discover vain and flattering prophets, to confound them and their visions. Secondly, forward to what God should say: "I will speak, it shall come to pass, it shall not be prolonged;" and why? "I am the Lord," Jehovah, and will give being to my word.

II. A general promise, of speaking what he pleases, and making it good: "I will speak, and it shall come to pass;" there shall not be any delay.

III. A special application of it to the house of Israel, and their time: "In your days, O ye rebellious house, will I say and perform."

Quest. Whether do the sins of people cause judgments threatened to come sooner than the time appointed, because it is said here "it shall be no more prolonged;" as if he should say, I thought yet to have prolonged, deferred my judgments, but they shall come speedily?

Insur. As men's repentance may prevent judgments threatened, so their sins may hasten them. Jer. xlviii. 16, "The calamity of Moab is near to come, and his affliction hasteth fast;" Moab's sins hastened Moab's afflictions. When men sin with a high hand after judgments given out, those sins add wings to judgment. Mal. iii. 5, "I will be a swift witness," saith God, "against sorcerers, adulterers, false swearers, those that oppress the hireling, widow, fatherless, and turn aside the stranger from his right;" he will come flying to judgment against them. 2 Pet. ii. 1, sinners are said to "bring upon themselves swift destruction;" destruction makes haste to them. When men shall scold at divine threats and jest at judgments, this provokes God to hasten them. Isa. v. 19, "Let him make speed, and hasten his work, that we may see it." They were so far from fearing and believing the threats of God, that they made a mock at them; hence saith the Lord, Jer. i. 12, "I will hasten my word to perform it." I will take the first opportunity to make it good. God will shorten the day of affliction for the elect's sake, and hasten the days of judgment for the wicked's sake.

Obs. 1. The thoughts and hopes of wicked men about the threatenings of judgment are foolish and vain; they think and hope, that either they will not come at all, or if they do, it will be a long time after. "It shall be no more prolonged." You conceit, because the time is long, that there is no such thing, or that it will not be in your days; but you are deceived, such threats are groundless, and hopes are vain: Jer. v. 12, "They have belied the Lord, and said, It is not he (that speaks by these prophets); neither shall evil come upon us, neither shall we see sword nor famine; and the prophets shall become wind, and the word is not in them;" they are deceived, not we: they look for a black and sad day, which will not come, and we look for good days, good things: therefore the prophet, impersonating them, saith, chap. viii. 15, "We looked for peace, but no good came: and for a time of health, and behold trouble." They would not believe that ever an adversary should have entered within the gates of Jerusalem, Lam. iv. 12.

Obs. 2. That whatever word the Lord speaks, he will make it good. "I will speak, and it shall come to pass." Whatever God hath spoken by the prophets or apostles, yea, whatever is spoken warrantably from the word by any faithful minister of his, he will accomplish the same. He doth not possess his servants with vain visions, or flattering divinations; whatever he utters by them is divine and infallible; he is Jehovah, a God of power and faithfulness, sufficient every way to fulfil his promises and perform his threatenings. Some take these words, "I am the Lord," to be an asseveration, or an oath, and the sense to lie thus, As sure as I am God, Jehovah, that have being of myself, and give being to all others, so sure will I give being to my promises and threatenings: so that not only heaven and earth must pass away, before any tittle of any truth of the Lord's shall fall to the ground, but even God himself must cease to be, before his word shall be without effect. Isa. xlv. 24, "I am the Lord that maketh all things;" that "I am" doth frustrate and confound liars, diviners, wizards, and all impostors, as it is ver. 25: "that confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the counsel of his messengers," ver. 26. What word soever Isaiah gave out, the Lord confirmed and performed it. He gave out the word touching Cyrus, that he should be a shepherd to God's people, that he should further the Jews' return out of Babylon, and building of the temple: and this was above two hundred years before his birth, as Deodate saith in his notes upon the place, and about two hundred, as our late annotations have it: but if we reckon by Scripture account, you will find it not so much: for this prophecy of Cyrus was delivered by Isaiah after Hezekiah's sickness, chap. xxxviii. in which fifteen years were added to his days: and from thence it was but a hundred and twenty-five years and six months to Zedekiah's carrying into captivity, which was eleven years after the captivity began, for chronologers reckon the beginning of the captivity from the time of Jehoiachin's carrying away, and the Scripture countenances it, Ezek. i. 2: so then, reckon the captivity from Jehoiachin, seventy years, and there are but a hundred and fourteen before, and these make one hundred and eighty-four: and this person, prophesied of so long before, did God in due time give to the world, and stirred up to be helpful to his people, Ezra i. 1-3, and so made good both what Isaiah said here, and Jer. xxix. 10. God's word must take place, whoever gains or loses by it; Isa. lv. 11, "The word that goeth out of my mouth, it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." Zech. i. 6, "My words and my statutes, which I commanded my servants the prophets, did they not take hold of your fathers?" God appointed them to do so, and they did accordingly; God's words overtook them, thinking to escape. Daniel bears witness to this truth, chap. ix. 12, "He hath confirmed his words, which he spake against us."

Obs. 5. The corrupt heads and hearts of men are subtle, and prone to elude and put off those truths which are presented unto them by the servants of God. The Lord sent his prophets unto them early and late: they being faithful, laid open the judgments of God, told them of their danger, invited them to repentance, mourned for the slight entertainment they found, &c. And what then? they either mocked at them, as it is in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16, or charged them with falsehoods and lies, Jer. v. 12, 13, or resolved not to hearken to them, Jer. xlv. 16, or put it off, as not concerning them at all, or if it did, not for a long time, for those that were after them, not the present generation; ver. 27 of this chapter, "The vision is for many days, and he prophesieth of the times that are far off." Thus were they witty and wicked against themselves, to turn aside the stroke of God's word, which having been entertained, might have done their souls good. This was the practice in Christ's and the apostles' times, one thing or other still was pretended to wave the doctrine of Christ; as the meanness of his person, Matt. xiii. 55, 56; John vii. 27; his breaking of the sabbath, John v. 16; ix. 10, 16, "This man is not of God," &c. They said he blasphemed, Matt. ix. 3, that he deceived the people, John vii. 12, made himself a king and spake against Cæsar, John xix. 12; they pretended his doctrine to be new, Acts xvii. 19, to be hard and severe, John vi. 60, to be against Moses, Acts vi. 11; that it was heretical, Acts xxiv. 14, that he spake too particularly to them, Luke xi. 45, that the rulers and great ones received it not, John vii. 48, "Have any of the rulers," &c.; that his doctrine, and the followers of it, made great stirs wherever it came, caused sects and schisms, Acts xix. 23; xxviii. 22.

CHAPTER XIII.

Ver. 1-7. And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, prophesy against the prophets of Israel that prophesy, and say thou unto them that prophesy out of their own hearts, Hear ye the word of the Lord; Thus saith the Lord God; Woe unto the foolish prophets, that follow their own spirit, and have seen nothing! O Israel, thy prophets are like the foxes in the deserts. Ye have not gone up into the gaps, neither made up the hedge for the house of Israel to stand in the battle in the day of the Lord. They have seen vanity and lying divination, saying, The Lord saith: and the Lord hath not sent them: and they have made others to hope that they would confirm the word. Have ye not seen a rain vision, and have ye not spoken a lying divination, whereas ye say, The Lord saith it: albeit I have not spoken?

The former chapter concerned the king and the people; this concerns only the false prophets and prophetesses, who taking upon them that office, were led by their own spirits, and deceived the people with vain visions and lying divinations, to accomplish their own ends: against these doth the Lord set our prophet Ezekiel on work to prophesy severely.

In the chapter you have two general parts.

I. A prophesy against false prophets, in the first sixteen verses.

II. A prophesy against women prophets, from the 17th verse to the end.

In the first part you have the judgments and sins of the false prophets declared and laid down.

1. The judgments threatened against them, which are in ver. 2, 3, 8, 9, 11, 13-16.

2. The sins causing those judgments threatened, and they are expressed in ver. 2-10, 16. God's threatenings and their sins are promiscuously delivered by our prophet, and we shall handle them as they lie.

Ver. 1, 2, and 17, do show the author of this prophecy; and that was the Lord, who bade Ezekiel prophesy, and set his face against them. Our prophet had divine warrant for what he said, and wisely prefixes it, when he was to deal with false prophets, who had neither word nor warrant from God for what they said or did: true prophets have their commission and instruction from God.

In ver. 2, you have,

1. The appellation, "Son of man."

2. A command, and that is twofold:

(1.) Is to Ezekiel, "Prophesy."

(2.) Is to the false prophets, "Hear ye the word," &c.

3. The kind of prophecy, and that is conminatory; "Prophesy against the prophets of Israel."

4. The sin that moves God to set the prophet against them, and that is, They "prophesy out of their own heart."

"Against the prophets of Israel." Whether the prophets in Babylon or in Zion, you may demand: for there were false prophets in Babylon, who were the prophets of Israel, because they prophesied to the captive Jews, Jer. xxix. 8, 9; and there were false prophets at Jerusalem, Jer. xxvii. 14, and they were the prophets of Israel also? We may understand this prophecy of the false prophets in both places.

"That prophesy out of their own hearts." Hebrew, them that are prophets out of their own hearts. To prophesy out of their own hearts, is,

1. To prophesy upon their own mere motion. They are prophets because themselves will be prophets, and they prophesy because they will prophesy: they have no call to this office but their wills, they thrust themselves upon it.

2. The things they prophesy are their own; what their fancies, lusts, affections, carnal reason, suggest unto them, those things they deliver: their prophecies came by the will of man. 2 Pet. i. 21, "For the prophecy in old time came not by the will of man." The true prophets did not prophesy out of their own hearts, after their own wills, but they spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit, what that brought in they gave out: divine truths were presented to them, and those they commended to the people: but false prophets had nothing of or from the Spirit: they had all out of their own hearts: yet pretended they were inspired and had the Spirit. 1 Kings xxii. 24, "Which way went the Spirit of the Lord from me unto thee?" Zedekiah and all the rest of the false prophets thought they had the Spirit of the Lord, but it was the spirit of Satan, a lying spirit, they had; ver. 22, "I will go forth, and be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets."

Quest. If they speak out of their own hearts, why are they called prophets? they are prophets that speak from God, and not themselves.

Ans. The word prophet is taken largely, for any one that foretells things true or false, and is common to good and bad; the Scripture speaks according to the use of words. Titus i. 12, "One of themselves, even a prophet of their own." That was Epimenides a poet; for poets were commonly called prophets; and so the Scripture gives the name to any foretelling things; 1 Kings xviii. 19, "Baal's prophets, and the prophets of the groves;" 2 Pet. ii. 1, "There were false prophets among the people."

"Thus saith the Lord God; Woe unto the foolish prophets," &c. Here the prophet proceeds in denouncing judgment, and describing those false prophets.

1. The judgment denounced is in this word, "Woe," a little word, but very comprehensive; all evils are contained in it. They promise all happiness to the people, but, woe to themselves! woe to their bodies, woe to their souls, woe to their names, woe to them here, woe to them hereafter! The dreadful judgments mentioned in the Revelation, are called woes; chap. ix. 12, "One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter."

2. The description of the prophets; they are foolish, and this foolishness of theirs is evidenced two ways:

(1.) They follow their own spirits.

(2.) They have seen nothing.

"Foolish," נבלי from נבל which signifies vile, foolish, frail. These prophets were subtle and crafty, abounding with carnal and worldly prudence, but in the things of God they were blind and foolish; they called light darkness, and darkness light; they were lifted up with their pretended visions and divinations; they despised and insulted over the true prophets; they boasted themselves to be the men of God's counsel, and laboured to be had in admiration of all; they foresaw no danger, but spake pleasing things to the people, prophesying safety and good days, and this was their foolishness; there was no divine wisdom or truth in them.

"That follow their own spirit." These words are answerable to those in ver. 2, "That prophesy out of their own heart;" the Hebrew is, who walk after their own spirit; their own spirits led them, not the Spirit of God. In chap. i. it is said, The Spirit was in the wheels, and they went whither the Spirit led them, ver. 20; but these prophets had not the Spirit in them, neither went after it, but after their own spirit; whatever their own spirits dictated to them, that they embraced, magnified, and gave out to the people.

"Have seen nothing." The true prophets had visions of God, divine revelation; their understandings were in an extraordinary manner irradiated by the Spirit of God, and they saw, that is, understood, the mind of God. Hence prophets were called seers; Amos vii. 12, "O thou seer, flee away;" 2 Kings xvii. 13, God testified against them by all the seers. They foresaw judgments to come, and other things which God revealed unto them: Numb. xii. 6, "If there be a prophet among you, I will make myself known unto him in a vision." But these false prophets had seen nothing; they had no vision, no discovery of God's mind unto them any way.

Obs. 1. It is no new thing that there is in the church of God false prophets, corrupt opinions, great opposition to the truth, differences and divisions. In Ezekiel's days there were false prophets, which deluded the people, which opposed the true prophets with much insolence, which caused great stirs, contentions, and divisions amongst the captives in Babylon and people at Jerusalem; see for both these the 28th and 29th chapters of Jeremiah, where Hanan opposes Jeremiah, and Jeremiah writes letters into Babylon to quiet them there. In Ahab's days you may find false prophets, and their number very great: 1 Kings xviii. 19, "The prophets of Baal were four hundred and fifty, and the prophets of the groves four hundred." They exceeded the number of the true prophets eight to one, for they were but one hundred, hid by Obadiah in caves, ver. 4. And these false prophets drew many of the people from the worship of the true God; others they staggered, and made to halt between two opinions; and so caused great division, opposition, and persecution in Israel. There have always been and ever will be false teachers and prophets among the people of God. In the gospel you read of false Christs, Mark xiii. 22, false apostles, 2 Cor. xi. 13, false teachers, 2 Pet. ii. 1, and many false prophets that should arise, Matt. xxiv. 11. The churches in the apostles' days were much troubled with those who vented corrupt opinions and caused great contentions. The church of Galatia had those among them who preached another gospel, and justification by the law, and so troubled them, that the apostle wished them cut off, chap. v. 12. There were lying apostles in the church of Ephesus; the doctrine of Balaam and the Nicolaitanes in the church of Pergamos, &c. Such men, with their opinions, errors, and consequences of them, God suffers, to clear up truth, to make it more precious, to try the godly, to discover hypocrites, to show his power and wisdom, that can work good out of evil, and preserve his people in the midst of contentions.

Obs. 2. See here who are true prophets, and who are false. The word of the Lord came to Ezekiel, it came not to them; the true prophets saw visions, the false saw nothing; they were moved by the Spirit of God, these by their own spirits; out of their own hearts came what they delivered, out of heaven what the other delivered; God spake by the true prophets, Satan by the false, he is a lying spirit in the mouth of all the false prophets, 1 Kings xxii. 22. Either Satan's or their own they speak: Jer. xxiii. 16, "They speak a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the Lord;" ver. 26, "They are prophets of the deceit of their own hearts;" ver. 27, 28, they tell dreams; they feed the people with chaff, and not wheat, and make them to err and forget the name of God. But the true prophets ever spoke what they received from the Lord: therefore Micah, 1 Kings xxii. 14, told some desiring him to speak somewhat of his own, that as the Lord lived he would speak nothing but what the Lord should say unto him, Christ saith, John vii. 16, 18, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. He that speaketh of himself seeketh his own glory; but he that seeketh his glory that sent him, the same is true," &c.

Obs. 3. That what comes from man, however esteemed or magnified by men, is worthless in God's account. They prophesied out of their own hearts, followed their own spirits, which they set a price upon; but this the Lord blames, condemns, he calls foolish, mentions their own hearts and spirits in opposition to the revelations and inspirations of his Spirit, which only are of weight and worth; therefore whatever prophets or ministers do bring of their own, it is a wicked forgery. It is the office of the Spirit of truth to give out truth; he leads into all truth, he takes of Christ's and shows unto those who are Christ's prophets, apostles, and ministers, John xvi. 13, 14. If men preach or prophesy any thing which is not from the Spirit, but from themselves, it is not acceptable unto God, neither should be entertained by us. Hence you shall find, that what men have brought of their own is called lies, Jer. xxvii. 10, dreams, chap. xxiii. 32, untempered mortar, Ezek. xxii. 28, a thing of nought, Jer. xiv. 14, deceit, chap. xxiii. 26, perverse things, Acts xx. 30, commandments of men, Mark vii. 7, wisdom of this world, 1 Cor. ii. 6, another Jesus, another spirit, another gospel, 2 Cor. xi. 4. What is man's, is opposite to God and Christ; therefore Paul saith expressly, 2 Cor. iv. 5, "We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord;" only what we have from him by his Spirit, that we preach unto you. Paul was a man of great parts, a great scholar, and yet durst not vent any thing of his own.

Obs. 4. The folly and madness of false prophets, who pretend they have all from God, yet follow their own spirits. Those words "have seen nothing," import, that they pretended they had seen something, that they told the people they had visions from God. It is frequent in Scripture to hear of their visions: Isa. xxviii. 7, "They err in vision;" Jer. xiv. 14, "They prophesy a false vision;" chap. xxiii. 16, "They speak a vision of their own heart;" Zech. xiii. 4, "They shall be ashamed every one of his vision;" and ver. 7, of this chapter, it was a vain vision and a lying divination which they had, but the pretence was they had all from God; "The Lord saith it," albeit he spake not. Thus they made him author of all their lying, vain, and false prophecies, which was extreme madness and folly in them. Herein was a dreadful hand of God upon them; because they were malicious against the true prophets, and received not the truth with the love of it, God left them to blindness, hardness, to believe lies, so that they thought that to be from God, which was from their own spirits, or from Satan the spirit of errors.

Obs. 5. That wicked prophets are in a dreadful condition, woe is their portion, "Woe unto the foolish prophets!" they are men set out for judgment, under malediction, appointed to condemnation and utter destruction. Jer. xxiii. 15, God tells such prophets that he "will feed them with wormwood, and make them drink the water of gall;" God will deal bitterly with them; Jer. xiv. 15, "By sword and famine shall those prophets be consumed." Rev. xx. 10, the devil, the beast, and the false prophet are in the same lake of fire and brimstone, tormented continually and eternally; by the prophet some understand the pope, some his clergy; we may take in all false prophets and teachers, who "bring upon themselves swift destruction," 2 Pet. ii. 1; they should be thrust through by their own friends when they prophesied, Zech. xiii. 3.

"O Israel, thy prophets are like the foxes in the deserts." The words hold forth,

1. A pathetic exclamation, "O Israel."

2. A description of these prophets, they "are like foxes;" and that we must make out unto you.

The land of Israel abounded with foxes; Judg. xv. 4, Samson caught three hundred at once; Neh. iv. 3, the enemies told the Jews that if a fox went up the wall they built, he would break it down; Cant. ii. 15, "Take us the foxes," which shows their land had store of them. Now the prophets of Ezekiel's days are likened to foxes.

(1.) A fox is a subtle, crafty creature; the serpent and the fox exceed therein. The fox's craft is known in deceiving and catching fish, poultry, lambs, and fowls; when he is hungry he will lie as dead, and so the fowls coming to prey upon him as a dead carcass, he snaps them, and preys upon them; for hares, he counterfeits a sporting with them, till at last he seizeth upon them: he hath many dens to flee unto, and some of them have many entrances, that he may more easily deceive the hunters; Luke ix. 48, "Foxes have holes." False prophets are subtle to deceive the people; they say they are sent of the Lord, have seen visions, and make use of his name, Jer. xiv. 14; Zech. xiii. 3. Sometimes they did wear rough garments to deceive, Zech. xiii. 4. The true prophets had such garments, Isa. xx. 2, sackcloth and hairy vestments, and the false prophets would imitate them, that they might without jealousy the better deceive the people. Sometimes they came in sheep's clothing, Matt. vii. 15, and spake fair, smooth, pleasing words; they are full of insinuations, windings, turnings, rhetoric, language, to gain upon people; they are deep and politic to carry on designs to promote their own ends; they can conform to men, and transform themselves into variety of shapes, 2 Cor. xi. 13, "False apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ," and by this means they had advantage to do what they aimed at. How foxish was the old prophet when he set upon the young prophet, 1 Kings xiii. 18, saying, "I am a prophet also as thou art; and an angel spake unto me by the word of the Lord, saying, Bring him back with thee into thine house, that he may eat bread and drink water. But he lied unto him," and so prevailed. False prophets and teachers have cunning carriage, cunning arguments and speech, to beguile others with: 2 Pet. i. 16, "We have not followed cunningly devised fables;" there were such as did. Arius was one of these foxes, who counterfeited that he was of the same mind with the orthodox; and that he might be received into communion of the church again, he subscribed the Nicene creed, and decrees, Sicut subscripsi, ita quoque credo, I believe as I have subscribed. Now he had in his bosom his own wicked confession, which he had written at home, and subscribed with his own name. The popish priests and Jesuits, what foxes have they been in churches and states to advance the catholic cause! In the eastern parts they show once a year their converts, in white, with palms in their hands, which is a great policy to draw others to their way. Contzin hath laid down subtle ways to cheat a state of its religion. The prelates had consulted with the fox when they made the et cetera oath, to support their tottering kingdom. It were to be wished that there were less of the fox now among the prophets, and more of the lamb.

(2.) The fox is cruel and malicious, the object of all his policy is the destruction of the other animals; when he gets amongst the poultry, the learned observe, he does not eat of the fowls till first he has killed them all. False teachers and prophets are foxes in their cruelty and maliciousness. Zedekiah smites Micaiah on the cheek, 1 Kings xxii. 24; he dealt injuriously and rigidly with him. Shemaiah stirred up authority against Jeremiah, ^{Jer. xvi. 8.} the true prophet, whom he would have put in the stocks and prison, Jer. xxix. 24, 26. And this would not suffice, they proceed to blood; Ezek. xxii. 25, "There is a conspiracy of her prophets in the midst thereof," not only like foxes, but even "like lions ravening the prey." They have devoured souls; the prophets laid their heads together to suck the blood of innocents: Lam. iv. 13, it was the prophets and the priests which shed the blood of the just in the midst of Jerusalem: they were not to meddle in matters of blood, but they incensed authority to do it, they preached against them, told those who had the power in their hand, that they should do God good service in sacrificing such persons. So great hath been the malice of wicked prophets and priests ever against the saints, that they have never rested till they have gotten their blood shed. The pope and his priests filled christendom with blood. It was the prelates and priests in queen Mary's days that brought so many to the fire, and caused that queen to imbrue her hands in innocent blood.

(3.) The fox is greedy of prey; so false prophets, they are greedy enough. Mic. iii. 5, "He that putteth not into their mouths, they even prepare war against him;" if they were not fed with the finest and fattest there was no peace, no safety. Ver. 11, "The priests teach for hire, and the prophets divine for money:" it was not the good of souls that they sought, they made merchandise of them, but gain was in their eyes; Ezek. xxii. 25, "They have taken the treasure and precious things," those they would be sure to lay hands on. Isa. lvi. 11, "They are greedy dogs, which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand: they all look to their own way, every one for his gain, from his quarter;" the words for "greedy" in the Hebrew are עני-עני strong of soul, appetite, stomach, they presently concoct, digest whatever they take in; souls, Ezek. xxii. 25, widows' houses, Matt. xxiii. 14. It is known what great revenues the popish priests and prophets have had in the kingdoms under the popish jurisdiction; in king John's days, his revenues were sixty thousand marks, and theirs seventy thousand. Balaam was a false prophet, and he loved the wages of unrighteousness; he would have cursed the people of God for reward, if God himself had not withheld, Numb. xxii. A cardinal coming to Rome, and seeing nothing but offering of moneys at the election of a pope, said, In this way the roman pontiffs are made.

(4.) Foxes are timorous creatures, and when danger comes, they run to their holes, and shift for themselves; so are false prophets and teachers: I Kings xxii. 25, when trouble came, Zedekiah fled into his holes, he went from chamber to chamber, to hide himself. John x. 12, "He that is an hireling, and not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth:" by wolf you may understand persecution, danger, when these approach and look sternly upon the man, he fleeth. Wickedness always renders men fearful.

(5.) The fox runs up and down from place to place doing mischief night and day. Cant. ii. 15, "Take us the foxes, the little foxes, that spoil the vines:" they ran from vineyard to vineyard, they spoiled the grapes and vines themselves. So false prophets and teachers are like them in this, they went up and down in Israel: they were at Samaria, at Jerusalem, Jer. xxiii. 13, 14, in Babylon, Jer. xxix. 25. In Paul's days there were such who went up and down from house to house, and "subverted whole houses, teaching things which they ought not for filthy lucre's sake," Tit. i. 11; and Christ tells us of such who compass sea and land to make one proselyte. Are not Jesuits and priests sent into most parts of the world to make proselytes, and to spoil the tender vines and grapes where they are.

(6.) The fox keeps his nature, whatever you do to him, or do with him; you may chain him up, but you cannot change him, it is questioned whether he can be tamed, if he get loose he is the same again that ever he was; so false prophets.

"In the deserts." In the breaches of the hedges, through which the foxes and other beasts entered into the vineyards. Some think there is nothing peculiar in these words: it is ordinary to say, the beasts of the field, the birds of heaven, and so, the foxes of the desert; but desert notes places neglected, without any fence, in those places the foxes abounded, were most hungry and ravening.

Obs. 1. It is a sad judgment to a people, when the prophets degenerate, and become foxes. Foxes, you know, are a number, a plague to the country where they live; and so are false prophets, wherever they come. They caused the people to err, and destroyed the way of their paths, Isa. iii. 12, they perverted and gainsaid what the true prophets gave in. They flattered the people, and concealed their sins and judgments due to them; Lam. ii. 14, "Thy prophets have seen vain and foolish things for thee: and they have not discovered thine iniquity, to turn away thy captivity; but have seen for thee false burdens and causes of banishment." Jer. l. 6, "Their shepherds have caused them to go astray," and so brought destruction upon them; Isa. ix. 16, "The leaders of this people," that is, prophets and priests, "cause them to err;" and what then? "they that are led of them are destroyed." Jer. xii. 10, "Many pastors have destroyed my vineyard, they have trodden my portion under foot;" foxes destroy lambs, poultry, vines, but those destroy souls. Bernard sets down many qualities of false prophets and teachers: they love to bear rule; they think pride and profit to be piety; they think themselves happy if they may enlarge their borders; they build stately houses, love full tables, exact of the poor, look strangely or big upon the inferior sort, and honour great ones; they either teach not, or teach for their bellies. Such prophets are a burden, if not destruction, to those they are among: and when the prophets are foxes, the princes are lions, and judges wolves, Zeph. iii. 3, 4.

Obs. 2. It is matter of grief and complaint to heaven itself, when the prophets are subtle, covetous, cruel. "O Israel, thy prophets are like unto foxes." God laid it to heart to see such prophets amongst them, as sought themselves, and preyed upon the people. Isa. iii. 12, "O my people, they which lead thee," or call thee blessed, "cause thee to err, and destroy the way of thy paths." Their leaders, the priests, prophets, princes, did that which affected Heaven, and provoked the Lord to cry out, "O my people."

"Ye have not gone up into the gaps," &c. Here the Lord proceeds in accusing these prophets; and this accusation respects,

1. Their duty.
2. The end of their duty.

1. They are accused, first, not to do their duty, and that is set down in two metaphorical expressions:

- (1.) They went not up into the gaps.
- (2.) They made not up the hedge.

2. Not to have minded the end of their duty, which was, that the people might stand in battle in the day of the Lord.

"Into the gaps." בפרצות into the breaches. It is judged by divers of the learned, that this metaphor is taken from a siege, where the siegers labour to make breaches in the fortifications and walls of the place or city besieged; and it is their duty within, who have the command and power, to make up those breaches, and stand for the defence of the people and place where they are; but the prophets did not this, when judgments came in upon the people, they stood not in the breaches to divert them. Had he spoken before of military men, I should have rested in this sense of the word; but having spoken of false prophets, and here by an apostrophe turning to them, we may consider a metaphorical war. God was out with them and against them; Ezek. v. 8, he was the enemy bringing judgments upon them, the people, the city; religion and their laws were the walls, their sins the gaps which let in wrath upon them.

These prophets did not oppose the sins of the people, convince them of their idolatry, oppression, security, hypocrisy, profaneness, &c.; but either sinned with them, or winked at their sins; and so went not up into the gap to keep out the severe judgments of God from crowding in upon them. They should have called the people to repentance, declared the judgments of God to have been at hand, interceded mightily with the Lord for them, and if possible have prevented judgment; but these things they did not: Ezek. xxxiv. 4, "The diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye healed that which was sick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, nor brought again that which was driven away, nor sought that which was lost." When the people made a calf and worshipped it, there was a great gap made in the law, in the true worship of God; and now wrath was coming out, and God would have destroyed them, had not "Moses stood in the breach, to turn away his wrath," Psal. cvi. 23. Gaps therefore are the breaches which sins make.

"Neither made up the hedge." The Hebrew is, ye have not hedged a hedge. This is a metaphor taken from gardens, orchards, vineyards, and enclosures, which having hedges made about them, are secure from swine and beasts breaking into them: these prophets, instead of making hedges for their defence, they made gaps for their enemy. The hedge about a church and state is, divine protection, sound doctrine, pure worship, holiness of life, and execution of justice; and when there is a violation of either of these, the hedge is broken down: and the way to make up the hedge again, is by fasting, prayer, and hearty repentance: these prophets minded neither sound doctrine, pure worship, holiness of life, nor called upon authority for execution of justice; there was a general violation of all things in the church and state, and they laid it not to heart, they neither fasted, prayed, nor repented, but increased the violations, trod down the hedge more, and made the gaps wider. Ezek. xxii. 30, "I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me for the land, that I should not destroy it: but I found none."

"To stand in the battle in the day of the Lord." Their care should have been for the people's good, that when the day of the Lord's fury and judgments came that he should war against his people, they might have been able to stand. By "battle" understand not only the siege they endured by the Babylonians, but all afflictions and miseries which befell them; and had the prophets been faithful to them, the day of the Lord's wrath would have been their day of repentance, and so they might have stood, and not fallen.

Obs. 1. That people's sins make way for judgments to come in upon them; they break down the wall and the hedge, they make gaps and breaches, they unfortify a city, unhedge the vineyard, and unarm a state. Exod. xxxii. 25, when the people had sinned, Moses saw that they were naked, a city now without walls, an army without arms, they lay open to the winds and storms of divine wrath. 2 Chron. xxviii. 19, Ahaz "made Judah naked;" and how? "he transgressed sore against the Lord" by his sinful courses, he brake down the hedges and walls of protection, and so made them a naked people. God's people have their hedges and fences about them; Job i. 10, "Hast thou not made an hedge about him and his house;" Isa. v. 2, 3, his vineyard was fenced and walled; and if they were careful to flee sin, their hedges would be without gaps, their walls without holes, but when they sin, they make gaps and holes, and the greater their sins, the greater breaches still are made in them. When David sinned in numbering the people, what a wide gap made he for the pestilence to come in and destroy seventy thousand! 2 Sam. xxiv. When Uzzah made a breach in God's law by his sin, he made a gap for judgment to come in upon himself. Sin is a breach, Isa. xxx. 13, and ever makes way for judgments to enter. Psal. lxxxix. 31, 32, "If they break my statutes, and keep not my commandments; then will I visit their transgression with a rod, and their iniquity with stripes:" when they break God's laws, he will break them with his rods. Micah vii. 13, "The land shall be desolate because of them that dwell therein, for the fruit of their doings:" by their sinful actions they break the bounds, and by my just judgments I will make them desolate. Hos. xii. 1, "Ephraim daily increaseth lies and desolation;" how desolation? by his lies, his lying pretences and practices, he makes breaches for desolation to come in. Isa. xlii. 24, "Who gave Jacob a spoil, and Israel to the robbers? did not the Lord, he against whom we have sinned? for they would not walk in his ways, neither were they obedient to his laws."

Obs. 2. It is the duty of the prophets and servants of the Lord, when gaps and breaches are made, to go up into them, and make them up; they are to stand between the people and God's judgments. When the people had sinned greatly, and made way for sore judgments to come in upon them, Exod. xxxii. Moses ascends into the gap, and makes up the breach, he sets upon God by prayer, and uses strong arguments to divert his wrath: he "besought the Lord his God, and said, Lord, why doth thy wrath wax hot against thy people, which thou hast brought forth out of the land of Egypt with great power, and with a mighty hand? wherefore should the Egyptians speak, and say, For mischief did he bring them out, to slay them in the mountains, and to consume them from the face of the earth? Turn from thy fierce wrath, and repent of this evil against thy people. Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, thy servants, to whom thou swarest by thine own self, and saidst unto them, I will multiply your seed as the stars of heaven, and all this land that I have spoken of will I give unto your seed, and they shall inherit it for ever. And the Lord repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people," ver. 11—14. Here was a true prophet, that stood in the breach and turned away wrath. It was the practice of the good priests and prophets to do so. Numb. xvi. 41—48, when the people murmured, made a breach for the plague to come in upon them, Aaron took his censer, fire from the altar, put in incense, hasted into the congregation and made an atonement for the people, and stood between the dead and the living, and stayed the plague. See Deut. ix. 24—26. When Ezekiel saw the slaughter men sent out to slay young and old, without pity, he steps into the gap and saith, Ezek. ix. 8, "Ah Lord God! wilt thou destroy all the residue of Israel in thy pouring out of thy fury upon Jerusalem?" Jeremiah was so frequent in the gap, deprecating judgments, interceding for mercy, that the Lord forbids him to pray for that people, chap. xiv. 11; and chap. vii. 16, "Pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me." He used to pray, to cry, to intercede, and keep off wrath from them. Samuel, when Israel had sinned, and the Philistines were coming upon them, he gets up into the gap, offers sacrifice, and cries to the Lord, and he heard him, discomfits the Philistines, and delivers the Israelites, 1 Sam. vii. 9, 10. This is that which God looks for, when people have sinned, that some man of God or other should thrust into the breach, and prevent wrath. Ezek. xxii. 29, 30, "The people of the land have used oppression, and exercised robbery, and have vexed the poor and needy: yea, they have oppressed the stranger wrongfully." Here was the hedge broken down, and breadth enough for judgments to come in upon them; and what then? "I sought for a man among them that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me for the land, that I should not destroy it: but I found none." These false prophets trod down the hedge more and more, made the gaps wider, increased and hastened the judgments of God upon them.

Obs. 3. The Lord hath days of battle with his people appointed; what times he comes forth to punish them with his judgments, those are his days of battle. God hath decreed times to deal with the sons of men for their iniquities, and if they persist in sinning, the Lord will take his days of warring against them. You read in 2 Sam. xi. 1, that kings had a time to go forth to battle; it was at the return of the year, when it was spring or summer, then they went out to war against their enemies, not in the winter; but all times are alike to God to go out to war with his enemies, he can bring judgments upon sinners in winter, spring, summer; yea, he hath his peculiar times and days appointed to meet with wicked ones. This day of the Lord in Scripture is called a "day of darkness," Joel ii. 2, a "day of evil," Jer. xvii. 17, a "day of calamity," Jer. xlii. 21, a "day of indignation," Ezek. xxii. 24, a "day of visitation," Isa. x. 3, a "day of fierce anger," Lam. i. 12, a "day of ruin," Ezek. xxvii. 27, a "day of great slaughter," Isa. xxx. 25, a "day of grief, and desperate sorrow," Isa. xvii. 11, a "day of vengeance," Isa. lxi. 2, a "day of battle," Zech. xiv. 3. What time soever God enters into a controversy with the sons of men, walks contrary to them, avenges the quarrel of his covenant, executes any judgments upon them, it is the day of the Lord: hence the day of judgment is called "the day of Christ," Phil. i. 10; 2 Thess. ii. 2, because then he shall execute wrath upon sinners.

Obs. 4. Those the Lord finds in their sins in the day of battle, they cannot stand before him, they fall by the strength of his judgments. When Uzzah sinned, God made a breach upon him in the day of battle, and smote him dead, 2 Sam. vi. 6, 7. When he smote Egypt, he made it desolate; the fulness of it could not stand before him, Ezek. xxxii. 15. Israel is no more to God than a reed shaken in the waters, 1 Kings xiv. 15; one stroke of his will cut it down. Ephraim is no more than a tree to the axe; if God smite, the root dries up, and no more fruit grows thereon, Hos. ix. 16. If God smite habitations, be they never so costly, stately, great, of what materials soever, they quickly fall, Amos iii. 15. When God reckons with kings and queens, they cannot stand in judgment; Jehoram God smites with sickness till his bowels fall out, 2 Chron. xxi. 18, 19; Uzziah sins, and is smitten with leprosy; Jezebel and Athaliah are cut off by just judgment of his, 2 Kings ix. xi.; he cuts off the spirit of princes, and is terrible to the kings of the earth, Psal. lxxvi. 12. Great armies cannot stand in the day of the Lord's anger: 2 Chron. xiii. Jeroboam had an army of eight hundred thousand, and, ver. 15, God smote him and all Israel, "so that there fell down slain of Israel five hundred thousand chosen men," ver. 17. David asks the question, Psal. cxlvii. 17, "Who can stand before his cold?" If God can intend the cold, so that men cannot endure it, he can intend the heat also, so that there is no abiding of it; his wrath is hot, fierce, a consuming fire: this made Ezra cry out, chap. ix. 15. "Behold, we are before thee in our trespasses, but we cannot stand before thee, because of this;" chi is rendered here, for, but, under correction, it may be rendered, but; as in Gen. xiv. 8, "It was not you sent me hither," chi haelohim, "but God." 1 Sam. vi. 19, 20, when the Lord had smote fifty thousand and seventy men of Bethshemesh, for their irreverent meddling with the ark, what said the rest? "Who is able to stand before this holy Lord God?" No man in his sin can do it. Nahum i. 5, 6, "The mountains quake at him, the hills melt, the earth is burned at his presence, yea, the world, and all that dwell therein. Who can stand before his indignation? and who can abide in the fierceness of his anger? his fury is poured out like fire, and the rocks are thrown down by him." Let sinners be never so great, stout, when God comes in battle, he will overcome; and therefore saith, Ezek. xxii. 14, "Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong, in the days that I shall deal with thee?" Jerusalem thought so, but she found it otherwise.

Obs. 5. The prophets' failing in their duty, is one great cause of the people's falling in the day of the Lord's battles. They went not up into the gaps, they made not up the hedge for the house of Israel, that they might stand, &c. therefore they fell. The prophets here are implied to be builders and husbandmen; builders, to make a wall about the people, who are the city of God; husbandmen, to make hedges and fences about them, being the garden, orchard, and vineyard of God: now when they neglect to do these, they expose them to spoil and ruin, and provoke God to destroy all. Samuel knew this, and therefore said, 1 Sam. xii. 23, "God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you:" had he failed in his duty, sin would have increased, wrath broken out, and all have been overthrown. You have an observable place in Jer. xxiii. 22, "Had the prophets stood in my counsel, and had caused my people to hear my words, then they should have turned them from their evil way, and from the evil of their doings;" which had it been done, they had prevented the battle, and the people's falling therein.

"They have seen vanity and lying divination, saying," &c. Here is a further manifestation of the iniquity of these prophets.

I. You have the nature of their visions discovered; they were vanity and lies.

II. Their lying pretence for what they saw; and said, "The Lord saith, and the Lord hath not sent them."

III. The fruit and effect of their prophecy; they made the people to hope that they would confirm what they said; they gave it out that God had revealed it unto them, that they should not go into captivity, that those in Babylon should return to Jerusalem within a few years; and by this means they begat vain hopes in the hearts of the people with their vain visions.

What these prophets had was out of their own hearts, and from their own spirits, not from God; for nothing from him is vain or lying, but because it was from themselves, it was "vanity and lying divination."

"Lying divination." Hebrew, divinations of a lie, that had no truth in them.

"The Lord hath not sent them." True prophets had two things: 1. The gift of prophecy. 2. A call to exercise that gift. Both these were wanting in these prophets, and therefore the Lord sent them not.

"That they would confirm the word." They opposed the true prophets, told the people God was merciful, and would never bring such a long judgment upon them, that ere long they should see who spake truth; and so the people were brought to a hope and persuasion that their word should be accomplished, and this they waited for. The Septuagint reads it, they began to stir up or revive the word: many times the people's hearts were fainting, misgiving them that it might prove otherwise than they said; hereupon they stirred up their words, bid them not doubt, but be confident they had all from God, and were sent of him.

Obs. 1. The impudence and arrogance of false prophets and teachers. They said they had visions, and had none, ver. 3, they saw nothing. They pretended they had visions and divinations from God, real and true, and they saw nothing but vanity and lying divinations: they said, "The Lord saith," and he said not so; that the Lord sent them, and he sent them not, but they ran of themselves: they engaged the name and faith of God in their lying prophecies, and would have had them to be thought as good scripture as what any of the true prophets delivered; they condemned the true prophets for liars, and justified themselves. False teachers are very arrogant and self-justifying; Zedekiah said to Micajah, "Which way went the Spirit from me to thee?" have not I the Spirit, do not I understand the mind of God as well as thee, or any of thy rank? I Kings xxii. 24. Are not Jesuits and many others of this strain? they pretend miracles, scriptures, councils, fathers for their traditions, new articles, faith, seven sacraments, &c. when there is hardly any such thing. And do not many among us wrest Scripture, and force it into other senses, to weaken truth, maintain error, and to obtrude their own terms upon others?

Obs. 2. People are easily misled, seduced by false prophets. When they come with pretence of divine revelations and mission, and say, "The Lord saith," they listen, they hope, especially when they shall bring things suitable to their nature and desires, as here. They persuaded them that Jeremiah had prophesied falsely in telling them they should be carried into Babylon, be seventy years there. No, no, we have truer visions than he, the Lord will never forsake you who are his people, he will never leave Jerusalem, your brethren shall return to you, you shall never go to them; and this the people hoped would be. Prov. xiv. 15, "The simple believeth every word." Jer. v. 31, "The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so:" they affect the lies and flatteries of these false prophets, and what will they do in the end thereof? Let Paul's advice be acceptable to you. I Thess. v. 21, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good;" believe neither one prophet nor other, but prove what they say, and what is truth, good, hold that fast.

Ver. 8, 9. Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye have spoken vanity, and seen lies, therefore, behold, I am against you, saith the Lord God. And mine hand shall be upon the prophets that see vanity, and that divine lies: they shall not be in the assembly of my people, neither shall they be written in the writing of the house of Israel, neither shall they enter into the land of Israel; and ye shall know that I am the Lord God.

In these words are several judgments laid down against the false prophets.

I. General.

II. Particular.

I. The general are two:

1. God is against them; "Behold, I am against you."

2. His hand shall be upon them.

II. Particular ones are three:

1. Exclusion from God's people; "They shall not be in the assembly of my people."

2. Exclusion from having their names written amongst the Israelites; "Neither shall they be written in the writing of the house of Israel."

3. Exclusion from return from captivity: "Neither shall they enter into the land of Israel."

(1.) The reason of all, because they spake vanity, and divined lies; "Therefore, because ye have spoken vanity," &c.

(2.) The authority and certainty of all; "Thus saith the Lord God."

(3.) The event; "Ye shall know that I am the Lord."

"Spoken vanity." Hebrew is, for that ye speak a vain thing. These prophets, pretending they had visions and divinations, spake them to the people; and what were they? vanity and lies, there was no truth or reality in ought they delivered. The word sw notes vanity of words, and falsehood, Psal. cxliv. 8. Deut. v. 20, "Thou shalt not bear false witness;" Hebrew is, witness of vanity. Zech. x. 2 "The idols have spoken vanity, the diviners have seen a lie, and have told false dreams:" vanity, lies, and dreams, are joined together here; these idol prophets spake vanity, saw lies, told dreams. Peter saith, the false prophets spake "great swelling words of vanity," 2 Pet. ii. 18.

"I am against you." Hebrew is, Behold, I am against you; it is an aposiopesis, something is concealed which may easily be apprehended; as, I come to you, to punish you, or, I come against you: Chaldee is, I am about to send my anger against you. This phrase you have again, Ezek. xxi. 3, "Behold, I am against thee;" and in chap. xxvi. 3. And it is used when the Lord is greatly offended, and destruction of persons and things near at hand: Rev. ii. 5, "Repent, and do thy first works; else will I come unto thee quickly, and remove thy candlestick." It is of sad importance when the Lord saith, I come to you, or am against you. They thought it was but a few men opposed, who were weak, inconsiderable things, but the great and glorious God tells them that he is against them.

"My hand shall be upon the prophets," &c. Hand notes God's power and stroke; he being against them himself, he would put forth his power and smite them with some judgment or other. The Septuagint reads it, I will stretch out mine hand to, or upon, the prophets; and the Chaldee, for, my hands, have, my stroke; thus hand is taken Psal. xxi. 8, 9, "Thine hand shall find out all thine enemies; thy right hand shall find out those that hate thee. Thou shalt make them as a fiery oven in the time of thine anger." I Sam. v. 7, "His hand is sore upon us;" chap. vi. 3, "It shall be known why his hand is not removed from you." God had smitten them with the emerods, and that they call the hand of God. The phrase here implies that God will in some special manner punish these prophets.

"They shall not be in the assembly of my people." Hebrew is, בְּעִמְּךָ which Montanus interprets, in the secret; the Septuagint, ἐν παύσει, in the instructing of my people; they shall not prophesy or preach unto them; their liberty and power of speaking shall be taken from them. The difference of interpreting the word, arises from the several significations of the Hebrew word סֵתֶר which signifies a secret council, and the company of those who consult or counsel. If we take it here for secret, they shall not be in the secret of my people, then the sense is, they shall not know those secrets, nor partake of that good, which I reserve for to make known and communicate to my people. The Targum hath it thus, In occultis bonis quæ reposita sunt populo non habebuntur. They shall not be accounted among those secret good things which are laid up for my people. Prophets were great mercies for people, and God gave them out upon occasion; but these should not be numbered amongst them, they should be detected and have their reward.

This secret of God's people is some choice knowledge of God and his will, beyond what is vulgarly known by men of the world. Psal. xxv. 14, "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him." Prov. iii. 32, "His secret is with the righteous." Micah knew the secret of the Lord, touching Ahab, 1 Kings xxiv. which neither Zedekiah nor any other of the false prophets knew. Amos iii. 7, "The Lord revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets," not to those who are false and against him.

If we take it for "assembly," as the word is sometimes used in holy writ, as Jer. vi. 11, "I will pour out my fury upon the assemblies of young men," עַל סֵתֶר הַנוֹרִים then we must inquire what assemblies are meant. There were two kinds of assemblies among the Jews:

First, an assembly of elders; Psal. cvii. 32, "And praise him in the assembly of elders;" these were the magistrates and senators that had authority, and bare rule over the people; it might be the seventy or sanhedrim.

Secondly, an assembly of saints; Psal. lxxxix. 7, "God is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints;" the Jews were a holy people, and when there were public congregations of them, they were an assembly of saints. You may understand it of both assemblies, that these false prophets should neither come amongst the senators, to sit in council, there to consult about any matters of state or church; nor amongst the saints, they should have no communion with God's people: and this sense I like best; for the prophets came to ecclesiastic meetings, as appears, 2 Kings xxiii. 2, the prophets were present when Josiah read the book of the covenant; Jer. xxvi. 7, the priests and prophets heard Jeremiah in the house of the Lord.

"Neither shall they be written in the writing of the house of Israel." What this writing of the house of Israel was, search must be made. The Septuagint reads, in the Scripture of the house of Israel they shall not be written. By Scripture some understand the canonical books of Moses and the prophets, and will have the sense to be, that the prophecies of these false prophets should not be written in or among those books; but surely it was never in the thoughts of any true prophet, that the lies and vanities of false prophets should be joined to sacred writ: what hath the chaff to do with the wheat? We must look out some other meaning of these words. When it pleased the Lord to bring his people out of Egypt, he commanded them to be numbered, Numb. i. 2, 3. The names and number of all from twenty years old and upwards were to be taken, and when they were numbered they were to "give every man a ransom for his soul unto the Lord," Exod. xxx. 12. In like manner, when they came out of Babylon they were numbered, as appears, Ezra ii. viii.; and Neh. vii. where you have the number set down; ver. 66, 67, "The whole congregation together was forty and two thousand three hundred and threescore, beside man and maid servants seven thousand three hundred thirty and seven, and two hundred forty and five singing men and women." The catalogues in which the names of these were written, are judged to be the writings of the house of Israel; by these the tribes were known, preserved distinct, and those who were not found in the writing were displaced: Neh. vii. 64, "These sought their register among those that were reckoned by genealogy, but it was not found: therefore were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood." Isa. iv. 3, "Every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem shall be called holy." He speaks of great calamity, a destruction which should be upon the Jews, and few should escape, but he that was left, and written among the living, &c. All those who came to Jerusalem from the captivity, and were citizens thereof, were written in some book, catalogue, or register, which was the writing of the house of Israel; and was called also The book of life, or of the living; for upon the death of a man, his name was rased out of this book, or if he did any thing unworthy the name and right of a citizen; and then he was counted as a dead man. The sense of these words you may hence then take up thus, viz. These false prophets shall be reckoned amongst the dead, not the living; they shall not be written in the writing of the house of Israel, when they come back to Jerusalem; they shall be like trees pulled up and never planted again; they shall be cut off and destroyed by some judgment. In this sense some take those words of Moses, Exod. xxxii. 32, "Blot me out of thy book which thou hast written," take away my life; thou art now wroth with thy people, about to slay them: Lord, forgive them, spare them, else destroy me, and blot my name out of the book thou hast written, as our practice is.

This sense I condemn not, but something more some interpreters find in the words. This writing of the house of Israel they interpret the book of life, in which the names of all true Israelites were written; Phil. iv. 3, "Whose names are in the book of life;" Dan. xii. 1, "Every one that shall be found written in the book;" Luke x. 20, there is mention of names written in heaven; Rev. xiii. 8, it is called the Lamb's book of life; so Rev. xxi. 27. Contrary to this is writing their names in the earth; Jer. xvii. 13, "They that depart from the Lord, shall be written in the earth." The meaning then of the words must be of this nature: These false prophets think themselves to be my servants, that their names are in my book; they say, the Lord hath sent them, that they have my Spirit, do declare my will, and honour me much among my people; and you think them also happy men, that their names are written in heaven, that if any be saved they shall; but they neither are, nor shall be ever written in any book, accounted among my faithful ones; they are hypocrites, shall be discovered, and discarded for ever. In Psal. lxxix. 28, you have such an expression, "Let them be blotted out of the book of the living, and not be written with the righteous:" there were many who appeared to others to be written in the book of life, but the prophet prays that the Lord would make it evident some way or other, that they were not there. Here the Scripture speaks according to the opinion of men, not according to the reality of things. God blots men out of the book of life, when he declares by some dealings of his with them, that they are not accepted of him. Here God's hand should be upon them, they should not be among his people, have communion with them or him in any ordinance of his, and this was evidence they were not in his book, in that they should not come into the land of Canaan, that they should not be written in the writing of the house of Israel.

"Neither shall they enter into the land of Israel." This is the third particular judgment. The land of Israel hath many eulogies in Scripture; it is called "The land of the living," Psal. xxvii. 13; David had fainted, but that he hoped "to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living." People that lived in other lands were dead men, they had deaf, dumb, dead gods, and deadly worship; but the Jews had the living God their God, and lively worship, Acts vii. 38. A "land of uprightness," Psal. cxliii. 10; where were the best laws that ever nation had. A land of delight, for so the Hebrew is, Dan. xi. 41, בארץ זבת a land which was "the glory of all lands," Ezek. xx. 6. The land of Immanuel, Isa. viii. 8; where Immanuel was promised, born, lived, preached, wrought his miracles, and showed his glory. Into this land must not they come. They prophesied, that within a few years all should return into this land; but Ezekiel from the Lord tells them, that after seventy years they shall not return into their country, nor enter into heaven, whereof this was a type. Captivity was a little death, and to be in a land of dead ones was another death; and never to enjoy the land of the living, nor the living God, this was the sting of death. It was lawful for strangers to come into the land of Israel, 2 Chron. ii. 17, there were a hundred and fiftythree thousand six hundred at once in the land, and yet these prophets might not come in.

Obs. 1. The Lord is against evil prophets, and that is a dreadful thing. There are several things which makes God to be against them:

(1.) They abuse his name and authority, saying, the Lord sent them, ver. 6. If any man should abuse the name of a prince, or of parliament, and say, they sent them to speak or do any thing, and they did not, what injury were this unto them! how would they take it! much more is it a wrong to the Lord, who is greater than they.

(2.) Their prophecies are lies, vanity, the thoughts of their own heads, and conceptions of their own hearts, ver. 2, 3, 7, and so contrary to the truths of God.

(3.) They prejudice the design of God by the true prophets. By them the Lord made known his displeasure against the ways of sinners, convinced them of the evil of their doings, and drew them to repentance; Jer. xxv. 5, the prophets said, "Turn from the evil of your doings, and dwell in the land;" but the false prophets discredited them, disparaged their prophecies, and cried Peace.

(4.) They deceived the people with their falsehoods, filled them with vain hopes, ver. 6; and so strengthened them in their evil ways, and encouraged them to their own destruction.

(5.) They grieved the spirits of the godly, they made their hearts ache, as the false prophetesses did, ver. 22, they "made the hearts of the righteous sad."

(6.) They were evil themselves; Jer. xxiii. 11, "Both prophet and priest are profane; yea, in my house have I found their wickedness, saith the Lord;" they corrupted the worship of God with their inventions; God had cause enough to be against them. It is very sad, yea dreadful, to have God against one. I that know the secrets of all hearts, I that am holy and hate all sin, I that keep an exact account of all their ways, I that am infinitely just, and must punish all wicked ones, I that am infinitely powerful, and can destroy with an everlasting destruction, I, even I am against you. Rom. viii. 31, "If God be for us, who can be against us?" When God is for a man, all is safe, whoever attempts to hurt. David had many against him; Psal. cxviii. 10, "All nations compassed me about;" ver. 12, "they compassed me about like bees;" they swarmed about him, and had their stings ready, thrust out to sting him to death, but he had God with him, for him; and therefore saith, ver. 14, "The Lord is my strength and song, and is become my salvation;" but had God been against David, one of those bees would have been his death. Whoever the Lord is against, hath many enemies and few friends, all in heaven, all in earth, are against that man.

Obs. 2. Those prophets or people the Lord is against, he puts forth his power to punish. "Behold, I am against you, and my hand shall be upon you." Jer. xxviii. 15—17, God was against that false prophet Hananiah, and his hand was quickly upon him; "Hear," saith Jeremiah unto him; "The Lord hath not sent thee; but thou makest this people trust in a lie. Therefore thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will cast thee from off the face of the earth: this year thou shalt die, because thou hast taught rebellion against the Lord. So Hananiah the prophet died the same year." God was against Ahab, and spake against him, 2 Chron. xviii. 22, and the next tidings you hear of him, is his death by the hand of the Lord, ver. 33, 34. So Lev. xx. 3, "I will set my face against that man, and will cut him off;" if God's face be against a man, he will put forth his hand to destroy that man from before his face; and chap. xxvi. 17, "I will set my face against you, and ye shall be slain before your enemies." Ananias and Sapphira had God against them for their wilful lying, and presently his hand was upon them, Acts v. God's judgments are called his hand, 1 Pet. v. 6, his mighty hand; and if that fall upon any, it will break them to pieces.

Obs. 3. The fruits of God's displeasure are very grievous. First, they are shut out from the assemblies of God's people, they shall have no communion with the saints, these who are dear to God. All David's delight was in them, Psal. xvi. 3; and when he was a little put by coming at the assemblies of God's people, how did it trouble and afflict him! Psal. xlii. 1—4, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God: when shall I come and appear before God? My tears have been my meat day and night; while they continually say unto me, Where is thy God? When I remember these things, I pour out my soul in me: for I had gone with the multitude, I went with them to the house of God." So in the 84th Psalm, how did he long for communion with God and his people in the sanctuary! his soul longed and fainted for the courts of the Lord, his heart and flesh cried out for the living God, ver. 2; he counted a day in the Lord's courts better than a thousand, he had rather be a door-keeper there, than a favourite in Saul's house, ver. 10. David knew there was much good to be had in the assemblies of God's people, and therefore he prized them so, and was impatient of absence from them. In the assemblies men have communion with God; there his glory is seen; Psal. xxix. 9, "In his temple doth every one speak of his glory;" Psal. lxxviii. 24, "They have seen thy goings, O God, in the sanctuary." There his wisdom, his power, his mercy, his truth, his glory, are evidenced, the treasures of his grace opened and dispensed, spiritual life begotten and maintained, drooping souls are comforted, raised, ravished; there we admire, adore, magnify, and glorify God; there we hear of our duty towards God and man; there we have fellowship with the saints, interest in their afflictions, gifts, graces, counsels, comforts, admonitions, exhortations, and prayers. In the assemblies of God's people, you have the presence of God, of Christ, the Spirit, and the angels, 1 Cor. xi. 10; and what a sore judgment is it to be shut out from these assemblies! Bless God for your liberties, be thankful for all the good you have in the assemblies, and walk so that you may honour truth and the God of assemblies.

Obs. 4. Many that in their own and the world's esteem go for true prophets and saints, will be in God's time discovered to be liars, hypocrites, false; themselves think, and others also, that they are written in the writing of the house of Israel, in the book of life, but their names were never there. The Jews said they were Abraham's seed, God was their Father, but they were found false, they were of their father the devil.

Ver. 10—16. Because, even because they have seduced my people, saying, Peace; and there was no peace; and one built up a wall, and, lo, others daubed it with untempered mortar: say unto them which daub it with untempered mortar, that it shall fall: there shall be an overflowing shower; and ye, O great hailstones, shall fall; and a stormy wind shall rend it. Lo, when the wall is fallen, shall it not be said unto you, Where is the daubing wherewith ye have daubed it? Therefore thus saith the Lord God; I will even rend it with a stormy wind in my fury; and there shall be an overflowing shower in mine anger, and great hailstones in my fury to consume it. So will I break down the wall that ye have daubed with untempered mortar, and bring it down to the ground, so that the foundation thereof shall be discovered, and it shall fall, and ye shall be consumed in the midst thereof: and ye shall know that I am the Lord. Thus will I accomplish my wrath upon the wall, and upon them that have daubed it with untempered mortar, and will say unto you, The wall is no more, neither they that daubed it: to wit, the prophets of Israel which prophesy concerning Jerusalem, and which see visions of peace for her, and there is no peace, saith the Lord God.

The words before you present to us two things:

1. The sin of the false prophets, viz. seduction, "They have seduced my people;" and the manner how, by "saying, Peace;" by building and daubing a wall with untempered mortar, ver. 10.

11. God's proceedings with them, and their wall; he will send a storm, overthrow their wall, shame and confound them, in the following verses.

"Because, even because." Hebrew is, For that, even for that; the words are doubled, and so emphatical; the like you have in Lev. xxvi. 43, "Because, even because they despised my judgments."

"Seduced." Hebrew is הִטְאוּ have caused to err; Vulgate is, deciperint, have deceived; but, causing to err, sets out the sense of the word more fully. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 9, "Manasseh made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to err;" the false prophets seduced him, and he seduced them. Seduction is when men are led aside from the right way, and upon false suggestions are carried into a wrong way, believe lies, and practise answerably; Amos ii. 4, "Their lies caused them to err, after the which their fathers have walked."

"Saying, Peace." שָׁלוֹם from שָׁלַם entire, perfect, because it preserves things, places, persons entire; whereas war wastes and consumes all. Peace among the Hebrews notes freedom from war, tumults, a quiet condition of life, and all kind of outward happiness; therefore the Jews when they wish happiness to a man, they wish him peace. These prophets told them in Babylon that they should have liberty and quick return, and their hearts' desire in the land of Judea; they told those there, that they should not need to fear Nebuchadnezzar or any forces of his, they should live in safety, be fat and flourishing, wanting nothing.

"One built up a wall." The word for "one" is אֶחָד and he or himself; Junius, hic, he, or this man; Jerom will have this he, or one, to be meant of God, who by his law and prophets built them a wall; but had God built the wall, he would not have spoken against it, as here he doth. Some understand the people, but there is no sufficient ground for that. The Lord here is reproving the false prophets for seducing the people, not the people for seducing the prophets; it is unlikely therefore that the people should build a wall. By "one," or he, we conceive is meant some chief one amongst the false prophets. Zedekiah was a chief one among Ahab's false prophets: such was Hananiah, Jer. xxviii. and Shemaiah, Jer. xxix. 31, whom our prophet may intend; for this Shemaiah was in Babylon, he prophesied false things, sent letters to all the people at Jerusalem, and caused them to trust in a lie. Or "one" may be taken indefinitely.

"Built up a wall." This is a metaphorical expression borrowed from builders, who make walls about their houses, to secure and strengthen them from danger. Jerusalem had a wall about it, which was a great defence unto it. This wall was some false prophecy or doctrine given out unto the people, which caused them to be secure. Jeremiah had prophesied of the coming of Nebuchadnezzar, the destruction of the temple and city, seventy years' captivity, that so he might awaken this people, bring them to repentance, and prevent such judgments; but some one or other of the false prophets prophesied the contrary. Jer. xxix. 8, 9, they had some in Babylon who built a wall there, telling them that they should shortly return again to Jerusalem, and quieted the spirits of those in captivity; they had some at Jerusalem who built a wall there, and caused them to trust in vain things; ver. 21, there was Ahab the son of Kolaiah, and Zedekiah the son of Maaseiah, which prophesied a lie unto them in the name of the Lord: Either Nebuchadnezzar will not come, or if he do, you will have help from Egypt. Their false and lying prophecies, wherein the people trusted, was the wall they built; the prophecy of peace was the foundation of this wall, and the arguments they used, the brick to build it up. So that hereupon the people feared not any danger, humbled not themselves for their sins, but became secure and confident that all should be well; which made Jeremiah say, chap. vi. 14, "They have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace." Jeremiah had threatened judgments to them for their sins, wounded them by his prophecies, but they healed the wounds by crying, Peace, peace.

"And, lo, others daubed it." Other prophets, with their fair words and false pretences, justified what the former had said; when some chief false prophet had prophesied of peace, the rest, who were inferior, would second him. The word for "daubed" is סָמָה to cover, plaster over, or anoint; and so the Septuagint reads it, καὶ αὐτοὶ ἀλείψαν αὐτοὺς, and they anoint it. These false prophets were like masons and carpenters, who build deceitfully, and use their art and utmost skill to make such work seem goodly and beautiful.

“With untempered mortar.” Hebrew is תפל which Montanus renders insulso, with that which is unsavoury; Piscator, Polanus, Junius, inepto, with that which is foolish; the Vulgate, luto absque paleis, with mortar which hath no straw, chaff, hair, or binding thing mixed with it. You know there must be something mingled with loam, or lime, which men use in buildings, if they will build to purpose; but these built with untempered mortar; and this mortar was their flattering, false, weak reasons and pretences with which they used to keep the people in security. Ezek. xxii. 28, “Her prophets have daubed them with untempered mortar, seeing vanity, and divining lies unto them, saying, Thus saith the Lord God, when the Lord hath not spoken.” There was no truth, and so no strength in what they said: all was their own, and so lutum sine firmitate, loam without strength.

The word תפל may be rendered casura, with that which is about to fall, from נפל; and in ver. 11, it is said ייפל and it shall fall.

“An overflowing shower.” גשם ששית Great showers will try buildings, especially walls that are of untempered mortar. This overflowing shower was the Chaldean army: Isa. lix. 19, “The enemy shall come in like a flood;” Isa. viii. 7, 8, “The Lord bringeth up upon them the waters of the river, strong and many, even the king of Assyria, and all his glory: he shall overflow and go over, he shall reach even to the neck;” Jer. xlvii. 2, “Behold, waters rise up out of the north, and shall be an overflowing flood, and shall overflow the land, and all that is therein: the city, and them that dwell therein.”

“Great hailstones.” Hebrew is אבני אילניט stones of the hail. This word elgobis is only mentioned in this prophet, and but thrice, in this verse, ver. 13, and chap. xxxviii. 22, and it is great hail. The Septuagint is ἰσώσα λίθος πετροβόλος, stones to throw against a rock; and these may note out the chief men in the army, or the whole army, who should be as stones of great hail, to shake this mud wall of theirs.

The word is a compound word of אפ potens, and כבש crystallus. Job xxxviii. 18, “No mention shall be made of coral, or of pearls;” the word in Hebrew for pearls is כבש which Shindler interprets a crystal. Now, because hailstones are like unto crystal and pearl, therefore the word is here used, and el added to it, to show what strong hailstones God would send.

“A stormy wind shall rend it.” Hebrew is, רערת ventus turbidum. These words you have in chap. i. 4, rendered “a whirlwind,” where they were opened unto you: such an expression you have in Isa. xxv. 4, “The blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall.” By these metaphorical words he sets out the wrath of God by the Chaldean army, which should be as tempestuous rain, hail, and wind; and the Scripture is frequent in this metaphor when it would make known to us the indignation of the Lord; as you may observe, Isa. xxi. 1; xxix. 6; Jer. xxiii. 19; xxx. 19; Isa. xvii. 13.

“The foundations thereof shall be revealed.” There shall not a stone be left upon a stone of this building; the foundation of this wall built up and daubed with untempered mortar shall be discovered. God would detect the falsehood of their prophecies, the vanity of all their arguments, wiles, and ways, they used to seduce and secure this people, whatever they promised of help from Egypt, whatever they prophesied of the Chaldeans’ not coming, whatever they said of the people’s safety, of God’s mercy and favour and good will towards them, whatever they pretended of being sent from God, of speaking his words, of having his Spirit, &c. God would discover all their imposturings, and lay them open to the world, so that nothing shall be left them but disgrace.

Some make the temple and city to be the foundation. Because they had the holy city and holy place where God had recorded his name, therefore they cried, Peace, peace, flattered the people into a good condition, and surrounded them with a wall of security; therefore God would destroy both, and discover their foundation.

“They shall be consumed in the midst thereof.” You promise great matters to others, that they shall within few years return from Babylon, come and dwell safely in Jerusalem; but there is no safety in Jerusalem for yourselves, you shall be consumed in it, that are so confident of the safety of it. When a wall falls, and foundations are discovered, likely some do suffer by it, and so should these false prophets here.

Quest. In Jer. iv. 10, you have these words uttered by the prophet, “Ah, Lord God! surely thou hast greatly deceived this people and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall have peace; whereas the sword reacheth unto the soul.” If God promised them peace and deceived them, doth he not herein resemble the false prophets, and so lessen their sin?

Ans. 1. God did not promise them peace, but threatened severe judgments against them by Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, as you may see, Isa. xxix. 3—6; Jer. ix. 9—11; Ezek. v. 8—10.

2. Some make the prophets here to speak in the name of the people, and to personate them. They thought the peace which was promised them by the false prophets was from God, and therefore, finding the contrary, do charge God, as wicked men in their distresses are wont to do.

3. The words may be taken by way of interrogation, thus; Hast thou in deceiving deceived this people, hast thou promised them peace, and brought the sword upon them? Is this thy manner of proceeding with thy people? surely it cannot be, thou art faithful, and canst not deny thyself, 2 Tim. ii. 13; and Numb. xxiii. 19, “God is not a man that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?”

4. If God promised them peace, it was after their return from captivity, not at the present; and so, Jer. iii. 17, 18, you shall find it, “At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem; neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart. In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north,” &c.

5. The prophet might thus speak and say, God had deceived them, because he suffered the false prophets to propound their dreams, lies, divinations, visions, and things of their own hearts and spirits, unto the people, whereby they were greatly deceived. A man that suffers a thing to be done, in ordinary speech, is said to be the author of it: if a physician will not give physic to cure a sick man, if he die of his sickness, it is vulgarly said he is the cause of his death: if the owner will not preserve a ruinous house from falling, when it is fallen he is said to be the author of its fall; so here, God is said to deceive them, because he hindered not those false prophets from deceiving them. God saw how averse they were to truth, how they slighted and mocked his prophets, 2 Chron.

xxxvi. 16, and despised his words, therefore in just judgment he gave them up to believe lies, falsehoods, and deceivable things.

Obs. 1. That false prophets and teachers seduce the people, feeding them with vain hopes. They cried, Peace, peace, all things shall be prosperous comfortable, we shall have no wars in our gates, no famine or plague in our cities: they gave out pleasing prophecies, and so beguiled the unstable and credulous people, and swelled them with vast hopes. They hoped to see their brethren return from Babylon, to buy and sell, to marry and build, to grow great, and see many good days. The false prophets filled Ahab with great hopes of victory at Ramoth-gilead; "Go up, and prosper," said they, "for the Lord shall deliver it into the king's hand," 1 Kings xxii. 12. These prophets begat and maintained hopes in the hearts of the people, they made them trust in the temple, and corrupt worship which was in it; therefore Jer. vii. 4, Jeremiah sent to command them not to trust in lying words, "saying, The temple of the Lord," &c. Whatever wickedness they committed, yet if they appeared in the temple, and stood before the Lord, they said they were delivered, no threatenings of Jeremiah or others should take hold of them. They made them trust in their strong holds, and look to the hills and mountains about them; therefore, Jer. iii. 23, he tells them, that in vain they hoped for salvation from the hills, and from the multitude of mountains; they thought because Jerusalem was so well fortified with high hills and great mountains, that it could not be taken; Jer. xxi. 13, "Who shall come down against us; or who shall enter into our habitations?" and chap. xlix. 4, Jerusalem said, "Who shall come unto me?" Hananiah, a false prophet, told the people that within the space of two full years Nebuchadnezzar's yoke should be broken from off the neck of all nations, Jer. xxviii. 11: and ver. 15, Jeremiah saith, he made the people trust in a lie.

Obs. 2. It is a clear argument of a blind and false teacher, to speak things answerable to the humours and corruptions of men. This people could not endure Jeremiah prophesying truth, threatening judgment against them for their sins, see Jer. xxxviii. 2—5; they desired to hear of pleasing things. It was good tidings to them to hear that Nebuchadnezzar should not come against them, nor make them tributary unto him, therefore the prophets prophesied it; Jer. xxvii. 14, they told them they should not serve the king of Babylon. It was pleasing to them to hear of bringing back again the vessels of the temple; and, ver. 16, these prophets prophesied, saying, "Behold, the vessels of the Lord's house shall now shortly be brought again from Babylon." Wherein could they have humoured these people more? You have a notable place in Jer. xxiii. 16, "The prophets that prophesy unto you make you vain: they speak a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the Lord." Now that which comes not from God's holy mouth, but man's carnal heart, will be pleasing to other carnal hearts; and lest you may think I deceive you, observe ver. 17, "They say still unto them that despise me, The Lord hath said, Ye shall have peace; and they say unto every one that walketh after the imagination of his own heart, No evil shall come upon you." What is more pleasing to man, than to have his own mind, do his own will, walk after the imaginations of his own heart? and what softer words more suitable to him can be said, than no evil shall come upon him? False prophets speak verba lactis, milky, oily words, such as please men, and battle their humours, and so have a great advantage with men, who love to be humoured; but true prophets speak verba veritatis, words of truth, which have salt and fire in them, and so cross, fret, provoke men's lusts, and stir up their hatred against them: and as the other, with their lies and flatteries, find favour with men, so these, for their truths, with God, who loves truth. Paul durst not preach to please men, but Christ, Gal. i. 10. John would not please Herod.

Obs. 3. The prophecies and doctrines of false teachers seem unto them, and those who cleave to them, to have much strength. They "built up a wall;" walls are things of strength, be they earth, timber, or stone walls. They prophesied peace, that Nebuchadnezzar should not come against them, or depart, if he came, without prejudice to them; they said that the vessels and people should speedily return from Babylon, &c.; these doctrines of theirs were as walls unto them of strength and defence. Solomon tells us, that a rich man's riches are a high wall in his own conceit, Prov. xviii. 11; and so the opinions and tenets of false teachers are a high wall in their own conceits; they think the people are strengthened and secured by them. There are scarcely any opinions abroad, be they never so erroneous, heretical, blasphemous, tending to licentiousness, but the authors of them judge them to have strength in them, and look upon them as walls to advantage the people; and those who are deceived by them, think the like of them.

Obs. 4. That false prophets and teachers do concur and mutually endeavour to countenance and strengthen each other's doctrines and tenets. "One built up a wall, and, lo, others daubed it." The true prophets oft prophesied the same things, and so strengthened the hands each of other; and so did the false prophets, they improved their art and parts to strengthen one another: they brought their visions, divinations, dreams, lies, and whatever they had, to plaster and daub up this wall; they told them of God's mercy, covenant, promise to dwell at Jerusalem for ever, how greatly God was delighted with that place, that they were a holy people, had the law, ordinances, sacrifices, which none else in the world had, that God had no church but them, and therefore unlikely that ever he would destroy them, that his heart was towards them; thus they agreed all in falsehood, and strengthened themselves and the people in wickedness. So all the false prophets concurred in deceiving Ahab; Zedekiah, the chief, makes horns, and saith, "With these shalt thou push the Syrians, until thou have consumed them."

Obs. 5. Whatever prophets give out of their own unto the people, it is weak, unsolid, and unserviceable. These prophets prophesied of their own heads, out of their own spirits, they had nothing from God; and what was all, but untempered mortar, a thing unsavoury and foolish? did any of their visions, divinations, or prophecies, strengthen the hearts or hands of this people? were they not altogether seduced by them? They filled them with vain hopes, flattered them in their sinful ways, prophesied of peace and plenty, and so healed the hurt of God's people slightly; they skinned it over with fair words, but did not search it to the bottom, and Jer. viii. 11, lance it with sound and wholesome truths; they brought of their own, not of the Lord's, and therefore it was unserviceable; they brought lies, Jer. xxvii. 10; false dreams, chap. xxiii. 32; the deceit of their own hearts, ver. 26; false visions, divinations, and things of nought, chap. xiv. 14. Can lies, dreams, deceits, false, and things of nought, strengthen or build up? The truths and doctrines of God are solid, savoury, strengthening, well tempered mortar; they are tempered with the glory, wisdom, mercy, and love of God, with the blood of Christ, with the power of the Spirit, and they will build up a wall, be strength unto us; Zech. i. 13, his words are good and comfortable; Micah ii. 7, they do good; Psal. xci. 4, his truth is a shield and buckler; it is sure and will not deceive, 2 Pet. i. 19; the doctrines of the apostles confirmed the brethren and the churches, Acts xiv. 22; xv. 32. The doctrines and opinions of men are windy deceitful things, and hinder growth and strength, Eph. iv. 14, but the truths of God cause growth in all things, and so strengthen, making us firm as walls. What men bring of their own, are πλάσται λόγια, feigned words, untempered mortar, but what they have from God are wholesome words and doctrines, "according to godliness," 1 Tim. vi. 3.

Obs. 6. Seducing of people by false, flattering, unsound doctrines doth greatly provoke God. "Because, even because they have seduced my people, saying, Peace; and one built," &c. Prophets' work is to make known truth, and to bring men out of their by and base ways into the way of truth; but if they turn men out of that way into the ways of error, they work, but their work is not pleasing unto God, it exasperates his Spirit against them, and no marvel they undo souls, which are precious things. James v. 20, he that converts a sinner from the error of his way saves a soul from death, and hides a multitude of sins, that would appear by his going on in an erroneous way. If, on the contrary, a man seduce a man from the truth, and lead him into ways of error, he destroys a soul, discovers and multiplies sin; and so did these false prophets, and so do all false teachers. Peter tells you of false teachers, 2 Epist. ii. 1, who bring in damnable heresies, and draw away many thereby. And is that all? no, they bring upon themselves swift destruction, they so provoke God by their corrupt and damnable doctrines, that he intends and hastens their destruction; and let the seduced look to it lest destruction be their portion: Isa. ix. 16, "The leaders of this people cause them to err; and they that are led of them are destroyed."

Obs. 7. Whatsoever works men work, God will try them. If the prophets build walls, daub with untempered mortar, preach visions of their own heads, &c.; God will prove their walls, what strength is in them, examine their mortar, whether tempered or not, whether aught of God be in it, or all be human: ver. 11, "There shall be an overflowing shower; great hailstones, and a stormy wind." When men build, the wind and weather tries their buildings; the prophets here go under the notion of builders, and they had made their building, and God would try it. Nebuchadnezzar, with all his forces, should come like an overflowing shower, great strong hailstones, a stormy wind, and if their wall could stand then, and their mortar endure, it would be evident that they were wise builders, had made a firm wall. 1 Cor. iii. 13, "Every man's work shall be made manifest; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is." The work here is interpreted of doctrines and opinions, taught and held; they shall be tried by fire, either of affliction or of the Spirit, the word of God.

Obs. 8. God hath variety of ways and means to try men's works, he hath "showers, hailstones, winds."

Obs. 9. It is impossible for false prophets to avoid the judgments of God, they and their works must suffer. See what is said in ver. 15, 16, "I will accomplish my wrath upon the wall, and upon them that have daubed it; to wit, the prophets of Israel." God's judgments against them are sudden, irresistible, and unavoidable, they are likened to showers, hailstones, and stormy winds, which come suddenly, assault strongly, and cannot be avoided; and God saith, in ver. 13, he will rend their wall, and work in anger and fury: if he will rend, who can preserve? if he will tear in pieces, who shall deliver? Psal. l. 22.

Obs. 10. Whatever doctrines, opinions, tenets, false teachers and prophets do deliver, to scatter among the people, shall come to nought. They "built a wall, daubed it with untempered mortar;" but, ver. 11, "Say unto them, It shall fall." God had determined the ruin of this wall, of all the false prophecies they had delivered: the doctrines of men are windy, unstable, and vanishing things. Acts v. 36—38, Gamaliel tells of one Theudas, who boasted that he was somebody, a prophet, and vented his own opinions amongst them, and drew four hundred men after him; and this false prophet, with his prophecies and followers, were scattered, ruined, and brought to nought. After him Judas of Galilee drew away much people with his persuasions and pretences, and he perished, and those who obeyed him were dispersed. And then presents to the council where he was speaking the apostles and their doctrine, saying, "Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought." You have seen the end of Theudas and Judas, of their counsels, opinions, and works; they being from men, are fallen with the men, but if they had been of God, they would have stood; as he speaks of the apostle's doctrine, "if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it." Men may venture who build upon divine truths, they have a divine arm to support them, but human opinions, doctrines, if we confide in, we shall greatly be deceived, they and we shall fall together. Babylon, you know, was supported by false doctrines, false worship, false government, false miracles, and lying wonders, as you may observe in the Revelation; chap. xviii. 2, you hear, "Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen;" and chap. xix. 20, "The beast was taken, and with him the false prophet;" that is, the pope and his clergy: they desired and endeavoured the standing of their kingdom, but being upon a false foundation, it fell. Psa. cxii. 10, "The desire of the wicked shall perish;" not only their desires, but doctrines, prophecies, endeavours, shall perish.

Obs. 11. False prophets and teachers shall be discovered, and they and their worship exposed to laughter and scorn. "When the wall is fallen, shall it not be said unto you, where is the daubing wherewith ye have daubed it?" you have made a goodly wall, such a one as could not endure a shower; ye are impostors, have deceived us and others; thus should they be detected and derided. There were many false prophets in Ahab's days, they were great with Jezebel and Ahab, and made use of their power to cut off the true prophets; but Elijah calls them forth to a sacrifice, some eight hundred and fifty of them, where they were discovered to be liars, seducers, and laughed to scorn before all the people. Those prophets that bade Ahab go up to Ramoth-gilead and prosper, 2 Chron. xviii. 11, how ashamed were they when Ahab was slain, and the soldiers returned with loss of their king and the day! What cause had these prophets to blush, when God brought Nebuchadnezzar to besiege the city, when the walls were broken down, and they discovered to be false prophets, and their foundation, with which they upheld the hope of this people, to be lies, flatteries, and false divinations!

Ver. 17—23. Likewise, thou son of man, set thy face against the daughters of thy people, which prophesy out of their own heart; and prophesy thou against them, and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Woe to the women that sew pillows to all armholes, and make kerchiefs upon the head of every stature to hunt souls! Will ye hunt the souls of my people, and will ye save the souls alive that come unto you? And will ye pollute me among my people for handfuls of barley and for pieces of bread, to slay the souls that should not die, and to save the souls alive that should not live, by your lying to my people that hear your lies? Wherefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against your pillows, wherewith ye there hunt the souls to make them fly, and I will tear them from your arms, and will let the souls go, even the souls that ye hunt to make them fly. Your kerchiefs also will I tear, and deliver my people out of your hand, and they shall be no more in your hand to be hunted; and ye shall know that I am the Lord. Because with lies ye have made the heart of the righteous sad, whom I have not made sad; and strengthened the hands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wicked way, by promising him life: therefore ye shall see no more vanity, nor divine divinations: for I will deliver my people out of your hand: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

We are now come to the second part of the chapter, which is a prophecy against women prophetesses; and here, as before, you have their judgments, and the sins laid down causing those judgments.

The judgments are in verses 17, 18, 20, 21, 23; the sins moving God to be against them, and to proceed so with them, are in verses 17, 18, 19, 22, 23; the judgments and sins are intermingled in the several verses.

In Israel had been some true prophetesses, as Deborah and Huldah; now there were many false prophetesses, and the prophet is commanded to turn his speech against them.

“Set thy face against.” Once before you had this phrase, chap. iv. 3, where the prophet was to set his face against Jerusalem; here it is against the women; be thou an adversary unto them, and prophesy against them. Enemies, when they are to encounter each other, they set their faces one against another; and so here, when the prophet should denounce judgment against them for their lying prophecies, he was as an adversary to them: and to “set the face,” in Scripture sense, against any one, is to proclaim war against them. The Hebrew is, thy faces; speak boldly, freely, and be severe against them in thy prophesying.

“The daughters of thy people.” Some would understand by these women, men prophets, who were weak and womanish, without courage, constancy, and prudence; but we have no cause to take the words in that sense. Our prophet had spoken of men prophets before, and now is directed of God to another distinct subject, and that is, the women prophets, who are called daughters of his people; this cannot belong unto the men.

“Which prophesy out of their own heart.” As the false prophets did, ver. 2: that is, of their own accord, and their own imaginations. There were women of old who did prophesy without blame, it was lawful for them. Miriam was a prophetess, Exod. xv. 20, and went before the people, Micah

vi. 4; so Huldah, 2 Kings xxii. 14; Anna also was a prophetess, Luke ii. 36; and the promise of the spirit of prophecy was to women as well as men; Acts ii. 17, “I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy;” and Philip the evangelist had four daughters who did prophesy, Acts xxi. 8, 9, and, doubtless, the church and people of God received much good by their prophesying: but these were false prophetesses, which did deceive the people, and came not behind the false prophets in doing mischief. It is probable they exceeded men, for women, by reason of the tenderness of their nature, sweetness of their voices, respect amongst men, have the advantage to insinuate their opinions, and persuade more powerfully, especially when they have a repute for holiness, and are esteemed prophetic, as these were.

“Prophesy thou against them.” They arrogated to themselves the call and authority of God, when there was no such thing; and for women to pretend this that they might deceive the people, was grievous; therefore Ezekiel is commanded to prophesy against them.

One thing here especially is observable, that the Lord calls the people not his, but the prophet’s, “Set thy face against the daughters of thy people.” When some heinous thing was committed dishonourable to God, reproachful to the people, and the Lord would object it against them, then the Lord would not own them for his people that did such things, that they might be convinced of the greatness of the evil they had done, which made them unworthy to be the people or children of the Lord any longer: Exod. xxxii. 7, 8, when the people corrupted themselves in making a calf and worshipping it, then God calls them Moses’s people, “Get thee down, for thy people,” &c.; hence that in Dent. xxxii. 5, “They have corrupted themselves, their spot is not the spot of his children.”

“Woe to the women that sew pillows,” &c. Here is a general judgment denounced against those women: “Woe,” which includes evils of all sorts, and special sins set down:

1. Sewing of pillows to all armholes.

2. Making kerchiefs upon the head of every stature, which are typical actions; and then the end of these, hunting of souls.

“Sewing of pillows.” שֵׂמוּת כַּסְתֵּי Septuagint is σπράπτοιόσεις προς κεφάλαια, sewing things for the head; this is an obscure phrase. Pillows are soft things, filled with feathers, for the head to repose upon; some thereby understand, an easy and pleasurable life; others think these prophetic women were sorceresses, and did use these pillows and kerchiefs in their enchantments; they appointed those who consulted with them to have these on them, or about them, and hereby they were made fit to receive their oracles or prophecies; as those who went to the oracle in the den of Tryphonius, they had strange vestures and rites, they were clad with a linen coat, that was girt to them with a fillet, or hairlace, and they had slippers tied to their feet peculiar to that place; these things were to procure the great reverence to their religion, oracles, and prophecies.

The word is from כָּסָה to cover, hide, and the nouns derived thence signify operimentum, velamen, praetextum, quicquid obtenditur, ut aliquid abscondas vel dissimules; hence Pradus interprets the word here, checathoth, rete, quod obtendunt aucupes ad capiendas aves.

We must take the words in a metaphorical sense. A man that lies upon the hard ground, among stones or thorns, will sleep little, and very uneasily, unquietly; but a man that hath soft pillows to lie upon, he sleeps much, with great ease and quiet, he hath nothing to trouble or interrupt his sleep: when men are full of fears, cares, distractions, they sleep among stones and thorns. These prophetesses by their prophecies took away those fears, cares, and distractions, which were caused in the hearts of the people by the true prophets, who told them of Nebuchadnezzar's coming, and threatened the ruin of city and temple, and their going into captivity; they flattered them, and fed them with fair words, they promised them peace, safety, liberty, &c.; and so put pillows under their heads and armholes, and strengthened them in their security.

"Make kerchiefs upon the head," &c. המסמכת Veils wherewith women did cover their faces. Her by is meant the flatteries and false prophecies wher by they veiled and covered up the people in security, that they might sleep securely, and not be troubled with any apprehensions of danger: though they sinned grievously, they persuaded them the Lord was not angry with them, and they fitted their words and prophecies to the condition of every one. They had that which fitted the humours of the ancient, of the middle age, of youth; they, through their craft and lying prophecies, applied themselves to the head of every stature, and so pleased all, and lulled them in a general security. Junius thinks these kerchiefs were triumphales pilei, triumphal caps, made up into the form of crowns of hats, and set upon the heads of the statues, thereby presaging they should have not only safety from, but victory over, their enemies, which they learned from the practice of Egyptians and Babylonians. And to this purpose is Deodate, who expounds veils of the mourning and calamity of others. Now, if the Jews had been conquerors of the Babylonians, the Babylonians had had cause of covering their faces, and mourning for their loss.

"To hunt souls." לצוד which the Septuagint renders thus, εωσιφειν ψυχας, to pervert souls: Vulgate, ad capiendas animas; those that hunt, set their nets, and then drive what is hunted into their nets, and so make a prey of it. The like do these, the prophets, they seduce souls, that is, men and women, with a false hope of peace and good days, and so the evil day comes upon them unthought of, and they are made a prey.

"Will you hunt the souls of my people?" By this interrogation the Lord manifests his displeasure. They thought it was free for them to deceive the people with their pillows and kerchiefs, with their flattering words, false promises, and to make gain of them; but the Lord would not let things pass so. Will you hunt their souls, spoil and prey upon them? you shall be hunted yourselves, and taken in your lying prophecies.

"Will you save the souls alive, that come unto you?" The Hebrew, Will you make alive souls unto you? These words may refer either to the false prophetesses, or to others; if to the false prophetesses, the sense is this, Will you delude my people with vain hopes, with promises of life and happy days, that you may get from them meat and drink, that so you may quicken and keep alive your own souls? what! will you destroy their souls with your errors, to feed your own with bread? And so Piscator reads the words, Do you hunt the souls of my people? U animas vobis vivas conservetis. If to others, the sense is thus; You hunt the souls of the people, you ensnare them with your lies, divinations, and feigned visions, and will ye save them alive that come to you, and believe what you say? No, while you persuade them they shall live, you take away their life from them; the very taking of them with your falsehoods is their death; you serve them as hunters their game, when it is taken, they kill it.

"And will ye pollute me among my people?" &c. This verse contains several sins also of these wicked prophetesses.

1. Their pollution of God's name.
2. Their covetousness, "Handfuls of barley, and pieces of bread."
3. Their cruelty, slaying of souls.
4. Their partiality; they slew those which should have lived, and spared those which should have died.

Then the manner how all these things were done, by their lies.

"Will ye pollute me," &c. They pretended they were sent and authorized of God to prophesy, that they had the Spirit of God, and were true prophetesses, that whatever they delivered should come to pass; they crossed the true prophets, they strengthened the people in their sinful practices, they made prophecy contemptible, and so profaned the name of the Lord, caused many to fall to atheism and apostasy. This God would not bear at their hands, therefore saith, "Will ye."

"For handfuls of barley and pieces of bread." This is a kind of proverbial speech, setting out the meanness of that work which is so cheap. Prophecy with them was at a vile and low price; if any brought never so mean a reward, as a little barley in his hand, or a crust of bread with him, to these deluding prophetesses, presently they had a pleasing answer. Had these women set their lying prophecies at the highest rate, it had not been warrantable to have profaned God's glorious name for great rewards, but for such petty gain to expose his name to scorn was extremely wicked.

"To slay the souls that should not die," &c. By "souls" you must understand persons; for souls are not to be slain, Matt. x. 28. They prophesied against the godly that they should die, and so deprived them of their peace, comfort, and apprehensions they had of God's favour; filled them with fears, griefs, and sad thoughts, if they hearkened to Jeremiah, and submitted to Nebuchadnezzar. Or thus, They stirred up the people against them who were godly, and would not adhere to them, believing their prophecies, and provoked the magistrates to restrain them, yea to cut them off, and so slew them before their time. They should have lived longer by the course of nature, had not these blood-thirsty prophetesses hastened their death.

"To save the souls alive that should not live." They promised life, peace, happiness, to those they should have threatened war, misery, death. Zedekiah, and many with him, had broken the oath made with Nebuchadnezzar to be tributaries to him, and so deserved death upon that ground; others oppressed, filled the land with bloody crimes, were notoriously idolatrous, and not worthy to live; yet these were justified, pleaded for, and protected against the power of any that would have had justice executed.

It is not against the judgment of some learned ones to understand death and life here, of eternal death and life. These women teachers threatened the righteous with eternal death, shut heaven upon them, and opened hell wide enough upon them, and what lay in them slew their souls; and for the others, they promised heaven and all joys of it to them, and so saved them alive they should not.

Obs. 1. That is an old practice of Satan, to trouble the church, as with false prophets, so with false prophetesses. God raised up women prophets to honour that sex, and to help his people; and the devil raises up women to spread lies, to deceive and damnify the people, and to gain by that sex the more to his kingdom. Satan imitates God; if he will have he or she prophets, the like will he have. In the church of Thyatira was a Jezebel, which called herself a prophetess, to teach and seduce the servants of Christ to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to idols, Rev. ii. 20. Jezebel disturbed Israel, opposed and sought the death of the true prophets, maintained idolatry; so did this other Jezebel, &c. Neh. vi. 14, there is mention of one Noadiah, a prophetess; she with other false prophets prophesied against the building of the temple, encouraged Sanballat, Tobias, and others, to hinder it, laboured to possess Nehemiah and the builders with fear. Such there have been in former days, and such will be, women that take upon them to teach and deceive unwary people; such were Prisca and Maximilla, the companions of Montanus the heretic; such are the Jesuitesses.

Obs. 2. It is the character of false teachers of what kind soever, women or men, to flatter, soothe, insinuate, and speak pleasing things. The false prophets cried "Peace," &c.; these false prophetesses "sew pillows to all armbolks," &c.; yea, their scope is to please all sorts, they observe the humours of men, and so apply themselves to please answerably; Isa. xxx. 10, this was the disposition of the people, "Prophesy not unto us right things; speak unto us smooth things, prophesy deceits;" 2 Tim. iv. 3, people would have teachers after their own lusts.

Obs. 3. False prophecies, flattering and erroneous doctrines, are the snares and nets with which false teachers do hunt souls. Prov. vi. 26, an adulteress hunts for the precious life, and these for the precious souls. Eph. iv. 14, "They lie in wait to deceive." Rev. xx. 8, it is the devil's work "to deceive the nations in the four quarters of the earth."

Obs. 4. Whatever false teachers promise, they cannot perform. "Will ye save alive the souls that come unto you?" will you keep off war, plague, famine, when Nebuchadnezzar shall come about the walls? &c.

Obs. 5. False teachers profane God's name, and he takes it very ill at their hands. "Will ye pollute me among my people?" to make God the author of their dreams, lies, &c.; to pretend they are sent of him, and cause his people to conceive he deludes them, and tells them contraries, one thing by Jeremiah, other things by them, and that for such poor things as barley?

Obs. 6. Covetousness, and baseness of spirit, make merchandise of God's name, truth, and the souls of persons.

Micah iii. 5, "He that putteth not into their mouths," the prophets' he means, "they even prepare war against him." Judas sold Christ, &c. A woman to prostitute her chastity for handfuls of barley is base, much more to serve souls so; 2 Pet. ii. 3, "With feigned words make merchandise of you."

Obs. 7. That they kill whom God would not have kill'd, and spare those whom God would not have spared, they curse whom God blesses, and bless whom God curses.

In ver. 20, 21, 23, he sets down God's proceeding with these false prophetesses; he will be against them, tear their pillows and kerchiefs, deliver his people out of their hands, and destroy them and their divinations.

"To make them flee." לפניהם Piscator hath it, in floribus hortis, flower-gardens: they were wont to sacrifice in gardens, Isa. i. 29; lxx. 3; lxxi. 17. These prophetesses, with their flatteries, drew in young maids, to prophesy smooth and pleasing things, and they drew in the men, and so great lewd-ness and filthiness was amongst them, and they were charmed with their divinations. We may take it thus: They hunted them, they used seducing ways by their prophecies, promises, and flatteries, to make them flee from the truth, and true prophets, to take them off from Jeremiah and Ezekiel, and so should be like birds that fly from bough to bough, or beasts that run from place to place, and abide no where.

"I will let the souls go, even the souls that ye hunt." The meaning is, I will free them from the delusion of their false prophecies, they shall go captive into Babylon, and be no longer in their hands.

"With lies ye have made the heart of the righteous sad." The Hebrew is, to wear, to make contrite; the Septuagint, Ye have perverted the hearts of the righteous. There were some among them who hearkened to the true prophets, and it was in their hearts to yield to the Chaldeans, as Jeremiah counselled; but when they heard the false prophets and prophetesses encouraging the people not to fear Nebuchadnezzar, but promised safety to them that should stay in the city, they were troubled, and knew not what to do; and by this means also they "strengthened the hands of the wicked," who gave heed to their lying prophecies, and slighted whatever Jeremiah said.

"You shall see no more vanity, nor divine divinations." There was no weight, no truth, in what they said, whoever received their prophecies were deceived; the time was approaching which would discover the vanity of their visions, and cut them off from seeing any more, for they should perish.

Obs. 1. The Lord is against false prophetesses, and will destroy their prophecies, ceremonies they use, and them too. "Behold, I am against your pillows, I will tear them from your arms, and the kerchiefs from your heads, and ye shall see no more vanity, nor divine divinations." God will not let such persons and practices go unpunished as intrude into the prophetic office, abuse his name, authority, truth, and people.

Obs. 2. Women teachers and men teachers also are very subtle to seduce the people. They had their pillows and kerchiefs, their flatteries, pleasing prophecies and promises, to keep them in security, to hunt them into the gardens, to commit spiritual and corporal whoredom. Calvin judges that they pretended altas speculationes, some transcendent matters, thereby to excite the expectations of the people, who were weary of Jeremiah's prophecy, being of a lower strain than Isaiah's and some others, and were tainted with curiosity and itching ears; they were not content with wholesome and plain doctrine, but would be wise beyond sobriety, and God suffered subtle and false teachers to hunt and snare them. Sometimes fowls are snared in flying, where no danger is suspected; and these were deluded by those speculations which were given out by false prophetesses. How were the popish spirits taken with the tenet of Dionysius touching the heavenly hierarchy! so with the Jesuits' Dalilah, de media scientia: and at this day are not multitudes taken with speculations and novelties, do they not despise wholesome doctrine, and listen to erroneous teachers, both men and women?

Obs. 3. God's people may be taken with some errors of the times, and of false teachers. "I will deliver my people out of their hand, and they shall be no more in their hand." They were then in their hands, they had hunted them into their nets, and caught them with their enticing prophecies, and brought them over to be of their mind. Jezebel did seduce the servants of Christ, Rev. ii. 20; you know

Peter and Barnabas were drawn into an error, Gal. ii. 12—14; and Christ hath told you, Matt. xxiv. 11, that many "false prophets shall arise, and deceive many;" they rise from the earth, or out of the bottomless pit, and do much hurt with their smoky doctrines; they darken the heavens, so that the saints mistake their way. There were those who constrained the Galatians to be circumcised, chap. vi. 12; and Acts xx. 30, "Of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." The old lying prophet deceived and drew the young prophet into a snare, which cost him his life, a lion devoured him, 1 Kings xiii. I fear there are young prophets drawn away into dangerous errors, and many others about this city, whom I hope God will keep from the roaring lion, and deliver in due time from the error of their ways. Let the counsel of Solomon to his son, Prov. xix. 27, be welcome to you, "Cease to hear the instruction that causeth to err from the words of knowledge;" and hearken to Peter, 2 Epist. iii. 17, 18, "Seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness. But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

Obs. 4. The doctrines of false teachers do prejudice both the godly and the wicked, they sadden the hearts of those who should not be made sad, and they strengthen the hands of the wicked which should be weakened. When false teachers give out their lies, corrupt truths, and opinions, they weaken the authority of the true prophets' doctrine, they fill the godly with fears, scruples, grief, and discouragement. What saddening doctrines are among the papists, from their false teachers; as that of auricular confession, all sins must be confessed to a priest; justification by works, satisfaction, purgatory, transubstantiation, that of the death of infants before baptism, falling away from grace, keeping of the law, traditions, &c. These, with others, are doctrines which wound the hearts of the godly, and much perplex them. And are there not as saddening and heart-perplexing doctrines among us? viz. denial of the sacred Trinity, Christ's divine nature, authority of the holy Scripture; that God is the Author, Creator, and Inventor of all sin; that it is the same spirit which is in the godly and the wicked; that there is no election, but a universal redemption; that God sees no sin in his people; that the law is of no use to believers; that Christ himself may sin as well as a child of God; that all days are alike, the Lord's day having no pre-eminence; that women may preach; that there is no power or rule in the church, but all in the civil magistrate: as these opinions sadden the hearts of the godly, so they strengthen the hands of those who are wicked, they go on in their ways, and never think of returning to the Lord. False teachers, which speak pleasing things, undo the souls of sinners; they promise life when they should threaten death, open to them their danger, show them the evil of their ways, and use the strongest arguments they can to awaken and reduce them; Jer. xxiii. 22, had they "caused my people to hear my words, then they should have turned them from their evil way, and from the evil of their doings."

Obs. 5. God hath his times to deliver his people from the flattery, tyranny, and policy of false teachers. "I will deliver them out of your hand." There was a day when the people were delivered from the tyranny and flattery of Ahab's false prophets, 1 Kings xviii; and, Rev. xix. 20, the beast with the false prophet, &c. were thrown into the lake.

CHAPTER XIV.

Ver. 1—5. Then came certain of the elders of Israel unto me, and sat before me, And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, these men have set up their idols in their heart, and put the stumblingblock of their iniquity before their face: should I be enquired of at all by them? Therefore speak unto them, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Every man of the house of Israel that setteth up his idols in his heart, and putteth the stumblingblock of his iniquity before his face, and cometh to the prophet, I the Lord will answer him that cometh according to the multitude of his idols; that I may take the house of Israel in their own heart, because they are all estranged from me through their idols.

IN chap. xii. our prophet treated of the king and his nobles, their sins and judgments; in chap. xiii. of false prophets and prophetesses, and how the Lord would punish them; here of the elders and body of the people, and what sore plagues should befall them. There be three parts of this chapter:

I. A conference of God with hypocritical elders, and false prophets, ver. 1—12.

II. A threatening of sore judgments against a sinning land, ver. 12—22.

III. A respiting of some from those judgments, ver. 22, to the end.

In the first part, viz. that of it which concerns the elders, you have,

1. The occasion of it, that is, the coming of these elders to the prophet, ver. 1.

2. God's complaint of them, ver. 3.

3. A charge to the prophet what answer to give unto these men, ver. 3—8.

"Then came certain of the elders of Israel." After Ezekiel had declared the mind of God against Zedekiah, the princes, the false prophets and prophetesses, who drew many to sinful practices, and especially to trust in vain divinations, some of the elders of Israel thought in themselves to go to Ezekiel, and hear what he would say: He hath cried down all other prophets, and thinks himself the only true prophet; come, let us go to his house, and hearken what he will prophesy unto us.

"Elders of Israel." These men are called elders, not only because they were aged, but because they were in some place of authority, which required men grave in age and counsel: Jer. xxvi. 17, "Then rose up certain of the elders of the land, and spake to all the assembly of the people:" these were such elders. It is questioned whether these elders were elders of those in Babylon, or of those in Jerusalem; the most interpreters agree that they were of the elders of Judah in Babylon: chap. viii. 1, it is said, the elders of Judah sat before the prophet, and Jer. xxix. 1, tells you that there were elders carried away captive. But the judicious and learned Junius is of another mind, who thinks these elders were ambassadors sent from Zedekiah into Babylon to treat of state affairs between him and Nebuchadnezzar; as Jer. li. 59, Seraiah went with Zedekiah into Babylon in the fourth year of his reign. It is no where extant that Zedekiah ever went into Babylon till he was carried thither, and that was in the eleventh year. The meaning, then, of the words is, he went in the behalf of Zedekiah, so it is in the margin, and being a quiet prince, endeavoured to keep a peaceable correspondence between Zedekiah and Nebuchadnezzar. So, in Jer. xxix. 3, Elasah and Gemariah were sent by Zedekiah unto Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon. It is ordinary for kings to send ambassadors to other states, and especially when a part of their people live in that state, as here; and when they send, it is some, or divers, of the elders and nobles that are sent; and of these, certain came to the prophet. It is likely some of those who were formerly brought hither, might accompany them, and the judgments spoken of in the chapter concerned those who belonged to Judea rather than those captives in Babylon.

“Sat before me.” To converse with the prophet about the great affairs of the king and kingdom. They were in straits, full of doubts and fears, and came to feel the prophet, to inquire of him what would be the event of things; it is like they had no good tidings from Nebuchadnezzar, they would try what was to be had from God: or thus, They had heard what the false prophets and prophetesses had said, how they concurred in their prophecies, and now they would try Ezekiel, whether he prophesied the same, or differing things; and so came not to him with an upright mind, but fallaciously. If what he had said had liked them, then they would have affirmed he was of the same judgment the false prophets were; if otherwise, that he was a lying and false prophet, that he and Jeremiah were singular, dissenting in their prophecies from all the other prophets.

Obs. 1. When the true prophets detect and disparage those who are false, then those who adhere to them are offended at it, and seek advantages against them. As here, the elders of Israel came to Ezekiel; they could not bear it that he had said their prophets were foolish, followed their own spirits, played the foxes, were liars, seducers, daubed with untempered mortar, that they and their prophecies should perish, for the Lord was against them. Great persons will take part with false prophets, and appear for them, and seek to entrap those who have discovered them. When Micajah discovered the false prophets, 1 Kings xxii. 22, 23, then Ahab appeared for them, and commands Micajah to be imprisoned, fed with bread and water of affliction, ver. 25, 27.

Obs. 2. Many profess love to the true prophets, and to religion, yet are false-hearted to both. These elders of Israel came to the prophet, sat before him, pretended to learn and obey, but their intentions looked another way. Not all who seem religious, frequent the solemn assemblies, and hear the word from the mouths of the prophets, are truly godly: Ezek. xxxiii. 31, 32, saith God of the people, “They sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them; for with their mouth they show much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness. And, lo, thou art unto them as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument: for they hear thy words, but they do them not.” This people were as glad to hear Ezekiel prophesy, as men to hear music and songs, at marriages or feasts, and yet their hearts were unsound: see Isa. xxix. 13; lviii. 2—5; Jer. vii. 9—11, where you may find their professions were pious, but their spirits and practices impious. Profession is easy in all sorts, elders, and elders of Israel, can do that, but the practice of what men profess is difficult; men rest in forms of godliness, and deny the power. 2 Tim. iii. 5.

Or, ver. 2, Obs. That much of the Scripture hath been given out upon sinful occasions. When these elders came to the prophet, the word of the Lord came unto him, and he gave it out to them and us. Men’s sins have opened the windows of heaven for much divine light to shine into the world; the prophecy of Haggai was occasioned by the neglect to build God’s house, as you may read in chap. i. 2—4, &c.; Nineveh’s sin drew out the prophecy of Jonah, chap. i. 1, 2; David’s murder and adultery were occasions of some, if not of all, the penitential psalms; the Levite cutting his concubine, who was forced to death, into twelve pieces, and sending her into all the coast of Israel, occasioned some part of the book of Judges to be written; the Gospel of John, it is conceived by the learned, was written on the occasion of Cerinthus, Elion, and some others, who did deny the divine nature of Christ, therefore in the beginning, viz. chap. i. he speaks much of his Godhead, sonship, and eternal generation; it was the disorders, divisions, scandals, and corruptions, which set Paul on work to write his two epistles to the Corinthians, as you may observe throughout the epistle; the doctrine of false teachers amongst the Galatians gave birth to that epistle, chap. i. 6, and in several parts of the epistle it clearly appears; the danger of the Jews forsaking their professing of christianity, and revolting to mosaical ceremonies, opened the doors for the epistle to the Hebrews to enter into the world; the faultiness of the angels in the churches, made way for the several epistles to be written and sent unto them.

Ver. 3. “Son of man, these men have set up their idols in their heart,” &c. Here is,

1. God’s complaint of them; and that,

1. Of their hypocrisy.

2. Of their idolatry; which is the argument he proves their hypocrisy by. Thus, those that “set up idols in their heart, and put the stumbling-block of their iniquity before their face,” and come to inquire of me, they deal hypocritically with me; but these men do so.

11. God’s indignation against them for these sins; “Should I be inquired of at all by them?”

“Have set up their idols in their heart.” The Hebrew is, Have made their idols to ascend upon their heart; the Septuagint is, They have put their thoughts upon their hearts; Castalio, Their dung-hill gods are for a delight to these men. The word for idols means that which defiles, and which is odious; so idols are offensive unto God: this word you had before, chap. viii. 18, where it was opened unto you. If one should now, for the sense of these words, tell you they had the pictures of their idols at their hearts, it may be you would not altogether condemn it, for it suits with the Hebrew, They made their idols to ascend upon their hearts; and such a practice the Scripture seems to hold forth; Hos. ii. 2. “Let her put away her adulteries from between her breasts:” that is, such pictures she had of her idols hanging at her breast: so that, in Jer. xvii. 1, may be understood, “The sin of Judah is given upon the table of their heart;” they had a table, in the form of a heart, hanging at their breast, in which was engraven the effigies of their idol god; and that which adds some strength to this is ver. 20, of the former chapter, “Shall a man make gods unto himself?” If this be part of the meaning, yet, I conceive, not all.

“They set up their idols in their heart;” that is,

tions, and had the strength and supremacy of them; and so judicious Calvin interprets the place; he saith, They were so addicted to superstition, that their idols and rites about them had made deep impressions upon their hearts, and had the command of their thoughts and affections: Psal. lxxii. 10, "If riches increase, set not your heart upon them;" that is, do not mind and affect them, let not them sway, command your thoughts or affections; but here their idols were set up in their hearts, and their hearts were set upon their idols.

2. They purposed to honour them with dulia and latria, service and worship, and to continue in their idolatry. When the calves were set up at Dan and Bethel, it was for to worship them; when Amaziah set up the Edomites' gods, he bowed down to them, 2 Chron. xxv. 14; and the setting these up in their hearts, notes their intention to persist in their way of worship.

3. They resolved not to part with them. What men set up in their hearts, they count as their gods, they will be at any cost to maintain them, venture their credit, limbs, lives, souls, in defence of them. You know how Micah was affected when the Danites took away his idol gods, Judg. xviii.; you must remember they were set up in his heart as well as in his house, and therefore he gets men together, pursues the Danites, and ventures his life to recover them. When any thing becomes an idol in the heart, as covetousness, wantonness, ceremony, any way of false worship, any foolish or blasphemous opinion, it is no easy matter to get down that idol.

"And put the stumblingblock of their iniquity before their face." The Hebrew for stumblingblock is from a word which signifies to fall, to dash against any thing, or person, so as to receive hurt, or do hurt; the Septuagint is, They have set the torment or punishment of their iniquity before them; Castigo, their detrimental evil. This stumblingblock of their iniquity was their idols, which while they affected, respected, revered, they fell into idolatry, caused many others to do so, and therefore are called "the stumblingblock of their iniquity;" they stumbled at these, fell from God upon these, and so wounded themselves: Zeph. i. 3, idols are called "stumblingblocks."

The putting them before their faces or eyes notes, 1. Delight in them; for usually we set such things before our eyes as are pleasing: Psal. xxvi. 3, "Thy loving-kindness is before mine eyes." So wives and children are called "the desire of men's eyes," Ezek. xxiv. 16, 25, because they are pleasing and delightful. Such were their idols unto these elders of Israel, and divers others; hence is that phrase, Ezek. vi. 9, "Your eyes go a whoring after your idols."

2. Insatiableness in that practice; they intend to look constantly upon them, as not being satisfied with one, two, or some few acts, but they must have them ever in their eyes: Prov. xxvii. 20, "The eyes of man are never satisfied;" the eyes and hearts of idolaters are never satisfied; Ezek. xvi. 28, Jerusalem is said to be insatiable; and chap. xxiii. 11, Aholibah, which was Jerusalem, was corrupt and inordinate in her love; that was, to idols.

"Should I be inquired of at all by them?" Hebrew is, Am I inquired by inquiring? or, Am I asked by asking? do they not dissemble? Ezekiel, dost thou think they are in good earnest now they are come, sit before thee, and make as if they would hearken to what counsel should be given? No, no, be not deceived, they have idols in their hearts, and before their eyes, and whatever pretences they have, all is fancied and false. The words are an interrogation, discovering and reproving their hypocrisy and impudency, that dare come to the Lord to inquire of him: "Should I be inquired," &c.? do they think I will mind them, give them any comfortable answer? far be it from me.

Obs. 1. That God takes notice of heart-idolatry; not only what idols are in temples, in his worship, what innovations, corruptions, superstitions are there, but also what idols are in men's bosoms.

Obs. 2. Where superstition and idolatry once got interest, they are not easily removed. These elders of Israel had turned aside from the true God, and fell to idolatry in Jerusalem, chap. viii. 11, and now being come into Babylon they brought their idols with them in their hearts. Neither change of country, nor company, did prevail with their hearts to let go their idols; they saw many of their brethren in captivity for that sin, they heard Ezekiel prophesy against their practices and those who upheld them in it, they understood Nebuchadnezzar had no good will to them, yet the idols remain firm, and settled in their hearts. When idols get into Bethel, God's house, it is a great difficulty to get them out; but when gotten into the heart, they become immovable, you may as soon pluck out their hearts, as pluck out their idols. The papists hold fast their images and idolatrous practices to this day, notwithstanding all the judgments of God which have been upon them. Acts of authority may take down monuments of superstition, remove out of the public worship ceremonies, pictures, idols, but can they remove them out of men's hearts? it is not the power of man, change of place, company, or duties, will do it: till the Lord speak to the heart with a strong hand, the idol got in, will stand; men's affections and corruptions are very tenacious of them.

Obs. 3. Idols set up in the heart, or elsewhere, prove ruin to the authors and supporters of them. The text calls them "stumblingblocks," by them they fell into sin, and that brought ruin upon them. Idolatry hath snared and ruined many. When Gideon made and set up an ephod in the city, and in his heart, it became a snare to him and to his house, Judg. viii. 27; so Psal. cvi. 36, they served idols, and they were a snare unto them; it was their idolatry which brought their captivity. And there is no idol, in secret or public, but is cause of ruin; idols in worship bring destruction upon churches and states, idols in heart bring destruction upon souls.

Obs. 4. Men are active to their own destruction, they set up their idols in their own hearts. "And put the stumblingblock of their iniquity before their face." Men's destructions are from themselves: Jeroboam set the calves in Dan and Bethel, 1 Kings xii. 29; he "made priests of the lowest of the people;" and what saith the text, "This thing became sin unto the house of Jeroboam, even to cut it off, and to destroy it from the face of the earth," chap. xiii. 34. Hence God told them, Hos. xiii. 9, that they had destroyed themselves; they set up the calves at Dan and Bethel, and practised such things as brought total destruction upon them. Prov. v. 22, "His own iniquities shall take the wicked himself, and he shall be holden with the cords of his sins."

Obs. 5. However hypocrisy may escape the eyes of men, yet it cannot escape the eye of God. These elders carried it fair with the prophet, but the Lord saw their hypocritical and deceitful hearts, and discovered them unto the prophet: God's eye is a piercing eye, and can discern hypocrisy, how deeply soever it be hid. The scribes and Pharisees had their hypocrisy hid under long garments, long prayers, much zeal, and yet Christ saw it, and made it known; Matt. xxiii. "Woe unto you, scribes," &c. Whatever pretences men make, whatever they practise outwardly, if the heart be not clear, if they go after covetousness, &c. it is hypocrisy, seen of God, and shall be detected; Prov. xv. 3, "The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good;" he knows the secret counsels and plottings of men.

Obs. 6. When hypocrites fly unto God, they may rather expect wrath than mercy. These men came for counsel and comfort, but what saith the Lord, "Should I be inquired of at all by them?" They have no warrant to come to me with hypocritical hearts, with idolatrous spirits; and if they do, should I grant their requests? No, I will manifest my dislike of them, answer them in wrath, "according to the multitude of their idols;" for bread I will give them stones, for fish serpents. Would they have counsel from me? I will give them up to their own devices, and leave them to seduction by their own thoughts and lusts: Hos. viii. 13, "They sacrifice flesh for the sacrifices of mine offerings; but the Lord accepteth them not; now will he remember their iniquity, and visit their sins." They came hypocritically to God, expected acceptance when they sacrificed, but the Lord at that time remembered their sins, and instead of a gracious answer, they had a grievous judgment. Hence saith the Lord, in Isa. lxvi. 3, "He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man; he that sacrificeth a lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck; he that offereth an oblation, as if he offered swine's blood; he that burneth incense, as if he blessed an idol." What is the reason of this? why, "they have chosen their own ways, and their soul delighteth in their abominations;" they have their idols in their hearts, they are hypocrites, and come to me, thinking to have favour of me, and mercy from me. They shall hear such things as they would not hear: Ahab consulted with Micahiah about regaining Ramoth-gilead, not out of conscience to obey, but that he might have him speak things suitable to his heart; but he heard that which displeased him.

Obs. 7. God will give such answer to hypocritical heart-idolaters, as shall snare them. "I will answer" them that come to inquire of me "according to the multitude of their idols, that I may take the house of Israel in their own heart," in their own thoughts and devices: their tongues ask for mercy, but their hearts call for judgment; there is hypocrisy and idolatry in their hearts, and suitable thereunto shall be my answer. God answers such in justice, and sends them strong delusions to believe lies, 2 Thess. ii. 11; and to ripen their damnation, they bring matter of damnation in their hearts, and God seals it up.

Quest. How are they said to be taken in their hearts when God doth not answer their desires or hopes, but gives out what is contrary thereto?

Answe. 1. When God answers not such men after their desires and expectations, they fret and rage against God, as if he dealt not well with them, and so God takes them in their heart, and discovers them to the world.

2. God threatening judgments takes the hearts of sinners with fear, which holds them in dreadful bondage night and day; famine, plague, sword, and noisome beasts, captivity, were threatened; and, chap. xii. 13, God calls his judgments, nets, snares.

3. He convinces them that they do not honour him by their false worship, but are guilty of those things which do greatly offend him: they think he sees not their idols, because shut up within in their hearts.

Obs. 8. Idolatry of what kind soever is a grievous sin, it estranges from God; "They are estranged from me through their idols." Man's happiness lies in his nearness to God, union with him, and fruition of him; now idolatry, though only heart-idolatry, estranges, divides, separates from God, and that is the great misery of the creature. They left the infinite, all-sufficient, living, only good and wise God, for dunghill gods that had nothing in them, that could do nothing for them, that brought a curse upon them and theirs: Jer. xix. 3, 4, "Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, the which whosoever heareth, his ears shall tingle. Because they have forsaken me, and have estranged this place, and have burned incense in it unto other gods." They first estranged themselves from God, then estranged the place of his worship; and then God dealt strangely by them, he brought destruction upon them. People may think themselves happy that they have communion with God in sacrifice and worship; but if there be any idols within or without, they are strangers unto God, and God is a stranger unto them, and strange judgments are in readiness for them.

Obs. 9. Note here, the right way of coming unto God to inquire of him. If you would have a gracious answer, you must come with hearts free from idols, with pure hearts: Psal. lxxvi. 18, "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me;" if we come with sin in our hearts, (sin approved, countenanced, delighted in,) God will meet us with wrath in his hand; therefore the Scripture oft tells us of this duty, how we should come to God; Heb. x. 22, "Let us draw near with a true heart;" 1 Tim. ii. 8, Let us lift "up holy hands, without wrath and doubting;" there must be no wrath nor doubting in your hearts; James iv. 8, "Draw nigh to God;" but how? "cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded;" inwardly they must be cleansed, and outwardly reformed; lives and spirits must be suitable unto God.

Ver. 6. Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; Repent, and turn yourselves from your idols; and turn away your faces from all your abominations.

This verse is part of the charge given the prophet, which he was to deliver to the house of Israel, and in it is a command, or an exhortation, to repentance, which is laid down,

I. In general; "Repent."

II. More specially.

1. "Turn yourselves from your idols."

2. "Turn away your faces from all your abominations."

"Repent." שׁוּבוּ from שׁוּב to return, implying a going back from what a man had done. The Greeks have two words by which they express the nature of repentance: one is μεταμέλειν, which is to be careful, anxious, solicitous after a thing done; this we term penitence. The other word is μετανοεῖν, mentem et consilium in melius mutare, ab avōia, dementia, et μετά, post, it being the correction of men's folly, and returning ad sanam mentem; and μετάνοια is that which we term resipiscētia, a growing wise again; some express it by an after-mind, an amendment of the mind: one of these respects the change of the will, the other, the change of the mind. The Hebrew word for repentance is תשובה from the word in my text, and notes a returning from one thing to another, from sin to God: 1 Kings viii. 35, "If they pray towards this place, and confess thy name, and turn from their sin, when thou afflictest them: then hear thou in heaven."

Quest. Is not repentance the work and gift of God? if so, how is it that man is commanded to repent?

Ans. Repentance is of the Lord; Acts xi. 18, "God granted repentance to the gentiles unto life;" 2 Tim. ii. 25, ministers must meekly instruct those that oppose, if God peradventure will give them repentance. It is also the gift of Christ; Acts v. 31, he is "exalted to be a Prince and Saviour, to give repentance to Israel. Yet God commands man to repent,

1. Because man may do something that he may repent: as, first, seriously consider the nature of his sin, what circumstances it is clothed with, what aggravations it admits, how crimson and scarlet it is, against what light, mercies, means, engagements, &c.: apprehension of sin under false notions of profit or pleasure, induceth to it, and consideration of sin in its own nature, helps to repent of it, and abhor it. Did men lay to heart what wrong the infinite, holy, blessed God hath by sin, what mercies it keeps from them, how greatly it doth defile them, what miseries and mischiefs it brings upon them, what a weight of divine wrath hangs over their heads, it would have some operation upon their hearts. Secondly, they may confess them before God: Josh. vii. 19, "Give glory to God, and make confession unto him;" Prov. xxviii. 13, "Whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy;" 1 John i. 9, "If we confess our sins," &c.

2. God gives what he commands. Chap. xi. 19, he had promised to "take the stony heart out of their flesh, and to give them an heart of flesh," and therefore here might command them to repent. Mark i. 15, "Repent ye, and believe the gospel:" neither of these were in their power; they might as well create new heavens and new earths, as do these acts; but God gives and works them both in the hearts of whom he pleases, 2 Tim. ii. 25; Phil. i. 29. Neither repentance nor faith are natural or any acquired habits by the industry and acts of men, but they are the efficacious work of the Spirit in and upon the heart; God and Christ do work repentance by the Spirit, and therefore it is attributed unto them, and denied to be in the power of man: 2 Cor. iii. 5, "We are not sufficient of ourselves to think any thing as of ourselves;" Phil. ii. 13, "It is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Commands argue not power and free will in man to repent.

There is a use of these,

(1.) In regard of God.

(2.) Of man.

(1.) In regard of God.

[1.] To manifest what the Lord may justly require at the hands of men; if they sin unjustly, he may justly call for repentance.

[2.] To clear himself, that it is not his fault if men cannot do what they are called upon for. The creditor may call for his debt of that man, who is fallen into extreme poverty through his own sin.

[3.] To set before us the corruption and impotency of our nature: by the law we come to the knowledge, not of our power, but our impotency; Rom. iii. 20, "By the law is the knowledge of sin."

[4.] To advise us to look out for help elsewhere: therefore where you have commands in one place of Scripture, you have promises in some other part.

(2.) In regard of man.

(1.) That he may be more thoroughly sensible of the wretched corruption of his nature, and bewail it more fully.

[2.] That he may be stirred up more effectually to beg of God that which he commands, for God commands nothing but that which is of great weight and advantage for man.

[3.] That wicked men may be inexcusable: John xv. 22, "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin; but now they have no cloak for their sin."

Obs. 1. Repentance is a turning from sin to God. Sin turns men from God, draws the soul into ways that lead unto death; James i. 4, a man "is drawn away of his own lust," drawn away from God, from his worship, truths, rules; but when repentance comes, he turns back again, he changes his thoughts, his mind, his will, he befools, abhors himself for what he hath done, and so comes to God again from whom he departed. The prodigal was drawn away from his father's house through his own lust, and laid a long time in looseness and wantonness; at last he changed his judgment, counsels, purposes, and returning to himself, returns to his father; Luke xv. 17, 18, "When he came to himself, he said, I will arise and go to my father, and say, Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee." Sinners are said to be mad, Psal. cii. 8, "They that are mad against me;" and Paul, when he was in his course of sinning, saith, he was "exceedingly mad," Acts xxvi. 11; and Baalam's sin is called "madness," 2 Pet. ii. 16: repentance brings a man to his right wits, he becomes wise, and turns from his folly and madness. It is called a turning of men "from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God," Acts xxvi. 18. Sin is darkness, and when men sin, they know not what they do; it is the power of Satan holds them under his government; but repentance enlightens and sets at liberty, so that men see and walk from under Satan unto God. Ver. 20, repentance and turning to God are put together, they are the same; but it is not any turning, but a turning of the judgment, so that men judge otherwise of God, of his laws, ways, of sin, of themselves, than before; a turning of the will and affections, so that they are carried wholly and fully unto God; Joel ii. 12, "Turn ye even to me with all your heart;" if it be with a piece, it is partial, hypocritical, and deceitful.

Obs. 2. Repentance is a continued act; the word "repent" implies the continuation of it. Some have thought it one act, and that is sufficient for a man's sin, but repentance is a grace, and must have its daily operation as well as other graces; if faith, love, patience, humility, must continue, repentance must do so likewise: where a spring breaks forth, it is always flowing; this is the spring of the soul, when God once smites the rocky heart, the water will flow; sincere repentants can no more content themselves with one act of repentance, than with one act of faith, they oft renew their repentance. Hence is it that the Lord would not have us forget our old sins, but to think of them and mourn for them: Dent. ix. 7, "Remember and forget not, how thou provokedst the Lord thy God to wrath in the wilderness;" Psal. xxv. 7, "Remember not the sins of my youth, nor my transgressions;" 1 Cor. xv. 9, "I am the least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God;" Ezek. xvi. 62, 63, "I will establish my covenant with thee; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord; that thou mayest remember, and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more because of thy shame, when I am pacified toward thee for all that thou hast done."

Obs. 3. Sinners should stir up themselves, and do the utmost which lies in their power, to further their turning unto God. "Turn yourselves from your idols;" use all arguments you can to cause your hearts to turn from idols, and from other sinful ways. Consider,

(1.) That they are separated from the Lord; Isa. lix. 2, "Your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear." For a woman to be separated from her husband, that is gracious, loving, and to join herself to some rogue, is grievous; so here are too sad effects of it, they have nothing of God's face, nor of God's car.

(2.) That man's life is short, and the pleasures of sin but for a season. Let a man all his life enjoy them, yet they end then, and man may be cut off before he is aware of it: Matt. xxv. 13, "Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh."

(3.) The daily treasuring up of wrath, and danger of final impenitency: Rom. ii. 5, Thou "treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath." It is a seal of condemnation.

(4.) The condemnings of a man's own heart and conscience: "There is no peace to the wicked," but they "are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest," Isa. lvii. 20, 21.

(5.) Absolute necessity of repenting and turning unto God: Luke xiii. 3, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish."

(6.) The love of Christ, in laying down his life, shedding his blood, suffering such hard things as he did: Zech. xii. 10, "They shall look upon me whom they have pierced," &c.

(7.) That it is acceptable unto the Lord: he would not else call for it, as here; nor make such promises unto it, as 1 Kings viii. 48—50, if they will return to God with all their heart and soul, he will hear their prayers, maintain their cause, forgive their sins, and have compassion on them. It is acceptable to the angels, repentance makes them rejoice.

Obs. 4. True repentance and turning to the Lord, doth manifest itself in the effects and fruits of it: it hath meet fruit, Matt. iii. 8; worthy fruit, Luke iii. 8. Now here are three effects thereof in these words:

(1.) When the soul is truly turned to God, it seeks to turn others: it is not content that itself is come to God, but would have many come to him.

(2.) It dispenses with no sin, it saith not, Lord, be merciful to me in this, but turns from "all abominations," from every idol, the most darling sin shall then go to it: Hos. xiv. 8, "Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols?"

(3.) It avoids the occasions of sin, and appearances of evil. "Turn away your faces from all your abominations;" if you should look upon idols, they will endanger you, stir up the old corruptions. Hence Solomon counsels men not to "look upon the wine when it is red, and giveth his colour in the cup," Prov. xxiii. 31; not to enter "into the path of the wicked," chap. iv. 14.

Ver. 7, 8. For every one of the house of Israel, or of the stranger that sojourneth in Israel, which separateth himself from me, and setteth up his idols in his heart, and putteth the stumblingblock of his iniquity before his face, and cometh to a prophet to enquire of him concerning me; I the Lord will answer him by myself; and I will set my face against that man, and will make him a sign and a proverb, and I will cut him off from the midst of my people: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

In the foregoing verse he exhorted them to repentance, and to turn from their idols and abominations, and here, in these verses, he backs it with reasons; thus, if ye will not repent, but persist in your idolatry and sinful practices, "I will answer you by myself, and I will set my face against you," &c.

"Every one of the house of Israel." The Hebrew is, ish, ish, man, man of the house of Israel; that is, every man of Israel that forsakes me to follow idols, I will do so and so by.

"The stranger that sojourns in Israel." Hebrew גֵּר which the Septuagint renders proselyte, of the proselytes that sojourn. Those who came from the gentiles, and embraced the Jewish religion, they were proselytes. There were two sorts of proselytes; one sort was called the proselyte of the covenant, and these were to be circumcised, and to keep the law; another sort was called the proselyte of the gate, from Deut. xiv. 29, these were not circumcised, neither received the law of Moses, but the seven precepts of Noah; one of which was, that they should not worship idols; if therefore they should come with idols in their hearts, God would answer them.

"And separateth himself from me." God had taken the Jews to be his people, and some of the gentiles came in to join with them, yet these separated themselves from God to go to idols; like a woman that leaves her husband, and follows other men, Hos. ix. 10. When men leave the law of God, and his pure worship, then they separate from God.

"And cometh to a prophet to inquire of him concerning me." In ver. 4, it is said, "and cometh to the prophet," then he adds, "to inquire of him." It was an ordinary thing for this people, upon occasions, to go to the prophets; Excd. xviii. 15, the people came to Moses, who was a prophet, to inquire of God; they went to the seer to inquire, 1 Sam. ix. 9; so 2 Kings viii. 8, Benhadad sends to Elisha the prophet, to inquire of him; Zedekiah sent again and again to Jeremiah, to inquire of the Lord for him, Jer. xxi. 2; xxxvii. 7. When they came to the prophets, or sent to them, it was to know the mind of the Lord in their straits, undertakings, desires, and doubts.

"I the Lord will answer him by myself." The Hebrew runs thus, I the Lord, it shall be answered to him in me, I will not let any answer him but myself. God spake himself to Moses, Numb. xii. 7, 8, which was an argument of great love and good will; and sometimes it is an argument of wrath and displeasure when he will not speak by others, but by himself; as here, I will not answer him by the prophet, whom he entreats to inquire for him, but by myself, whom he despises, by setting up idols in his heart; I will answer him, not with words, but deeds, not with mercies, but with judgments, as the next verse imports. God would not vouchsafe their questions they propounded any answer at all, but he would go on in his judgments, not be inquired of by them, but answer them according to the multitude of their idols.

Ver. 8. "I will set my face against that man." The Hebrew is, faces, the plural for the singular; this phrase is frequent in Scripture. The Targum expounds it, anger, which appears in the face, and face is oft put for the wrath and anger of God: Jer. ni. 12, "I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you;" Hebrew is, my faces 22 Lam. iv. 16, "The anger of the Lord hath divided them;" Hebrew is, the face of the Lord: Psal. xxi. 9, "Thou shalt make them as a fiery oven in the time of thine anger;" Hebrew is, in time of thy face; that is, when the wrath is in thy face, thou wilt consume them as stubble in an oven: so 1 Pet. iii. 12, "The face of the Lord is against them that do evil;" that is, the anger of God is against such. So then, to set the face against a man is to manifest himself to be an enemy to that man, to persist in that enmity, and to act accordingly. You may see it in those scriptures where this phrase is mentioned: Lev. xvii. 10, "I will set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people;" chap. xxvi. 17, "I will set my face against you, and ye shall be slain before your enemies;" Jer. xxi. 10, "I have set my face against this city for evil; it shall be given into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire." You see when God sets his face against any person or thing, he is an enemy unto them, and gives not over his enmity till he hath ruined them; and therefore it follows here,

"I will make him a sign." His punishment shall not be easy or common, but exemplary; the Vulgate is, in exemplum; such judgments would God bring upon them, as that others should be astonished at them: Deut. xxviii. 37, "Thou shalt become an astonishment, a proverb, and a by-word, among all nations."

"A proverb." God would so deal with these men, as that they should be talked of every where. Jer. xxiv. 9, Zedekiah, the princes, and residue of Jerusalem, God would remove them "into all kingdoms of the earth for their hurt, to be a reproach and a proverb, a taunt and a curse, in all places;" their punishment should be proverbial. Calvin observes, that מסר significeth disgrace, so that they shall not only be matter of talk to the people, but their names shall be infamous.

"And I will cut him off from the midst of my people." God would not only make him a sign and talk to others, that were no great matter, but destroy him, "cut him off." The Scripture oft speaks of cutting off men; it is not always meant by death, but thought to be some censure whereby they were deprived of the privileges of God's people; but sundry times it is spoken of God's cutting men off by death, Lev. xvii. 10; xx. 3—6, and it is certain, where God is said to set his face against any, and then speaks of cutting off from his people, that there it is to be understood of cutting off by death; as in this place, they should be cut off from his people, both by temporal and eternal death.

"And ye shall know that I am the Lord." Hypocrites pretend they are godly, they converse with the prophets, ask counsel of God, but yet they condemn the true prophets, and the power of godliness, they will choose their own ways; therefore saith God, "Ye shall know that I am the Lord;" you set up idols in your hearts, make gods of them, but I will myself deal with you for them, and punish you severely.

Obs. 1. That when men leave God, and his ways, then they fall to idolatrous and other sinful practices. They separated themselves from God, and set up idols in their hearts. When once corruption hath taken off the heart from the Lord, who is an infinite good, then it cleaves to any creature, any dunghill god, and deifies that: Hos. ix. 10, "They went to Baal-peor, and separated themselves unto that shame;" it was a shameful idol, yet, having left God, they could embrace it: and Hos. iv. 10—12, "They have left off to take heed to the Lord. Whoredom, and wine, and new wine, take away the heart. They ask counsel at their stocks, and their staff declareth unto them." Jer. ii. 13, they forsook God, the fountain of living waters, and then hewed themselves cisterns that could hold no water: it was therefore good counsel the apostle gave, Heb. iii. 12, "Take heed lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God." Through unbelief men separate from God, and that is the principle of all disobedience, and lets the heart loose unto any creature, to every sin.

Obs. 2. Men exceeding sinful may put on a face of holiness. These men, who were idolaters, come to the prophet, inquire of God by him, as if they were pious men, intended to know the mind of God, and do what he would have done; this was counterfeit holiness, they had idols in their hearts, and meant to keep them there. Saul was sometimes among the prophets; the devil seems an angel of light, and wicked, vile men appear saints; 2 Tim. iii. 5, "Having a form of godliness." The worst of men may make a cloak of religion; antichrist sits in the temple, 2 Thess. ii. 4; Simon Magus, believing, is baptized, and wonders at the miracles Philip wrought, Acts viii. 13.

Obs. 3. Look what men are in coming unto God, the like shall they find him unto them. They came to the prophet fallaciously, and God would not answer them by the prophet, but by himself; he knew how to deal with them, he knew their hearts, and so what was fittest to be said or done unto them: Psal. xviii. 25, 26, "With the merciful thou wilt show thyself merciful; with an upright man thou wilt show thyself upright; with the pure thou will show thyself pure; and with the froward thou wilt show thyself froward," or wrestle with them: so Lev. xxvi. 23, 24, if ye will walk contrary to me, I will walk contrary to you. If a people come humbly unto God, and sue for mercy, he will save them, but if their hearts swell, rise within them, he will bring down their high looks, Psal. xviii. 27. As God finds men, so he will proceed with them; so he dealt with Pharaoh.

Obs. 4. God will proceed impartially with every man; be he Jew or gentile, all is one to God. "Every one of the house of Israel, or of the stranger that sojourneth in Israel," &c. God neither accepts nor respects persons, Gal. ii. 6; Acts x. 34. If a Jew be guilty he shall have an answer suitable; so if a gentile be faulty, his gentilism shall not excuse him. Let men's conditions, nations, qualities, degrees, be what they will, it matters not, if they come to God with idols in their hearts, the greatest shall speed no better than the meanest, the Jew no better than the stranger.

Obs. 5. Men set up idols in their hearts, and God sets his face against them, he becomes an adversary unto them, looks severely upon them, speaks terribly unto them, and works powerfully against them. They had set their faces and hearts upon idols for evil, and God sets his face and heart against them for evil, and is resolved to ruin them: Jer. xlv. 11, "Behold, I will set my face against you for evil, and to cut off all Judah." To have God set his face against a people is very sad.

There are several sins mentioned in Scripture for which God sets his face against men; offering their seed to Moloch, Lev. xx. 2, 3; despising of his statutes, and breaking his covenant, Lev. xxvi. 15, 17; idolatry and hypocrisy here in the text.

Obs. 6. When God's face is against a people, his judgments upon them will be exemplary, he will make them signs and proverbs in the world. Jer. xix. 8, "I will make this city desolate, and an hissing: every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished and hiss, because of all the plagues thereof;" chap. xviii. 16, "Every one that passeth thereby shall wag his head;" chap. xlii. 18, "Ye shall be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach." Men's names are dear unto them, but God will blast their names, make them to be a taunt and proverb: Jer. xxix. 22, it was a proverb among them, "The Lord make thee like Zedekiah and like Ahab, whom the king of Babylon roasted in the fire." And when they wished hurt to any, they used this speech, God make them a reproach among all nations, Ezek. v. 14, 15; and when this is done, God cuts them off from the land of the living in that condition.

Obs. The end of God's setting his face against sinners, and proceeding severely with them, is, that they may acknowledge his justice and power over them.

Ver. 9. And if the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord have deceived that prophet, and I will stretch out my hand upon him, and will destroy him from the midst of my people Israel.

False prophets were both in Judea and in Babylon, and the people had often recourse unto them; they spake pleasing things, they told them who were in Judea that Nebuchadnezzar should never subdue and carry them captives, as he had done Jeconiah, and some others with him; yea, they told them that those in Babylon should shortly return. These were vain, false, and deceitful prophecies, and Divine Providence ordered it so, and therefore God saith here, "If the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord have deceived that prophet," &c.

In the verse you have,

I. A supposition.

II. An assertion.

III. A threatening.

I. For the supposition, the false prophets (for of them he speaks) were deceived in what they spake to the people. Zedekiah, and the rest of the prophets which bade Ahab to go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper, were deceived, 1 Kings xxii. Hananiah and Shelemiah made that people trust in a lie, Jer. xxviii. 15; xxix. 31. They were deceived in their prophecies, and deceive others; the things they spake came not to pass.

"If the prophet be deceived." Hebrew original word is פתה which being taken in the ill part, as here, notes a turning of the heart to that. A man may be deceived by others, or by his own corruption, for a man may be seduced in himself by himself: James i. 14, "Every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust;" his lust is in him; by

Jer. xiv. 14. his lust he is enticed, seduced, and this seduction is voluntary, by his own act and will; so that in himself is the true efficient cause of his seduction.

II. "I the Lord have deceived that prophet." Here is the assertion. These words sound very harsh, and no man durst have attributed them unto the Lord, had not he himself said so. We must inquire into the sense of these, how God is said to deceive a prophet that speaks falsely.

To say God declared him to be deceived, or permitted him to be deceived, comes not up to the expression here; "I have deceived that," &c. פתתי it is active and notes action. This we must lay down, that God neither is nor can be the author of sin; for then he must act against some rule. God's will, which is ever most holy, just, and wise, is his rule; and it is unreasonable and impious, to think that God should work or do any thing against his own will; yet God wills sin, not as good, but so far as he intends and is able to work good out of it, and bring about his glory by it. Mr. Baynes and some others hold, there is an efficacy of God reaching to the beginning of sin, though not to the essence of sin; and it is no more than some Jesuits acknowledge, who maintain a deadly quarrel against Calvin, for making God the author of sin, when he saith for substance no more than they. A Lapidist saith, God's permission of sin is an action, otherwise no sin could be. He saith further, this permission is efficacious. He instanceth in a greyhound which a man lets loose to pursue the hare, and sets the dog upon the hare; so God lets Satan loose upon men, and so is active to the beginning of sin. 1 Kings xxii. 20, "The Lord said, Who shall persuade Ahab that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? And one said in this manner, another on that manner." Ver. 21, "There came forth a spirit, and said, I will persuade him." And ver. 22, "The Lord said unto him, Wherewith? I will go forth and be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And he said, Thou shalt persuade him, and prevail also: go forth, and do so." Here is some concurrence of God to the deception of these prophets; and God might have said of them as here, I have deceived these prophets.

The words "I have deceived," are to be taken as a judicial act of God, who dealing with them as delinquents, punisheth them with this special judgment of seduction; they were idolatrous and hypocritical, and God punished those sins with others, and so accidentally was the efficient cause of their deception. God finding those men false and forward to deceive, hearkening to their own hearts, and following their own spirits, Ezek. xiii. 2, 3, he gave them up and over to vain visions and lying divinations, which was one punishment, and to perdition, which was another punishment following thereupon. Have you a mind to be prophets, to prophesy lies? ye shall be so.

Quest. Jer. xx. 7, saith Jeremiah a true prophet, "O Lord, thou hast deceived me, and I was deceived; thou art stronger than I, and hast prevailed." What! doth God deceive true prophets?

Ans. I. The deception here is no sinful deception, he had no vain visions, no lying divinations, whatever he prophesied was truth, from the God of truth, and came to pass. The meaning here is this; Jeremiah was discontented that he saw so little fruit of his ministry, that he found such opposition, that he was daily in derision and mocked of every one; and therefore saith, "O Lord, thou hast deceived me," in making me a prophet; I looked for other things than I find, but I am deceived, and thou hast done it: I was unwilling to be a prophet, objected against it, chap. i. 6, but thou laidst thy charge upon me, overpoweredst me, and prevailedst against me, making me great promises, which yet I see not performed, ver. 7, 8, 18, 19.

2. The words may be read thus, Thou hast persuaded me, and I was persuaded; for when it is taken in the better sense, it notes to persuade.

Quest. Isa. lxiii. 17, "O Lord, why hast thou made us to err from thy ways? and hardened our heart from thy fear?" Did God make the prophet and people to err? did he harden their hearts?

Ans. I. The prophet speaks in the name of the people, not of himself; he did not err from the way of God, but reproved the people for it.

2. God did this in judgment to the people, who affected false prophets, and chose their own ways, Isa. lxvi. 3, and delighted in their abominations; therefore God denied them his Spirit, and left them to their own spirits; he in judgment gave them up to their own ways, and to hardness of heart; and this was not sinful in the Lord. Psal. lxxxix. 11, 12, "My people would not hearken unto my voice, and Israel would none of me. So I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust: and they walked in their own counsels."

III. "I will stretch out my hand upon him." Here is the threatening. God hath no hand to stretch out, he is without all parts; the words are metaphorical, taken from the practice of men, who stretch out their hands to do this or that. Gen. xxii. 10, "Abraham stretched forth his hand to slay his son;" Jeroboam put forth his hand to lay hold upon the prophet that had prophesied against his altar, 1 Kings xiii. 4; so God would put forth his power to punish such a prophet.

Quest. If God deceived him, how can he in justice punish or destroy that prophet.

Ans. 1. The false prophet did whatever he did freely, he was not forced by any power or act of God, his seduction was principally from himself; and it was his own fault that he was deceived, that he deceived others.

2. A man may serve providence, and yet sin against the law of God. The secret providence of God had ordered it that this people should be seduced by false prophets, yet God in his word had forbid false prophets and prophecies, Deut. xiii.; and because men are to look at what is written, not what is secret and hidden, therefore if they violate the law, God may justly punish thereupon. Acts iv. 27, 28, Herod, Pilate, Judas, and the Jews, they did to Christ whatsoever God had determined to be done, yet were they not without sin, nor without punishment, because they transgressed the rule given them.

Obs. 1. The Lord, in his infinite wisdom and justice, doth make a punishment of sin, and punish one sin with another. Besides corporal judgments he hath spiritual; if the prophet be deceived, "I the Lord have deceived him," I have laid this judgment upon him, that he should be deceived, led into errors, and deceive others; this he hath deserved at my hands, and this punishment in just judgment I inflict upon him. The Scriptures hold out frequently this way of God's proceedings with sinners, his punishing of one sin with another; 2 Chron. xxv. 17—20, Amaziah provokes Joash to war, he dissuades him from it; but Amaziah would not hear; "for it came of God, that he might deliver them into the hands of their enemies, because they sought after the gods of Edom." Jer. iv. 10, "Then said I, Ah, Lord God! thou hast greatly deceived this people and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall have peace, whereas the sword reacheth unto the soul." They were desirous of prophets that might speak pleasing things unto them; they regarded not Jeremiah and Ezekiel; and God in judgment lets them have such prophets which cried, Peace, peace, and gave them over to believe their lies; and this made Jeremiah say; "Thou hast greatly deceived," &c. Rom. i. 25, 26, "They changed the truth of God into a lie; worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator: for this cause God gave them up unto vile affections;" and ver. 28, "over to a reprobate mind." 2 Thess. ii. 10, 11, "Because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved; for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie."

Obs. 2. God will deal severely with false prophets. "I will stretch out my hand upon him, and will destroy him from the midst of my people Israel;" he would make him exemplary to all. Hananiah was a false prophet, and deceived many; therefore said God, "Behold, I will cast thee from off the face of the earth," and that quickly; "this year thou shalt die," Jer. xxviii. 15, 16; God would not stay long from cutting him off. Shemaiah was another false prophet, and God would destroy him and his seed; he should not have a man to dwell among that people, chap. xxix. 31, 32.

Ver. 10. And they shall bear the punishment of their iniquity: the punishment of the prophet shall be even as the punishment of him that seeketh unto him.

There being false prophets among this people, they gave ear to them, resorted unto them, took counsel of them; and here God tells Ezekiel, that not only the false prophets should be punished for deceiving the people, but even they that by seeking to those prophets were deceived by them.

The Hebrew is thus, they shall bear their iniquity; as the iniquity of him that seeks is, so shall be the iniquity of the prophet. Where you have "punishment" the original is, iniquity. This phrase is much in holy writ, "to bear iniquity," and is put for bearing of punishment, which iniquity doth cause, Lev. v. 1, 17. They that uncover the nakedness of their kin, "shall bear their iniquity," that is, their punishment for it, chap. xx. 17, 19. This phrase is applied to Christ, Isa. liii. 11, "He shall bear their iniquity;" which the 5th verse calls, wounding, bruising, chastisement, stripes. Paul hath the like phrase, Gal. v. 10, "He that troubleth you shall bear his judgment;" he shall have his punishment, whatever he be.

"The punishment of the prophet shall be even as the punishment of him that seeketh unto him." It may seem hence, that there is an equality in their sin, and in the punishment; but sins and punishment do differ in Scripture. Matt. v. 22, "Whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment: and whosoever shall say, Raca, shall be in danger of the council: but whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire;" here are divers degrees of sin, and divers degrees of punishment. Matt. xii. 45, "The last state of that man is worse than the first;" worse for sin, worse for punishment. John xix. 11, "He that delivered me unto thee hath the greater sin;" his sin that betrayed Christ was greater than Pilate's, and answerable should be his punishment. Jer. vii. 26, "They did worse than their fathers;" so should have worse punishment than they. God appointed punishment to be inflicted according to the nature of the sin: Deut. xxv. 2, "If the wicked man be worthy to be beaten, the judge shall cause him to lie down, and to be beaten before his face, according to his fault." Rev. xviii. 7, "How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her." By these scriptures you see that all sins are not equal, neither all punishment, and that God doth proportion punishments to the nature of sins. We are not here to conclude an equality of punishments upon the false prophet and those that came unto him; for certainly his sin in deceiving the people, pretending visions and divinations from heaven, that he was sent of God, &c. was greater than the people's: "even as," notes the quality and reality of the punishment, not the degree.

Obs. 1. The fruit or reward of sin is burdensome. "They shall bear their iniquity;" that is, the fruit and effect of it; it lights and lies heavy upon the authors of it. Guilt is a heavy burden for a soul to bear; it made a prophet cry out, Psal. li. 14, "Deliver me from blood-guiltiness, O God, thou God of my salvation." Guilt lay like a mountain of lead upon him; so any punishment for sin is weighty. If God send a plague, a famine, or sword, are they not heavy? when God brought tidings to David that one of those judgments must be upon him for numbering the people, he was in a great strait, 2 Sam. xxiv. 14. And Psal. xxxviii. 2—5, "Thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me sore.

There is no soundness in my flesh because of thine anger; neither is there any rest in my bones because of my sin: for mine iniquities are gone over my head; as an heavy burden they are too heavy for me: my wounds stink and are corrupt because of my foolishness." He had sinned, and found the burden of sin wonderful grievous. The church saith, Lam. iii. 7, "He hath made my chain heavy;" sin had brought an iron heavy chain upon her. Sin brings shame, and that is a burden; Ezek. xvi. 54, "That thou mayest bear thine own shame:" it brings sorrows, fears, pains, loss, death, damnation, and all these are grievous. Ezek. xviii. 20, it is said, "The wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him;" it shall be a burden upon him.

Obs. 2. To seek unto false prophets is a thing punishable before God. "The punishment of the prophet shall be even as the punishment of him that seeketh unto him." Men think it is nothing to consult with a wicked prophet, but God will not so pass it over; he counts it a great sin, and will lay upon him a proportionable burden. If prophets be not sent of God, if they give out erroneous and false things, if they be wicked in their lives, it is a dangerous thing to have recourse to them; God is against those prophets, and those that depend upon them. Jer. xxiii. 32, "I am against such prophets," saith God there, and "they shall not profit this people at all;" they thought by consulting with them, that they should gain much, and it is true they gained the displeasure of God, they brought exemplary judgments upon themselves. God had commanded them not to hearken to such prophets, ver. 16, as spake a vision out of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the Lord; yea, he had commanded such prophets to be put to death, Deut. xiii. 5; for them, therefore, to consult with these prophets, to follow their counsels, and do what they appointed, leaving the true prophets, discountenancing and discouraging them, was a high provocation of God, and punished answerably. Ahab sought unto the false prophets, but God remembered it, and visited it upon his head. If God will punish those that seek to false prophets, surely he will not spare those that seek unto witches, soothsayers, astrologers, and star-gazers; nor those that seek unto another god; Psal. xvi. 4, "Their sorrows shall be multiplied."

Ver. 11. That the house of Israel may go no more astray from me, neither be polluted any more with all their transgressions; but that they may be my people, and I may be their God, saith the Lord God.

This verse shows the end why the Lord would punish the false prophets, and those that consulted with them, viz. to prevent the people's sinning against him by idolatry and other unlawful practices. When they should see God cutting off their prophets, and those who had hearkened to them, this would breed fear in them, and put a stand to their sinful ways, cause them to return, and continue in the ways of God.

"House of Israel." By these we are to understand the godly, those who were elected, the spiritual Israelites; not all after the flesh, for the false prophets, and those who clave to them, were so of the house of Israel. When God visited with great judgments, he ever reserved some, that so his covenant which he had made with Abraham might not fail; and they were the spiritual Israelites, not the carnal, who went no more astray.

"May go no more astray." לֹא יִשְׁתָּוּ מִיָּדָה from יָדָה to err, to wander; it is a metaphor borrowed from eattle which wander out of the right way, as Matt. xviii. 12, "If a man have an hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray;" Exod. xxiii. 4, "If thou meet thine enemy's ox or ass going astray;" and is applied unto man, 2 Pet. ii. 15, "Which have forsaken the right way, and are gone astray, following the way of Balaam." Here they had left the way of God, and followed lying prophets.

"No more."

Quest. Do the godly being once redeemed go astray no more? David went astray oft; and the apostle saith, "In many things we sin all," James iii. 2.

Ans. 1. God's end in punishing the wicked, is to keep his people from straying at all; as a parent, when he corrects the child for lying, would have it lie no more, though through that corruption which is in it, it lie often.

2. That they go no more astray from him in that way and manner they did before, no more to false gods and false worship; they go not astray in any dangerous wandering.

"From me." The Hebrew is מֵאַחֲרַי from after me. God's people are to follow him; but by hearkening to false prophets, and the enticement of their own hearts, they are turned aside from following God.

"Neither be polluted any more." The original word טָמֵא is to pollute, defile, be unclean; and it is contrary to טָהַר which is to be clean and innocent.

"With all their transgressions." Or prevarications; the word פָּשַׁע notes not any transgression, but such a one as hath much of the will in it, joined with pride and malice, and therefore is rendered rebellion, Psal. v. 10, "Cast them out in the multitude of their transgressions: for they have rebelled against thee:" they were transgressions which had sedition and rebellion in them. Job xxxiv. 37, "He addeth rebellion unto his sin:" הַתְּסַחֲתֵי פָשַׁע the Vulgate hath it, blasphemy.

"But that they may be my people, and I," &c. Hebrew is, and they shall be to me for a people, and I will be to them for a God. They were God's people before, in covenant, circumcised, had the temple, sacrifices, &c. God speaks thus, to show they had made a defection from him, forfeited all, deserved to be rejected, and had by their sins bred a great strangeness between him and themselves; for they had corrupted his worship, violated his laws, rejected his prophets, polluted his name and temple, forsaken him, and followed after strange gods, and so done what was in them to be none of God's people; but if they would awaken out of their spiritual slumber, consider, repent, and turn to him, he would manifest his faithfulness and loving-kindness unto them, they should be his people, &c. The like words you had in chap. xi. 20, "They shall be my people, and I will be their God."

Obs. 1. From the coherence with the two former verses, That God makes use of ill means to accomplish good ends; he lets errors, and strange opinions, seducing doctrines, prevail with false prophets and people, that so they suffering proportionably for their evil, his people may be kept from such ways and ends. He in judgment sent strong delusions to the prophets and people, which they venting and embracing, he punished them, that so the house of Israel might not go any more astray from him.

There is no creature so poisonous, but God makes use of it to some good end; and there is no prophet or teacher so corrupt, no opinions so damnable or blasphemous, but the Lord, by his infinite power, orders and works it to some good end. 1 Cor. xi. 19, "There must be heresies among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you." God makes use of heresies, sects, and schisms, to discover who are sound, who are not: when it is a time of war, men of valour and counsel are made known. Deut. xiii. 3, when a false prophet rose up amongst them, the Lord tells them it was to prove them, whether they did love the Lord, and his truths, would hold them fast and follow him; or whether they would be led aside with erroneous doctrines, and follow seducing teachers.

Obs. 2. By judgments upon the wicked, God intends the good of his people. He will destroy the seducing prophet and seduced people, that the house of Israel may go no more astray from him; that those who were godly people might awake out of their secure slumber, consider what they had done, repent of it, and never do the like. When the prophets of Baal were slain, then the people were freed from their haltings between God and Baal, and clave to the Lord. Psal. ix. 16, "The Lord is known by the judgment he executeth;" when he lays his hand upon sinners, saints tremble, consider his power, majesty, greatness, the nature of his judgments, and so judge themselves, and remove out of the way whatever may provoke. Psal. cxix. 119, 120, "Thou puttest away all the wicked of the earth like dross: therefore I love thy testimonies. My flesh trembleth for fear of thee; and I am afraid of thy judgments." When God, by his fiery judgments, separated the dross from the gold, the wicked from the ungodly, David trembled, considered the law of God more thoroughly, and loved his testimonies. So Isa. xxvi. 9, "When thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness;" Isaiah knew that it was the mind of God, in his judgments, to advantage his people by them, and therefore saith, "the inhabitants of the world," that is, the godly inhabitants, "will learn righteousness," they will see the evil of sin and hate it.

Obs. 3. God's own people are apt to go astray. "That the house of Israel may go no more astray." They had gone astray, and were in danger to do it again. They are like sheep, and no creature apter to wander out of the right way than that: Psal. cxix. 176, David confesseth he had gone astray like a lost sheep, a sheep that hath lost the fold, and lost the way. Adam, who was the ram in the head of the flock, he went astray in eating the forbidden fruit, and the whole flock of mankind have ever since followed him. Psal. lviii. 3, "The wicked go astray as soon as they be born;" even from the belly, as the Hebrew is; and Isaiah speaking in the name of the better sort, saith, chap. liii. 6, "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way;" one hath a way of pride; another of wantonness; a third hath a way of covetousness, &c. "Ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned," &c. 1 Pet. ii. 25. A sheep is,

- (1.) A foolish creature.
- (2.) Subject to many diseases.
- (3.) Obvious to much danger.

(4.) Aptest to leave the good paths and good pastures. The foolish Galatians were ready to embrace another gospel, and to admit circumcision. Peter and Barnabas stepped awry, when they dissembled with the Jews. David it is said turned aside "in the matter of Uriah the Hittite," 1 Kings xv. 5. And the people quickly turned aside out of the way of God, Deut. ix. 12.

Obs. 4. When God's people are once gone astray, they would never return of themselves, if God should let them alone in their wrong ways; he must reduce them by his own hand, and keep them in the right way by his own power. A sheep wanders further and further, and thinks not of returning: David when he had left the way of God, and turned aside to Bathsheba, he goes further, he makes Uriah drunk, plots his death, rejoices at it, takes the widow to be his wife, and never considers all this time that he is out of the way of God: and had not Nathan been sent to him, to tell him how he had wandered, he had not returned: so Peter denies his Master once, twice, thrice; and had not Christ looked upon him, he might have denied him for ever. This appears in the parable of the lost sheep, Matt. xviii. 12; the shepherd stays not for the sheep's returning, but goes into the mountains, and seeks that which is gone astray.

Obs. 5. God would have his people to keep close to him, to follow him, to walk with him, that they may no more go astray from after him. To go after God, is to worship him in his own way, to have him in our eye, to do things in order to him, to follow his directions, commands, to observe his operations in the world, to lean upon him for counsel, comfort, assistance, safety, and blessings, to submit to his will, to receive what he reveals, following on to know God, and to get further communion with him. God would have his people to do thus. Hosea xi. 10, "They shall walk after the Lord;" he would go before them, and they should follow him; they should not go after other gods, after their own eyes, hearts, inventions, but after him. God commends David for his following him, 1 Kings xiv. 8; he sets him there before Jeroboam, and condemns him by his example: "Thou hast not been as my servant David, who kept my commandments, and who followed me with all his heart, to do that only which was right in mine eyes." He went not from after God, but followed him closely; and it is very pleasing to God when his people do so. Elijah knew it well, and therefore said to the people, 1 Kings xviii. 21, "If the Lord be God, follow him," do not leave him to go after any other.

Obs. 6. God showeth mercy not only to little sinners, but great ones. They were polluted with all their transgressions, with all their rebellious seditions; yet being the house of Israel, his select ones, he would pardon their sins, though of a high nature. God is rich and great in mercy, and no sins can exceed his mercy; he would pass by their pollutions and transgressions, account them his people, and be their God, their sins should not obstruct his grace. Isa. i. 18, "Though their sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." Scarlet and crimson are of a deep dye; silk and wool do hold those colours firmly, you cannot wash nor wear them out, neither nature nor art can reduce them to their pristine condition: but let souls be dyed and stained with sins most deeply, with the deepest and vilest sins, yet God can take out that hellish dye and tincture, he can make them white as snow, pure as wool undyed. The wool in those countries was exceeding white: Psal. cxlvii. 16, "He giveth snow like wool;" and Dan. vii. 9, it is called "pure wool," in regard of the whiteness; Rev. i. 14, the whiteness of wool and snow are put together, "His hairs were white like wool, as white as snow." Now let a man's sin be willful murder, which is very great, and his soul be dipped in blood, yet God can and doth take away such sins, and make white again. Psal. li. 7, "Wash me," saith David, whose soul had a double dye, one of uncleanness, another of murder, "and I shall be whiter than snow." Manasseh's sins were exceeding great, yet the grace of God surmounted them all, and they were swallowed up in a sea of mercy. Luke vii. 37, it is said, a woman that was a sinner came to Christ. Was this such a matter to be recorded in holy writ? are not all men and women sinners? Yes; but the word sinner notes a notorious sinner; she was such a great and known sinner, that the Pharisee wondered at Christ, that he should suffer her to touch him, ver. 39. Her sins were many, ver. 47; yet mercy was reached out to her, ver. 48, "Thy sins are forgiven thee."

Obs. 7. Sin is a polluting thing. "Neither be polluted any more." Matt. xv. 19, 20, Christ reckons up sins there, and saith, "These are they which defile a man;" τα κοινώνοντα τον άνθρωπον, they make common, which in Scripture sense is, to defile, to profane, to make unclean; so Peter expounds it, Acts x. 14, "I have never eaten any thing common or unclean," κοινόν η ακάθαρτον, and Erasmus renders the word κοινός, Matt. xv. 11, impurum reddere. It is sin, and sin only, which makes impure creatures; therefore in Scripture it is compared to blood, Ezek. xvi. 6, to mire and dirt, Isa. lvii. 20, to vomit, 2 Pet. ii. 22, to filth, Isa. iv. 4; yea more, it is put in the abstract, and called "filthiness," Prov. xxx. 12; 2 Cor. vii. 1, μόλυσμος, that defiles both flesh and spirit; 2 Pet. ii. 20, τα μιάσματα του κόσμου. Physicians say, that miasmata are those spreadings or seminaries of the pestilence in a corrupt air: you know in a pestilence the air is infected, and that infection in the air spreads, and falling upon subjects capable of it, infects and kills them; so pollutions in the world are pestilential, they spread, infect, and kill many. Seeing sin is such a polluting thing, let us hasten to the fountain set open for sin and uncleanness, let us get our souls washed in the blood of Christ; Heb. ix. 14, that blood will purge, yea, purge out any spots, all defilements, 1 John i. 7. Rev. vii. 14, they had "washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Blood makes red, but the blood of the Lamb makes white, takes away all sin, and makes innocent.

Ver. 12—21. The word of the Lord came again to me, saying, Son of man, when the land sinneth against me by trespassing grievously, then will I stretch out mine hand upon it, and will break the staff of the bread thereof, and will send famine upon it, and will cut off man and beast from it: though these three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, they should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness, saith the Lord God. If I cause noisome beasts to pass through the land, and they spoil it, so that it be desolate, that no man may pass through because of the beasts: though these three men were in it, as I live, saith the Lord God, they shall deliver neither sons nor daughters: they only shall be delivered, but the land shall be desolate. Or if I bring a sword upon that land, and say, Sword, go through the land; so that I cut off man and beast from it: though these three men were in it, as I live, saith the Lord God, they shall deliver neither sons nor daughters, but they only shall be delivered themselves. Or if I send a pestilence into that land, and pour out my fury upon it in blood, to cut off from it man and beast: though Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, as I live, saith the Lord God, they shall deliver neither son nor daughter; they shall but deliver their own souls by their righteousness. For thus saith the Lord God; How much more when I send my four sore judgments upon Jerusalem, the sword, and the famine, and the noisome beast, and the pestilence, to cut off from it man and beast?

These words are the second part of the chapter, wherein,

1. The Lord shows what he will do with a sinning people, he will send judgment after judgment; and here are four laid down.

1. "Famine," in ver. 13.

2. "Noisome beasts," in ver. 15.

3. "A sword," in ver. 17.

4. "A pestilence," in ver. 19.

And all these are threatened against Jerusalem, ver. 21.

11. That he will not hearken unto the intercession of any, be they never so righteous, powerful in prayer, in the behalf of such a people.

Ver. 13. "By trespassing grievously." בַּעַל מַאֵל signifieth in general, any disloyalty of inferiors toward superiors; yet especially it notes those sins which are against the Lord, his covenant, and holy things; as here, they had forsaken God, broken the covenant, set up idols in the temple, worshipped the sun, &c. These were grievous sins, and therefore Piscator renders the word, prevaricando perfide, by sinning treacherously; the doubling of the word notes the affection to, delight, and continuance in sin, they were obstinate.

Of breaking the staff of bread, and famine, hath been spoken in the 4th and 5th chapters. God breaks the staff of bread, when he either takes away the virtue of it, that it doth not nourish, but men pine away and come to nothing; or when he takes away the bread itself, so that there is not sufficient to nourish. This the Lord doth, by sending unseasonable weather, by too much drought, too much rain, by frosts, hail, mildews, blastings, caterpillars, locusts, &c. And these are the hand of God stretched out, to break the staff of bread.

Ver. 15. "Noisome beasts to pass through the land." Some would understand by these beasts, the Babylonians, who spoiled the land, and laid all desolate; and if we should do so, it were not much amiss; for we do not find that any wild beasts were sent as a judgment upon the Jews, before their going into captivity; yet because he speaks here of distinct judgments, and that which is to be exemplary for all, we shall take it literally as the rest are. It was threatened in Moses's law, that evil beasts should be sent amongst them; Lev. xxvi. 22, "I will send wild beasts among you, which shall rob you of your children, and destroy your cattle, and make you few in number; and your high ways shall be desolate." And it was made good; "The Lord sent fiery serpents amongst them," which stung and destroyed many of them, Numb. xxi. 6; bears, which slew their children, 2 Kings ii. 24; lions, which slew the men, chap. xvii. 25, 26; and Josh. xxiv. 12, by the hornet God drove out the two kings of the Amorites. And it is probable, that when the Chaldeans came, many who fled into woods, mountains, and by-ways, were wounded and slain by wild beasts.

Ver. 17. "If I bring a sword upon that land." Sword is put for war. Jer. iv. 10, "The sword reacheth unto the soul;" chap. xxv. 29, "I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth," that is, a war; and so in this place, God would bring in an enemy, armed with the sword, and other military instruments, and they should make grievous work amongst them. Of the misery of war, formerly hath been spoken.

Ver. 19. "If I send a pestilence into that land." Hebrew is, דַּבַּר from דַּבַּר to speak; because in this judgment the Lord speaks aloud. It is a sore judgment, and because it is amongst us, I shall speak something of it. Philibertus Marelinnus calls it bellum divinum, a divine war: this judgment is more immediately from God, and hath less of man and second causes in it, than others; and therefore when the murrain and plague was upon the cattle, Exod. ix. 3, there was no hand of Moses or Aaron in bringing it in, as in other judgments; and Psal. xci. 5. it is called an arrow, not of man's, but God's shooting; God shoots it into cities and families, by ways undiscernible unto us.

That there are second causes of it we do not wholly deny, but assert they are few, and hard to be found out. It puzzles the learned physicians to express clearly what are the causes of it; some refer it to the indisposition of the air, by dryness and heat; some to malignant and occult qualities in the air, or in the body, or in the diet men feed upon; some to corruption in the blood; some to hunger; some to surfeit.

God's hand is seen much in this noisome disease. Some pestilences kill cattle, and not men; some kill men, and not cattle; some kill one sort of men, and not others; some kill women, and not men; and some men, and not women; some kill young, and not old people; some the strong and healthful, and not the weak and sickly; some the rich, not the poor; some the poor, and not the rich, as the learned have observed.

This judgment, the plague, and pestilence, spreads far: it lies up and down by night and day, it devours multitudes suddenly. In David's time seventy thousand were consumed by it in three days, 2 Sam. xxiv. 15. In Vespasian's days, at Rome, there died ten thousand a day, for many days together; and in the year 1343, it was so general through the christian world, that it destroyed half mankind; and in this city, thousands have died in one week; and how suddenly men die of it, is known unto many of you; some within few days, yea, some within few hours.

The great cause of this judgment is sin. You may observe in Scripture some sins, which brought in the plague or pestilence. 2 Sam. xxiv. David's heart was lifted up, and he confided in the number of his people, and hereupon was the plague sent: when persons in place have lofty spirits, and pride themselves in what they have, they make way for this judgment. So oppression of God's people; Pharaoh would not let the Israelites have liberty, but held them under; therefore the murrain and plague of boils came upon the cattle and people, Exod. ix. When people sin grievously, then God is ready to send in the arrows of pestilence. Do not many sin greatly, by pride in their apparel, by excess in their feasting, and pomp in the funerals of their friends, by their bitterness against those who differ from them? When the plague was much in France, especially at Lyons, about 1629, the propapists judged Calvinism to be the cause; those sectaries and heretics were tolerated; therefore Marchinus, a Florentine, in his book De Bello Divino, tells his Italian friends, that the Lord's end in that plague was to root out Calvinism.

"And pour out my fury upon it in blood." To put this for blood corrupted in the body by the plague, sounds harsh; we may take it for death; Ezek. iii. 18, "He shall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thine hand," that is, his death.

Ver. 14. "Though these three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, they," &c. To speak something of each of these: "Noah," Gen. vi. 9, "was a just man, and perfect in his generations;" there was none like unto him in the world in his days; "and he walked with God," he had great familiarity with him; his justice, sincerity, and piety were eminent. His name signifies, rest, or comfort; Gen. v. 29, "Lamech called his name Noah, saying, This same shall comfort us concerning our work and toil of our hands, because of the ground which the Lord hath cursed:" surely he was a great comfort both to God and man, being so holy as he was. It is conceived Lamech was a prophet, or at least uttered these words by a prophetic strain, intimating thereby, that Noah should be a type of Christ; and so he was in building the ark, and offering sacrifice, which was a sweet savour in the nostrils of God, and made him say, he would curse the earth no more for man's sake, Gen. viii. 21, 22. He was also "a preacher of righteousness," 2 Pet. ii. 5; and the man with whom God made a special covenant, and gave the rainbow for a sign thereof, Gen. ix. 9, 13; yet if this man should pray for them, God would not hear.

"Daniel." He was a holy man, and "would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat" and drink, Dan. i. 8. And he was a man of great wisdom; Ezek. xxviii. 3, "Wiser than Daniel:" men that had great insight into things, who knew secrets and mysteries, were paralleled with Daniel, or preferred before him, but Daniel was the standard. Daniel was alive at this time, and young, as will appear, if you consider this time. Ezekiel spake these words in the sixth year of Jehoiachin's captivity, if you compare chap. i. 2, with chap. xx. 1, where he speaks of the fifth and seventh year; so that this was the time between; and Dan. i. 1, 6, it is evident that Daniel was carried into captivity the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim, father to Jehoiachin; so that now Daniel had been fourteen years in Babylon, eight years of Jehoiakim's reign, for he reigned eleven years, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 5, and six of Jehoiachin's captivity. So that the learned think Daniel was not above thirteen years of age when he came into Babylon; therefore is it that the king spake unto Ashpenaz to bring of the children of Israel, and of the king's seed, and of the princes, whereof Daniel was one; and now at this time, when Ezekiel ranked him with Noah and Job, about twenty-seven. Surely Daniel was a choice man, of singular wisdom and holiness, whom the Spirit of God would thus join with Noah and Job, such great worthies in their days. He was a man much given to prayer; Dan. vi. 10, three times a day he prayed in his chamber, with his face towards Jerusalem, and that when it lay upon the hazard of his life. His prayer and fasting are mentioned, chap. ix. 3; x. 2, 3.

"Job." The Lord gives him this testimony, that he was "perfect and upright, one that feared God, and eschewed evil;" he was much in offering sacrifice for himself and family, Job i. 1, 5; he was a man of much faith, great patience, chap. xiii. 15; xiv. 14; James v. 11; he was acceptable with God, and prevailed for his friends in prayer, ch. xlii. 8, 9. If these three men were in a land that hath grievously sinned, they should not deliver it.

Some make great inquiry why these three men should be mentioned, rather than others, and they give in their answer:

1. It is thought they are named, for that they could not divert God's wrath by their holiness and prayers from the people of their times. Noah could not keep off the flood, nor Job the sad things which befell himself and his, nor Daniel the captivity.

2. Others think they are named, because they freed others in imminent danger in their times; Noah saved his family from the flood; Job prayed for his friends, and they were spared; Daniel preserved the magicians and wise men. But rather they are named, because they were men of great holiness, exercised with great trials, and so the more fervent in prayer. And what if these men, who were so acceptable to me, had so much interest in me, and often prevailed with me, should pray for you, yet they should do nothing for your deliverance by their prayers.

These were men in great afflictions, and affliction is the whetstone of prayer, the bellows to blow up that fire. David when he fled from Absalom, then he cried unto the Lord, and he heard him, Psal. iii. 4. Jonah, when he was in the whale's belly, prayed fervently; Jonah ii. 2. "I cried by reason of mine affliction unto the Lord, and he heard me." Surly Noah, when the flood came, poured out a flood of tears in prayer; and Job, when God's hand was so hard upon him, cried aloud unto God; and Daniel, among the lions; yet such was the case here, that if these three men were amongst them, they should do them no good.

Ver. 16, 18, 20. "They shall deliver neither sons nor daughters." Children are very dear to parents, they come out of their loins, are part of them, even the bowels; and holy parents would strive hard in prayer with God for them, they are so dear unto them, they would invent arguments (for love is inventive) to move the Lord to spare them; yet if they should bring the strongest arguments that nature, reason, or grace could find out, saith God, "They should deliver neither sons nor daughters" from any one of the judgments.

Ver. 14, 20. "They should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness." You must not think hence, that their holiness or righteousness merited deliverance of themselves. Man's goodness is nothing to God; all he can do is debt, and the best he doth is imperfect, no motive of God's will. Deliverance, salvation, are acts of grace and favour; Eph. ii. 8, 9. "By grace are ye saved; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any should boast." God hath out of his free grace promised to do great things for his elect, for the godly: and when he doth ought for them, it is not because they deserve it, or because they are godly, but because he hath promised. Many promises are made to godliness; 1 Tim. iv. 8. "Foolishly exercise profiteth little: but godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." Psal. l. 15. "Call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee;" not without calling, yet not for calling, but for his promise's sake.

Quest. If these three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job, who were so eminent in holiness, so fervent in prayer, should not by their prayers and piety deliver any, to what end should we desire the prayers of any in our days, when they are neither so holy nor effectual in prayer as these men were? is it not altogether in vain to crave the prayers of others, whatever our condition be?

Ans. 1. If God revealed our estate to be desperate, and that he would not hear any praying for us here, then it were in vain for us to request any to solicit the Lord on our behalf. 1 John v. 16. If a man have sinned a sin unto death, any prayer made for him by whomsoever, is to no purpose: I say not that you should pray for it, for the pardon of it, whoe'er should entreat you to do it.

2. We have divine warrant for the practice of it. 1 Sam. xii. 19. "All the people said unto Samuel, Pray for thy servants unto the Lord thy God, that we die not;" and 1 Thess. v. 25. "Brethren," (saith Paul,) "pray for us." Eph. vi. 18, 19. he entreats them to pray for all the saints, and for him. James v. 14. "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him;" and then ver. 15. "The prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up." Esth. iv. 16. she would have all the Jews gathered together that were in Shushan, to fast and pray for her.

Quest. 2. Had these three men met together, and agreed to pray for this people, would God have demerited them? Doth not Christ say, Matt. xviii. 19. "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven?"

Ans. If two, three, or more agree to ask any thing, it must be in faith, Matt. xxi. 22, according to God's will, 1 John v. 14; which could not here have been, for God had declared his mind otherwise, and so they could neither in faith, nor according to his will, have prayed; they would never have agreed together to ask a thing contrary to his mind.

Obs. 1. That lands may sin grievously against God, provoke him greatly. So did the Jews; Ezek. vii. 23. their land was full of bloody crimes, their city full of blackness, they had variety of abominations, chap. viii. 10. Hos. xii. 14. "Ephraim provoked him to anger most bitterly;" Isa. lxiii. 10. "They rebelled, and vexed his holy Spirit;" hereupon you find, Lam. i. 8. "Jerusalem hath grievously sinned;" and Amos v. 12. "I know your mighty sins;" they did mightily provoke, press, and weary God. See one place, in Jer. ii. 10—12. "Pass over the isles of Chittim and see; and send unto Kedar, and consider diligently, and see if there be such a thing. Hath a nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods? but my people have changed their glory for that which doth not profit. Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, and be horribly afraid, be ye very desolate, saith the Lord."

Obs. 2. God hath variety of judgments to punish a sinning people; he can stretch out his hand, bring in a famine, the noisome beasts, the sword, and pestilence. When men have grievous sins, God hath sore judgments for them: read Dent. xxviii. and Lev. xxvi. Let lands be never so full of people and cattle, let their towns and cities be never so well fortified, God can quickly cut off man and beast, and lay all desolate. Cardanus in his eighth book De Varietate, ch. xlv. reckons up seven judgments of a grievous nature, that do befall the sons of men, three more besides those here in our prophet. (1.) Earthquakes, which sometimes are very grievous, and shake down whole towns. (2.) Inundations, when waters break out and drown up whole countries. (3.) Winds, which do great mischief, both at sea and land. And these we have here mentioned, how grievous are they! In famines, parties have ate their own flesh, and mothers their own children. Wild beasts fill all full of fears, that none dare look out of doors, or travel the highways. The sword hath made sore work in Germany, Ireland, and England of late days. The plague is amongst us, and what it will do ere it leave us, is unknown; we that have escaped the sword, it may be are numbered out for the plague. O let us repent of our former and present sins, pride in apparel, excess in diet, pomp in funerals, bitter divisions, unchristian carriages one towards another, unthankfulness for mercies, our unworthy walking of the gospel, and take heed of all sin for the future.

Obs. 3. Whatever the judgment be upon a sinning land and people, God is the author of it, acts in, and orders it. "I will stretch out my hand, and break the staff of bread," ver. 13; "If I cause noisome beasts to pass through the land," ver. 15; "If I bring a sword upon that land," ver. 17; "If I send a pestilence," ver. 19. These judgments come not casually, they are by divine power and providence: if man or beast fall by them, it is God cuts them off; if the wild beasts come here and there, it is God causes them to go those ways; he gives commission to the sword, and saith, Go through the land; it could not enter without God, much less go through a kingdom without warrant from him; if the plague wander up and down in a land, skip from street to street, from family to family, if it slay thousands and ten thousands, the Lord bids it, orders it to do so: therefore we should look at God's hand in all judgments, quietly submit to his stroke, and humble ourselves under his mighty hand. "I will stretch out my hand and break." &c. Shall God's hand be stretched out, and we not take notice of it? it is argument of a profane spirit not to do it. Isa. xxvi. 11, "Lord, when thy hand is lifted up, they will not see; but they shall see," and feel to their destruction.

Obs. 4. The sins of a land or people may be so great and grievous, that the Lord will show them no mercy, but proceed irrevocably to their destruction, what means soever be used for their help. You have sinned so against me, saith the Lord, that though Noah, Daniel, and Job were here, men of renown for their piety and prayers, though they should singly or jointly pour out their hearts before me, use all their interest in me for you, yet should they do no good; they should not change my thoughts, my heart, in the least degree, they should not obtain at my hands to abate aught of my fury; all the judgments intended should come, not one of them should be withheld. Jer. xv. 1—3, "Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet my mind could not be toward this people." Moses was "the man of God." Psal. xc. title; the man of God's choice, love, honouring, the man of his counsel, that did his work, that ruled his people: the man that was so potent in prayer, that he held God's hands, and kept him from destroying the progenitors of this people here spoken of, and brought God to repent of the evil he thought to do unto them, Exod. xxxii. 14; and Samuel was a man who had the ear and heart of God very much, when he cried for Israel God heard him, I Sam. vii. 9: yet if these two men stood before him, and, mediating for these people, should produce their strong arguments as of old, God's mind could not be towards them, but he would say, as it there follows, "Cast them out of my sight, and let them go forth:—such as are for death, to death; such as are for the sword, to the sword: such as are for the famine, to the famine; such as are for the captivity, to the captivity. And I will appoint over them four kinds, saith the Lord: the sword to slay, the dogs to tear, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the earth, to devour." Their sin was so high, that the prayers of the holy, yea the holiest men, would do them no good. Jeremiah was a praying and a weeping man, much affected with the condition of this people, Jer. ix. 1, 2; xiv. 7—9, and was much in prayer for them; but God was so far from hearing him for them, that he forbade him to pray for them, chap. vii. 16, "Pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me; for I will not hear thee." So in chap. xiv. 11, "Pray not for this people for their good:" as if the Lord had said, Jeremiah, I know thou wilt be praying, weary and wear out thyself, but pray not for their good; if thou wilt pray for their destruction, that I would hasten in my judgments upon them, I will hear thee so praying, otherwise not.

Quest. But what if they prayed themselves?

Ans. It follows in the next verse, "When they fast, I will not hear their cry; and when they offer burnt offering and an oblation, I will not accept them; but I will consume them by the sword, famine, and pestilence." In James v. 16, you find "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much;" if of one righteous man, surely the working prayers of many righteous men should do more. You have six mentioned in Ezekiel and Jeremiah, Noah, Daniel, Job, Moses, Samuel, and Jeremiah himself; yet if all these should make the most fervent prayers that ever were made, God would not hear, but proceed in his intended judgments against this people. Their sins had such malignity in them, as that they outcried the prayers of all the righteous, yea, the very mercies of God.

Obs. 5. Righteousness is advantage to men in times of common calamity. Noah, Daniel, Job were righteous persons, and if they had been in the land or city when these sore judgments were come upon it, they should have been delivered, ver. 14, 16, 18, 20; though their righteousness could not profit others, yet it should profit themselves. Prov. xi. 4, "Riches profit not in the day of wrath; but righteousness delivereth from death;" and ver. 6, "The righteousness of the upright shall deliver them." When men are holy, praying, upright men, God hath a special care of them in times of danger: Noah, when the flood came, he had an ark to be secure in; when Sodom was destroyed, Lot was pulled out by an angel.

Ver. 22, 23. Yet, behold, therein shall be left a remnant that shall be brought forth, both sons and daughters: behold, they shall come forth unto you, and ye shall see their way and their doings: and ye shall be comforted concerning the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, even concerning all that I have brought upon it. And they shall comfort you, when ye see their ways and their doings: and ye shall know that I have not done without cause all that I have done in it, saith the Lord God.

These two verses are the third part of the chapter, and contain a respiting of some from the judgments there mentioned. You have here,

1. A gracious promise of preserving a remnant; "Therein shall be left a remnant."

2. A declaration what should be done with that remnant; "They shall be brought forth," and come to Babylon.

3. The events following hereupon; and they are these:

1. They should see their ways and doings, what the judgments upon Jerusalem, and their deliverance from them, wrought in them.

2. Be comforted.

(1.) Touching God's dealings with Jerusalem; "And ye shall be comforted concerning the evil," &c.

(2.) Enlargement of their comfort from the sight of their brethren's ways and practices; "And they shall comfort you, when ye see," &c.

(3.) Acknowledgment of the equity of God's dealing so with Jerusalem.

There were sundry things which saddened the hearts of the captives in Babylon much.

[1.] That God should so forget his covenant made with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and his oath to David, Psal. lxxxix. 28—36, as to root out their seed from the land of the living.

[2.] That they had hearkened to the voice of Jeremiah and yielded themselves up into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, who had brought them thither;

whereas their brethren still inhabited Jerusalem, had the benefit of the temple, and possessed their lands and habitations in Judea, themselves being destitute of all.

[3.] That the temple, city, and pleasant land should be laid waste, by such sore judgments brought upon them at once, as famine, wild beast, sword, and pestilence.

Against these sad apprehensions the Lord here lays in comfort. And,

For the first, he tells them there shall be left a remnant, that God will be mindful of his covenant and oath, that he will preserve a seed from the loins of their fathers, have a church and number to worship him.

For the second, he certifies them that those who escaped should be brought forth unto them in Babylon; and so they should not have cause any more to complain that they had listened to Jeremiah, and were brought into Babylon, for by this means they had escaped the sore judgments their brethren met with, and by this time were well accommodated in Babylon, and fitted in some measure to entertain their desolate brethren; and should see the judgments threatened by Jeremiah accomplished fully, and what mercy it was they were brought hither beforehand.

For the third, that all should be laid waste, he assures them that he hath had just cause for it, that he hath not in his fury done ought unadvisedly, to be repented of, but considered the cause thoroughly, viz. the grievousness of their sins, which deserved to the full all that he had done, and more; therefore saith, "Ye shall know that I have not done without cause all that I have done in it;" whatever I have done against the temple, city, land, and people, I had such cause for it, as will stop your mouths for ever. What if my judgments have been sore upon them? yet there is this good come by them, they acknowledge me just and righteous, are ashamed of and mourn for their ways, and will tell you, when they come amongst you, that in the midst of wrath they have met with mercy; for "they shall comfort you, when ye see their ways and their doings."

"Their ways." Some understand hereby, their former course of life at Jerusalem, which they should still walk in, which when the others should see, they should be comforted in the heavy hand of God upon them. Others understand by their ways, that sad course of life they should lead in Babylon. The primitive captives thought them happy who were at Jerusalem, and themselves the most miserable; but now when they should see them in captivity with themselves, and suffering as hard, if not harder things than themselves, the Babylonish yoke would seem easier. Consorts in misery are comforts to each other.

Junius interprets their ways and doings of the confession of their sins, and repentance; the sore and heavy judgments of God convinced them of the greatness of their sins, caused them, being now stripped of all, and in the hands of a potent and barbarous enemy, to confess their iniquity, and repent of their former ways and doings; and that induceth me to close with this exposition in those words, "They shall comfort you, when ye see their ways and their doings," thus: Though we have met with grievous judgments, have lost city, temple, country, all, are become captives like yourselves, yet God is just in all he hath done; he hath made good the word of his servants Jeremiah and Ezekiel, brought us to you, but wital, he hath broken our hearts for our sins, made us to abhor and loathe our former ways and doings, so that we must say, in wrath he hath remembered mercy, and recompensed all our temporal losses with spiritual advantages: and this was a comfort to the hearts of the former captives, when they saw their ways changed. Doubtless the first captives were a great comfort unto them, when they came into Babylon naked, and spoiled of all; and when they had told them of the severe judgments which befell them, how that some did eat their own children, &c. certainly they were astonished at it; but when they told them what good they had gotten by the dealings of God with them, they were comforted again.

Obs. 1. When God's judgments are sorest, yet then he shows mercy to some. When God brought his four sore judgments upon Jerusalem, viz. the sword, famine, noisome beast, and pestilence, yet a remnant is preserved; each judgment devoured its number, hundreds, thousands, and ten thousands, but all those judgments destroyed not all the people; God had some elect ones amongst them, and the election obtains mercy, and, together with them, some others. The Lord never poured out his wrath so fully, as that no drams of mercy were mingled with it. In the flood of wrath which drowned the world, were drops of mercy which saved Noah. In the brimstone and fire which burned up Sodom and Gomorrah, were sparks of divine love, to deliver Lot. He ever hath in wrath remembered mercy, and will do it to the end, the world shall not have advantage to charge him with cruelty; had none been spared, they might have said so; a remnant is left, and the mouth of iniquity is stopped.

Obs. 2. The Lord will satisfy and comfort the hearts of his people against the evil and scandal that comes by any of his judgments. When Jerusalem was destroyed, the Jews rooted out and carried to Babylon, what joy was there in the nations! what reproachings of the Jews! Where now is their God? what now is become of their holy city and temple, are not all laid waste, &c.? At these things the Jews' hearts in Babylon were grieved, offended; therefore the Lord tells them, they "shall be comforted concerning all the evil he hath brought upon Jerusalem;" they shall know the greatness of their sins, which moved him to do so, they shall know the fruit of his judgments, how they have caused those brought unto them to confess their sins, to repent of their ways, and turn to the Lord.

Obs. 3. That the Lord is righteous and just in his judgments. "I have not done without cause all that I have done in Jerusalem;" he ent not off man or beast without cause: it is the devil's design to do so; therefore saith God, Job ii. 3, "Thou movedst me against him, to destroy him without cause," but God would not do it; whatever he doth, he hath great cause for; he is the only and infinitely wise God, and doth all things upon the height of reason. Their sins were such as impeached his honour, corrupted his worship, brake the covenant, questioned his providence, violated justice, and conformed them to the heathen; he had cause enough therefore to destroy them, and do what he did, namely, to vindicate his honour, worship, covenant, providence, justice, and to show that his people, if they will sin with the world, must suffer grievous things for it. Jer. xxii. 8, 9, when the nations should pass by the city and say, "Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this great city?" God will have the cause known; "then they shall answer, Because they have forsaken the covenant of the Lord their God, and worshipped other gods, and served them;" and chap. xix. 13, God said he would make Jerusalem as Tophet (that is, fill it with blood, and the bodies of slain men); and why would he do so? "Because of all the houses upon whose roofs they have burned incense unto all the host of heaven, and have poured out drink offerings unto other gods."

Obs. 4. Men shall know in due time the equity of God's judgments. "And ye shall know that I have not done aught without cause." God's "judgments are a great depth," Psal. xxxvi. 6, men cannot sound or measure them; the nature of them, the suddenness and severity of them, the frequency and continuance of them, do puzzle men, and especially the causes of them, which are hidden from the eyes of most. Job's friends mistook the cause of God's dealing so sharply with Job, but afterwards they understood it; they in Babylon, and others, were astonished at the sore judgments of God, but God let them know the cause of it, and so they were brought to justify God. 1 Kings ix. 7—9, "I will cut off Israel out of the land which I have given them; and this house, which I have hallowed for my name, will I cast out of my sight; and Israel shall be a proverb and a by-word among all people; and at this house, which is high, every one that passeth by it shall be astonished, and shall hiss; and they shall say, Why hath the Lord done thus unto this land, and to this house? and they shall answer, Because they forsook the Lord their God, and have taken hold upon other gods, and have worshipped and served them; therefore hath the Lord brought upon them all this evil." God proclaims the cause of his severe judgments, that so men may see the equity of them, that he is "righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works," Psal. cxlv. 17. When we hear of the bloody doings which have been in Germany so long, and of those in Ireland, we are amazed, wonder what is the cause that God proceeds so severely with them; there is cause sufficient for it, and if we know it not, God will in his time clear himself, and make it known to us.

CHAPTER XV.

And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, What is the vine tree more than any tree, or than a branch which is among the trees of the forest? Shall wood be taken thereof to do any work? or will men take a pin of it to hang any vessel thereon? Behold, it is cast into the fire for fuel; the fire devoureth both the ends of it, and the midst of it is burned. Is it meet for any work? Behold, when it was whole, it was meet for no work: how much less shall it be meet yet for any work, when the fire hath devoured it, and it is burned? Therefore thus saith the Lord God; As the vine tree among the trees of the forest, which I have given to the fire for fuel, so will I give the inhabitants of Jerusalem. And I will set my face against them; they shall go out from one fire, and another fire shall devour them; and ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I set my face against them. And I will make the land desolate, because they have committed a trespass, saith the Lord God.

In this short chapter, under the similitude of a useless and fruitless vine tree, is set forth the condition of the inhabitants of Jerusalem; that is fit for nothing but the fire, and so are they fit only for judgment.

1. The similitude is propounded in ver. 2, and illustrated in ver. 3—5.

11. The apodosis and application of it, to the men of Jerusalem, is in ver. 6—8.

111. The authority of this prophecy, in the first verse, "And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying." The prophet did not form this parable, or take it up from others, or by observation, but he had it from the Lord.

God often in Scripture calls Israel a vine, and his vineyard, Psal. lxxx. 8, 14, 15; Isa. iii. 14; xxvii. 2; Jer. xii. 10; Ezek. xvii. 6. And they were "a noble vine," Jer. ii. 21; "a choice vine," Isa. v. 2; "a goodly vine," Ezek. xvii. 8; but because it was now become a "degenerate plant of a strange vine," Jer. ii. 21; "an empty vine," Hos. x. 1, or brought forth wild grapes; therefore the Lord likens the Jews here to the wood of a fruitless vine.

We shall a little show you wherein the Jews, who were the church of God, resembled the vine.

1. Vines are few in respect of other trees, so were the Jews in respect of other people; Deut. vii. 7, they "were the fewest of all people."

2. Vines are planted by hill-sides, by houses, in gardens, orchards, &c.; and the Jews were planted in the choicest land; Hos. ix. 13, "In a pleasant place;" Isa. v. 1, "In a very fruitful hill." The vine was brought out of Egypt, it was a chosen vine, and was planted, Psal. lxxx. 8; but where? in "a good land," Deut. viii. 7, even a land of brooks, fountains, springs, valleys, hills; in a land "flowing with milk and honey, the glory of all lands," Ezek. xx. 6; therefore called a branch of his own planting, Isa. ix. 21, planted with his right hand, Psal. lxxx. 15.

3. Vines are weak, must have props and supports to uphold them; God dealt so by the Jews; Deut. i. 31, "In the wilderness the Lord thy God bare thee, as a man doth bear his son, in all the way that ye went." Children are weak, and must be carried in the arms; and so God did carry them; Deut. xxxiii. 27, "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms."

4. Fruitful; no tree so fruitful as the vine; Psal. cxxviii. 3, it is called the "fruitful vine;" it is fruitful in branches, and fruitful in clusters. The Jews were as fruitful a nation as any; Deut. x. 22, "Thy fathers went down into Egypt with threescore and ten persons, and now the Lord thy God hath made thee as the stars of heaven for multitude:" in a natural way they were very fruitful.

5. It spreads much; so the Jews, who were God's vine; Psal. lxxx. 9—11, the psalmist saith there of this vine, that it filled the land, covered the hills with its shadow, sent out her boughs unto the sea, and her branches unto the river, and they spread far.

6. It is pleasant and delightful; such were the Jews; Isa. v. 7, "The vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant;" the Hebrew is, his plant of pleasures.

7. Most pains required about vines of any plants or trees; much digging, dressing, pruning, supporting, fencing is needful: the Jews had much pains or cost bestowed upon them; Isa. v. 4, "What could have been done more to my vineyard, that I have not done in it?" Other trees are little looked after, but the vine must have special care; John xv. 2, the husbandman observes every branch, the fruitful and unfruitful; Amos iii. 2, "You have 1 known of all the families," &c.

Ver. 2. "What is the vine tree more than any tree?" The Hebrew is, מהו עץ the wood of the vine; the word עץ signifies mostly a living tree, as Gen. i. 11, "Let the earth bring forth the fruit tree;" Psal. i. 3, "Like a tree planted by the rivers of water;" yet sometimes it notes the trunk and body of a tree cut down, as in Deut. iv. 28, "Ye shall serve gods, the work of men's hands, wood and stone." Some would understand it here of the vine tree dead and cut down, but that needs not; it is more suitable to Scripture, to take it for a fruitless vine tree, neither dead nor cut down, but as if dead and cut down: and what is such a vine more than other trees? it is not only lower, weaker, more lunched, wreathed, unsightly than they, but it is of less use than any of the trees of the forest; they serve to make temples, palaces, houses, ships, musical and martial instruments, and tools for many uses, but for the vine tree, it serves not for any such use. By the interrogation, he sets out the unusefulness of it; it is so far from being equal to the trees of the forest, as that it is not comparable to a branch of one of those trees. Take one arm or branch of an oak, elm, or ash, it would be of more use to the joiner or carpenter, than the wood of a thousand vines.

Therefore it follows,

Ver. 3. "Shall wood be taken thereof to do any work?" This is a great derogation from the vine, the wood of it is not fit for any work; the wood of other trees is fit for variety of services within doors and without, this for none. The Hebrew is, to make it into work. It is not fit to make a pin of, which is a small thing, and for small uses, as to hang a cloak, hat, or band on: "Will men take a pin of it to hang any vessel thereon?" no, they will not, they know it is unfit to hang the least thing on it.

Ver. 4. "Behold, it is cast into the fire for fuel." Here he showeth what it is fittest for, viz. "the fire;" neither is it the best fuel for that, for the branches of vines, cut and bound up, if they be reserved any considerable time, will not burn well.

"The fire devoureth both the ends of it, and the midst of it is burned." The roots and tops, namely, the branches, they are only for the fire, and quickly consumed in it; and whereas you may think the body, which is the middle part, may be good for somewhat, it is otherwise: the midst of it, that you think strongest, soundest, most useful, burns like the rest, and you cannot make ought of it. Other trees, when the roots and tops are burned, their bodies are improved to several great and good purposes: the vine tree is wholly combustible matter, and only for the fire. Some refer the ends to the ten tribes, and those carried away under Jehoiachin; the midst to those that remained at Jerusalem.

"Is it meet for any work?" The Hebrew is, הא יצליח Will it prosper to work? it will break in pieces, deceive a man's expectation, come to nought, and his labour will be in vain.

Ver. 5. "When it was whole, it was meet for no work: how much less shall it be meet yet for any work when the fire hath devoured it?" Sanctius thinks that their vines at this time were much wasted, for the Chaldeans had been twice there, in Jehoiakim's and Jehoiachin's time; and where armies come, they spoil the countries, pull down buildings, cut up trees, tear the vines in pieces, and lay the vineyards open to waste; they had almost ruined the metaphorical vine the Jews. As therefore the vine, neither whole nor burned, was meet for any domestic or state service; so this Jewish people, neither in their prosperity nor adversity, neither before the Chaldeans afflicted them nor since, have been serviceable to God or his church.

Ver. 7. "Set my face against them." See chap. xiv. 8, concerning these words.

"They shall go out from one fire, and another fire shall devour them." By fire is meant affliction, judgments, Psal. lxxvi. 12, "We went through fire and water," and there be sundry resemblances between them.

1. Fire is dreadful to men's thoughts; fire of Sodom, and fire of hell; how terrible! if you see a ship on fire, &c. So judgments, afflictions are exceeding terrible to the apprehensions of many; the sword, how sad did it make the hearts of many before it was drawn! the plague now is terrible to your thoughts.

2. It is painful; and so are the judgments of God; they put a land into travail. Isa. xxvi. when the judgments of God were abroad, what saith the prophet? ver. 17, "Like as a woman with child, that draweth near the time of her delivery, is in pain, and crieth out in her pangs; so have we been in thy sight, O Lord." God's judgments breed terrible pangs in those who are under them.

3. Fire enlightens the eyes, and judgments enlighten men's understandings: Hos. v. 15, "In their affliction they will seek me early;" then they will see the nature of their sins, the danger of their lives, the great need they have of mercy, and therefore will seek me early: hence it is that God saith so oft after judgments threatened, "They shall know that I am the Lord."

4. It refines; so do the judgments of the Lord: Zech. xiii. 9, "I will bring them through the fire, and refine them as silver is refined;" the Babylonish furnace purged out their idolatry. Isa. i. 25, "I will turn my hand upon thee, and purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin;" when God takes away his hand of mercy from a nation, and turns his hand of judgment upon it, then he purges, &c.

5. It consumes; and so do his judgments: Psal. xxi. 9, "Thou shalt make them as a fiery oven in the time of thine anger: the Lord shall swallow them up in his wrath, and the fire shall devour them." Famine devoured its thousands, &c.

The scope of the words is, that they should have judgment after judgment; if they escaped one, they should fall into another, until they were consumed.

Ver. 8. "Because they have committed a trespass." Hebrew is, פשע פשע, he means not one trespass only, but it is a singular put for a plural, and is cleared by that, chap. xiv. 13, "When the land sinneth against me by trespassing grievously," לפשע פשע there is little difference in the words, and those here might have been so rendered, they have trespassed grievously.

Obs. 1. The ministers of God have warrant to use similitudes in their teaching of the people. God himself doth it here, he brings in a parable of the vine tree, and allegorizeth upon it; and the Scripture is frequent in parables and allegories. Christ was much in parables; they help memory, if familiar and known; they convince more fully than plain speeches.

Obs. 2. That men are apt to glory and confide in the privileges they have. "What is the vine tree more than any tree?" The Jews, because they were God's vine, God's people, thought themselves better than any, than all other, that they should never be cut down and destroyed: What! are not we God's vine, his pleasant plant? hath he not made a hedge about us, done much for us? will he pluck up the hedge and lay us waste? No man would ever destroy his own vine and vineyard, and shall we think God will deal so by his? The Jews doted upon their privileges, that they were Abraham's seed, they had the temple, that they were a plant of God's planting; and it is incident to most, to adhere to and confide in some privileges they have: but whence had they, or any, their privileges? if they were the people of God, his vine, the Lord chose them, they chose not him; he planted them, and was pleased to call them his vine, and vineyard; whatever excellency or privilege they had, it was from his free grace and good pleasure: neither they nor we can merit or purchase aught at the hands of God. Let us not glory in privileges, in carnal excellences, have any confidence in the flesh; but remember, the more privileges we have, the stronger obligation is upon us to admire free grace, and to honour the God of our mercies.

Obs. 3. The Lord knows what all trees are, the vine tree in the vineyard and the trees of the forest, the cedars of Lebanon, the oaks of Bashan, and shrubs of the wilderness; he knows the goodness or meanness, the tallness or lowness, the weakness or strength, the fruitfulness or unfruitfulness, the usefulness or unusefulness of every tree. He knew what trees the Jews were, and what trees the gentiles were; which tree was fit for the fire, and which fit for other services; he knows every man's nature, qualities, operations, uses, and ends.

Obs. 4. Trees in the forest and wilderness may be of better use than trees in the orchard and vineyard, wild trees may exceed those which are planted. "What is the vine tree, to a branch among the trees of the forest? shall wood be taken thereof to do any work?" Will it serve for a pin to hang a hat on? no; other trees you may take the wood and timber of, and employ many ways. The heathens, that were trees of the forest, had more good in them than the Jews, who were his vine; they did more service to the world, they were more just, diligent, faithful, bountiful, pitiful than the Jews; they were fitter for temple work than the other: and is it not so now? are not many forest trees better than us christians?

Obs. 5. People degenerating from the condition they were set in, lose their esteem and favour. This people of the Jews was a noble vine, a choice vine, a good vine; but now it was become a degenerate plant of a strange vine. Jer. ii. 21, "I had planted

1. God, xv. 17. thee a noble vine, wholly a right seed:
Psal. xlv. 4. how then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto me? They were become like Sodom and Gomorrah; Isa. i. 10, "Hear the word of the Lord, ye rulers of Sodom; give ear unto the law of our God, ye people of Gomorrah;" now their vine was of the vine of Sodom and of the fields of Gomorrah, now their grapes were of gall, and their clusters were bitter, Deut. xxxii. 32; and why so? Isa. i. 4, they were a sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil-doers, children that were corrupters; they had forsaken the Lord, his ordinances, truths, worship; they had changed their glory, and wandered after idols, Jer. ii. 11, 20; they oppressed in the gates, the city and land were full of violence and bloody crimes, Ezek. vii. 23; and hereupon they lost their favour with God, and esteem they had of him, so that he came to abhor them; Psal. lxxviii. 59, he greatly abhorred Israel, forsook them, delivered them into captivity, and into the enemy's hand, ver. 61. Because they degenerated so, God branded them with disgraceful titles, as "a rebellious nation, impudent children," Ezek. ii. 3, 4; "hypocritical," Isa. x. 6; "lying," Isa. xxx. 9; "reprobate silver," Jer. vi. 39; "sons of the sorceress, seed of the adulterer," Isa. lvii. 3; "soothsayers," Isa. ii. 6; "supplanters, slanderers," Jer. ix. 4; "an assembly of treacherous men," ver. 2; "a homeborn slave," Jer. ii. 14; thorns and briars, Isa. x. 17; "naughty figs," Jer. xxiv. 8; "a garden without water," Isa. i. 30; "scorpions," Ezek. ii. 6; "a generation of vipers," Matt. iii. 7. When this vine lost its sweetness, it lost the interest it had in the heart of God, and the more it degenerated, the more distasteful and reproachful it became. Degeneracy from God and his ways is a provoking sin. God had done more for his people than any people in the world, he had given them such a land, such ordinances, laws, privileges, as none else had; and now for them to forsake God was a grievous trespass, they violated many bands of love, they brake the covenant of their God, and did secretly accuse God, as not being so good as he had promised to be unto them: therefore, Micah vi. 3, 4, "O my people, what have I done unto thee, and wherein have I wearied thee? testify against me. I brought thee up out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed thee out of the house of servants," &c.

It is good for us therefore to keep close to God, not to admit of any undervaluing or discouraging thoughts of God and his ways. Let not your hearts draw you back from God; Heb. x. 38, "If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him." Drawing back is the way to perdition; Heb. iii. 12, Take heed, therefore, lest there be at any time, in any of you, a heart of unbelief, to depart from the living God. If you would be honourable and fruitful, you must cleave fully to God, and keep close to him and his ways; John xv. 4, "The branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me."

Obs. 6. That people which is fruitless and useless, is determined of God to destruction. The vine tree being barren and of no use, was given and cast into the fire; and so should the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for they were neither fruitful nor useful.

(1.) Not fruitful. Hos. x. 1, "Israel is an empty vine, he bringeth forth fruit unto himself;" this seemeth a contradiction, that Israel should be called an empty vine, and yet bring forth fruit, but it is not, the fruit was selfish fruit, and that is as no fruit in God's account; it brought forth branches, leaves, and wild grapes, but God reckoned not these for fruit; their idolatry, superstition, oppression, violence, and injustice, were wild grapes; their hypocrisy, formal professions, carnal confidences, their fastings and sacrificings, were leafy things; they had no fruit unto holiness and righteousness, their worship was not pure, laws were not executed; so that they were unfruitful towards God and man.

The evil of fruitlessness lies in this:

[1.] A vine or people that are fruitless, deceive God's expectation: Isa. v. 2, "He looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes;" God had taken great pains, been at great cost with his people, waited long for grapes, and when all came to all, there were only wild grapes; ver. 7, "He looked for judgment, but beheld oppression; for righteousness, but behold a cry."

[2.] It offends God to have such trees in his vineyard, people that bring forth nothing but wild grapes, cursed fruit. How grievous was it to God, that there was no justice in the land! Jer. v. 1, "Run to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see if there be any that executeth judgment, that seeketh the truth; and I will pardon it;" Isa. v. 3, "Judge between me and my vineyard;" it argues God was troubled. Though they had no good fruit, yet they had evil fruit too much, such as offended his eyes, his ears, his taste; therefore, Isa. i. 15, "I will hide mine eyes from you; yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear;" and the grapes they bare, were sour grapes, distasteful unto the Lord.

[3.] Fruitlessness is a reproach to God, who is the Husbandman of the vineyard, as if he were not skilful, or negligent, and did not what was fitting to make the vine to bear; and therefore,

Isa. v. 3, 4, "Judge between me and my vineyard, what could have been done more;" I have done all which is fitting for a prudent and industrious vine-dresser to do, and my vine is a reproach to me. When men till their land, sow it with the best seed, and it brings forth nothing but thistles, nettles, or weeds, it is a reproach to the owner. If other people had had that pains taken with them, those pains and mercies bestowed upon them, which the Jews had, they would have brought forth fruit unto repentance.

[4.] Fruitless ones are a burden to God, to the glory, and to the place where they grow.

First, to God, who, speaking of this people, Isa. i. 24, saith, "Ah, I will ease me of mine adversaries." They were a mighty burden unto him; Amos ii. 13, "Behold, I am pressed under you, as a cart is pressed that is full of sheaves."

Secondly, to the godly: Lot's righteous soul was vexed with the Sodomites, 2 Pet. ii. 7: they were a vine that brought forth nothing good. David sighed and said, "Woe is me;" &c. Such hinder the liberties and sadden the spirits of those who are truly good.

Thirdly, to the place where they grow: Luke xiii. 7, the barren fig tree must be cut down: and why? it cumbereth the ground, keeps out others which might be set up in the place, sucks up the moisture and fatness of the earth, overshadows and prejudiceth the plants which are near.

[5.] Such are slighted, looked upon as worthless, inconsiderable. Take a vine or tree which hath no fruit, it is not regarded: it is not the leaves or branches, but the fruit makes it esteemed: it is not a leafy profession, but a fruitful conversation, makes people to be esteemed. Mark xiv. 3, a woman bestows a box of precious ointment upon Christ's head; some envied at it, but Christ said she had wrought a good work, and this begat such a high esteem for her in the heart of Christ, that to honour her, he said, the fact should never be forgotten, but wherever the gospel should be preached in the world, that she had done should be spoken of for a memorial of her, ver. 9: she was a tree that bare good fruit, and was honoured for it, but fruitless trees are not minded, not valued; take a man that doth no good, we say he is an idle, an empty man.

[6.] Fruitlessness declares a man to be an evil man. A tree is known by its fruit: if it have good fruit it is a good tree, if ill, it is an ill tree; but what if it have no fruit? you cannot say, it is neither good nor bad, God hath no such trees in his garden: in that it hath no fruit, it is an ill tree; a barren tree cannot be good; when Christ found no fruit upon the tree, he dealt with it as with an evil tree.

[7.] That which is fruitless, is near to a curse. Matt. xxi. 19, when Christ saw a fig tree without figs, what said he to it? "Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever. And presently the fig tree withered away." Heb. vi. 8, the ground that brings forth briars and thorns, not herbs meet for the dressers, "is rejected, and nigh unto cursing." Prov. x. 7, "The name of the wicked shall rot;" wicked men are fruitless, and God will curse their names; Esau, Jeroboam, Judas.

If a vine be fruitless, God will take away what he hath bestowed, and undo what he hath done. Isa. v. 5, "I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard; I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and break down the wall thereof, and it shall be trodden down." The hedge and wall were God's protection and defence of them: now because the vine had no good fruit, was an empty vine, the Lord would preserve them no longer, but expose them to spoil and ruin. God made a law concerning fruitful trees, that they should be preserved, Deut. xx. 19; and God himself is careful of fruitful trees, and vines that bring forth good grapes; Isa. lxv. 8, "As the new wine is found in the cluster, and one saith, Destroy it not, for a blessing is in it; so will I do for my servants' sakes." If God's trees, vines, be fruitful, God will preserve them, prohibit others to wrong them; Psal. cv. 15, "Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm." Cant. ii. 15, "Take us the foxes, the little foxes, that spoil the vines; for our vines have tender grapes." When the vines do bear good clusters and wine, the Lord is careful to preserve them, he is a hedge and wall unto them; but when they are barren, or bring forth sour grapes, he will protect and bless no longer, he will undo what he hath done, take away what he hath bestowed: Matt. xxi. 43, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." The Jews had the title to be God's people, the gospel was presented to them; both should be taken away, and be bestowed upon the gentiles, who would bring forth the fruits thereof. Several kingdoms have several fruits, and the fruits of God's kingdom are the fruits of the Spirit.

[9.] Fruitless trees must be cut down or plucked up; Luke xiii. 7, "Cut it down." Matt. iii. 10, "Now the axe is laid unto the root of the trees;" the Jews were a fruitless vine tree, and when Christ came, he laid the axe to the root, and quickly they were cut down. And sometimes he pulls them up by the roots; Jude 12, "Trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots:" fruitless trees are twice dead, dead in the body and branches, and dead in the root, dead by nature, and dead by their apostasy from that profession they made; and these God plucks up by the roots, there shall nothing of them remain.

(2.) They were not useful. As the vine tree, if fruitless, it must be cut down, or plucked up, it is unserviceable for any work, to make a pin of, other trees, when they are growing or cut down, serve for divers uses at sea and land; this people were come to such a pass, as that they were unfit for any use; Jeremiah tells you they were like naughty figs, that could not be eaten, chap. xxiv. 8, and like the girdle he hid in the bank of Euphrates, chap. xlii. 7, which was marred and profitable for nothing. You know what Christ saith of salt, when it hath lost its savour, "it is good for nothing, but to be cast out and trodden under foot," Matt. v. 13; so the vine tree, when it hath lost its fruitfulness, its clusters, and wine, with which it cheered God and man, it is good for nothing but to be cast into the fire: such a vine tree were the Jews; Jer. iv. 22, "My people is foolish, they have not known me; they are sottish children, and they have none understanding: they are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge."

Let England, London look to it: we have been the vine and vineyard of the Lord, he hath made a hedge and wall about us, he hath of late digged us and pruned us; he looks for fruit, good fruit, the power of godliness, not the form, thorough reformation, not a half one, justice, not oppression, love, not bitterness, taking off burdens, not laying them on, countenance of the saints, not reproaching, &c.: if we be found without such fruit, the axe is sharpening, we shall be cut down, and cast into the fire, like the inhabitants of Jerusalem. Let us now, then, after such warnings, such mercies and deliverances from the wild beasts and boars, bring forth fruit meet for repentance, meet for the gospel, meet for all that God hath done for us.

Reflection 1. We have been near cutting down, like the fig tree. Luke xiii. 6—9, a man had a fig tree, planted in his vineyard, and came three years to see what fruit it had, and there was none, either no figs, or naughty figs; and then he said to the dresser, Cut it down; but the dresser interceding, prevailed for another year, Lord, let it alone this year also; if it bear fruit, well, if not, then cut it down: so here, &c.

Reflection 2. God hath bestowed upon and done great things for us: he hath taken us out of the Romish Egypt, and planted us in Canaan, a land that flows with milk and honey; he hath given us the glorious and everlasting gospel, which many other nations have not; in it he hath given us exceeding great and precious promises, with it pardon of sin, the Spirit, Christ himself, all; to us heaven is opened, we have visions of God, dews, showers, and sunshine, to make us fruitful. He hath done for us wonderful things: Hath he not fenced and walled us about with his protection, defending us from enemies without and within, so that neither lion nor leopard, bear nor bear, wolf nor fox, jesuits, papists, malignants, have been able to devour us? hath he not delivered us from the greatest dangers, most devilish devices and plots, and out of many deaths? hath he not destroyed the serpents and scorpions that stung us, or driven them into holes, made their hosts to fall, "as the leaf falleth from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig tree," Isa. xxxiv. 4? hath he not plucked up most of the thorns and briars that grew in his vineyard, and removed the stones of stumbling out of the ecclesiastical and civil estate? hath he not turned curses into blessings, wise counsels into foolish results, and by weak hands wrought glorious effects for us? hath he not disappointed the expectations of our enemies, when they have been high, puzzling the wit of hell, nonplussing the powers of darkness, causing their designs to dash out their own brains, and to promote those they were intended to ruin?

Reflection 3. God blesses and prospers a people that is fruitful in good. Gen. xlix. 22, "Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well, whose branches run over the wall;" of him came two tribes, Ephraim and Manasseh; and how did he prosper in Egypt! to what a height and greatness did he grow! he was the only man in all the land, Gen. xli. 44. It is said of the man who is fruitful, that "whatsoever he doth shall prosper," Psal. i. 3. Moses exhorted the people to obedience upon this ground, Deut. xxix. 9, "Keep the words of this covenant, and do them, that ye may prosper in all that ye do." When men are obedient unto the will of God, and so fruitful, it pleases the Lord to bless them. The Jews were the terror of nations whilst they worshipped God in his own ways, and executed justice in their gates: 2 Chron. xxxii. 30, "Hezekiah prospered in all his works;" he abounded in doing good, and prospered accordingly. If you bring forth sweet grapes and pleasant fruit, you shall prosper in your families, shops, journeycs, worship, &c.

Reflection 4. All creatures are fruitful one way or other. The earth is so plentiful in fruit-bearing, that as it is the mother of all living, so it is the maintainer of them. What is there grows upon the face of the earth, which is altogether fruitless, and doth not contribute something to the good of man, and glory of its Creator? Clouds are the bottles of heaven, and being carried over the quarters of the earth, they empty their silver drops to enrich the earth. The heavens yield us their light and influence, and move constantly to do us service; that old servant of the world the sun, is not yet weary of sending down his beams to warm us, and all other creatures. Hath God made the heavens and earth useful and fruitful for man, and all the fish, fowl, beasts, birds, plants in them? and shall man be barren? surely for a christian it is a great reproach to be so.

Reflection 5. It is the appointment of the Lord Christ, that those who are his servants should be fruitful. John xv. 16, "I have chosen you, and ordained you, that you should go and bring forth fruit;" that they should preach, pray, convert souls, work miracles, plant churches, set up his kingdom, &c. And now if Christ hath chosen you to any places, in the family, city, church, or state, he hath ordained that you should bring forth fruit; he would not have a parent fruitless in the family, nor a magistrate in the city.

Reflection 6. It is an honour to God to be fruitful. When a vine is full of goodly clusters, what a credit, what a cheering is it to the vine-dresser! When the ground yields great increase, it is an honour to the husbandman; when trees are loaden with fruit, the gardener glories in it, Come, look upon this tree! when the ewes bear twins, it is the shepherd's honour: and so when christians are fruitful, it is the honour and glory of God; John xv. 8, "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." When christians are fruitful, it provokes others to praise the name of the Lord; Matt. v. 16, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Reflection 7. Fruitfulness is delightful to God and man. Hos. xiv. 5, 6, God would be dew to Israel, he should grow, his beauty should be as the olive tree, (the beauty of the olive tree is to be full of olives,) and his smell as Lebanon; Lebanon was full of sweet trees and fragrant flowers, and filled all the parts thereof with a sweet smell; so should Israel be fruitful, and yield a sweet savour to God in heaven, and men on earth. Judg. ix. 13, the vine cheered God and man with its pleasant and sweet-smelling wine: God, in that it was offered in the freewill offering, for a sweet savour unto God, Numb. xv. 3, 5; man, Psal. civ. 15, wine makes glad his heart: so fruitfulness in christians hath a sweet savour, delights heaven and earth. The Philippians' fruitfulness was "an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable to God," Phil. iv. 18; so prayers and praise are as incense and music unto him, Psal. cxli. 2; Heb. xiii. 15. The Corinthians' bounty and fruitfulness so delighted Paul, that he boasted of them, 2 Cor. ix. 2; the savour of it extended far, and made many to glorify God on their behalf, ver. 13. Be fruitful, then, that you may please, delight, God and man, and leave a good savour behind you.

Reflection 8. It is the glory of any to be fruitful.

Reflection 9. Christ is coming to see what fruit is upon his vine trees: Heb. x. 37, "Yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry;" and when he comes, if there be ill fruit or no fruit upon them, he will not only curse those trees, but burn those trees, for his coming will be in flames of fire, 2 Thess. i. 8. The inhabitants of Jerusalem were not spared because barren; and the inhabitants of London will not be spared if found barren: if you be fruitful he will transplant you, and you shall be trees of righteousness in the heavenly paradise for ever.

Obs. 7. When God's face is against a people, he will follow that people with judgment after judgment, till they be consumed. "I will set my face against them, they shall go out from one fire, and another fire shall devour them:" if they escaped the famine, the plague should take hold of them; if that did not, the sword should; if that failed, the wild beasts should devour them; if by them they died not, captivity should be their ruin. When God is wroth, he hath fiery judgments for the wicked, and if he scorch them in one fire a little, pull them out like brands, he will throw them into another fire; if he burn them a little more in that, and pull them out again, at last he will throw them into a devouring, consuming fire. "The wrath of a king is as messengers of death," Prov. xvi. 14; but the wrath of God is as death itself, it pursues sinners till they are burnt to ashes. Wicked men are apt to think, that when they are got out of some one fiery affliction they are safe, but another is preparing for them. Nebuchadnezzar had twice before been in their land, carried away Jehoiakim and Jehoiachin at several times, and now he was ready to come again; and after a long siege, he took the city, and carried away many to Babylon: those who were left, he set Gedaliah over them, whom, with many others, Ishmael slew: this Ishmael presently after was put to flight by Johanan, who also going into Egypt, contrary to the counsel of Jeremiah, is slain there with divers others by the Babylonians, as Jer. xli. xlii. xliii. xliv. relates.

Obs. 8. The sins of the inhabitants bring desolation upon a land. "I will make the land desolate, because they have committed a trespass." Canaan was a pleasant and fruitful land, a very paradise, but because they committed a trespass, corrupted God's worship and oppressed the people, therefore God laid waste the land, even his own vineyard; he plucked away the fence, broke down the wall, and let in those wild beasts, bears, boars, and foxes, the Babylonians, who tore the vine in pieces, and rooted it wholly up, and laid all desolate; before they came, the land was as the garden of Eden, but they left it a desolate wilderness; and where the vines grew, there were briars and thorns, Isa. vii. 23; yea, "all the land should become briars and thorns," ver. 24. So chap. xxxii. 13. "Upon the land of my people shall come up thorns and briars; yea, upon all the houses of joy in the joyous city." Psal. cvii. 3, 4. the Lord turns "a fruitful land into barrenness, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein." If we would therefore prevent this, let us hearken to what is said, Jer. vii. 5-7, "If ye thoroughly amend your ways and doings; if ye thoroughly execute judgment between a man and his neighbour; if ye oppress not the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, and shed not innocent blood in this place, neither walk after other gods to your hurt: then will I cause you to dwell in this place."

CHAPTER XVI.

Ver. 1-5. Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, cause Jerusalem to know her abominations, and say, Thus saith the Lord God unto Jerusalem; Thy birth and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan; thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an Hittite. And as for thy nativity, in the day thou wast born thy navel was not cut, neither wast thou washed in water to supple thee; thou wast not salted at all, nor swaddled at all. None eye pitied thee, to do any of these unto thee, to have compassion upon thee; but thou wast cast out in the open field, to the lothing of thy person, in the day that thou wast born.

We are now come to the longest chapter in the whole prophecy, and it is against the Jews who were at Jerusalem.

The parts of it are these:

I. The principal scope of the chapter laid down in ver. 2.

II. The natural state of the Jews represented under a parable of an infant left and neglected of all, ver. 3-6.

III. A commemoration of God's dealing with them, ver. 6-15.

IV. An exprobration of their great ingratitude in running out from God, and sinning above other nations, ver. 15-35.

V. A commination of grievous judgments, ver. 35-60, wherein also the aggravation of their sins are laid down.

VI. A promise of mercy to restore and establish them, ver. 60, to the end.

Ver. 1. "Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying." These words are frequent, they show whence he had what he spake, and with what authority he spake, viz. divine authority; and serve for attention, to provoke the sons of men to heed what the prophet delivered.

Ver. 2. "Cause Jerusalem to know her abominations." By Jerusalem, he means the men of Jerusalem; and by abominations, those sins of idolatry, adultery, injustice, &c. which were abominable.

The prophet being in Babylon, how could he cause Jerusalem to know her abominations, his voice would not reach thither?

He might by letters send to Jerusalem, to Jeremiah, or some of the faithful, to make known what a message, what a prophecy he had received from the Lord. Or else, he might give it out in Babylon, where were some that would quickly carry or send tidings thereof unto Jerusalem.

Obs. 1. That a people may be guilty of abominations, and not know nor acknowledge them. Jerusalem was so, and did not know nor acknowledge it: "Cause Jerusalem to know her abominations." Amos iii. 10, "They know not to do right." When men know not what is right, how can they know what is wrong?

They stored up violence and robbery in their palaces, they got wealth by injustice, oppression, laid it up, and thought it well gotten.

They know not God. Jer. ix. 3, "They proceed from evil to evil, and know not me, saith the Lord;" when people know not God, they do evil after evil, and know not that they do evil. "They know not the way of the Lord." Jer. v. 4; therefore their own ways seem good in their eyes. John xvi. 2, "The time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think he doeth God service;" when men shall murder the saints of Christ, (a crying sin, a great abomination,) they will be so far from knowing or acknowledging it, that they will justify the fact. In Isa. v. 20, you may read what the Jews said of evil: they called "evil good, and good evil; they put darkness for light, and light for darkness; they put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter." They set up idols, worshipped the queen of heaven, oppressed in the gates, filled the land with bloody crimes, and yet justified themselves: Jer. vii. 9, "Will ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and burn incense unto Baal, and walk after other gods, whom ye know not; and come and stand before me in this house, and say, We are delivered?" we are in no danger, whatever is threatened. They were blinded, and as they knew not their abominations, so they acknowledged them not: Hos. v. 15, "I will go and return to my place, till they acknowledge their offence;" if they did know their doings to be evil, yet they did not acknowledge them to be such evils as in truth they were, they did not profess themselves to be guilty; the Lord therefore puts them upon it, Jer. iii. 13, "Only acknowledge thine iniquity, that thou hast transgressed against the Lord thy God," lay it to heart, and confess it.

Obs. 2. Note, there is an unwillingness, an averseness in sinners to hear of their sins. "Cause Jerusalem to know her abominations;" she is against it, but make her to know them. Jer. xlv. 16, "We will not hearken unto thee;" thou tellest us of sinning, and judgment for sins, but say what thou wilt, "we will not hearken;" Zech. vii. 11, 12, "They refused to hearken, and pulled away the shoulder, and stopped their ears, that they should not hear. Yea, they made their hearts as an adamant stone, lest they should hear the law, and the words which the Lord of hosts hath sent in his Spirit by the former prophets." What averseness was here in this people, to hear of their sins or duty! 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16, "They mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his prophets;" they were not only unwilling to hear of their sins, but wilfully add to the heap of their sins, they mock, despise, misuse the prophets, that told them of their mocking, despising, misusing. When Stephen told them of their practices, Acts vii. 51, 52, what followed upon it? "They were cut to the heart, and they gnashed upon him with their teeth; they cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and ran upon him with one accord, and cast him out of the city, and stoned him," ver. 54, 57, 58; so when Christ told them of their sins, they derided him, Luke xvi. 14; told him he had "a devil," John viii. 48; they "were filled with wrath, and rose up, and thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the brow of the hill, that they might cast him down headlong," Luke iv. 28, 29. And not only wicked men are unwilling to hear of their sins, but even good men also. When God reproved Jonah, "Dost thou well to be angry?" his reply was, "I do well to be angry, even to death;" he thought God did evil in reproving him, that he had more cause to be angry than God had to chide him for his anger. When Hanani the seer came to Asa the king, (who was a godly king,) and told him he had done foolishly in relying upon the king of Assyria, and not upon the Lord, and that therefore he should have wars, "Then Asa was wroth with the seer, and put him in a prison house; for he was in a rage with him because of this thing." Paul was become the Galatians' enemy, because he told them the truth, he told them of their sins. Good men do not easily endure to hear of their faults, and this is that which discourages friends from telling them what they hear, observe, and know, and so through fear they become unfaithful.

Obs. 3. What God commands the prophets and ministers to do, it matters not how it is taken by the people, they are to do it.

Here God commands Ezekiel to cause the people to know the abominations; it was not for him to excuse himself from this service, to object against it, to say they will mock me, despise me, misuse me, hate me, seek my hurt, ruin me; God commanded, and it was his duty to do it, carefully, conscientiously, and faithfully; he must make known their sins to the world, to themselves, let the event be what it will. Isa. lviii. 1, "Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins;" the prophet must not whisper, but cry, and that aloud; it matters not who hears, he must lift up his voice like a trumpet. When men blow trumpets, they do it with all their strength, and the sound of it goeth far; so must the prophets, with extension of their voice, utter the sins of the people, and show them their transgressions, they must represent them fully and earnestly before their eyes, and to their ears. This they must do,

(1.) That others may take warning, and not do as they have done: 1 Tim. v. 20, "Them that sin rebuke before all;" them that sin openly, must be rebuked openly. And why? That others also may fear.

(2.) That they may bring the parties to repentance: Jer. xxxiii. 22, "If they had stood in my counsel, and caused my people to hear my words, then they should have turned them from their evil way, and from the evil of their doings."

How shall sinners come to repentance, if they hear not of their sins, if they be not convinced of the sinfulness of them, by the prophets and ministers of God? This was the fault of the false prophets, they hid their sins from them; but the faithful ones must tell them of them.

(3.) That they may deliver their own souls: Ezek. xxxiii. 8, 9, "When I say unto the wicked, O wicked man, thou shalt surely die; if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Nevertheless, if thou warn the wicked to turn from his way, if he turn not, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul."

Obs. 4. The sins of people are abominations in God's account. He calls the sins of Jerusalem "abominations," what his soul loathed and abhorred: Psal. xiv. 1, "They have done abominable works;" Psal. liii. 1, "They have done abominable iniquity." Sins are works, but works of iniquity, abominable works, and abominable iniquity; now, Psal. v. 5, it is said of God, "Thou hatest all workers of iniquity;" if God's hatred be against the workers of iniquity, how great is it against iniquity itself! if a man hate a poisonous creature, he hates poison much more. The strength of God's hatred is against sin, and so should we hate sin, and hate it with strength; it is abomination unto God, let it be so unto us: Prov. vi. 16-19, "These six things doth the Lord hate; yea, seven are an abomination unto him: a proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood, an heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, feet that be swift in running to mischief, a false witness that speaketh lies, and he that soweth discord among brethren."

Ver. 3. "And say, Thus saith the Lord God unto Jerusalem; Thy birth and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan." The Jews stood much upon their progenitors, and gloried in it that they were descended from Abraham; but they were so degenerated at this time, that the Lord sends the prophet to upbraid them, and tell them, that their birth and nativity was rather of the Canaanites, Amorites, and Hittites, than of Abraham; your ways and doings are such, that you seem rather to be the seed of any impious stock than of Abraham, who was so upright, faithful, and honourable; your works are contrary to his, they are such as the nations' are, and so testify that you are rather of them, than of him.

"Thy birth." The Hebrew is, מְסוּרֵיךָ which Montanus interprets mansiones tue; the Septuagint is, ἡ πατρὶς σου, thy root; so the Vulgate, radix tua; Junius, Piscator, Polanus, have it, commercium tuum, thy commerce, and trafficking in matters of religion is of Canaan; we have it "birth," which implies, beginning, rise; and all these may stand: Thy birth, habitation, commerce, whatever thou thinkest of thyself, do all declare that thou art of Canaan, of the Amorites and Hittites; thy worship and practices are such, that if any inquire whence thou art, where thou dwellest, whom thou resemblest, they would conclude thou art of, dwellest among, and most like unto, Canaanites, Hittites, Amorites.

This is truth, but some further thing the prophet seems to aim at here, viz. their condition before the Lord took them to be his people. And what were they then? no better than other nations, barbarous, idolatrous, like the Canaanites, &c.; and so the word מְכֻרְתֵיךָ may import, for some of the learned derive it from כּוּר which is to dig and cut out; Isa. li. 1, "Look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged."

"Thy nativity." Hebrew is, מִלְּיָדֶיךָ natales tui, thy nativities or birth days. It is plural, to signify their descent of both parents, that they were by father and mother of the Canaanites. They drew their pedigree from Abraham and Sarah, who were Chaldeans, Gen. xi. 31, but no better than the rest of other nations, till God pleased to call them, and distinguish them from others: Josh. xxiv. 2, "They served other gods," they and their fathers.

"Of the land of Canaan." Some understand Egypt here the land of Canaan, because the Jews had long lived in Egypt, which is called the land of Ham, or Cham, Psal. cv. 27; but Egypt was not Canaan. Canaan was a country in Asia the Less, so called from Canaan, the son of Ham, Gen. x. 6, 18, 19, possessed by him and his sons.

Now Canaan was cursed by Noah; Gen. ix. 25, "Cursed be Canaan; a servant of servants shall he be;" that is, extremely vile and base: from him came the Canaanites, a cursed race; they were so wicked, that Abraham caused his servant to swear he would not take a wife unto his son of the daughters of the Canaanites, Gen. xxiv. 3. They were given to such abominable sins, as that the land vomited them out, Lev. xviii. 25; and when the Israelites came to possess Canaan, they were so hateful to God, that he charged his people utterly to destroy them; Deut. vii. 2, "Thou shalt smite them, and utterly destroy them; thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor show mercy unto them;" ver. 16, "Thine eye shall have no pity upon them:" they had all abominations amongst them.

"Thy father was an Amorite." The Amorites were of Canaan, the son of Ham, Gen. x. 15, 16, and they were as wicked as the Canaanites. Gen. xv. 16, "The iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full." Their iniquities were very great, only God waited for the completing thereof, before he would destroy them; they were great idolaters, oppressors, made incestuous marriages, and Ahab, one of the most wicked kings that ever was, is compared to the Amorites; 1 Kings xxi. 23, "He did very abominably in following idols, according to all things as did the Amorites, whom the Lord cast out before the children of Israel." They were bitter enemies unto the Israelites, and would not let them pass through their country, Numb. xxi. 23, but fought with them; they forced the children of Dan into the mountain, Judg. i. 34. They were a people potent, and dreadful to the Jews, for, Amos ii. 9, it is said of them, that their "height was like the height of the cedars, and they were strong as the oaks;" they were a giant-like people, and as they exceeded in height and strength, so they exceeded in wickedness, and therefore God destroyed his fruit from above, and his root from beneath.

"Thy mother an Hittite." חִתִּית Chittith. The Cethites, or Hittites, were of the same stock the Amorites were, viz. from Ham and Canaan; Gen. x. 15, Heth is said to be the son of Canaan, and from him sprung up the Cethites, or Hittites, as they are called, Gen. xv. 20. What kind of people these were, you may judge by profane Esau, who took two wives from among the Hittites, which were a continual grief to Isaac and Rebekah, Gen. xxvi. 34, 35; yea, such an affliction to Rebekah, that she said, "I am weary of my life, because of the daughters of Heth," chap. xxvii. 46. They were contentious, stubborn, and idolatrous, as the Greek, Chaldee, and the Targum observe; and when the charge is given to the Israelites to destroy the nations, the Hittites are mentioned first, Deut. xx. 17.

You see what the Canaanites, Amorites, and Hittites were, exceeding wicked; and the Jews which were at Jerusalem were so degenerate, that they were as if they dwelt amidst Canaanites, and were the offspring of cursed Amorites and Hittites: 2 Kings xxi. 9, it is said of them, that they did "more evil than the nations whom the Lord destroyed;" he means the Canaanites, Amorites, and Hittites, as appears by what follows, ver. 11, Manasseh did "wickedly above all that the Amorites did, which were before him."

Obs. 1. The Lord judges and pronounces otherwise of sinners than they do of themselves. The Jews thought themselves better than other nations, they called them gojim, nations, gentiles, by way of disgrace; they thought themselves the holy seed, the children of Abraham, an honourable and blessed people, but God thought and pronounced otherwise: he tells them they are Canaanites: What! you Abrahamites? no, you are Amorites; what! you Israelites? you are Hittites, as bad as the worst of nations. They thought themselves children of God, in high favour with him, the true church, whereas they were abhorred of God, and an apostatized church; Rev. ii. 9, they said they were Jews, when they were the synagogue of Satan. Ephraim said, "In all my labours they shall find none iniquity in me that were sin;" but God found "the balances of deceit in his hand," Hosea xii. 7, 8.

Obs. 2. Men are their children, whose ways, manners, and example, they follow. Jerusalem imitated the nations in their worship, fashions, practices, and she is the child of an Amorite, of an Hittite, and her citizens imitated their impiety, they contracted kindred with them, and obtained inheritance with them, as the fathers comment on the words.

When men live according to the courses, natures, manners of others, they are styled their sons, or children, and they be their fathers: John viii. 44, "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth:" so you abide not in the truth, you seek to kill me; and herein you resemble the devil, and he is your father. If Abraham were your father, as you pretend, "ye would do the works of Abraham," ver. 39; "If God were your Father, you would love me," ver. 42. The Father loves me, honours me, and, if you were his children, you would do so too; but you hate me and my doctrine, lie in wait to murder me, "ye are of your father the devil." Christ calls the scribes and Pharisees "a generation of vipers," they were so bitter, cruel, of such a bloody and persecuting nature.

When Elymas the sorcerer would have hindered the conversion of Sergius Paulus, the apostle told him he was "the child of the devil," Acts xiii. 10; his works, ways, were such as the devil's were, and therefore the devil was his father. In Isa. lvi. 3, God calls the Jews "sons of the sorceress, the seed of the adulterer and the whore," because they did such things as sorceresses, adulterers, and whores use to do: chap. i. 10, he calls them "rulers of Sodom," and "people of Gomorrah;" they so lively represented their natures and practices, that they seemed to be of them, and justly deserved those titles.

Let us look to it whose ways we take up. If we imitate the world, we are children of the world; if Rome, Babylon, we are their children. The church of Rome boasts that her birth is from the apostle, that Peter, Paul laid her foundation; but doth she embrace their doctrine, imitate their examples? no, she is like the nations for her idolatry, superstition, whoredom, deceit, pomp, pride, &c. therefore her father is an Amorite, and her mother an Hittite. We say we are of Christ, but are we like unto Christ in our worship and lives?

Obs. 3. All are not godly who spring from godly parents, families, and have a name to be godly. The Jews, they came out of the loins of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the best families that were then in the world, they of all people were counted the holy and godly people; but grace is not hereditary. You see here they were so wicked, that God reckons them among Canaanites, Amorites, &c.: they were as bad as any of the nations, yea worse; Ezek. v. 6, Jerusalem "hath changed my judgments into wickedness more than the nations, and my statutes more than the countries that are round about her." You see it made good, what Paul said, Rom. ix. 6, 7, "They are not all Israel, which are of Israel; neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children;" they were all Israelites, and the seed of Abraham, after the flesh, but they were not the children of God, they were of the land of Canaan, &c. Judge not thou from such external things, for, Rom. ii. 28, 29, "He is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh: but he is a Jew, which is one inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God."

Obs. 4. When the Lord takes in any to be his people, they were like others, no better than they.

Ver. 4, 5. And as for thy nativity, in the day thou wast born thy navel was not cut, neither wast thou washed in water to supple thee; thou wast not salted at all, nor swaddled at all. None eye pitied thee, to do any of these unto thee, to have compassion upon thee; but thou wast cast out in the open field, to the lothing of thy person, in the day that thou wast born.

This chapter is a continued allegory, setting forth the state of the Jewish church, under the consideration of a woman in her birth, education, marriage, adultery, repudiation, and re-entertainment.

Something in the last exercise was said touching the nativity of the Jews, that they were of the Amorites and Hittites. Now to go on:

"In the day thou wast born." When to begin the birth of the Israelitish nation is inquirable; our prophet speaks of it in the person of a woman, and saith, "In the day then wast born."

Some make her birth-day to be the calling of Abraham out of Chaldea, and entering into covenant with him, to bless him, to be a God to him, and his seed.

The infancy and youth of this woman, or Jewish estate, was from the time of Jacob's going into Egypt, till they were led out by Moses; her grown estate, the time of the judges and kings; and her old age, from the time of the Babylonish captivity to Christ.

Others make the birth-day of this nation to be their going out of Egypt, when they were freed from their rigorous bondage there; but to this opinion I cannot cast in my approbation, because it was the time of this woman's youth, not her birth, and so the Scripture sets it out; Jer. ii. 2, "I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals, when thou wentest after me in the wilderness;" and, Hosea ii. 15, the days of her youth, and of her coming up out of the land of Egypt, are the same; and presently after, God espoused this people unto himself.

Some take this birth-day to be the time of Jacob's going into Egypt with seventy souls. But this is forced, and suits not with what follows in ver. 5, where it is said, "none eye pitied thee, but thou wast cast out," &c. Jacob and his were received honourably by Pharaoh and the Egyptians, and greatly regarded for Joseph's sake.

Pradus makes the birth-day to be the time after Joseph's death, when another king rose up which knew not Joseph, but oppressed the Jews; from which time it is said, Exod. i. 7, "The children of Israel were fruitful, and increased abundantly, and multiplied, and waxed exceeding mighty; and the land was filled with them;" but to me their birth-day must needs be long before, take it literally or spiritually. A people must be born, have their being, before they can increase and multiply, and they were the Lord's people before this day. This birth-day I know not how we can begin it at any other time, than when the Lord called Abraham; Gen. xii. 1, 2, the Lord said unto him, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee; and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great;" and afterwards he told him his seed should be as the stars of heaven, Gen. xv. 5: as the dust upon the earth, chap. xiii. 16; "and as the sand which is upon the sea-shore," chap. xxii. 17. Hence is it that Abraham is called their father, Josh. xxiv. 3, "I took your father Abraham from the other side of the flood." We may include all the time, from God's calling Abraham to their going out of Egypt, to be their birth-time.

"Thy navel was not cut." Hebrew is, שרר, from שרר with a double resh, which Aben Ezra saith is so called a firmitate, for שרר is firmum, and the navel is that which gives strength to the child, from שרר principale, because it is the principal thing whereby the child is supported in the womb.

As a tree by the roots is fastened to the earth, and by the fibres, the little strings upon them, draws nourishment and spirits from the earth, so is it with a child in the womb; the navel fastens it to the mother, and by the veins and arteries in the navel, it fetches in nourishment and spirits.

For the meaning of the words,

1. It may be this: look as a child by the navel draws life, spirits, and nourishment from the mother, so did the Israelitish estate draw from the nations, that were her parents, Amorites, Hittites, Chaldeans, Egyptians, the life, spirit, and nourishment of several impieties. Rachel had her father's idols, and in Egypt they learned the manners, fashions, and worship of the Egyptians, they were not separate from idols, but drew thence the grounds of their idolatry.

2. It points out the miserable condition of this people at first. A child whose navel is not cut, must needs perish, be a dead child; so here, Thy navel was not cut, thou wast in a lost and desperate condition. Abraham was an idolater when the Lord took him; Psal. cvi. 7, "Our fathers understood not thy wonders in Egypt;" they were an ignorant, perverse, superstitious people.

"Neither wast thou washed in water to supple thee." When an infant is born, first the navel is cut, and then they use to wash it with warm water,

1. To cleanse it from that filth which adheres to the body of it.

2. For safety, that sickness may be prevented.

3. For sightliness, that its appearance may be more agreeable.

We have it, "to supple thee," שָׁמַרְתָּ that thou shouldst be lenified. The joints and parts may have some stiffness in them, it is usual, therefore, to mix butter, or oil, with the water they wash them in, that so their limbs may be tractable: but surely the flesh of infants, their bodies and bones, are very tender things, and do rather stand in need of consolidating than of suppling. I conceive, therefore, it were better translated, Thou wast not washed in water to my sight, or when I looked upon thee: thou hadst those pollutions, corruptions adhering to thee, which made thee unlovely, unsightly. Acts ix. 37, they washed the body of Dorcas, and laid it in an upper chamber. It was their use to wash at deaths and births.

"Thou wast not salted at all." It seems, in ancient days, it was the custom, after washing, to salt their infants, or to mingle salt with the water in which they washed them. We read nothing of this practice but only in this place.

That which the prophet hereby leads us unto, is, that this people had no heavenly wisdom, no fear of God, no true grace, no salt to cure their wounds, to keep them from putrefying, but abounded in noisome humours, were altogether weak and feeble.

"Nor swaddled at all." Hebrew is, לֹא הִתְחַבַּרְתָּ. In swaddling thou wast not swaddled. Children are swaddled to strengthen their bodies, and to keep their limbs straight: Luke ii. 7, Christ was wrapped in swaddling clothes; and it is given as a reason why the bodies of barbarians were straighter than the bodies of the Romans, because they kept their children swaddled two or three years. Hereby is set out how destitute of all help this people were.

Ver. 5. "None eye pitied thee, to do any of these unto thee." Here the contemptible condition of this metaphorical infant is set out in three things:

1. That none eye pitied, or had compassion on her, to do aught for her. It is something, in misery, to be pitied, but to have none to pity, all to be without compassion, is sad.

2. That she was "cast out," not into some by or secret place, but into "the open field."

3. Her person was loathed.

"None eye pitied thee." Hebrew is, לֹא רָחַם. Eye hath not spared upon thee, the eye of man hath not looked after thee, hath not had pity on thee, no human eye; and the word רָחַם signifies, to pity, as well as, to spare; and this must be the sense, as these following words do show:

"To do any of these things unto thee." What things? To cut her navel, to wash her, to salt her, or swaddle her; these seemed no great things, of small moment, yet there was none found to do any of these. If some one had cut her navel, another washed her, a third salted her, &c. it had been some comfort; but she was so vile, sordid, contemptible, that none eye minded her, was moved to do aught for her, or show her the least compassion or kindness.

The words for pity and compassion were opened, chap. v. 11.

"But thou wast cast into the open field." It was a custom among the heathens, if they were poor, and could not bring up their children, or if the children were deformed, to carry them forth and lay them in the fields, if they did not otherwise make them away; and these children were called, Liberi cposititi. This was so common a practice, that the Thebans made a severe law against it, that whoever exposed their infants in the woods or fields, should suffer for it. It is reported of the Japonians, that those of them who are not able to maintain their children, do usually make them away, especially if they be females, looking upon them as burdensome, and less useful. There is provision in some countries to prevent the untimely death of feeble children; they are looked after, and taken into houses appointed for their preservation. The Jews were free from this sin above all others, for it is said of them, never was an infant born among the Jews exposed; yet the Jewish state was as an infant cast out.

Now you know, when a little infant is cast out into the woods, or fields, it must needs perish, either by hunger, injury of weather, fowls of heaven, beasts of the field, or some vermin, if it be not taken up. Moses was cast out, and had perished in the ark among flags, if he had not been taken up.

Some divine this to be meant of the casting out of the Hebrew children to their destruction; others put it upon the time of their making brick and clay in the fields.

"In the open field." Hebrew is, In the faces of the field. The Hebrew call the outside or superficies of things, their faces, as, "the face of the deep," "face of the waters." Gen. i. 2; so here, the face of the field, and here rendered "open."

"To the loathing of thy person." Hebrew is, בְּנִקְלֵ נַפְשְׁךָ. In the casting away of thy person.

The task-masters oppressed the Jews, their children were cast into the rivers, Pharaoh and others plotted their ruin, and there was none to pity, to help; but they were as a child cast out, to the loathing of their persons.

Obs. The miserable estate of man by nature, both Jew and gentile; for what is said here of the Israelites is true of all mankind, and is here implied; for if the Jew had no privilege, what must the gentile have? Man's condition by nature is very deplorable.

I shall give you it out, as it lies couched in this similitude of an infant new-born.

1. Man naturally is not cut off from the old stock, (as the infant's navel was not cut,) but draws life, spirits, nutriment from it: every man's father naturally is an Amorite and his mother an Hittite, and look what way they walk in, the same doth the child. Adam was of the earth, earthy, and savoured of the earth; so do all his children. Thou hast a navel about thee, carnal desire, which sucks nutriment from the womb and paps of the creature; their navels are fastened to the earth, which is their mother, thence they suck their nutriment; hence the church, Psal. xlv. 10, is bid to forget her own people, and her father's house.

2. Naturally, man is filthy, void of all beauty and comeliness. "Thou wast not washed with water." Washing supposes defilement; Psa. li. 5, "I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive me," warm me; John iii. 6, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh;" Psal. xiv. 3, "They are altogether become filthy." There is some natural defilement adheres to a child newly born, but there is much spiritual defilement.

3. He is still in wickedness, he hath nothing to supple him; Psal. lxxxviii. 8, "A stubborn and rebellious generation."

4. Man corrupts in his natural condition more and more. He abounds in ill humours, his thoughts are evil only and continually, his affections are inordinate, Col. iii. 5; wicked men grow "worse and worse," 2 Tim. iii. 13, they putrefy in that state. "Thou wast not salted at all." It is salt that preserves from putrefaction; now man, by nature, having no salt, must needs grow more and more unsavoury. Naturally, men are not salted with the fire of the Spirit, or any spark of that fire, with any grace, with any divine truth.

5. Man is naked in his natural estate. "Thou wast not swaddled." An infant not swaddled, lies naked, sprawling, and is a miserable object. Man, since the fall, is naked, without God, and is not ashamed of his condition: Jer. iii. 3, "Thou hast a whore's forehead, thou refusest to be ashamed;" he is not clothed with humility, hath not put on the armour of God, the robe of righteousness, but is impotent, weak, and cannot help himself. A child new-born, how feeble is it! it cannot think of aught for its own good, it cannot speak a word for itself, it cannot go or do any thing that may advantage it; such is man in his natural condition; 2-Cor. iii. 5, we are not "sufficient of ourselves to think any thing," that is good, "as of ourselves;" Matt. xii. 34, "How can ye, being evil, speak good things?"

Nor can he do good; Rom. iii. 12. "There is none that doeth good, no, not one;" Matt. vii. 16, grapes do not grow upon thorns, nor figs upon thistles; he that is flesh, in the flesh, cannot please God, Rom. viii. 8. Here is his misery, he that was made at the first to serve God and please him, cannot now serve or please him at all: he is so impotent, that he is not able to receive good when it is presented unto him; 1 Cor. ii. 14, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God;" no, he is so far from entertaining of them, that he refuses them. Luke xiv. 16, when the great supper was made, many invited, and all things ready, what did they? they all made excuses, and refused to come, ver. 18—20.

An infant kicks, sprawls, and opposes its own good; so doth man naturally; Rom. i. 30, they hated God; John xv. 24, they hated Christ and his Father; Acts vii. 51, they do always resist the Holy Spirit.

6. Man in his natural estate is in a helpless condition, there is none can do him good. "None eye pitied thee, to do any of these unto thee, to have compassion upon thee;" none had any bowels to pity, or power to do for this child. And who pities, or hath power to do for men in their natural estates? All men are in the same condition, they cannot help themselves; other creatures are enemies to man since his fall. Angels have not power to cut the navel of a natural man, to wash him, salt him, swaddle him. Did either priest or Levite pity or help the man that went from Jerusalem to Jericho, when he fell amongst thistles, and was left half dead? Who pitied Abraham when he was in Ur of Chaldea?

7. Man in his natural estate is cast out, an exposed infant. "Thou wast cast out in the open field." Adam, and all in him, were cast out of paradise, a type of heaven, into the open field of the world; so that he hath no habitation, but is a vagabond upon the face of the earth, an excommunicate person. Moses could say, Psal. xc. 1, "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling-place in all generations."

8. He lies senseless in that condition, and perishes in it. The infant cast out is not sensible of that estate, lies obvious to a thousand dangers, and perishes, if not taken up.

9. Man in his natural estate is loathsome. This infant was cast out to the loathing of her person; when men saw her, they were so far from pitying her, they loathed her: and a man, in his natural estate, is so full of sin that he is abominable; his prayers and sacrifice are abomination, and what then is himself?

Lastly, this was in the day of birth, no sooner born but miserable, extremely miserable, either still-born, or devoted to death immediately. It is reported of the Indians and Bradmins, that after birth about two months, some are appointed to view their children, and if they be not likely to prove sound, strong, useful to the state, they make them away; so that these children were of all unhappy, because they were born, not to live, but to be murdered, according to that in Hosea ix. 13, Ephraim brought forth children to the murderer. And it was once an order amongst the Romans, to put children, supposed to become a burden to the commonwealth rather than advantage, to death the same day and hour they were born; a great misery. Jerusalem, in the day of her birth, was cast out, exposed to all misery.

Ver. 6. And when I passed by thee, and saw thee polluted in thine own blood, I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, Live; yea, I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, Live.

We are now at the third general part of the chapter, the commemoration of God's dealing with this Israelitish metaphorical infant. When none pitied her, but she was cast out, loathed, in a perishing condition, the Lord himself had compassion, and bestowed choice mercies on her, which are expressed in the ensuing verse to the 15th.

I. Is life, in ver. 6.

II. Is increase, growth, in ver. 7.

III. Is spiritual marriage, ver. 8.

IV. Spiritual washing, and cleansing and anointing, ver. 9.

V. Costly provisions of divers sorts for ornament, clothing, and delight for back and belly, ver. 10—13.

VI. Royal dignity, ver. 13.

VII. Great fame and glory, ver. 14.

"When I passed by thee." God is immutable, and immovable, he goes not from place to place. It is spoken after the manner of men, as if God, like some great man, were upon a journey, and in the way should spy a poor infant thrown out naked under a hedge, ready to perish, and should take pity on it; so did God towards this Israelitish infant. This passing by refers to the time of God's calling Abraham out of Ur of Chaldea; Gen. xii. 1, "The Lord said unto Abraham, Get thee out of my country;" and to their condition in Egypt; Exod. xii. 12, "I will pass through the land of Egypt this night."

This act of God's passing by this Israelitish infant, seems casual and accidental, but it was nothing so; for known unto God are all his works and creatures, and he doth nothing but upon foreknowledge and counsel; he knew in what case this infant was, where and how she lay. The expression of it in that manner, is to set out the extreme misery she lay in, that there was none she could look for in heaven or earth to show pity, and do for her.

"And saw thee polluted in thine own blood." We must let you understand what is meant by "blood." Some judge it to be the red earth, whereof they made their brick, which looked like blood; and that God pitied them when they were so put to it by their task-masters, and were near ruin by their hard labour, God passed by them, and beheld them in that condition.

But others by "blood" do understand that inbred corruption which is in man, and estate it hath put him into; he is without all spiritual good, full of all sin, in a miserable, helpless condition. A Lapidé expounds it mystically of original sin, which is that innate and inherent corruption which is in man.

"Blood" doth in Scripture set out the corrupt nature of man; as Matt. xvi. 17, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee;" corrupt nature was never able to attain unto it; so Gal. i. 16; 1 Cor. xv. 50. Sin being set out by "blood" in Scripture, we must consider the resemblances.

1. Blood is natural; so sin; Psal. li. 5, "I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me." Corruption is hereditary, as chaff with wheat, bark with the tree; sense is not more natural than sin.

2. Blood diffuseth itself through the whole man; so doth sin; it is not in some one part, but in every part. As in the sea, all parts of it are brackish; in wormwood, every part is bitter; so in man there is sin in every part: in the heart, Matt. xv. 19; in the mind, Eph. iv. 17, they "walked in the vanity of their mind;" in the will, Matt. xxiii. 37, "How oft would I have gathered you, and you would not; in the understanding, Eph. iv. 18, "Having the understanding darkened;" in the conscience, Heb. ix. 14; in the memory, Heb. ii. 1, that is unfaithful, and let things slip; in the eyes, 2 Pet. ii. 14, they had eyes full of adultery; in the tongue, James iii. 6, "It defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature;" in the throat, Rom. iii. 13, "It is an open sepulchre;" in the hands, Isa. i. 15, they "are full of blood;" in the feet, Rom. iii. 15, they "are swift to shed blood."

3. Blood defileth; Psal. cvi. 38, "The land was polluted with blood;" and sin pollutes, yea, it is pollution; 2 Cor. vii. 1, let us cleanse ourselves from all pollution of flesh and spirit; 1 Thess. v. 23, he prays that they may be sanctified wholly; Psal. xiv. 3, man is altogether become filthy.

4. Loathsome. Sin is such; Prov. xiii. 5, a wicked man is loathsome, his sin makes him to be loathed; Job xlii. 6, "I abhor myself." See ver. 5, "To the loathing of thy person."

"I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, Live." There is some difference about the reading of these words. The Hebrew runs thus, I said unto thee, (and there makes the stop.) In thy blood live; "when thou wast" is not in the original. Others read it thus, I said unto thee in thy blood, (and there make the stop.) Live, I saw thee in thy blood, and said unto thee in that condition, Live.

The most interpreters do follow the Hebrew, and render it, in sanguine tuo vive, or, in sanguinibus tuis vive; not as if so be God would leave this infant in her sinful or afflicted condition still, Thou art cast into a miserable condition, and that thou shalt continue in; the scope of the place prohibits credit to such a sense of the words. We may take the words therefore strictly according to the Hebrew, in thy blood live; in thy blood live; that is, Thou art now in thy blood, in a polluted, loathsome condition thou shalt live, I will give thee life.

In the Hebrew, an imperative is put for a future sometimes, and notes power, efficacy; Deut. xxxii. 49, 50, Get thee up into the mount, and die in the mount; there is an imperative put for a future, and it notes power, I will cause thee to die in the mount; so in this place, "Live," I will cause thee to live; and so it hath the nature of a promise, and carries thus much with it, Though thou be in great affliction, yet thou shalt live, I will uphold thee in thy afflictions, thy shall not sink thee; though thou be in thy natural and sinful condition, dead, yet thou shalt live, thy sins shall not undo thee.

"Live." What life is here meant? Some look no further than a natural or political life, that God reserved them, and made them prosper into a kingdom; and the ground of this interpretation is, their referring of the words to their being in Egypt, under sad afflictions, in which God preserved them, out of which he brought them, and caused them to grow into a political body. They were there in bondage, (which was a kind of death, as the Jews were said to be in their graves in Babel,) and yet, by the hand of God, preserved and freed, which is called life.

But surely we are to look further than a natural, metaphorical, political life. We must take in a spiritual life here; and that will not be forced, if we refer the words to Abraham's call, when their birth-day began; God found him in his blood, and the life he bestowed on him was spiritual; a life of faith, for he was the father of the faithful; a life of holiness, for he walked before God, and was upright.

Obs. 1. God lets men lie in their blood as long as he pleases. Take blood for affliction, or man's natural condition; in either of these, men lie the Lord's pleasure. God passed not by presently; they lay in an afflicted condition in Egypt two hundred years and more, before the Lord appeared, and led them forth; they lay seventy years in Babylon before deliverance came; the two witnesses must prophesy twelve hundred and sixty days in sackcloth, Rev. xi. 3; the Jews have been now sixteen hundred years in an afflicted, tossed condition, and the Lord hath not appeared unto them. So for man's natural condition: Abraham was seventy-five years old when God spake to him, called him out of his country, and sinful condition, Gen. xii. 4; the gentiles laid in their blood, in their blindness, unbelief, impenitence, idolatries, profaneness, some thousands of years, before the Lord granted them repentance unto life, ere he passed by them, and called them; Nicodemus was a doctor in Israel, before the Lord let him know the nature of regeneration.

Obs. 2. The Lord takes notice of men in what condition they are, and lie in. "I saw thee polluted in thine own blood." He saw Abraham in his idolatry, heathenism; he saw the Jews making brick of red earth, in the house of bondage; there is no sinful, afflicted condition that any are in, but the Lord takes notice of it. When Adam hid himself in the bush, the eye of the Lord was upon him, and he saw in what a condition he was, and all mankind in him, all sinful and sinners, all blood and bloody; Gen. vi. 5, "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually;" he knew what a race came out of Adam's loins. Christ knew Jerusalem's condition, that she lay in her blood, when he said, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how oft would I," &c. Matt. xxiii.; Luke xiii. So for Israel in her affliction; 2 Kings xiv. 25, "The Lord saw the affliction of Israel, that it was very bitter." God takes special notice of the conditions men are in, and not only so, but visits them in those conditions; "I passed by thee, and saw thee polluted in thine own blood," &c.

Obs. 3. Jerusalem, the church of God, in its primitive and natural consideration, was in a state of death. "I said unto thee, Live." Neither Abraham, nor any of his seed by nature, had any spiritual life in them, he and all his were dead in sins and trespasses; they were idolaters, unbelievers, under the power of sin; "guilty before God," Rom. iii. 19; "concluded under sin," Gal. iii. 22; they lay in their blood without life. And this is the condition of every man by nature, though he hath a natural life, yet he is morally dead. Matt. viii. 22, "Let the dead bury their dead;" let those who were dead morally, bury those who were dead naturally.

The whole world is dead. John vi. 51, Christ saith, he will give his flesh "for the life of the world;" it was dead before, and he brought life to it, therefore he is said to abolish death, to bring "life and immortality to light," 2 Tim. i. 10. But the world is not quickened, it hath not received life, it lies in wickedness, 1 John v. 19, and the members of it are dead; 1 Tim. v. 6, the widow "that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth;" and Luke xv. 24, "This my son was dead, and is alive;" whilst he lived in sinful courses, he was dead.

Obs. 4. God is the Author of life. He is the living God, and gives life, all life is in him and from him: he breathed into Adam the breath of life; he caused the spirit of life to enter into the witnesses after they were slain; he gave life to this dying infant; Abraham had his spiritual life from him; so hath the true church, and every member thereof.

(1.) There is a life of righteousness or justification, which lies in the remission of sin, the removal of the guilt, and deliverance from the curse of the law due to it, and acceptance of our persons unto favour: and this life is from God, and is called the life of faith, Hab. ii. 4: Heb. x. 38; "justification of life," Rom. v. 18, and this is of God: Col. ii. 13, "You, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses;" and Eph. i. 6, "He hath made us accepted in the beloved."

(2.) There is a life of holiness; 1 John iii. 3, he "that hath this hope purifieth himself, even as he is pure;" see Rom. vi. 11, 13, 19; Eph. iv. 24; which lies in conformity to the will of God, and walking as Christ walked; and this life is of God, "for we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works," Eph. ii. 10.

(3.) The life of glory, which consists in that happiness the saints have in the enjoyment of God in the heavens; and this God is author of, therefore is called "the Father of glory," Eph. i. 17; and is said to bring many sons to glory, Heb. ii. 10; and to call "us unto his eternal glory," 1 Pet. v. 10.

Obs. 5. There is nothing in the creature to move God to show mercy. "When thou wast in thy blood," in thy sin, "I said unto thee, Live." God saw nothing to incline or move him to do aught, or bestow aught, upon this infant. He saw no dispositions or qualifications in Adam or Abraham, when he spake to them and called them. Adam was the greatest malefactor that ever was amongst men, he destroyed the whole world at once; Abraham was amongst idolaters and idolatrous; yet God set his heart upon them, showed them mercy, said unto them, Live. Adam had no repentance, Abraham no holiness; there were no previous dispositions, neither could they, being "flesh," John iii. 6, being "dead," Eph. ii. 1, prepare themselves for mercy. If men could by themselves, or others, be fitted for mercy, then they should be in a middle condition, between a dead man and a living man, a natural man and a spiritual man, an ungodly man and a godly; but the Scripture acknowledgeth no such middle condition; whatever men have in them, they are one of those two, and if they be dead men, they are not nearer life by all they can do; Rom. ix. 16, "It is not of him that willeth," &c. There is nothing can have influence into the will of God: what ver he doth, is free.

There are several things which move men.

(1.) Birth and progeny. Royal and noble births have affected many: David was taken with Saul's daughter, 1 Sam. xviii. 17, 18; this moves not God, he "poureth contempt upon princes," Job xii. 21; he chooseth the poor to be rich in faith, James ii. 5. Believers are said to be "born, not of blood," John i. 13, which some refer to families of noble and royal blood; and, 1 Cor. i. 26, "Not many noble."

(2.) Beauty. Jacob was affected with the beauty of Rachel; Ahasuerus with the beauty of Vashti, Esth. i. 11. God is not moved with beauty; if we had it, there is nothing in man to affect his eye; Psal. xiv. 3, we are altogether filthy; and God saw them in their blood.

(3.) Natural parts prevail much with men. Abithophel his counsel took much with David and Absalom; Joseph, Daniel, had excellent spirits, great wisdom, and they were advanced thereupon. Learning is persuasive, and conquers many, but parts and learning can do nothing with God: 1 Cor. i. 26, "Not many wise men after the flesh;" ver. 20, "Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? for after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew," &c.; Matt. xi. 25, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes."

(4.) Profitableness, serviceableness. So Paul persuades Philemon to take Onesimus, because he would be profitable unto him. Men are taken with men, because they bring in gain unto them; it is not so with the Lord, he is not profited by the righteousness of men, Job xxxv. 7; he receives nothing at any man's hands, and when we have done all, we are unprofitable servants, we have meat, drink, wages, from him, and do all for ourselves.

(5.) Necessity moves mightily. It caused Abimelech to give the shew-bread to David, 1 Sam. xxi. 6; the necessity of the church moved the rich to sell their lands and goods to distribute unto every man as they had need, Acts ii. 45. This is no motive unto divine Majesty: the greatest part of the world lie in blindness, darkness, and they must perish without the means of grace, and God doth not vouchsafe it unto them.

(6.) Entreaty, that hath a great prevalency. Luke xi. 5, 8, when a man came to his friend to borrow bread of him at midnight, and used entreaties, importunity, he got what he desired; but let men pray that are in their blood, and it moves not God: Prov. xv. 8, "The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination unto the Lord; Jer. xi. 14, and xiv. 12, God tells them that, when they pray, fast, cry, offer sacrifice, he will not hear, nor accept them; "The desire of the wicked shall perish," Psal. cxii. 10.

(7.) Hope of proving well draws forth men to do much; parents for children, and men for others; they conjecture that they may become instrumental to church, state, and to God's glory in both. The Lord that knows all, sees nothing that will make him prove well; he knows every man will run the wrong way, if he do not prevent, infuse, change and alter nature; Jer. iii. 5, they spake and did evil things as they could. There is nothing in the creature to move God to do for it; not foreseen works, faith, use of free will, perseverance. God doth bestow his favour where there is nothing to invite: "When I saw thee polluted in thy blood, I said unto thee, Live;" not when I saw thee washed out of thy blood, cleansed and well qualified; not when I saw thee penitent, believing, obedient; but when I saw thee in thy blood, in the worst condition of all. As nothing can incline God, so nothing can hinder God, from showing mercy; Rom. ix. 15, "I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy," &c. God will give gifts to Christ for the rebellious, and dwell among them, Psal. lxxviii. 18. How rebellious was Manassah! how did he sin against heaven and earth! yet God had a gift for him, life for him. Mary Magdalene, Zaccheus. Christ said to them, Live, when they were in their blood. Paul, when he was a blasphemer, persecutor, an injurious person, he showed mercy to him, and bade him live. These were his preparations to grace and mercy; he knew that legal acts could not dispose him or others to receive grace, and therefore concludes, Rom. iii. 28, that a man is justified without the deeds of the law.

(8.) Nothing in the godly moves God, all they do is debt; Luke xvii. 10, when they had done all, it was but their duty. Besides, the will and deed are of the Lord; Phil. ii. 13, he works in us "to will and to do of his good pleasure," and his dispensations of grace and mercy are not according to our wills, dispositions, qualifications, but according to the good pleasure of his own will; 2 Tim. i. 9, he saves and calls, "not according to our works, but according to his own purpose."

Obs. 6. Go, doth all freely, and nothing can hinder the work of free grace. "When I passed by thee, and saw thee in thine own blood, I said unto thee, Live;" when there was nothing to move in the creature, there was much in God to move him to show compassion. The principle that sets him on work, is in himself, and that is his εὐδοκία, Matt. xi. 26, his good pleasure; προθεσίαι, Rom. ix. 11, his purpose; βουλή του θελήματος αὐτοῦ, Eph. i. 11, "the counsel of his will." The motive being within God, all he doth is free favour, mere mercy; if you will search from God's beginning with man, to his end, you shall find all to be of free grace and favour. Predestination and election are so, Rom. xi. 5; God hath chosen the foolish, weak, and base things of the world, 1 Cor. i. 27, 28; and these are called "vessels of mercy," Rom. ix. 23. Calling is of free grace, 2 Tim. i. 9; Gal. i. 15. "Who called me by his grace." Justification is so; Rom. iii. 24, "Being justified freely by his grace." Adoption; Eph. i. 5, it is "according to the good pleasure of his will." Christ himself is free grace, John iii. 16; iv. 10. Faith in him; Acts xviii. 27, they believed through grace. Repentance; 2 Tim. ii. 25, "If God peradventure will give them repentance." Love; 1 Thess. iv. 9, "Ye are taught of God to love." Change of heart and spirit, Ezek. xxxvi. 26. "Good works, Eph. ii. 10; John xv. 5, "Without me ye can do nothing." Sanctification; 1 Thess. v. 23, "The very God of peace sanctify," &c. Perseverance; 1 Cor. i. 8, "Who shall confirm you unto the end;" and Ezek. xxxvi. 27, "I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes." Salvation; Eph. ii. 8, "By grace are ye saved through faith; not of yourselves; it is the gift of God;" Titus iii. 5, "According to his mercy he saved us." Eternal life; Rom. vi. 23, it is "the gift of God."

Let the consideration hereof draw your hearts to believe, cheer you against all doubts, fears, distempers, and cause you to give glory to God for what he hath done.

Obs. 7. The Lord shows mercy to men when they are in desperate conditions. When this infant was cast out, loathed, lay polluted in her blood, (for her navel was not cut, nor healed, but she lay bleeding to death,) ready to be devoured by the beasts of the field, the fowls of heaven, &c. then God said, "Live." Take life for preservation, freedom, and prosperity, it is true therein; when Moses, and other Hebrew children, were to be drowned, and so the male Jews to have been ruined, when their lives were grievous to them under their task-masters, the Lord preserved them, delivered them; when, in Babylon, all their necks were upon the block, by Haman's plot and power, the Lord showed them mercy, and said, "Live;" so Daniel in the lions' den, the three children in the fiery furnace, &c. God preserved them, freed them from their dangers, enemies, and caused them to live. Take life for spiritual life, and you shall find that the Lord hath said, "Live," when men have been in desperate cases, and at the brink of eternal destruction. The thief upon the cross met with life in the gates of death; and so the jailer, Acts xvi. One, having a fish-bone sticking in his throat, and ready to be strangled, being reproved for swearing and cursing, at that time was so wrought upon, that the life of sin was turned into the life of grace. Another, being in a wood, and going to hang himself, the Lord, in his providence, caused one going by the wood to hear a noise, who came in, counselled the man, so as that he was wrought upon at that time, and lived. You have heard of some that have come to godly ministers, who crossed them in their preaching, with resolution to murder them, but ere they parted, God said to them, "Live."

Obs. 8. When sinners look not after God, he is pleased to look after and find out them. This infant minded not God, inquired not after him, came not towards him; but God passed by, and seeing her in a bloody and sinful condition, he said unto her, "Live."

God found out and called the Jews, when they neither sought nor called; so was it with the gentiles, Isa. lxxv. 1, "I am sought of them that asked not for me, I am found of them that sought me not." These words are paradoxical; how could they seek, that asked not? and how could they find, that sought not? in them therefore is held out the preventive mercy of God; God came to them, sought them, found them, before they asked or sought after him. Eph. ii. 17, Christ "came and preached peace to you which were afar off;" that was, the gentiles. And Paul was to bear the name of the Lord before them, Acts ix. 15; by him salvation was sent to them, Acts xxviii. 28; and he was the "apostle of the gentiles," Rom. xi. 13. Being prevented and converted by the grace of God, they sought him whom before they knew not, nor asked for, and now they found him they had not formerly sought. Rom. x. 20, the words run thus, "I was found of them that sought me not; I was made manifest unto them that asked not after me;" when they were worshipping false gods, blaspheming and dishonouring my name, I unexpectedly came to them, offered them mercy and salvation, which they neither thought of, or sought for; like men that dig in the earth for stones, and coals, and find a great treasure.

Musenl. reads the words in future, I will be sought of them that asked not for me, I will be found of them who sought me not; and so they are a gracious promise of God's looking after, finding out, and manifesting of himself unto them, before they had a thought thereof. All their learning, wisdom, morality, led them not to look after God and salvation by Christ; by those, they were carried the wrong way, and whilst they were in the way to destruction, God met them, revealed and tendered salvation unto them. Both gentile and Jew had preventing grace, and were sought out of God, before ever they sought God; hence Jerusalem had that promise or title, Isa. lxv. 12, "Thou shalt be called, Sought out;" God had called her children, and sought them out of many nations.

Obs. 9. God hath no need of any people. Whatever he did to this people, was not because he wanted them to do him service, to praise his name, to promote any of his designs, to suffer for his sake. He passed by, like some great man, that, riding forth, finds a poor distressed infant, and out of compassion takes it up, and into his family, and doth much for it; not because he needs it, but will show kindness to it of his own good pleasure: so dealt the Lord here, he passing by, and seeing so miserable a creature, said, "Live," not because he had need, but because he would show mercy. Deut. vii. 7, 8, the Lord chose them, not for their number, but because he loved them; and he loved them, not because he needed them, but because he would communicate good unto them. He is all-sufficient of himself, not depending on or beholden to any creature; if he needed people or nations, he could create them, raise them up from the stones. Isaiah saith, chap. xl. 15, "The nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance;" and surely God, who is an infinite ocean, an infinite Being, needs not a little drop or a little dust. The Samaritan had no need of the wounded man. Luke x. but he needed the Samaritan's wine and oil. God hath no need of England.

Obs. 10. The Lord bestows great mercies in a transient way. "When I passed by and saw thee, I said, Live;" he took this occasion to do good to this bloody, helpless, sinful infant. The Samaritan, as he passed by the man wounded, took occasion to bind up his wounds, and save his life; Christ, in chap. ix. of John, going by, saw a blind man, and thereupon anointed his eyes, and caused him to see; so in Joel ii. 14, you read of leaving a blessing behind him. God passes through kingdoms, families, and uses to leave blessings where he goes: he takes occasion from what he sees, and finds, to distribute mercies. Christ, when he was going out of the world, said, "Peace I leave with you," John xiv. 27; he would not leave them without a blessing. We should labour to be like unto God and Christ, take occasions and advantages to do good.

Obs. 11. In bestowing mercies, God is serious and real. This appears from the ingemination of the words, "Live," "Live." When there is a doubling of the same word, there the intention, reality, and earnestness of the author speaking is held out, be it in matter of judgment, or matter of mercy: Ezek. v. 8, "I, even I, am against thee;" God was seriously and earnestly against thee. Ezek. xxxvii. 5, 6, "Ye shall live," "Ye shall live;" God was set upon it, viz. the giving life to dry bones. Isa. xl. 1, "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people;" the duplication of the words imports God's seriousness to comfort them. Hos. ii. 19, "I will betroth thee unto me, yea, I will betroth thee unto me;" yea, a third time, "I will betroth thee unto me;" the more iteration, the more affection, intention, and reality. Isa. lv. 1, "Come," "Come," "Come," saith God thrice, and this sets out the real and vehement desire of the Lord to do sinners good. And how should this make sinners hearken unto the Lord when he speaks, and entertain any offers of mercy from him!

Obs. 12. When God hath done much for a people, and they are degenerate, ungrateful, disobedient, the Lord's way of dealing with them is to set before them their original condition, and his kindness unto them. "When thou wast in thy blood I said unto thee, Live," &c. So in Micah vi. 2—5, God had a controversy with them for their unkindness towards him, and saith, "O my people, what have I done unto thee? and wherein have I wearied thee? testify against me. For I brought thee up out of the house of servants; and I sent before thee Moses, Aaron, and Miriam. O my people, remember now what Balak king of Moab consulted, and what Balaam the son of Beor answered him from Shittim unto Gilgal, that ye may know the righteousness of the Lord;" that I kept covenant, performed all I promised to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, &c. I gave you prophets and prophetesses, choice deliverers, I turned curses into blessings, I led you by a pillar of fire in the night, and a cloud in the day. So in Jer. ii. 5—9, "Thus saith the Lord, What iniquity have your fathers found in me, that they are gone far from me, and have walked after vanity, and are become vain? neither said they, Where is the Lord that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, that led us through the wilderness, through a land of deserts and of pits, through a land of drought, and of the shadow of death, through a land that no man passed through, and where no man dwelt? And I brought you into a plentiful country, to eat the fruit thereof and the goodness thereof: but when ye entered, ye defiled my land, and made mine heritage an abomination. The priests said not, Where is the Lord? and they that handle the law knew not me: the pastors also transgressed against me, and the prophets prophesied by Baal, and walked after things that do not profit. Wherefore I will yet plead with you, saith the Lord, and with your children's children will I plead." God had done great things for them, and they had greatly corrupted their ways, degenerated fearfully from the worship of God, therefore God reduceth them to consider of their pristine condition, and what a bountiful, merciful, gracious God he was to them. He had done such and such things for them, and they forgot him and all his kindness, and made him say, Deut. xxxii. 6, "Do ye thus requite the Lord, O foolish people and unwise? Is not he thy father that hath bought thee? hath he not made thee, and established thee?"

Ver. 7. I have caused thee to multiply as the bud of the field, and thou hast increased and waxen great, and thou art come to excellent ornaments: thy breasts are fashioned, and thine hair is grown, whereas thou wast naked and bare.

This verse contains the second benefit which the Lord vouchsafed this infant, viz. growth, increase; after life granted, he caused her to multiply.

This multiplication is set out by a double comparison:

1. Is "the bud of the field."

2. Is of a young maid, growing up to a marriageable condition; "thy breasts are fashioned," &c.

"I have caused thee to multiply." The Hebrew word for multiply is רבבה, and Montanus renders the word thus, Decem millia veluti germen agri dedi te. I have given thee ten thousand as the grass of the field, I have increased thee exceedingly. The Hebrews use to put thousands for great numbers: Psal. lxxviii. 17, "The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels:" that is, an innumerable, or exceeding great, company. Exod. i. 7, "The children of Israel were fruitful, and increased abundantly, and multiplied, and waxed exceeding mighty; and the land was filled with them;" God had made a promise to Abraham that he would make of him a great nation. Gen. xii. 2; that his seed should be as the stars of heaven, chap. xv. 5; "as the dust of the earth," chap. xiii. 16; "as the sand which is on the sea-shore," chap. xxii. 17; and here you see it made good; his posterity increased so abundantly, multiplied and waxed so mightily, that they filled the land.

Some observe that it was but fifty years from the death of Joseph to this time, or thereabouts, and in those few years they came to such a number as did fill the land, and exceed the number of the Egyptians, in their apprehensions; Exod. i. 9, "Behold, the people of the children of Israel are more and mightier than we." When they came into Egypt, they were not above seventy or seventy-five souls; but when they went out, they were six hundred thousand men: neither women, children, nor aged men were here reckoned; for in the second year after they were gone out of Egypt, and the second month of that year, they were reckoned again, and only those were reckoned who were twenty years old and upwards, and able for the war, and they were found to be six hundred and three thousand five hundred and fifty, Numb. i. 45, 46; here were neither Levites, aged women, or children numbered, which had they been, would have doubled the number. This made David say, Psal. cv. 24, "He increased his people greatly."

"As the bud of the field." Hebrew is, בצמח השדה sicet gemnu agri, as the grass of the field, or whatever grows in the field; the Septuagint is, καθὼς ἡ ἀνατολή τοῦ ἀγροῦ, as the rising or spring of the field. You know, every thing which hath life in it puts forth in the spring-time, corn, grass, flowers, weeds, trees, bushes, every thing buds and springs forth; and what a multitude of buds are upon some one tree, some one hedge, in one field, and the Jews multiplied not as some one of them, but as the bud of the field in general. Here our prophet seems to allude to Isaac's blessing of Jacob; Gen. xxvii. 27, "The smell of my son is as the smell of a field which the Lord hath blessed."

"Thou hast increased and waxen great." God gave out the blessing, and presently increase and greatness followed, both multitude and magnitude. Their multitude is set out in Numb. x. 36, "Return, O Lord, unto the many thousands of Israel;" the Hebrew is, ten thousands. Their greatness you have, Deut. iv. 6-8, where three they are called a great nation, yea, greater than others; and Joshua intimates the greatness of his people, when he saith to those that came out of Joseph's loins only, chap. xvii. 17, "Thou art a great people," hast great power; how great were they all, and all their power!

"Thou art come to excellent ornaments." Hebrew is, בגדי קדש to the ornament of ornaments. The Septuagint showed themselves here like other men, subject to error, for they, mistaking ב for א read instead of ade, adim, are, arim, and so make the sense this, Thou art come to cities of cities, to chief and excellent cities; but the original is, ornament of ornaments. What those ornaments were, men's thoughts are divers: some have thought them to be the law, tabernacles, but that is too curious; others refer these ornaments to those jewels of gold and silver which they borrowed of the Egyptians, Exod. xi.; and this people, both men and women, had bedecked themselves with golden earrings, which they pulled off, and brake in pieces, to make the molten calf with, Exod. xxxii. 23. And not only these, but some take in all artificial ornaments that virgins marriageable, and near marriage, are wont to adorn themselves with, that they may be more amiable and delightful: but the words in ver. 11 and 12, forbid us to close with this opinion, for here the Lord speaks of such things: "I decked thee also with ornaments, and I put bracelets upon thy hands, and a chain on thy neck. And I put a jewel on thy forehead, and earrings in thine ears."

We are, therefore, to refer the words to natural ornaments, and beauty of the body; for when virgins are grown up and fit for marriage, then they have natural ornaments, which do greatly become them. And that this is the genuine sense, the words following do confirm, "Thy breasts are fashioned, and thine hair is grown;" these are natural ornaments, and in these he specifies what ornaments he meant.

"Thy breasts are fashioned." Now by this fashioning of the breasts, is held out the fitness of this metaphorical maid (the Israelitish state) for marriage.

"Whereas thou wast naked and bare." Hebrew is, And thou wast naked and bare. This nakedness may refer to the words before, in the fourth and fifth verses, "Thou wast not swaddled at all, but wast cast out in the open field, to the loathing of thy person, in the day that thou wast born;" and some are persuaded to it upon this ground: because now was the time of her youth, and it is improbable that God, who had taken care of her, (being born of an Amorite and an Hittite,) who had brought her up all this time, should let her be naked and lie exposed to shame, reproach, and contempt. But the Hebrew invites us to put it upon her present, not her past, condition, thus: I have caused thee to multiply, increase, grow great, brought thee to excellent natural ornaments, fashioned thy breasts, made thine hair grow, and yet thou art but naked and bare, thou art poor and hast nothing.

In what this nakedness lay, is needful a little to inquire. Some place it in her being void of the law, Theodoret saith of this person, Nondum acceperat legis tegumentum: the law was the chief honour and ornament of the Jewish people, and where that is not, there is a great nakedness. Some place it in their poverty; the rabbins say, that Israel was clad with vile garments, their nakedness was much seen.

It is probable their poverty was great in Egypt. When they were to go out of it, they borrowed raiment of the Egyptians, and jewels of gold and silver, Exod. xii. 35. Others put it in this, that they were destitute of all help, they were in great bondage, suffered great hardship, a politic plot was upon them to drown their male children, and so to ruin them; and being in this case, none pitied them, came in to their counsel or help, and so in this sense they were truly naked and bare.

Obs. 1. The Lord is mindful of his promises, and makes them good by degrees, and in due time. He had promised Abraham that he would make of him a great nation, Gen. xii. 2; that his seed should be as the stars, dust, sand; and here you see it made out, "I have caused thee to multiply as the bud of the field." It was very unlikely that it should ever be so. God promised Abraham a son, but he stayed near twenty years for him after the promise; some think it was forty years, if not more, before Isaac married, and when married, his wife was barren all Abraham's days; after, he had two sons, Jacob and Esau; then Jacob had twelve sons, and went down into Egypt with seventy souls, and from them proceeded multitudes without number. So God, by degrees, accomplished what he promised, and made Abraham's posterity innumerable.

Obs. 2. From mean beginnings God sometimes raises to much greatness, he brings from a low, despicable estate, to great excellence. This Israelitish state was at first as infans expositus, like a child thrown out by the friends, as not able to maintain it, left in the fields to perish: this child the Lord took up, and brought forth a great nation out of the loins of it. Abraham was the man, and from him came the populous nation of the Jews, &c. He brought those green buds out of a dry tree. It is God's method oftentimes to raise glorious buildings out of rubbish; he made the world out of nothing; from the little drops he makes great floods; from a little dust enlivened, he hath brought forth all mankind.

What is all the world but Adam? and all the Jews but Abraham?

At the first-fruit offering, they were to say, "A Syrian was my father; he went down into Egypt, and sojourned there with a few, and became there a nation, great, mighty, and populous." Deut. xxvi. 5.

The Roman state grew up from Romulus a bastard. The Turkish had low beginnings. What was England once? The Britons went naked, they painted their bodies blue, were called Picti, and sky-coloured Britons; they wore their hair long; their towns were their woods; they had ten or twelve wives apiece, and those common to brothers and parents; they tilled no ground, did eat no flesh, but lived much upon roots and barks of trees; they were exceeding superstitious, and paralleled, if not exceeded, the Egyptian idols and idolatry; they were given much to magic; they held that the soul passed from one to another; they were hardly known to other nations, and had little or no commerce with any; the keels and ribs of their ships were of light wood, covered over with leather; their coin, of brass and iron rings. From these we came, and our beginning was mean.

Obs. 3. The work of nature is the work of God. Multiplying, increasing, waxing great, fashioning of breasts, growing of hair, are all natural things; but, "I caused thee to," &c. It was the hand of God to bring that green sprig, Isaac, out of dry roots; and it is also the work of God to bring branches out of green roots. Children are the gift of God, Gen. xxxiii. 5, he forms them in the womb, brings them into the world, and bestows them upon the parents; Deut. xxxii. 6, "Hath not he made thee, and established thee?"

Obs. 4. The natural beauty, excellency that any person or kingdom hath, is of the Lord's good pleasure, and mere mercy. "Thou art come to excellent ornaments;" but who brought her to them? was it not the Lord took her in, being cast out, that gave her breasts, that fashioned them, &c. In ver. 14, the Lord saith, he puts comeliness upon her. Whatever excellences, ornaments of nature, kingdoms or people have, they had them from the Lord.

Obs. 5. Man in himself, or naked of himself, hath no excellency. "Thou was naked and bare;" no free will, no merits.

Ver. 8. Now when I passed by thee, and looked upon thee, behold, thy time was the time of love; and I spread my skirt over thee, and covered thy nakedness: yea, I swore unto thee, and entered into a covenant with thee, saith the Lord God, and thou becamest mine.

Here you have laid before you the third choicemercy which the Lord bestowed upon this metaphorical infant, grown up to woman's estate, viz. spiritual marriage; the Lord brought her to excellent ornaments, fashioned her breasts, made her hair to grow, and then married her unto himself.

In the verse you have,

1. The preparatories to this marriage; which are, 1. God's access to her, and observation of her; "When I passed by thee."

2. His acknowledgment of her time; "thy time was the time of love."

3. His manifestation of his love to her; "I spread my skirt over thee."

4. The marriage itself; "I swore unto thee, and entered into a covenant with thee."

III. The effect of it; special obligation between, and mutual relation to, each other, in these words, "thou becamest mine."

The parts of the verse being expounded, the next thing is to open the words unto you.

"Now when I passed by thee." Of God's passing by, I spake in ver. 6; it notes not local motion, but is spoken after the manner of men. God is resembled to a traveller, going from place to place, observing or doing several things in several places.

The former passing by referred to Abraham in his Chaldeish estate. This is a second passing by, and refers to their estate in Egypt, Exod. ii. 24; xii. 12.

"And looked upon thee." Hebrew is, I saw thee, or, have seen thee. Not that God was ignorant of them and their condition, or that they were out of his sight, for he is present every where, seeth all things at all times; but it is to note, that God intended some special mercy towards them, to do some remarkable thing for them, and that was the calling and sending of Moses to be a deliverer unto them; Exod. iii. 7, 8, 10, God appeared to Moses in the burning bush, and said, "I have surely seen the affliction of my people, and am come down to deliver them. Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh," &c. The Lord's seeing notes his pitying and merciful regarding them.

"Behold, thy time was the time of love." Thy time, what time was this?

1. The time when she was in Egypt, and suffered hard things. The Israelites, you know, were hated of Pharaoh, Psal. cvi. 10; therefore he set task-masters over them, and commanded their children to be murdered by the midwives, to be drowned by the people; they were made to serve with rigour in all their services, their bondage and oppression was such as made them cry out, and filled them with anguish of spirit, Exod. ii. 23; chap. vi. and ix.

2. The time of youth. She was now grown up to woman's estate, and was fit for marriage. When a maid hath her breasts fashioned, and her hair grown, then lovers and suitors frequent the places where she lives, labour to gain her affections, and to bring her into the honourable estate of marriage; and for that purpose they employ some faithful friends to speak for them, to make way for the accomplishment of their desires; thus dealt the Lord with the Israelitish state, being much multiplied, in Egypt, Exod. iv. 14-16; and chap. v. 1, they went in unto Pharaoh and said, "Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Let my people go, that they may hold a feast unto me in the wilderness."

"The time of love." The Hebrew is, עת רצוה, the time of loves, or lovers; the Septuagint is, καὶ ὁὶ καταλόγουστων, which Kirker interprets, tempus divertentium, which you may refer to the woovers, or to the wood. If to the woovers, thus: it was a time for the woovers to leave their own houses, and to turn in to the house of their desired, to suit and solicit her their hearts and thoughts were upon; as Samson did the woman in Timnah. If to the wood, thus: it was a time for the wood to divert and pass from the state of virginity to the state of marriage, and to be ranked in the order of the married. But καταλόγουστων signifies rather dissolventium, it was a time of dissolving or dissolvers, a time for the woovers and wood to let out their affections one to another, and to declare their mutual delights in each other. Aquila, in his second edition, hath it, tempus συναλλαγῆς, a time of espousals and marriage, as Prælio, reader the word; of commerce and exchange, as Sanctus gives it, because they have sweet commerce together, and do buy each the other, the man gives himself to and for the woman, and the woman her self to and for the man; they exchange persons, liberties, estates. Castalio, cum esset ipse alicuius, quæ est amoribus idonea; others, καὶ ὁὶ ἐκ παρθενείας, the time of departing out of their virginity. The words are expressive of God's love, he was the Lover; you must not take them in a carnal manner; love, in such a sense, is unsuitable to his nature, he is without all passions and perturbations. When God doth such acts as argue love, in the judgment of man, he is said in Scripture phrase "to love." When the time promised of their deliverance was come, (which was to be at the end of four hundred years, as you may see, Gen. xv. 13, 14; Acts vii. 6, 7.) when God began the work of deliverance, then he loved them, then was a time of loves. God loved them before; Abraham was the friend of God, 2 Chron. xx. 7; so Isaac and Jacob were beloved of him, with the rest of their fore-fathers; Deut. iv. 37, "He loved thy fathers," saith Moses; yet here it is called "the time of love," because the Lord manifested singular love unto them, in redeeming them from the house of bondage, in taking them, in a peculiar manner, to be his people, &c.; and therefore it is said to be a "time of love;" love in pitying them, love in remembering his promise, love in causing the midwives to spare their children, love in making them grow and increase, love in sending Moses and Aaron, love in working such wonders for them, love in giving them the Egyptians' jewels and raiment, love in bringing them out of the house of bondage, love in leading them through the Red sea, and drowning their enemies in it.

"I spread my skirt over thee." וַאֲפָרֶשׁ כַּנְּפֵי עִירָךְ Septuagint, τὰς περσυχὰς μου. The Vulgate is, amiculum meum, I spread my clothing over thee. The word כַּנְּף properly signifies, the wing of a bird; Gen. vii. 14, that is, there every bird of every sort is called כַּנְּף כל-כַּנְּף, כל-עֶבֶר every winged thing. Metaphorically it is applied to the extremity or utmost part of things, as the outward parts of an army are called the wings of it; Isa. viii. 8, "The stretching out of his wings shall fill the breadth of thy land, O Immanuel;" the wings, that is, the utmost part of Sennacherib's army, when he lay before Jerusalem in Hezekiah's days. The ends of the earth are called so, Isa. xxiv. 16, "From the uttermost part of the earth have we heard songs;" so chap. xi. 12, he shall "gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." כַּנְּפֵי הָאָרֶץ from the wings of the earth. So it is put for the uttermost part of a garment, 1 Sam. xxiv. 4, David "cut off the skirt of Saul's robe privily," כַּנְּף הַמְּעִיל the wing of thy robe. The like is Jer. ii. 34, "In thy skirts is found the blood of innocents," original, in thy wings.

Now what this spreading of the wing or skirt means, falls into consideration. It seems to import a marriage rite. When they were to be espoused or married among the Jews, it was a custom to spread their garment over them; hence it was that Ruth said to Boaz, Ruth iii. 9, "Spread therefore thy skirt over thine handmaid; for thou art a near kinsman," that is, betroth thee unto me, and marry me. The law was, that when a man died without issue, some near kinsman should marry the widow, enjoy the inheritance, and raise up seed to him who was dead, and the ceremony used was spreading the skirt over them. Deut. xxii. 30, a man must not discover his father's skirt; that is, he must not have to do with his step-mother, whom his father hath spread his skirt over, and married; defiling of her is uncovering of his father's skirt, Deut. xxvii. 20. Maldonate saith it was a rite of marriage, or certainly a promise of marriage, if a man did cover a woman with his skirt or garment.

Besides, this rite implies protection, defence, safety. The wing of any fowl, spread over its young, is a safety unto it. Isa. xxxi. 5, "As birds flying, so will the Lord of hosts defend Jerusalem;" when birds see their young in danger, they fly, make haste unto them, spread their wings over them, and so defend them; in like manner would the Lord do, spread his wing of protection over Jerusalem, and preserve it: hence that phrase in Scripture, of trusting in the shadow and covert of his wings, Psal. xxxvi. 7; lvii. 1; lxi. 4; lxiii. 7; xci. 4. But this protection we speak of is not protection in general, but maritalis protectio, as Abraham was to Sarah, Gen. xx. 16, "A covering of the eyes;" God was a covering to them; Isa. iv. 5, "Upon all the glory shall be a defence." So then by this expression is held out, God taking his people into his custody, his special care, provision, and defence of them.

Calvin thinks that by this spreading of their skirt, is meant all that power and goodness of God which he put forth in delivering of them out of Egypt; the Lord brought them out with a strong hand, and stretched-out arm, his power, mercy, wisdom, goodness, appeared marvellously in that work. He tells them, Exod. xix. 4, what he had done for them; "Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians," (I have sent plague after plague upon them, till I had utterly consumed them, and in the midst of all, you were preserved,) "and how I bare you on eagles' wings, and brought you unto myself." The eagle, when her young ones are in danger, or ready to go from the nest, she takes them upon her wings, and carries them away with strength, speed, safety, and that in open view: so did the Lord by this people, he carried them from their nest, the house of bondage, being in danger to be devoured by Pharaoh, that dragon, upon the wings of his power and goodness; and that with strength, all the power of Egypt could not detain them; speed, they hasted out of the land, Exod. xii. 33; safety, not a dog moved his tongue against them, Exod. xi. 7; in open view, they hired them to go with gold, silver, and with raiment, Exod. xii. 33, 35. This is more fully expressed, Deut. xxxii. 11, 12, "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings: so the Lord alone did lead him." Moses and Aaron were as the wings or hands of God, but God led them.

"And covered thy nakedness." The Hebrew is, וַיִּכְסֶה ignominiam tuam; so the Septuagint, ἐκάλυψα ἀσχημοσύνην σου, thy shame; Vulgate, ignominiam tuam, thy shame.

1. This nakedness may be taken literally, and so God covered it, when he gave them the Egyptian garments; they might leave their ragged, tattered garments behind them; and it is likely they were poor, whereas the Lord preserved their garments and shoes from wearing out, or old, forty years together; Deut. xxix. 5, "I have led you forty years in the wilderness; your clothes are not waxen old upon you, and thy shoe is not waxen old upon thy foot." Had they had variety of garments, this miracle had not been so needful.

2. You may take it metaphorically, for that reproach, Gen. xxx. 23, which, under the law, was upon unmarried, fruitless, barren women; Isa. iv. 1, "Seven women shall take hold of one man, saying, Let us be called by thy name, to take away our reproach." It was a reproach for maidens not to be married; Psal. lxxviii. 63, "Their maidens were not given to marriage;" and Luke i. 25, when Elisabeth had conceived, she said, The Lord hath "looked on me, to take away my reproach among men." Want of marriage, and want of issue, were both matters of reproach in Israel; and if parents kept their virgins beyond the flower of their age, it was a reproach to them. 1 Cor. vii. 36. God's covering of her nakedness and shame, was his entering into covenant with this people, and taking them to be his; so that they were not without God, without a husband, to love, to protect, to provide for them; which made Moses to say, Deut. iv. 7, "What nation is there so great, who hath God so nigh unto them, as the Lord our God is in all things?"

3. For that reproach and shame the Jews were under in Egypt. They were servants to the Egyptians, an idolatrous and heathenish people, who used them hardly, and held them under cruel bondage, Deut. xxvi. 6; they were under a king of another nation, that was cruel as a dragon; Ezek. xxiii. 3, Pharaoh is called "the great dragon," unnatural, wilful, hated them, sought their death: the Egyptians evil-entranced them, afflicted them, and laid upon them hard bondage; when they moved to go and worship the Lord their God, they were charged to be idle, and their task increased.

Now this was a great reproach to Abraham's posterity, that they were servants, and held in bondage generation after generation. This reproach God covered, and took away, when he brought them out of Egypt, and drowned the Egyptians (who had loaded it so over them) in the bottom of the sea.

No sooner were they come out of Egypt, but the Lord told them they were come "out of the house of bondage," Exod. xiii. 3: which is often mentioned in holy writ: and they were to remember that condition, that so they might consider how God had covered their shame; Deut. xv. 15, "Thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in the land of Egypt, and the Lord thy God redeemed thee;" so chap. xvi. 12; xxiv. 18. "God redeeming and bringing them out thence, was the covering of their nakedness, and removing of their shame."

Obs. 1. The Lord doth wait and watch, to do good unto his people. Before, in ver. 6, he passed by, beheld this Israelitish maiden in her blood, said unto her, "Live;" and now again he passed by her, looked upon, and said it was a "time of love."

God observes times to be gracious; Isa. xxx. 18, "Therefore will the Lord wait, that he may be gracious unto you." God waits for fit opportunities and seasons to do for his people: Psal. lxxxi. 13, 14, "Oh that my people had hearkened unto me, and Israel had walked in my ways;" "I looked for such a season; "I should soon have subdued their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries." Jer. viii. 6, "I hearkened and heard, but they spake not aright: no man repented him of his wickedness, saying, What have I done?" the Lord waited, expected, and longed for repentance, a time wherein to show them kindness; Jer. xxxi. 28, "I will watch over them, to build, and to plant, saith the Lord:" he would watch a time to do them great good, to build them up again into a civil estate, and to plant them a noble vine. That in Rev. iii. 20, "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him." God waits and watches opportunities to show mercy to sinners; hence it is that David saith, Psal. lxxxv. 8, "I will hear what the Lord will speak: for he will speak peace unto his people, and to his saints;" and Wisdom invites her children to hearken; Prov. viii. 32, "Now hearken unto me, O ye children."

Obs. 2. There are special times wherein God makes and manifests love unto his people. "Thy time was the time of love." Solomon tells us, there is a time for every thing; Eccl. iii. 8, "A time to love," and that for God as well as man; he hath his times of wooing people, of making and manifesting love unto them.

I shall show you some of those times:

(1.) The time of affliction. This woman was in great distress in Egypt, hated, persecuted, oppressed, held under bondage, not suffered to go and worship her God, all liberty that way was denied her, new burdens imposed, her life embittered and endangered, Exod. v. 7, 21; no friend to be found in court or country, no help or comfort appearing any where; and now was the time of God's love, he hears her cries, comes down into the bush, converses with Moses, sends him to this woman, to tell her that God had good thoughts towards her, intended love to her, and would suddenly bring her out of that condition, and put her in a new and nearer relation to himself; and when she heard this, she bowed her head and worshipped, Exod. iv. 31.

When this woman was in Babylon, and her neck upon the block, through the malice, power, and policy of Haman, then was a "time of love;" the Lord visited, delivered, and showed marvellous loving-kindness to her, he chose her to himself in that condition; Isa. xlviii. 10, "I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction." Elective love is prime, strong, fundamental.

You may see also God's love to this woman, under the name of Rachel; Jer. xxxi. 15, 16, "A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation and bitter weeping; Rachel weeping for her children refused to be comforted, because they were not." Here was a sad affliction, captivity hath bereft her of her children; but see, now was a "time of love," for presently the Lord visited her, and said, "Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded; they shall come again from the land of the enemy to their own border," ver. 16, 17.

God visits his people in afflictions. When the high priests, rulers, elders, and scribes, threatened Peter and John, charged them not to preach, which was a sad thing; but they went to their own company and prayed, and presently God appeared, shook the room where they were, and filled them with his Spirit. Rev. xii. when the dragon persecuted the woman, she had eagle's wings, &c.

Times of affliction are times of love, also, in this respect, because then, as it is Job xxxvi. 8-10, he shows men the nature and greatness of their sins, he opens their ears to disciplines and commands, that they return from their iniquities; chap. xxxiii. 16, he opens men's ears, and seals up their instruction.

(2.) The time of fulfilling promises is a "time of love." God had promised that his seed should serve four hundred years, and in the fourth generation should return to Canaan; this time being expired, now was the "time of love," that God should put forth his hand, lead them out with great substance of jewels and cattle, and so make good his promise. When God makes a promise, it is a "time of love," and when he fulfils it, it is a "time of love," many receive benefit thereby.

God had promised Adam, the seed of the woman should break the serpent's head; to Abraham, that in him all the nations of the earth should be blessed; now when this promise was fulfilled, Christ given out into the world, it was a "time of love," yea, of loves: Luke ii. 14, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." When the promise of the Spirit was made good, then was a time of loves: a "time of love" to the nations that heard them speak such excellent things in their own tongues.

God promised that, at the end of seventy years, they should return from Babylon. When that time was out, then was the "time of love," God fulfilled his promise, and brought them to Jerusalem again, which Isaiah, chap. liv. 7, calls, a gathering with great mercies.

(3.) The young time of a people is the "time of love;" God doth not only manifest, but make love known, to young ones. This infant was come to those years virgins are at when marriageable, and being so, God made love to her, he gave her love tokens, jewels of gold and silver, and raiment, Exod. iii. 21, 22; quails and manna from heaven, Exod. xvi. This time the Lord points at in Jer. ii. 2, "I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth," not of her kindness unto God, but his own kindness, love, or mercy, unto her. The Lord doth sue and woo young ones to come in unto him; Eccl. xii. 1, "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth;" look upon me, how beautiful, glorious, great, rich, honourable I am, how suitable for thee, what a contented happy life thou mayst lead with me, remember and mind me for thy husband. God sent Samuel to call David, the youngest of the brethren, before him, and when he was come, "Arise, anoint him: for this is he," 1 Sam. xvi. 11, 12. Prov. i. 4, Solomon's Proverbs were written to give the young man knowledge and discretion. Zech. ii. 4, "Run, speak to this young man." Not only youth, but any, when God offers them grace, calls up in them for repentance, believing, that is a "time of love."

(4.) Calling of people into the church state, is a "time of love." They were in Egypt without mercy, they had not church-order and ordinances, but now the Lord was bringing them into such a condition.

Obs. 3. God's love is the foundation and fountain of all the good his people receive and have. It was love caused him to look upon this infant, to say to it, "Live;" that caused her to multiply and grow great, that brought her to excellent ornaments; it was his love, that made him spread his skirt over her, and cover her nakedness, to enter into a covenant with her, to take her to be his, and do all those things he did for her.

When Balak and Balaam would have cursed this woman, the Lord prevented it, and turned the curse into a blessing, because he loved her, Dent. xxiii. 4, 5. It was love which caused and moved God to choose this people to be his, nothing in them, Dent. vii. 7, 8; it was his love to give them favour in the sight of the Egyptians, Exod. xi. 3; it was his love to bring them out of Egypt with a mighty hand, Dent. iv. 37; his love to drive out the nations, to bring them into their land, and to give it them for an inheritance, ver. 38. It was from his love to give them the tabernacle, the temple, his laws, statutes, oracles, ordinances, priests, prophets, sabbaths, solemn feasts, &c.; all spiritual mercies are blessings from his love. Hos. xiv. 4, when he heals backslidings of a people it is because he loves them freely. Election, adoption, justification, sanctification, glorification, are the issues of his love; Christ is so, John iii. 16, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son," &c. If divine love be the bottom and fountain of that gift, it is so of all others; Rom. viii. 32, "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" It was his great love that caused him to quicken us being dead, Eph. ii. 4, 5. God's love is the womb which conceives and sends forth all the good things we enjoy.

Obs. 4. When God takes a people to be his, he will protect them in a special manner, and cover their nakedness and shame. He took this Israelitish woman, spread his skirt over her, and covered her nakedness; he protected her forty years in the wilderness, against enemies and evils that threatened her ruin; he took away her reproach of barrenness and servitude in the house of bondage, he made her fruitful and free. When uncircumcision was a reproach unto this people, the Lord took that away, Josh. v. 9. When Goliath defied the host of Israel, God took him away by David, 1 Sam. xvii. And when the Lord took in the gentiles, did he not spread his skirt over them, and cover their nakedness? Isa. liv. 1—5, "Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing, and cry aloud, thou that didst not travail with child: for more are the children of the desolate than of the married wife. Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations: spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes; for thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; and thy seed shall inherit the gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited. Fear not; thou shalt not be ashamed, for thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth, and shalt not remember the reproach of thy widowhood any more:" and what is the ground of all this? "Thy Maker is thine husband;" therefore God would have a special care of her, turn her barrenness into fruitfulness, and cover her shame, her idolatry and profaneness.

"Sin is the reproach of any people," Prov. xiv. 34, and makes naked, Exod. xxxii. 25; and when God loves a people, and takes them to be his, he covers their sins. Zech. iii. 4, God had good will to Joshua the high priest, and then said, "I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee, and will clothe thee with change of raiment:" God took away his sins, by the satisfaction of Christ, and clothed him with his righteousness, that covers our spots, shame, nakedness. Rev. iii. 18, "I counsel thee to buy of me white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear."

"I swear unto thee," Hebrew is, אשבעיך. The meaning is, I have given thee assurance of marriage, conjugal faith.

Touching the Lord's swearing, I shall speak a little.

That the Lord did swear, is upon record, but what kind of oath it was, is not here specified.

Some conceive that "I am the Lord," these words do carry in them the force of an oath; and that this was the oath made to Abraham and Jacob, to which the Lord refers, Gen. xv. 7, "I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees, to give thee this land to inherit;" Exod. vi. 6—8, "Say unto the children of Israel, I am the Lord, and I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians; and I will take you to me for a people, and I will be to you a God," &c.

It is thought these words, "I the Lord," or, "I am the Lord," do hold out the nature of an oath, because, Exod. xiii. 5, it is said, "The Lord sware unto thy fathers, to give thee a land flowing with milk and honey;" but this will not hold, because no more is expressed than "I the Lord," and he is said to swear, that therefore no more was in this oath; if we consult well with the word, we may find there was more in it, for, Exod. xxxii. 13, it is plain he sware by himself; "Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, thy servants, to whom thou swarest by thine own self, and saidst, I will multiply your seed as the stars of heaven, and all this land that I have spoken of will I give unto them." The word of God tells us that he hath sworn, sometimes, by his holiness, Amos iv. 2, by his life, Ezek. xiv. 16, by his great name, Jer. xlv. 26, by his soul, Jer. li. 14, by his right hand, and the arm of his strength, Isa. lxi. 8.

Now the oath God sware to Abraham, was by himself, as you have heard, and may read, Gen. xxii. 16; therefore we may not rest in those words, "I the Lord," as being the oath, but look at God's swearing by himself.

The manner of God's swearing is set down in Deut. xxxii. 40, "I lift up my hand to heaven, and say, I live for ever:" the Lord imitated the practice of men in swearing, for it was their way to lift up their hands to heaven when they took an oath, Gen. xiv. 22; Dan. xii. 7; so the angel, Rev. x. 5, 6. This was done at the covenant-taking.

"And entered into a covenant with thee." וּבְרִית אֶתְךָ A covenant imports two parties consenting together, which a testament doth not: a man may make his will or testament, and give what he please to any specified therein, without consents; it is not so in a covenant, there mutual consent is required, especially in a marriage covenant. בְּרִית some derive from כָּרַת to eat, because at the making of covenants they were wont to have sacrifices and feasts, or to eat and drink. Obad. 7, "The men that were at peace with thee have deceived thee, and prevailed against thee; they that eat thy bread," or, the men of thy bread; "have laid a wound upon thee:" they were the Egyptians, who drew them into a covenant against the Chaldeans, by eating bread, that is, by eating and drinking, which was a rite accompanied covenants. You find in the word mention made of "a covenant of salt," Num. xviii. 19; 2 Chron. xiii. 5: which though some think to be so called for the firmness and everlastingness of the covenant, (because salt is a lasting and preserving thing,) yet somewhat else may be found in it, viz. because they did eat and drink at the making of covenants, and used salt which made all savoury, therefore also it may be called "a covenant of salt." To this sense that in Ezra giveth some light, chap. iv. 14, "Now because we have maintenance from the king's palace, and it was not meet for us to see the king's dishonour, therefore have we sent and certified the king:" these words, "maintenance from the king's palace," are in the original thus, Now seeing we are salted with salt of the palace; that is, we have obliged ourselves to him in a covenant, by eating and drinking with him, therefore, &c.: so that place in Lev. ii. 13, "Thou shalt not suffer the salt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meat offering."

Some derive the word berith from בָּתַר dissecare, because then when they made covenants, there was some beast killed and cut in the midst; as Gen. xv. 9, 10, 18, when God made a covenant with Abraham, there a heifer, a she goat, and a ram were divided in the midst, and laid each piece one against another orderly, that so the covenanters might pass between them; according to what is in Jer. xxxiv. 18, "They cut the calf in twain, and passed between the parts thereof," and so cut out a covenant, and manifested thereby, that if they brake the covenant, they deserved to be cut in pieces.

Others derive it from בָּרַח eligeré, because it is that which two or more do choose out and agree upon. Abimelech and his people chose to make a covenant with Isaac, Gen. xxvi. 28; so the Gibeonites chose to make a league with Joshua and the Israelites, Josh. ix. 6: both persons and conditions are chosen and agreed upon, in making of covenants.

Again, some fetch it from בָּרַא to create, order, dispose: for when they cut the beast in pieces, they did divide, order, and dispose of them equally on both sides; and so in a covenant, there is disposing and ordering of things, to the content of both.

Lastly, some draw it from בָּרַר to purify and כָּרַת purity, because when covenants are making, the parties ought to be holy, and to deal holily, without all guile, hypocrisy, and overreaching of one another; and in this sense, among others, the covenant was called holy, Dan. xi. 28; Luke i. 72. The Gibeonites dealt fraudulently, when they came with their old sacks, bottles, shoes, garments, and mouldy bread, to make a covenant with Joshua, chap. ix. 4—6.

This covenant which the Lord entered into, was that at mount Sinai; Exod. xix. 5, 6, Moses being called up unto the mount, the Lord said to him, "If ye will obey my voice, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests and an holy nation." Moses goeth with these words unto the people, to see if they would give their consent, which they presently did; ver. 8, "All the people answered together, and said, All that the Lord hath spoken we will do:" when the Lord heard this, he said, "Lo, I come," ver. 9: there was mutual consent and a solemn covenant made. So chap. xxiv. 3—8, there the consent on both sides is manifested, beasts are slain and sacrificed, both the altar and people sprinkled with the blood of the covenant, and the covenant was written, and read in the audience of all.

This covenant which God made at mount Sinai with this people, was a covenant of grace and mercy; take in all which was delivered by God to Moses being in the mount, and it was so. For,

1. It was a marriage covenant; God took this people to be his spouse, church; Exod. xix. 4—6, he brought them to himself, made them his peculiar treasure, a kingdom of priests, a holy nation; which words are appropriated by Peter unto the church under the gospel, 1 Pet. ii. 9. See Rev. i. 6.

2. It was given in the hands of a mediator, Gal. iii. 19; if it were Moses he typed out Christ, who was the only Mediator between God and man; and Acts vii. 38, he is said to receive "lively oracles to give unto us;" and therefore it is thought by some, that Christ himself was the Mediator, who led them through the wilderness, and gave out those lively oracles.

3. It was made with sacrifice, shedding and sprinkling of blood, Exod. xxiv. 5—8; and the blood was called "the blood of the covenant," which represented the sacrifice and blood of Christ, which is called, Heb. xiii. 20, "The blood of the everlasting covenant:" the covenant of works hath no sacrifices.

4. The ceremonial law was all instituted worship, types, figures, sacrifices, garments, washings, ointments; and what that law had led unto Christ, Gal. iii. 24; Heb. ix. 10, 11, and was evangelical. Now all instituted worship is contained and comprehended in the second command, they were bound to the observation thereof by that command, therefore this covenant must needs have grace and mercy.

5. If it were a covenant of works, not of mercy, what argument were here in the words, "I entered into a covenant with thee?" God was in a covenant of works with them and all the world before, and so it would be of no validity to tell them of it; he did no more for them than for others, and if they had broken covenant, it was but what all the world had done: here lieth a strong convincing argument in the words, I entered into a gracious covenant with thee, I knew thee above all the families of the earth, Amos iii. 2; and yet you have done thus, &c.

6. The covenant of grace was given out long before to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: therefore it is called "the covenant and mercy" he swore unto them, Deut. vii. 12. And Moses was under this covenant; Heb. xi. 24, "By faith he refused to be called, &c. when come to years;" he had Christ with him, Exod. xxiii. 20, the Angel there was Christ: 1 Cor. x. 9, they tempted Christ in the wilderness. The scope of Moses's writings was Christ; John v. 46, "Moses wrote of me." Heb. iv. 2, it is said the gospel was preached unto them, viz. that were in the wilderness.

Now if Moses was under a covenant of grace before, God would not reduce him back to a covenant of works. It is conceived, that after the breach of the first covenant of works, God did never make any more such a covenant with man, but that after covenants were of grace and mercy: now it was the same covenant that God made with the people and Moses; Exod. xxxiv. 27, "Write thou these words; for after the tenour of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel."

7. If a covenant of works, it should be to all, seeing that covenant at first was made with Adam, the root of mankind; but this is to some few, the seed of Abraham only, those who were brought out of Egypt; Deut. v. 1, "Hear, O Israel;" ver. 6, "I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt."

"And thou becamest mine." These words note God's actual taking of this people to be his. Ruth iv. 13, "Boaz took Ruth, and she was his wife." Hos. iii. 3, "Thou shalt not be for another man, so will I be for thee:" here was a nuptial conjunction between the Lord and this Israelitish woman, she became his wife, his possession. This was the joyful day; Deut. xxvi. 18, "The Lord hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people," his church, his spouse.

In marriage, 1. There is a special union. "They two shall be one flesh;" two that were mere strangers before, by marriage become one: so here, God passed by this people, cast his eye upon them, the time of love was come, he betroths and marries them to himself, and so makes a near and dear union between himself and them.

2. Special communion with and delight in each other. Cant. ii. 16, "My beloved is mine, and I am his;" chap. vii. 10, "I am my beloved's, and his desire is toward me:" this woman called the Lord "Isih," Hos. ii. 16, My husband; and the Lord called her "Hephzi-bah," Isa. lxii. 4, My delight in her. The wife is the glory of the husband, 1 Cor. xi. 7, and the husband the glory of the wife; so God looked upon this people as his glory; Isa. iv. 5, "Upon all the glory shall be a defence;" Isa. lxii. 3, they were "a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord;" and God was their "glory," Jer. ii. 11, "There was mutual delight in each other: God looked upon them as his jewels, as his peculiar treasure."

3. Communication of what they have each to other, especially of the husband to the wife; he communicates himself, his name, his estate, his secrets to his beloved; and so did God unto this woman, and doth unto his church: Psal. lxxxvii. 1, 2, "In Judah is God known; his name is great in Israel. In Salem also is his tabernacle, and his dwelling-place in Zion." They had God amongst them,

For his name; he imparts it to his church, Jer. xxxiii. 16, "She shall be called Jehovah our Righteousness," which is the Lord's name, chap. xxxiii. 6; and the church is called Christ, 1 Cor. xii. 12; Jer. xiv. 9, "We are called by thy name."

Estate; she had the land of Canaan given her, which was the land of Immanuel, Isa. viii. 8.

God communicated to his people his wisdom, power, secrets, truths, Spirit, merits and righteousness of his Son.

By virtue of this covenant they had mercies temporal and spiritual promised them and given in.

1. Temporal; and they were many.

(1.) Canaan was promised them. Abraham had the first promise of it, and often to them it was renewed, Deut. vi. 10, 11; xi. 23, 24. This land hath divers encomiums in the word:

[1.] It is called the desire and "glory of all lands," Ezek. xx. 6.

[2.] The land of Immanuel, Isa. viii. 8.

[3.] It was a type of heaven, and therefore is called "the land of the living;" Psal. xxvii. 13, the "rest and inheritance" of the people, Deut. xii. 9; and it was given them of free grace, through the covenant, Deut. ix. 6.

(2.) Great increase in that land, Deut. vii. 12—14; Psal. lxxvii. 6, "The earth shall yield her increase, and God, even our own God, shall bless us."

(3.) Healthfulness, Deut. vii. 15; Exod. xxiii. 25, with Exod. xv. 26, God would be a physician amongst them, and heal them.

(4.) Length of days, if they kept covenant with God, Deut. iv. 40. This is made an argument to move children to honour their parents, Exod. xx. 12; Deut. v. 16; and people are pressed by this argument to love God, and obey him, Deut. xxx. 20; xxxii. 46, 47.

(5.) Honour and esteem in the world, Deut. xxvi. 18, 19; xxviii. 13; Psal. cxlviii. 14. This Balaam prophesied of, Numb. xxiv. 7.

(6.) Power against and victory over their enemies, Deut. xi. 25; Lev. xxvi. 7, 8; Deut. xxxiii. 27; Josh. x. 42; Psal. lxxviii. 35; Numb. xxxiii. 23.

(7.) Peace, Lev. xxvi. 6, "I will give peace in the land." &c. Hence they said, Isa. xxvi. 12, "Lord, thou wilt ordain peace for us."

(8.) Protection, Deut. xxxiii. 29; 2 Sam. xxiii. 3; 1 Chron. xvii. 24. "The Lord of hosts is the God of Israel," &c.; Psal. lxxviii. 34, and xc. 1.

(9.) Deliverance, Lev. xxvi. 44, 45. Zech. ix. 11, they were delivered out of Babylon, through the blood of the covenant, when in danger by Zerah, 2 Chron. xiv. 9, 12; God by virtue of the covenant delivered them, Psal. xlv. 4.

(10.) By virtue thereof God made strangers and heathens servicable unto his people, Isa. xlv. 3, 4; Ezra vii. 11, and turned the plots and curses of enemies into blessings, Deut. xxxiii. 5.

2. Spiritual mercies; and they were divers.

(1.) They had God to be their God in a special manner. God was God of all creatures, and of the heathens, but not as of this people; in respect of them they were "without God," Eph. ii. 12; but the Jews had God to be theirs in a most peculiar manner, 2 Sam. vii. 24; 1 Chron. xvii. 22; therefore happy in the judgment of the Lord, Psal. cxlv. 15. All in God was theirs; as all the man is, and hath, is the woman's, when married unto him, Isa. liv. 5. Exod. xxxiii. 19, he let Moses see what he had in God; and not only Moses, but that people also saw his glory, Deut. v. 24. They owned one another, Exod. xv. 2; Deut. xxxii. 3; Psal. l. 7; Heb. xi. 16.

(2.) He recorded his name amongst them, and dwelt with them, Lev. xxvi. 11, 12; Psal. cxxxii. 13, 14; Numb. xxxiii. 21. When God was with them, none could hurt them, but when he was absent, then evil came upon them, Deut. xxxi. 17. It is worth much to have God amongst a people, Psal. lxxvi. 1, 2.

(3.) The law was theirs, which was holy, just, and good, Deut. iv. 8, "What nation is there so great, that hath statutes and judgments so righteous," &c.; they made men wiser than their enemies, than all their teachers, Psal. cxix. 98, 99. They were "lively oracles," Acts vii. 38; Psal. cxlvii. 19, 20.

(4.) He made his mind and secrets known unto that people. 2 Sam. vii. 27. Moses had familiar converse with God; Abraham was his friend; God gave them Urim and Thummim, they were taught of God, whereas the nations were deluded by the devil and his oracles. The Lord appeared to Jacob, Joshua, Solomon, and others, and made known his will to them.

(5.) They had forgiveness of sins; Exod. xx. 6, that is a pardoning mercy, because visiting iniquity is contrary to it, and noteth punishment, Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7; Isa. lv. 7; Micah vii. 18; Dan. ix. 9.

(6.) This covenant was the ground of their being heard in prayer; 1 Sam. i. 17, "The God of Israel grant thee thy petition;" Dan. ix. 17; 1 Sam. xxxiii. 10, 11; 1 Kings viii. 23; 2 Kings xix. 15; 1 Kings xvii. 21; Jer. xiv. 8. From hence they had,

[1.] A ground of expostulation with God; Psal. xxii. 1, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" &c.; 2 Chron. xx. 12; Exod. xxxii. 11.

[2.] Of challenging God for help; Psal. iii. 7, "Arise, O Lord; save me, O my God;" Psal. xxxv. 23; xl. 17.

[3.] Of confidence; Micah vii. 7, "I will look unto the Lord; I will wait for the God of my salvation; my God will hear me;" Isa. xxv. 9.

(7.) They had many privileges by virtue of this covenant.

[1.] They were a holy people. Exod. xix. 6; Deut. vii. 6; Isa. lxii. 12; Dan. xii. 7. God called them his "anointed," Psal. cv. 15; his "saints," l. 5.

[2.] They were dear unto God, Deut. vii. 6; Exod. xix. 5, "a peculiar treasure;" they were his "jewels," Mal. iii. 17; as "the apple of his eye" unto him, Deut. xxxii. 10; "a people near unto him," Psal. cxlviii. 14; in his "arms," Deut. xxxiii. 27; his "glory," Isa. lv. 5; Psal. lxxviii. 61.

[3.] The Messiah was to come of them, Luke i. 72; Gen. xxii. 18.

[4.] Amongst them did the Lord choose out materials for the heavenly Canaan; Rom. ix. 4, the adoption appertained to them.

(8.) Eternal life and salvation; Acts xv. 11, "We believe that through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they." They had sacrifices which typified Christ, and the brazen serpent.

Obs. 1. That we are backward to believe what the Lord saith and propounds unto us. He came to this woman, pitied her in her bloody, sinful, afflicted condition, said unto her, "Live," promised to do much for her; but she feared, doubted, apprehended not God's intentions by Moses, Exod. ii. 11, 12, compared with Acts vii. 25: she was like other women, that believe not their suitors too easily, when they tell them of great estates, honours, advantages they shall have by them, and so put them to it to make things out clear and evident, whereupon they vow and swear to them it is so. This was the case here, the Israelitish woman was not forward to believe, the Lord he swears by himself unto her, and you know an oath is for confirmation, Heb. vi. 16; so then that she might have her scruples, fears, doubts, jealousies removed, and be confirmed in the reality of things, the Lord is pleased to swear. She had seen the great plagues upon the Egyptians, the signs, wonders, and mighty hand of God, in bringing her out of Egypt, yet this satisfied her not; her spirit was unbelieving, and God swears, to cure and take away that unbelief.

Happy we, for whose sakes the Lord will vouchsafe to swear! but O most miserable we, if we believe not the Lord swearing! He hath sworn that he hath not pleasure in the death of the wicked, Ezek. xxxiii. 11; Isa. xlv. 23, "I have sworn, That unto me every knee shall bow."

Obs. 2. See the infinite kindness and condescension of God towards poor sinners, that he will enter into covenant with them. He is a God of infinite glory, excellency, majesty, holiness, greatness; to him all the nations of the earth are but as the drop of a bucket, and as the small dust of the balance, Isa. xl. 15; and what was this nation of the Jews? "The fewest of all people," Deut. vii. 7; and yet the Lord is pleased to make a covenant with this people, this Israelitish woman. What was there in it to move the Lord thereto; was she of great birth? No; "Thy father was an Amorite, thy mother an Hittite." Had she any breeding? any great portion? any beauty? No; she was an exposed infant, brought up in brick and clay, a bond-servant, not having a rag to cover her nakedness; she lay in her blood, and was without all beauty, under great scorn and reproach; yet the Lord is pleased to enter into a covenant of mercy with her. But it may be the Lord foresaw that she would prove well, be loving, obedient, dutiful. No; the Lord foresaw she would be a contentious wife, a continual dropping, that she would be murmuring, ungrateful, whorish, rebellious, and idolatrous; yet he strikes a covenant with her, &c. God might have dealt with her and us in an absolute way, commanded us, and immediately destroyed us if we had not obeyed; but he condescends to deal with us in a way of covenant, a way of mercy, with us worms. This should,

(1.) Put us into a rapture of admiration, and make us say with David, Psal. viii. 4, "O Lord! what is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?" Psal. cxlv. 3, "Lord, what is man, that thou takest knowledge of him! or the son of man, that thou makest account of him?" Job vii. 16, "What is man, that thou shouldest magnify him? and that thou shouldest set thine heart upon him?"

(2.) Endear the Lord unto us abundantly. When great ones stoop to weak unworthy ones, it is a great endearing of them unto those they stoop to. When Boaz condescended to Ruth, it drew her heart strongly towards him.

(3.) Make us faithful unto God, not to let our hearts run out a whoring after other things. "I am my beloved's," said the spouse; she was not for others. Job made a covenant with his eyes, and would not think of a maid; he was faithful to God. It was an imputation to Solomon, that "his heart was not perfect with the Lord," 1 Kings xi. 4.

(4.) Make us free and cheerful in our obedience, yielding such as springs from covenant rather than command, from love rather than fear.

Ver. 9. Then washed I thee with water; yea, I thoroughly washed away thy blood from thee, and I anointed thee with oil.

This verse lays before you the recital of former mercies God vouchsafed this people, and they are two:

I. Washing.

II. Anointing.

No sooner had the Lord taken this woman into covenant with him, made her his, but he washeth and anoints her.

"I washed thee with water." Some refer this washing to their passing through the Red sea, Exod. xiv. 21, 22, of which the apostle saith, 1 Cor. x. 1, 2, "All our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea." Their bringing out of Egypt was a type of redemption by Christ, and their passage through the Red sea, a figure of baptism, or washing in the blood of Christ.

Some here make the water to be heavenly doctrine, which the Lord gave them; Deut. xxxii. 2, "My doctrine shall drop as the rain;" when the rain falls, it washeth away the filth of places; so did the law, the corruptions and pollutions of this people.

Others think here to be meant those legal washings, spoken of in several places, begun in Exod. xix. 10, "The Lord said unto Moses, Go unto the people, and sanctify them to day and to morrow, and let them wash their clothes;" and Num. xix. you may read of a water made of the ashes of a red heifer, to purify and cleanse those who were defiled. Heb. ix. 10, they had "divers washings." One was ἀγνισμός, John xi. 55, they went up to Jerusalem, "to purify themselves." A second, καθαρισμός, which was a more thorough washing; John iii. 25, there was "a question between some of John's disciples and the Jews," πῶς καθαρισμοῦ. You know they had their water-pots, which held two or three firkins apiece, in which they washed their clothes, hands, &c., when they were defiled by touching any unclean thing.

Others put it upon God's freeing them from their misery and sordid condition, through their poverty and meanness, raising them up to a considerable estate.

We may step over the second and fourth, and take the first and third; I washed thee in the Red sea, and with legal washings. Now because these were typical, and leading unto Christ, we must pass from the ceremony to the substance, viz. the blood of Christ, and remission of sins; I led thee by those washings and baptisms, to the fountain set open for uncleanness, Zech. xiii. 1. Sin defiles, and the blood of Christ cleanseth from that defilement. I find interpreters do understand by this washing with water, forgiveness of sins, which in the New Testament is oft expressed by the metaphor of washing, sprinkling, cleansing, purging, 1 John i. 7; 2 Pet. i. 9; Rev. i. 5; Heb. ix. 14; 1 Pet. i. 2. Water cleanses, cools, comforts; and so doth forgiveness of sin through the blood of Christ, Eph. i. 7; Heb. x. 22; Matt. ix. 2; Heb. xii. 24.

"I thoroughly washed away thy blood." The Hebrew is, I have flooded thy bloods from thee.

By bloods (so it is in the Hebrew) is meant sins, the analogy between which I spoke of in the 6th verse. Blood is natural, diffuseth itself through the whole man, defileth, makes loathsom; and so doth sin; I may add this, it abounds in man; and so doth sin; but God washed away their bloods, their sins, thoroughly.

Quest. How appears it their sins were washed away?

Ans. Some scriptures give in evidence: Psal. lxxviii. 38, "He being full of compassion, forgave their iniquity;" the word in the original, כָּסַף is, to cover or cleanse; God cleansed the elect by the blood of his Son, as Deodate upon the place saith. Psal. xcix. 8, "Thou wast a God that forgavest them;" God did forgive them their manifold and great provocations of his majesty. That place in Num. xiv. 19, 20, is very remarkable; saith Moses, "Pardon, I beseech thee, the iniquity of this people according unto the greatness of thy mercy, and as thou hast forgiven this people, from Egypt even until now." They had often and much provoked God after their departure out of Egypt, yet God had forgiven them, and this argument he pressed to move God to pardon them still; and ver. 20, "The Lord said, I have pardoned according to thy word;" then had desired me to pardon, and I have done it; hence in Nch. ix. 17, he is called a God of pardons; "ready to pardon," is the translation in our hands, but the original is, אלהים סליחות. A God of propitiations of pardons.

"And I anointed thee with oil." The Hebrew is, וָאֲנִיחְךָ בַשֶּׁן I anointed thee in oil. We must inquire in what sense these words are to be taken.

Some put this construction upon them, that God refreshed them after their great and long afflictions in Egypt. They had suffered long and much in the house of bondage, and when God brought them forth, freed them from their tasks and task-masters, gave them liberty and ease, this was a kind of anointing of them.

Others refer this to the holy oil, with which Aaron and his sons were anointed; Exod. xxx. 30, they were anointed and consecrated, to "minister unto the Lord in the priest's office," and so virtually in them the people were anointed; and you know that in Exod. xix. 6, they are called "A kingdom of priests, an holy nation;" and in Ezra ix. 2, "The holy seed;" Dan. viii. 24, "The holy people."

You may take the words in this sense: For the abundance of oil that God gave them, Deut. viii. 8, their land is called "A land of oil olive," or, as the original is, A land of olive tree of oil; that is, a land of such olive trees as yielded much oil. This land did not only abound with milk and honey, but also with oil; Joel ii. 24, their fats did "overflow with wine and oil;" they had it in such abundance that they sold it to other nations; Hos. xii. 1, "Oil is carried into Egypt."

Artaxerxes appointed his officers to allow Ezra upon his return one hundred baths of oil, Ezra vii. 22.

Now there were two sorts of baths; one called the lesser bath, which contained seventy-two quarts, another called the greater bath, which contained one hundred and eighty sextaruses or quarts; and this distinction is founded upon 1 Kings vii. 26, where the brazen sea is said to contain two thousand baths, which must be understood of the greater baths, and 2 Chron. iv. 5, where it is said it held three thousand baths, which you must interpret of the lesser baths. Ezra was allowed one hundred of them, which shows they had plenty of oil amongst them; and hence it is likely the prophet gave out the expression of "rivers of oil," Micah vi. 7, for they had olive yards in abundance, Nch. ix. 25.

For a more full understanding of these words, you must know that in the oriental parts they used much to wash and anoint themselves; Amos vi. 6, "They anoint themselves with the chief ointments;" it was ordinary at their feasts to do it; Matt. xxvi. 7, a woman came and poured a box of precious ointment upon Christ's head as he sat at meat; Luke vii. 38, a woman anointed his feet with ointment as he sat at meat; ver. 46, saith Christ to Simon, "My head with oil thou didst not anoint; but this woman hath anointed my feet;" Eccles. ix. 8, "Let thy head lack no ointment." They anointed not only at their fastings, but also upon their fastings; Matt. vi. 17, "When thou fastest, anoint thine head, and wash thy face."

Lavater saith, that among the eastern people the use of oil was the same with them, as the use of baths amongst those where he lived. Husbands had baths in their houses for themselves and wives to cleanse their bodies and strengthen their spirits. And so upon the marriage of women, they used to wash and bathe; Ruth iii. 3, when a match was intended between Ruth and Boaz, what said Naomi to her? "Wash thyself therefore and anoint thee, and put thy raiment upon thee, and get thee down to the floor:" so Esth. ii. 12, the wives of the Persian kings had twelve months for the time of their purification, six months with oil of myrrh, and six months with other sweet odours, that so they might be the more pleasing and delightful to the king; this was their custom. Now unto this, it seems to me, the Lord here alludes, who proceeding in the allegory of this metaphorical woman, the Jewish state, was now upon the marriage and enjoyment of her; and having washed away her blood and filth with water, he also anoints her with oil, that so she may be the more acceptable and delightful unto him. Now this anointing leads us to a spiritual consideration.

The stream of later interpreters runs that way. So Polanus, "I have anointed thee with oil," that is, I have regenerated thee by my Holy Spirit. Piscator, By this unction seems to be signified regeneration by the Holy Spirit. Ceolampadius, After washing comes the anointing of the Spirit. Pintus, "I have anointed thee with oil," that is, with the oil of my grace. Deodate, I have endowed thee with the graces of my Spirit, signified by the anointing. Of the same judgment are they who set out the Annotations upon the Bible. So Bernard, in his Thesaurus Biblicus, in the word Oil, referring to this place, saith, It is put for the grace of regeneration.

Now it is clear from the holy writ, that spiritual things are held forth by oil and anointing with it. Exod. xl. 13, 15, Aaron and his sons must be anointed with the anointing oil, which represented the anointing of Christ and his servants with the Spirit. Psal. xlv. 7, "Thy God hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows;" it is spoken of God's anointing Christ with his Spirit, and so likewise of his anointing the saints with the graces of his Spirit. 2 Cor. i. 21, "He who hath anointed us is God." The Spirit and graces of it are here represented by oil. We must inquire further what is meant by this anointing, for it is certain all of them had not the Spirit and graces of it.

1. By this anointing we may understand the consecration of this people unto the Lord; he separated them from the Egyptians and the rest of the world, who were profane, and made them a holy people to himself. Exod. xl. 9—11, the tabernacle, altar, and vessels of both were anointed with oil, that so they might be holy to the Lord, they were consecrated by that oil to the Lord: so when God by his Spirit in Moses told this people, Exod. xix. 6, that they should be "a kingdom of priests, an holy nation," then did he anoint them and consecrate them unto himself; and Psal. cv. 15, they are called the Lord's anointed ones, "Touch not mine anointed."

2. God's bringing them to a gladsome condition after their sore bondage in Egypt, and forty years' travel in the wilderness. Oil in holy Scripture sets out joy and cheerfulness; Psal. civ. 15, "Oil to make his face to shine." Oil when they anointed with it, and when they did eat it, much refreshed them; it is called "oil of gladness," Psal. xlv. 7, and "oil of joy," Isa. lxi. 3; and in that God made them a gladsome and a joyous people, he is said to anoint them. Psal. cv. 43, "He brought forth his people with joy, and his chosen with gladness;" the Hebrew is, with singing. When they saw themselves through the Red sea, and the Egyptians drowned, they sang for joy, Psal. cvi. 12, "They sang his praise;" and you have the song, Exod. xv. Before, they were filled with anguish of spirit, Exod. vi. 9; but God gave them for mourning the oil of joy by his Spirit, he put gladness into their hearts, they were the people that knew the joyful sound, Psal. lxxxix. 15.

3. God's teaching of them in the ways of his worship. Never before had any people such laws given them for divine worship, for regulation of their lives and ways towards God and man, as they had. Now teaching is set out by oil and unction, 1 John ii. 20, 27, "Ye have an unction, and the anointing teacheth you all things;" that was the Spirit: God anointed Moses and the prophets which were amongst this people with the Spirit, and so taught them all things needful for their condition. What saith Moses, Deut. iv. 5? "I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the Lord my God commanded me:" Moses and the prophets spake as the Holy Spirit moved them, and having the spirit of prophecy amongst them, they may be said to be anointed. Origen saith, The anointing is the indwelling of the Holy Spirit in the knowledge of the truth.

4. God's working of grace in their hearts, and making of them truly holy. The giving of the Spirit and graces of it unto Christ, is called an anointing of him, Acts x. 38, "God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Spirit;" and Cant. i. 3, "Because of the savour of thy good ointments the virgins love thee." Christ communicated the graces of his Spirit, and anointed the virgins therewith, which were sweet and savoury as a precious ointment; and here God saith he anointed the Jews with oil, and did give unto many of them his Spirit and saving grace. Abraham their father was eminent for faith, Rom. iv. 18—20; so Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, Caleb, Joshua, Gideon, Baruch, Jephthah, David, Samuel, the prophets, and multitudes of others, they had not only true grace, but much grace; Heb. xi. 39, "These all obtained a good report through faith."

This people was the church of God, he had no other people which he owned as his; the Jewish nation alone was his peculiar people, and if there was any true grace in the world it was amongst them: they were called the "holy people." Deut. vii. 6, the "holy nation," Exod. xix. 6, "holy seed," Isa. vi. 13, "the generation of the righteous," Psal. xiv. 5, "saints." I. 5; not only because they were separated from the rest of the world, came of Abraham, made a profession of the true God and his worship, but also because they had true grace. Isa. li. 7, God gives this testimony of them, "The people in whose heart is my law;" if there had not been many of them truly gracious, God would never have given them such a commendation.

Thus you see what is meant by this anointing, and though all had not true grace, yet how all may be in one respect or other said to be anointed.

Obs. I. Those whom it pleaseth the Lord to enter into covenant with, and take to be his people, them he pleaseth to wash: this ariseth clearly from the coherence; "I entered into a covenant with thee, and thou becamest mine;" what then? "Then washed I thee with water."

There is a double washing to be considered: one external, which was in the Red sea, and in the legal washings, and so they were all washed, good and bad. There is another washing which is internal, viz. by the blood of Christ, signified by the outward washings, and this is the principal washing; and with this washing they were not all washed, only those who were elect and vessels of grace, they were washed in the blood of Christ, and had the forgiveness of sins. In Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, where God speaks of entering into covenant with the house of Israel, he tells them he will forgive iniquity; and chap. xxxiii. 8, "I will cleanse them from all their iniquity." טהרתם that cleansing is washing them away in the blood of Christ, and pardoning them for his sake, for it follows in the original טהרתם and I will pardon all their iniquities." Now in the times of the gospel, those who live under the sound of it, and do profess the same, they are washed with the water of baptism, but not all with the blood of Christ. Simon Magus had the outward washing; Acts viii. 13, but wanted the inward washing; so John baptized many with water, whom Christ never baptized with his blood; but all the Father gave him, and were covenanted for, those he washed with his blood; Rev. i. 5, "He loved us," that is, being in covenant with the Father, "and washed us from our sins in his own blood," which is therefore called "the blood of the covenant," Heb. xiii. 20. And whereas it is said, Heb. x. 29, that some which proved apostates were sanctified with that blood, you must understand it of those who by profession of the faith, and participation of the seals, baptism and the supper, were separated from judaism and paganism, and in the judgment of charity such: not that they were internally washed from their sins by the blood of Christ, for it is impossible that any man sanctified and pardoned through the blood of Christ, should tread under foot the Son of God, and count that blood an unholy thing: to such a soul nothing is more precious than Christ and his blood.

Obs. 2. Those whose sin God forgives, he fully forgives. "I thoroughly washed away thy blood." I suffered no sin, no guilt to stick upon thee. Ezek. xxxvi. 25, "I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you:" sprinkling of them with clean water imports the sprinkling of them with the blood of Christ, whereby sins are purged and done away. 1 John i. 7, "The blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin," not some few, some little, some great, some old, some new sins, but from all sin; when God pardons he pardons thoroughly, Jer. xxxiii. 8, "I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against me; and I will pardon all their iniquities whereby they have sinned against me:" let the sins, iniquities, be what they will, when the Lord is upon the work of forgiving, he will forgive them all. David blesseth God upon this ground, because God was a God forgiving all iniquities, Psal. ciii. 3. That place in Isa. lv. 7. is to our purpose, "He will abundantly pardon;" not ten, twenty, a hundred, or a thousand sins, but ten thousand sins, all wicked ways, all evil thoughts. The Vulgate reads it, Multus est ad ignoscendum, He is much inclined to pardon, much in pardoning, he takes delight in it, as a thing natural to him, Micah vii. 18, "He pardoneth iniquity and passeth by transgression;" and why? "because he delighteth in mercy:" it is his will, his nature to be merciful, nothing pleases him more than to show mercy. The Hebrew is, He will multiply to pardon; if man have multiplied sins, he will multiply means to pardon those sins; the sins of the creature shall not be supernumerary to the mercies of the Creator. Man is a father of sins, and God is a "Father of mercies," 2 Cor. i. 3. Doth man beget and bring forth thousands of sins in a day? God begets and brings forth more mercies in an hour; where sin abounds, he makes grace much more to abound, Rom. v. 20.

Obs. 3. Those whose sins God washes away, then he separates from the world, makes glad, teaches his ways, and beautifies with the graces of his Spirit. "I thoroughly washed thee from blood, and anointed thee with oil;" all these are comprehended in that anointing; when God washeth away the sins of any, then he anoints them with oil. When Aaron was washed, then was he anointed, Exod. xl. 12, 13.

And Peter tells them that had put the Lord Christ to death, that they were washed, and they should be anointed; they must first be baptized for remission of sins, and then they should receive the gift of the Holy Spirit, Acts ii. 38. When God pardons any, he purges them; after the remission comes the unction: and then,

(1.) They are off from the world, they are the Lord's, his beloved, they have sweet peace and fellowship with him; they are vessels anointed for the Lord's use, and dare not profane themselves with the world, knowing "that the friendship of the world is enmity with God," Jam. iv. 4. In 1 John i. he speaks of their cleansing from sin by the blood of Christ; in chap. ii. of their receiving the anointing; and in chap. iii. 13, of the world's hatred of them: they were now not of the world, the unction had severed them from the world, and they were consecrated to the Lord.

(2.) They are joyous and cheerful ones who are anointed. The apostles, after they received the Holy Spirit, their sorrows for the departure of Christ fled away, their troubles in the flesh were nothing. So Paul and Silas sang praises at midnight, after whipping, imprisoning, and thrusting into the stocks, Acts xvi. 24, 25. And the Hebrews "took joyfully the spoiling of their goods," Heb. x. 34; and why? they "were made partakers of the Holy Spirit," chap. vi. 4, they were anointed, and that made them joyful.

(3.) They are taught the ways of God. Heb. viii. 10—12, "I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts. They shall all know me, from the least to the greatest. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more." When God should forgive them, and wash away their sins in the blood of Christ, then he would anoint them, he would teach them, little and great, the knowledge of himself and his ways.

(4.) They are sanctified and beautified with the graces of his Spirit. When sins are washed away in the blood of the Lamb, then God anoints with the graces of his Spirit. Tit. iii. 5, 6, upon "the washing of regeneration" (that is, upon the effectual washing of the soul by the blood of Christ in the use of baptism) followed the "renewing of the Holy Spirit; which he shed on us abundantly," poured out like oil, so that they were replenished, sanctified, and beautified with all the graces of his Spirit.

Ver. 10—13. I clothed thee also with broidered work, and shod thee with badgers' skin, and I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with silk. I decked thee also with ornaments, and I put bracelets upon thy hands, and a chain on thy neck. And I put a jewel on thy forehead, and earrings in thine ears, and a beautiful crown upon thine head. Thus wast thou decked with gold and silver; and thy raiment was of fine linen, and silk, and broidered work; thou didst eat fine flour, and honey, and oil; and thou wast exceeding beautiful, and thou didst prosper into a kingdom.

These verses hold out more of God's bounty towards this woman; like a loving husband newly married, he makes great provision for her.

1. Clothing, and that not common, but costly, ver. 10, and part of 13.

11. Ornaments, ver. 11, 12, bracelets, a chain, a jewel, earrings, a crown.

111. Diet, fine flour, honey, and oil.

"I clothed thee also with broidered work." לְבָשָׁתְּךָ

רִקְמָה I clothed thee with that which is drawn, painted, or embroidered with a needle. The word is from רָקַם to embroider with the needle, or by weaving, to work in divers colours, figures and pictures in cloths; they made the pictures of men, beasts, and other living creatures in them; sometimes they intermixed gold and silk of divers colours, and so the work was very curious and costly. Pradus conceiveth that the word rickmah doth properly signify work done by the needle; and Psal. xlv. 14, where it is said, "She shall be brought unto the king in raiment of needlework," לִרְקִמָה it sets out what broidery the word imports, viz. that which is done with the needle, and such embroidery is called opus Phrygioticum, because the Phrygians first invented it. Some refer this clothing with broidery to Aaron; Exod. xxviii. 4, there a "broidered coat" was to be made for him, in which they affirm was embroidered the whole world, heaven, earth, sea, with the fulness and furniture of them, as birds, fishes, beasts, meadows. and those living creatures which were dos uoris, the dowry of the wife, these were intertext, woven in; also with the needle was embroidered most lively the glory of their progenitors, according to that in Wisd. xviii. 24, "In the long garment was all the ornament, and in the four rows of the stones was the glory of the fathers graven." Theodoret refers the broidery, and what follows in the words, to the curtains, coverings, and ornaments of the tabernacle, which were costly and wrought with needlework, some of them, Exod. xxvi. 36. But both these are too narrow: the people were clothed with broidered work, as well as the priests and tabernacle; Isa. iii. 18, they had their bravery and their broidery too. Judg. v. 30, when Sisera was gone forth to fight with the Israelites, did not his mother and the ladies say, "Have they not divided the prey? to Sisera a prey of divers colours, a prey of divers colours of needlework on both sides, meet for the neck of them that take the spoil?" The Hebrew for needlework is rickmah and rickmathaim, broidery made with the needle, which the Jews had plenty of; the repetition of the words import it; had they conquered and spoiled the Jews, they looked for a prey of divers-coloured needlework.

"And shod thee with badgers' skin." The Hebrew is, וְנִשְׂרָף תַּחַשׁ That this tachash was some living creature all agree, but what creature, is doubtful; some rabbies say it was a beast, which only at that time had been found, having many spots, which the Chaldeans called sasgona, as delighting in colours, for some of the Hebrews say it had six colours; we have it "badgers' skins;" so it is rendered, Exod. xxv. 5; xxvi. 14; xxxv. 7, 23; xxxvi. 19; xxxix. 34; Numb. iv. 6, 8, 10, 11, 12, 14, 25; but whether so warrantable I leave to consideration, for the Jews held the tachash to be a clean beast, which the badger is not, by Moses's law, as Ainsworth observes. How could they handle the badger, if it were an unclean creature, flay it, and make shoes of the skin, and not be defiled therewith? the wearing of such shoes was a defilement and abomination. Besides, it is not probable that God would have the tabernacle covered with the skins of unclean beasts, that being holy. Gesner also saith that the skins of badgers have no preciousness in them; he would have inquiry made whether it be not the Thos lynx, some such creature, whose skin is precious and spotted. Further, it appears not that badgers' skins were of use to make shoes, as here the tachash is said to be. It is most likely to be some living creature peculiar to those parts, having sundry blue spots in it, which occasioned the Septuagint and Vulgate to translate it as they have done, "I shod thee with skins of a blue colour." The Jews did wear their garments short, because their feet were seen; they had their shoes exquisitely made and much adorned; Isa. iii. 18, "Ornaments about their feet." This shoeing of them held out, saith Prado,

1. Liberty; for as to be unshod noted captivity, Isa. xx. 3, 4, so being shod the contrary, Exod. xii. 11.

2. Taking possession; for loosing the shoe was an emblem of man's parting with his right, Ruth iv. 7; Deut. xxv. 9, 10.

3. Joy: Ezek. xxiv. 17, in time of mourning they put off their shoes, and therefore the prophet being forbid to mourn, is commanded to put on his shoes.

4. Constancy and resolution. The word here for shoeing is from נָעַץ to shut, because when a man is shod, his feet are shut up from danger of stones and thorns, and so he goes on boldly, constantly, resolutely: Eph. vi. 15, "Having your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel;" let the gospel be to the affections as shoes to the feet, have that in readiness, it will make you go on undauntedly.

"I girded thee about with fine linen." Hebrew is thus, וְנִהַרְבֵּשׁ בִּשְׂשׁ I covered thee with fine linen. Exod. xxv. 4, it is שֶׁשׁ there, which Tremellius and Junius render linum, alinum, not byssum, and upon this reason, because bysse or fine linen hath another name among the Hebrews, viz. בִּץ as in 1 Chron. xv. 27; but this argument is not convincing, because both in the Hebrew tongue and in others, one thing may have divers names; and Boetius in his Sacred Animadversions saith that if שֶׁשׁ be cotton, it hath also another name in the Hebrew, namely, פֶּשֶׁתָה and so he interprets that place in Josh. ii. 6, בִּשְׂשֵׁי הָעֵץ to be understood of cotton and not of flax, which is Masius's opinion. It appears to me that shesh was some choice material, whereof they made precious garments and girdles, such as were for kings and great persons. Gen. xli. 42, when Pharaoh would exalt Joseph, set him over all the land next to himself, he arrays him in vestures of shesh, bysse or fine linen. So in Prov. xxxi. 22, speaking of the virtuous wife, he saith, her clothing is shesh; in the verse before, it is said of her household, they were all clothed with scarlet; if they were clad with that, this shesh must be something more precious, otherwise her servants should be better clad than herself: I conceive the marginal reading were fitter, they were all clothed with double garments; so the Hebrew word will bear it, and the former words of the verse seem to infer it, "She is not afraid of the snow," that is, the greatest cold of all, because her household is clothed with double garments, and she herself with shesh, fine linen and purple, which were more costly than the others. Luke xvi. 19, the rich man is brought in clothed with purple and fine linen, byssos; and it is reckoned amongst precious things, Rev. xviii. 12, 16, as gold, silver, precious stones, pearls, fine linen or bysse; purple, silk, scarlet, &c.; fine linen here, or bysse, is distinguished from silk, and so is שֶׁשׁ in my text; there is another word for silk שֵׁשׁ they have mistaken therefore who have rendered שֶׁשׁ silk, whereas it is the common consent of interpreters, that שֵׁשׁ is silk; this shesh or byssus was a kind of flax greatly esteemed and desired of women, and of no less value than gold. The rabbies say, what place soever in the law speaketh of shesh or butz, it is flax, or bysse, maymony. Mercer saith it is a kind of flax most fine, white, and precious, and so divers others, only some doubt is made of the colour. Pausanias and Boetius do conceive it was of a yellowish or reddish colour, but the Scripture itself may determine that doubt; Rev. xix. 14, it is called βέσσων λεύκων, white linen; and the word shesh is put for white marble, Cant. v. 15; and if the Scripture calls it white, we need not make inquiry after any colour: for the origin of it, Del. tells us that byssum non vermiculi pratium esse sed terræ ceu plantæ.

“I girded thee.” The Hebrew הבש signifies, to bind and to cover. Isa. i. 6, Thy wounds have not been “bound up;” Gen. xxii. 3, “Abraham rose, and saddled his ass;” the Hebrew is, covered; in this place, the word is, to girt: now which sense of the word is fittest must be inquired after. Whenas some render it, I covered, I clothed thee; others, I girded, or bound thee; to me girding is most peculiar here, because he spake of clothing before, and speaks of covering in the next words: it is well rendered by our translators, “I girded thee,” &c. that is, with a girdle made of fine linen, I girt thee and thy children. Aaron’s girdle was of fine twined linen, Exod. xxxix. 29. Girdles usually were of costly things, needle-work, Exod. xxviii. 39, of gold, Rev. xv. 6; Dan. x. 5; and girdles were for gifts, 2 Sam. xviii. 11, saith Joab to the young man, “I would have given thee ten shekels of silver and a girdle.” Girdles amongst the attire and dressing of women, were of some account: Jer. ii. 32, “Can a maid forget her ornaments, or a bride her attire;” their hearts and thoughts are much taken up with them, and because they sinned so about them the Lord told them, Isa. iii. 24, “That instead of a girdle there should be a rent, and instead of a stomacher a girding with sackcloth;” this girding some make to note out chastity, and conjugal fidelity; others, fitness and preparedness for employment.

“Covered thee with silk.” Hebrew is אבשך כסף This covering was not any inward garment, but some outward veil, a covering, not a clothing. The Hebrew women did wear their veils and coverings over their outward garments: Gen. xxxviii. 14, Tamar covered herself with a veil; so did Rebekah, Gen. xxiv. 65; and Cant. v. 7, the spouse had her veil; so Isa. iii. 23, the daughters of Zion had their hoods and veils. Whether these veils did cover the whole bodies, like hukes in some countries, or their half bodies, whether their heads or faces, is doubtful amongst interpreters. That they were not only for the head, but larger, is clear from Ruth iii. 15. How big or little soever, it was of silk, so do expositors in general render it; only the Septuagint and Jerom read it otherwise: the one hath it τριχαστον, which Suidas affirms to be a silken cloth, or precious vesture; Theodoret, a net or caul made of fine hair, and put upon the heads of woman; Hesychius expounds it to be βομβύκιον ἕλασμα ὑπερ τῶν τριχῶν κεφαλῆς ἀπτόμενον, a silken covering, woven, knit, or made for the hairs of the head; and Stephanus in Thes. τριχαστον, is textum quoddam tenue et bombycinum magni pretii quod crinibus obducatur. Jerom hath it, sabtilibus, I covered thee with curious and fine coverings; it was of that fineness saith he, at capillorum tenuitatem habere credatur, that it equalled small hair. Our prophet saith אבשך כסף with silk, which may be drawn out into very curious threads; the word from whence meshi comes is משך signifying to draw out. 2 Sam. xxii. 17, “He drew me out of many waters;” and Moses had his name hence, Exod. ii. 10, because drawn out of the water; so silk is called meshi in Hebrew, because it is drawn out of the bowels of a worm, and afterwards being put into the water, is drawn out into the finest threads.

The use of veils in Scripture was twofold:

1. For declaration and preservation of modesty: Gen. xxiv. 65, when Isaac was coming, Rebekah puts on her veil, and covers her beauty from the sight of man, and manifests her modesty, 1 Cor. xi. 5, a woman prophesying was to have her head covered, she must not do it without her veil on; that was a shame to her, argued boldness and impudence, and was as disgraceful as being shorn; when therefore a woman prophesied, either in an extraordinary way, as Deborah, Huldah, Anna, the daughters of Philip, or in an ordinary way, that is, sung in public. (for so prophesying is taken, 1 Chron. xxv. 1, where the singers are said to prophesy with harps,) they were for modesty’s sake to put on their veils; and God here gave a silken veil or covering to the Jewish church his spouse, that she might carry herself modestly towards him.

2. A veil notes subjection; 1 Cor. xi. 10, “A woman ought to have power on her head,” that is, to cover it, that so it may appear she is under the dominion of her husband. Man being God’s deputy on earth, lord of the world, he ought not to cover his head, lest he wrong the power put into his hand; but the woman being of man and for man, she ought to cover and veil herself, to declare her subjection to her husband, and reverence the power in him. God therefore giving a covering to this Jewish state, would have her to know, that she was not to live as she listed, but to be in subjection unto him, and to be ruled by his laws, that she was not at her own disposal, but at the pleasure and disposure of the Lord.

Ver. 11. “I decked thee also with ornaments.” In the former verse you heard of the rich clothing of this Israelitish woman; in this and the next verse you have her ornaments, which are for comeliness and sight, rather than any necessity.

“I put bracelets upon thy hands.” Hebrew is, אבשך צמרים armillas, from צמד to couple, join, unite together; and bracelets are made of such materials as are stringed and united together. This practice was very ancient; Gen. xxiv. 22, you have mention of golden bracelets for the hands of Rebekah; and these were worn sometimes by men also, as Gen. xxxviii. 18, Tamar asked Judah for his signet and his bracelets; and 2 Sam. i. 10, Saul had a bracelet upon his arm; these persons of note did use to wear, and they were a great ornament unto them, signifying, saith Origen, that the hands should do no uncomely thing.

“A chain on thy neck.” Hebrew is, על רביד נרנך it is from רביד which was a chain of divers gems, or precious things, hanging down from the neck to the breast. This wearing of chains about the neck we find to be first in Egypt; Gen. xli. 42, Pharaoh put a gold chain about Joseph’s neck, which was a great honouring of him; it is like the Egyptian kings and nobles did wear chains for ornaments. Dan. v. 16, Belshazzar said to Daniel, “If thou canst read the writing and make it known to me, thou shalt be clothed with scarlet, and have a chain of gold about thy neck.” It was used as for honour, so for reward; Solomon saith, his beloved’s neck was comely with chains of gold, Cant. i. 10; so obedience to parents is reckoned as a chain about the neck, Prov. i. 9. Here by chain, saith Bernard in his Bibl. Thes. is meant the laws and ordinances of God, which would be a chain to her neck.

Ver. 12. “I put a jewel on thy forehead.” The Hebrew word for jewel is, נוי which notes a jewel for the forehead. In the original it is, on thy nose or nostrils; and Isa. iii. 21, you read of “nose jewels;” אבשך האזן the rings of the nose or jewels of the nostrils: so in Gen. xxiv. 47, “I put the earring upon her face,” it is in the original, I put the jewel on her nose or nostrils. Some think it was a ring fastened in the cartilage, or partition between the nostrils, which is a place fit enough for such a purpose, and from thence hung down to the lips; Theodoret is of that judgment: and the Lord seems to allude unto Isa. xxxvii. 29, "I will put my hook in thy nose," or nostrils; and historians tell us, that there are Indians and others in the world who wear jewels in their noses. Others hold it was a jewel fastened on their foreheads, and so hung down to their noses. Castalio hath it, frontale, as if it were a forehead jewel. The author of this opinion was Jerom, who affirms that among their ornaments they were wont to have golden rings hang down from their foreheads to their mouths; and he renders Isa. iii. 21, Gemas ex fronte pendentes. I shall not contend in this point, but when the Scripture calls them jewels for the nose, I should think it safest to rest there.

"Earrings in thine ears." Hebrew is, עֵרִים circulos, it is from עָרַר rotandum, because they are round. They were of gold usually: Exod. xxxii. 2, "Break off the golden earrings, which are in the ears of your wives;" Job xlii. 11, every one of Job's friends brought him an earring of gold; Judg. viii. 24, "They had golden earrings;" the word here signifies any round thing, and so rings in general.

I shall speak a word or two of rings. I find in Scripture that they were ancient, and their use to be,

1. Honorary: so when Joseph had told Pharaoh his dream, he honoured him with putting a ring upon his finger; Gen. xli. 42, "He took off the ring from his hand, and put it upon Joseph's."

2. Signatory: Ahasuerus bids Esther write in the king's name for the Jews, and seal it with the king's ring. Sealing rings were called signets; Gen. xxxviii. 18, Tamar demands of Judah his signet; Dan. vi. 17, "The king sealed it with his own signet, and the signets of his lords;" and they did wear their signets upon their right hands; Jer. xxii. 24, "Though Comah were the signet," &c.

3. Decorary, or for ornament, either of the hands, Esth. viii. 2, or of the nose, as before, or of the ears, as in this place. By this earring, Theodoret understands the hearing of the word of God.

4. Testificatory:

(1.) Of joy: Luke xv. 22, said the father of the prodigal upon his return, "Put a ring on his hand."

(2.) Of estate: James ii. 2, "If there come unto your assembly a man with a gold ring," &c.; that shows him to be a man of estate. Crassus, that rich Roman, wore two rings, thereby intimating the great increase of his wealth.

(3.) Of power: Esth. iii. 10, when Haman had traduced the Jews, persuaded the king it was not for his profit to suffer them, and had offered a great sum of money for their destruction, the king took the ring from his hand, and gave it unto Haman, which tes-

Curr. lib. 6. de Gest. Alex. tified the king thereby gave him power to do it: so Alexander, when sick unto death, was asked who should be his successor, answered, The best amongst them; and shortly after, his speech failing, he pulled off his ring, and gave it to Perdiceas.

Their earrings that entered their ears, had the names of their gods in them: Gen. xxxv. 4, they gave to Jacob all their strange gods, and their earrings, which he buried under the oak. Why should he bury the earrings, if they had not the names, effigies, or memorial of their gods in them?

Also they were tokens of reconciliation: Job xlii. 11, they brought to Job an earring of gold: so God had given them his word, that it might enter into their ears, carry the name and memorial of God to their hearts, and be a pledge of his friendship and good will towards them.

Obs. I. That whatever wealth you have, clothing, ornaments, jewels, it is the Lord who gives you them. "I clothed thee, I girded thee, I covered thee, I decked thee, I put bracelets upon thy hands, I put a jewel on thy forehead;" here are six things. If we have clothes, we consider not who clothed us, therefore saith God, "I clothed thee;" if we be girded, &c. we are very apt to forget God's bounty, and to attribute what he gives to our own industry, prudence, providence, or some second cause: Hos. ii. 5, she thought her lovers, not God, gave her bread, water, wool, flax, &c.; ver. 8, "She did not know that I gave her." We all live upon the alms of God; no man hath a coat, a shoe, a girdle, no woman a veil, a hood, a jewel, but it is the gift of God. Cant. iv. 1, the church is said to have doves' eyes, because she looks much upward; others have swine's, they look downward.

"A beautiful crown upon thine head." Hebrew is, עֲטָרַת תְּפָאֵרֶת, a crown of glory, that is, a crown which made thee glorious and beautiful.

What this crown was we must inquire. A crown is somewhat that compasseth about; so the word עָרַר whence it comes, signifies, viz. to surround; and the learned conceive this crown was some ornament upon the head, made of fine linen, silk or gold intermixed with the same. In Isa. iii. 18, you read of round tires like the moon, which Deodate saith they wore on their shoes, but others, on their heads, that were made of costly materials, and round like the moon, and may be that which the Lord calls here the beautiful crown. Women in our days do tie up their hair in a round, which shows like a crown upon their heads.

Aaron you know was crowned: Lev. viii. 9, Moses put upon his head the holy crown, and so in him crowned the people, who are called a royal priesthood, "a kingdom of priests," Exod. xix. 6: to this crowning, some think, the Lord respects here. Others judge the Lord alludes to a custom among the Jews, and others, of putting crowns upon the heads of those who were to be married, and receive princely power and dignity; Cant. iii. 11, Solomon's mother crowned him with a crown "in the day of his espousals;" and Isa. lxi. 10, "As a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments;" the Hebrew is, that decketh himself as a priest, who had choice ornaments, and among the rest a crown; and so the Vulgate reads it, As a bridegroom adorned with a crown: and so the brides had crowns, or peculiar dressings like crowns. The Vulgate reads the words, Cant. iv. 8, "Come with me from Lebanon, my spouse, with me from Lebanon," et coronaberis, and thou shalt be crowned. When Ahasuerus took Esther to be his spouse, he "set the royal crown upon her head." Esth. ii. 17; so God here, speaking of the marrying of this woman to him, tells you, that he put a crown upon her head; it was an honourable, a princely marriage, and God would have the world know, that his spouse should not be inferior to any, but have her crown and the honour of a kingdom: and by this crown I conceive is meant, not the cloud which covered and compassed them by day, nor the law which God gave them at mount Sinai, but princely dignity, dominion, and power: so it is used, Psal. cxxxii. 18, "His enemies will I clothe with shame; but upon himself shall his crown flourish," that is, his dignity and power shall flourish. Rev. vi. 2, he that sat on the white horse "had a crown given unto him, and he went forth conquering and to conquer;" the crown given was an emblem of dignity and dominion; and here it notes that honour and power God gave this people. Numb. i. 16, there were princes of the tribes, twelve are named in the verses before, and chap. xvi. 2, you have mentioned two hundred and fifty princes; they had store of princes amongst them, which shows they were an honourable and potent people: Joshua, Barak, Jephthah, &c. their dignity and dominion was the crown of glory the Lord had put upon their head. Jer. xiii. 18. "Say unto the king and to the queen, Humble yourselves; for your principalities shall come down, even the crown of your glory;" the word principalities is rendered in the margin, head tires, those ornaments on their heads which noted their principalities, as their crowns, which imported greatness, power, and sovereignty; these being crowns of their glory, should come down: or we may take the word as it stands, The principalities, what you count the principal things, as the royal dignity, and sovereign power, these shall come down, these are the crowns of glory, and they shall be laid in the dust.

Ver. 13. "Thus wast thou decked with gold and silver." The Hebrew is, and thou wast decked with, noting their riches and wealth they had, rather than their golden and silver apparel. Gold is the chiefest of metals, and hath the preedency in Scripture, it is first spoken of, Gen. ii. 11, 12; and this woman had much gold, she had jewels of gold from the Egyptians, Exod. xii. 35. You may read in Exod. xxv. what golden things were in the tabernacle, and in 1 Kings vi. vii. what gold and golden vessels were in the temple; and Solomon abounded with gold, he had yearly coming in 666 talents of gold, chap. x. 14; and the common talent was 1875 li. and the sacred was 3750 li.; now after the rate of the common talent, it was 1,248,450 li. and after the rate of the sacred, 2,496,900 li. David in his time prepared 100,000 talents of gold, and 1,000,000 of silver, for the house of the Lord. Solomon had targets and shields of gold, and all his drinking vessels, and silver was as plentiful as stones, and nothing accounted of in his days, 1 Kings x. 16, 17, 21, 27; yea, gold was so plentiful, that they made them gods of gold, 1 Kings xii. 28, and lavished out gold, Isa. xlvi. 6.

Obs. 1. The Lord doth not only give apparel, ornaments unto his people, but he gives rich and costly apparel, precious ornaments. He gave them bordered work, fine linen, and silk, bracelets, chains, jewels, and earrings of gold: Jer. xx. 5, there were precious things in the city; 2 Sam. i. 24, the daughters of Israel were clothed in scarlet, and had ornaments of gold upon their apparel, they had choice ornaments; Lam. iv. 5, they were "brought up in scarlet;" they were clothed with crimson, and decked with ornaments of gold, Jer. iv. 30. Now seeing the Lord gave them such raiment, and such ornament, there is a lawful use of such things. The apostle Paul seems to be against the use of them, 1 Tim. ii. 9, "I will that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with bordered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array." Rev. i. 13, Christ was girt about with a golden girdle; it was no sin for Rebekah to wear the jewels and bracelets that Abraham's servant brought and gave her, Gen. xxiv. 47; it was not sinful for the virtuous wife to wear silk and purple, Prov. xxxi. 22: God would never have given materials at all to work them, if it were simply unlawful to wear them. Let us consider for what ends the Lord hath given apparel and ornaments, and hereby we shall come to discern more clearly of the lawful use or sinful abuse of these things.

There are several ends;

(1.) To cover man's nakedness. God set man and woman naked in the world at first, that they might see they had nothing of their own, that all was the Lord's who created them; but when they sinned in eating the forbidden fruit, they were ashamed of their nakedness, and sought to cover it, Gen. iii. 7; yea, God made them "coats of skins, and clothed them," ver. 21, that so their nakedness and shame might not be seen, that so modesty and chastity might be preserved: Hos. ii. 9, "I will recover my wool and my flax given to cover her nakedness."

(2.) To arm and defend them against the injury of the air, the violence of wind and weather, heat and cold: Prov. xxxi. 21, "She is not afraid of the snow, for all her household are clothed with" double garments, they keep off the harm that would come by snow and frost to the body if not clothed: therefore saith Solomon, it is unseasonable to take away a man's garment in cold weather, Prov. xxv. 20; and Job judgeth it an act of wickedness in them that cause men to want coverings in the cold, Job xxiv. 7.

(3.) To distinguish one sex from another. God would not have men and women dressed and adorned alike; Deut. xxii. 5, "The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment:" God would not have men to be effeminate, nor women to be mannish. Some therefore judge it unlawful for women to put on any arms, because armour is the furniture or covering of man; the Hebrew word cheli signifieth an instrument or ornament that a man puts on him in time of peace or war.

(4.) To preserve the healthiness of our bodies. "Man is born to labour, as the sparks fly upward," Job v. 7; and man labouring, his body sweats, and sends forth those humours which would breed sicknesses, diseases, &c. which our vestures receiving are to be changed, and so health preserved: so in time of sickness, Job xxx. 18, "By the great force of my disease is my garment changed; it bindeth me about as the collar of my coat."

(5.) To notify the conditions, ranks, and places of men. Gen. xli. 42, when Joseph was exalted, he was "arrayed in vestures of fine linen," which was a mark that he was a man of great place; so Esth. vi. 8, the man the king would honour, must have the "royal apparel;" and Herod, Acts xii. 21, had on "royal apparel." Psal. xlv. 13, 14, the king's daughter was in clothing of wrought gold, and raiment of needlework; 2 Sam. xiii. 18, Tamar had a garment on of divers colours, for with such robes were kings' daughters apparelled: Lam. iv. 5, by scarlet they were differentiated from others; Matt. xi. 8, soft silken raiment was for those who were in kings' houses, that were virgins; and because Christ was a King, and a pretended king, as the Jews thought, therefore they clothed him in scarlet, Matt. xxvii. 28.

(6.) To adorn the body. Gen. xxvii. 15, Esau had goodly, the Hebrew is, desirable raiment, that became him so, as made him lovely, desirable; Isa. lii. 1, Zion had "beautiful garments," was to put on such as made her beautiful; Hos. ii. 13, "She decked herself with earrings and jewels;" Jer. ii. 32, "Can a maid forget her ornaments?" Exod. xxviii. 40, Aaron's sons must have coats, girdles, bonnets, "for glory and beauty."

(7.) To testify grief or joy. Mordecai put on sackcloth in a time of mourning: Joel i. 13, "Come, lie in sackcloth;" there was a sore judgment upon them. So for joy, Luke xv. 22, "Bring forth the best robe, and put upon him;" Isa. lxi. 10, "A bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and a bride adorneth herself with jewels." Marriage is a time of rejoicing; garments and jewels do testify it: when joy and mirth are in the heart of a man, then, saith Solomon, "Let thy garments be white," Eccl. ix. 8.

Wherein persons sin about apparel and ornaments.

[1.] When it is not modest, but carries with it provocation to wantonness. Prov. vii. 10, there met the young man "a woman in the attire of an harlot," with naked breasts, with curled and powdered hair, with costly garments, which were incentives of evil. Rev. xvii. 1—4, the whore with whom the kings of the earth committed fornication, was arrayed with purple and scarlet colour, decked with gold, precious stones, and pearls, such things as might entice them to folly. Hos. ii. 2, he speaks of adultery between the breasts; they either had naked breasts, or hung enticing ornaments about their breasts: when the habit, hair, or adorning of the breasts are such as draw the eyes, this is the fault of her who sets her chastity to sale. Hierom saith, if a man or woman adorn themselves so as they provoke others to look after them, though no evil follow upon it, yet the party shall suffer eternal damnation, because they offered poison to others, though none would drink of it. 1 Tim. ii. 9, women should "adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety."

[2.] When persons exceed their degree and rank in costly apparel and ornaments. Gold, pearls, and costly array is forbidden by the apostle, 1 Tim. ii. 9, and 1 Pet. iii. 3. The Lord doth not simply forbid all adorning, as Pelagius would have it, but their adorning themselves beyond their degrees; it is not for the lower rank of people to be arrayed like unto the middle sort, nor for the middle sort like unto the highest.

[3.] When* it proclaims and maintains pride, haughtiness, and contempt of others. Rich apparel and precious ornaments puff up the hearts of those who wear them: Isa. iii. 16, 18—23, "The daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched forth necks, wanton eyes," &c.; and what was the occasion and cause of this? they had their bravery, tinkling ornaments, cauls, and tires like the moon, chains, bracelets, earrings, rings, nose-jewels, changeable suits of apparel, fine lincn, hoods and veils, and these they were proud of, and contemned those who wanted them. It is said of the leviathan, "his scales are his pride," Job xli. 15; so many, their clothing is their pride, and being proud they become contemptuous: Psal. cxxiii. 4, "Our soul is exceedingly filled with the scolding of those that are at ease, and with the contempt of the proud:" proud ones contemn others; the devil is a proud creature, and he accused, contemned Joshua, who was clothed with filthy garments; and when persons are pulled up with their apparel, they will contemn those who are clad with mean or filthy garments.

[4.] When it is so expensive as that it hindereth works of mercy. 1 Tim. ii. 9, 10, "Let women adorn themselves in modest apparel, not with brodered hair, gold, pearls, or costly array, but with good works;" now when they wear such costly apparel and ornaments, that they are disabled to do good to the poor, proportionable to their rank, their clothing and ornaments become sinful. Hence it is that many of note are very miserable in their houses, defrauding their bellies to lay the more upon their backs; yea, become not only covetous, but gripping exactors upon their tenants, racking their rents to so high a rate, that their pride is maintained by the sweat, loss, and undoing oftentimes of others; yea, oftentimes so profuse this way, that they undo their own families.

[5.] When strange and foreign fashions are taken up, which is one of the great sins of England. You read in Zeph. i. 8, a terrible sentence, which is this, "I will punish all such as are clothed with strange apparel;" that is, those which did follow and imitate the strange apparel of other nations. Some aped themselves into the Chaldean habits, some into the Egyptian, some into the Tyrian, some into the Philitian, and some into other gentlish habits; as it is amongst us, some take up the French, some the Spanish, some Italian habits. That we may conceive to be strange apparel, which is not peculiar to the nation where men live, nor found in the churches of God there.

[6.] When too much time is laid out about curions and costly apprelling of the body, and adorning it with ornaments. Our furniture and dressings thereof should be such as should take up little time, for time is more precious than all thy rich robes, than all thy precious jewels and ornaments: Eph. v. 16, "Redeeming the time, because the days are evil." Many men and women squander away the time in minding new fashions, and in trieking up their vile bodies with gorgeous apparel and ornaments, and spend so many hours therein, as that they have scarce one hour for God, or the good of their souls: if more time be not spent about that most noble part of man, the clothing and trimming up of it for the Bridegroom, viz. the Lord Jesus Christ, than upon the body, you sin greatly. It is a crying and provoking sin in this land, that many not only among the great and gallant ones, but even of inferior rank, do spend a third part, if not half of their day, in dressing up their bodies with their ornaments, whereas a divine prohibition lieth against these comparatively; 1 Pet. iii. 3, speaking of women, he saith, Let not their adorning be outward, of plaiting the hair, wearing of gold, putting on of apparel, but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit; rather this than the other. Hence those scriptures: "Put on the Lord Jesus Christ," Rom. xiii. 14; "Put on the new man, which, after God, is created in righteousness and true holiness," Eph. iv. 24; "Put on bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering, charity," Col. iii. 12, 14; "Be clothed with humility," 1 Pet. v. 5.

[7.] When it is worn unseasonably. Costly apparel and ornaments are sometimes as unseasonable as snow in summer. When it is a time of mourning, when God calls either privately or publicly to it, then we sin if we put on rich attire, our chief robes and ornaments: Exod. xxxiii. 4, 5, there were evil tidings, "they mourned, and no man put on him his ornaments;" God had bid them put off their ornaments, and told them he would not go with them, which was a sore judgment. David, when the child lay sick, had not on his royal apparel, for the text saith, When the child was dead, he rose from the earth, and changed his garments, 2 Sam. xii. 20. When Haman had got power against the Jews, and their lives were in danger, Mordecai and many of the Jews fasted, but it was in sackcloth and ashes; and when Esther sent other raiment for Mordecai to put on, he would none of it; God called to mourning, and he would testify the sorrow of his heart, by the sackcloth on his loins, and ashes on his head. Judgments and afflictions had better effects in their days than ours. God hath a long time called upon us to put on sackcloth, to testify our sorrows, we have had many days of mourning, God hath spoken to us to put off our vain fashions, our gorgeous apparel, our costly ornaments, but we have not done it. When God hath looked for our coarsest and worst garments at a fast, we have come in silk and satin, plush and crimson, bespangled with pearls, diamonds, with curled locks, powdered heads, naked necks and breasts, fitter for pageants and play-houses, than the presence of a provoked God. Do you think it meet in their own consciences, that men and women should take pleasure in adorning their bodies, and manifest it at a fast, when God is so far displeased that he threatens our lives and liberties.

So when they may draw away the minds of those that wear them, or those that behold them, from the worship of God: therefore it is questionable whether such apparel and ornaments should be worn on the Lord's days, and at such times when people meet in the congregation to worship the Lord; if they take not up their own hearts, they draw away the eyes of others, and when they come home, they can tell you more of men and women's habits, and fashions, and ornaments, than of the preacher's sermon, &c.

It is inquirable why people should so dress up themselves when they are to come before God, especially put on rich attire, and costly ornaments. Do these make you more acceptable to God? upon consideration you may fear it is otherwise; for,

First, you come before God in an open breach of his will, 1 Tim. ii.; 1 Pet. iii.

Secondly, do you not come to the Lord in a petitionary way, that he would teach you, pardon, sanctify, comfort you; and should beggars come with badges of pride upon them? Should a beggar come to you adorned with pearls and diamonds, with silk, satin, scarlet, you would have little heart to give unto him. 1 Tim. ii. he puts them upon praying every where, and then tells them that they must not be adorned in costly array.

[8.] When the callings of men are hindered by their apparel, that they cannot do what is fitting in them, or with that activity they should. Sometimes garments are too long, sometimes so little, sometimes so wide, that they cannot walk in them, nor put forth themselves with such life, as in other garments. David, when he had Saul's armour on, he could not go in it, 1 Sam. xvii. 39; it hindered the natural actions and motions of his body. That apparel which doth impede, and not promote the actions of the body, be they natural, vital, or animal, is sinful. God never set up art to prejudice but to perfect nature; therefore all garments and ornaments should be to make you act more lively; they should not retard your walking, but further it. When the sheep's fleece is heavy and cumbersome, you take it away. Sailors will have clothes to further, not hinder, their motion.

[9.] When you multiply garments and ornaments, and have them to satisfy your eye, new-fangled humour, curiosity, to fill trunks and wardrobes, yea, to breed and feed moths, rather than for any necessity or good use. Isa. iii. 22, God threatens to take away the "changeable suits of apparel;" they had variety of suits, and shifted out of one into another, like many vain giddy spirits in our days, that change their habits twice, yea thrice sometimes in a day; they have such plenty, that though they do change oft, yet they cannot keep them from the moth: Jam. v. 1, 2, "Go to, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you: your riches are corrupted, your garments are moth-eaten." Besides, they breed moths in you, they make you solicitous and careful how to keep them, which of them to put on, how to change them into the next fashion, &c. Matt. vi. 28, "Why take ye thought for raiment?" See 1 Tim. vi. 8.

[10.] When health is endangered by them, as when hilles, slits, and windows are made in garments, so that they let in the cold, &c.; when too short above or beneath; when sluttish. Christ's dead body was "wrapped in a clean linen cloth," Matt. xxvii. 59; our living bodies should not be covered with unclean linen or woollen.

[11.] When it doth misbecome the body. Apparel is for the adorning of the body; but there are many fashions now in the world, and dresses, that do disparage that natural beauty and comeliness, which God hath put upon the body, and ought to be maintained. Paul saith, women should adorn themselves with modest apparel, with becoming apparel, such as becomes nature, such as becomes women that profess godliness. If you put honour upon those parts which are less honourable, will you dishonour those parts which are more honourable?

[12.] When apparel is made use of to deceive. Zech. xiii. 4, the false prophets did wear rough garments to deceive; such were the garments of the true prophets, as you may see from Isa. xx. 2; 2 Kings i. 8, and they put on such garments, that they might be thought such prophets, and thereby deceive the people. Many put on rich apparel, that they may be thought wealthy men, of good families, that they may get rich matches, insinuate themselves into the society of rich and great ones, to make advantage of them: many cover their crookedness, deformities, to deceive the world.

[13.] When it is scandalous to others; either actively, by drawing them to do the like, or infecting the minds of others, and their own children, with sinful thoughts and lusts; or passively, when godly ones are made sad thereby.

We should not be proud of our clothing and ornaments,

First, because they are the fruit of sin, or consequences of it. Adam's sin brought in garments: they are the tokens of sin: had there been no sin there had been no need of them.

Secondly, they mind you of your great loss: you lost better garments and better ornaments than these.

Thirdly, all from the beasts or bowels of the earth; it is weakness, if not foolishness, to affect such things.

Fourthly, your bodies are better than your clothes; Matt. vi. 25, "Is not the body more than raiment?" yet, Phil. iii. 21, "Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Our bodies are made of the earth, full of sin, subject to all diseases, are oft in base employments.

Fifthly, you must give account unto God of every mercy, garment, &c. James v. 9, The judge is at the door. 1 Pet. iv. 5, "Who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead."

Sixthly, because they are under condemnation, and are passing: 1 John ii. 15-17, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever."

Seventhly, usually they have been wicked who have affected those things: Jezebel; those in Isa. iii.; the whore, Rev. xvii.; Herod, Acts xii.; Dives, Luke xvi.

Eighthly, Christ hath set us an example of humility, Matt. xi. 29; he wore no fine clothes, no jewels or ornaments, he was crucified naked for the sin of our apparel: and it was the practice of holy women to look at the inward adorning, "the adorning of a meek and quiet spirit;" 1 Pet. i. 5, "After this manner in the old time the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves."

Obs. 2. The Lord gives variety of blessings unto his people. Not only apparel, costly apparel, but variety of it; not only ornaments, and precious ones, but variety of them; they had brodered work, fine linen, silk, bracelets, chains, nose-jewels, earrings, gold, silver, in abundance: Deut. xxviii. 12. "Thou shalt lend unto many nations, and thou shalt not borrow;" whatever they lent, clothes, jewels, or money, they had variety. When the people offered so largely, gold, silver, precious stones, and other things, 1 Chron. xxix. it argues that God had given them abundance of each; which made David say, ver. 14, "All things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee;" God had first given, else there had been no giving unto him. It is said, Deut. xxviii. 47, they had "abundance of all things;" yea, all things at land or sea; Deut. xxxiii. 19, "They shall suck of the abundance of the seas, and of treasures hid in the sand," of gold and silver, and apparel in great abundance.

Obs. 3. The Lord minds and provides for his people, from top to toe. Clothed her with broodered work, he covered her head with silk, he girded her with fine linen, and shod her with skins of תרוש; her ears, nose, neck, hands, had their ornaments; God's eye was upon every part, and his hand gave coverings and adornments for them. God doth not only mind the honourable and highest parts, but the lowest, the very feet of his people: Isa. iii. 20, they had ornaments upon their legs; Deut. viii. 4, "Thy raiment waxed not old upon thee, neither did thy foot swell, these forty years;" chap. xxxix. 5, "Thy shoe is not waxen old upon thy foot." God minded the tip of Aaron's and his sons' right ears, the thumbs of their right hands, the great toe of their right foot, Exod. xxix. 20. God hath put honour, and abundance of honour, upon the uncomely parts, 1 Cor. xii. 23, 24. Seeing God minds all, and provides for all, we should honour him with all, with our heads, hands, legs, feet, even the whole body. Thou hast adorned us, we will adore thee; thou hast clothed, girded, shod, and decked us from the head to the feet, we will see to it that the whole and every part may be serviceable unto thee, that our inward man may be clothed with the righteousness of Christ, and adorned from the top to the toe with the graces of the Spirit.

Ver. 13. "Thou didst eat fine flour, and honey, and oil." You have heard before what were this woman's clothing and ornaments, now you may hear of her diet. At marriages, as they had costly garments, precious ornaments, so they had suitable dainties. The Lord provided for this woman, not acorns, or the onions and leeks of Egypt, but diet answerable to her condition; for under these expressions is held out unto us all provisions which God gave into this Israelitish estate, to feed upon all things for nourishment.

"Fine flour." Hebrew is, כֹּהֵן which Kirker renders flor seu delicia; farina triticia, the flour and delicacies of wheaten meal, being ground most finely; this was offerable in sacrifices, Lev. v. 11; but קֹמֶה was common flour or meal, and not used in sacrifice, but only in the offering of jealousy, Numb. v. 15. It was very fine, such as made bread or cakes for kings, 1 Kings iv. 22; such as Abraham entertained angels with, Gen. xviii. 6. This people had manna in the wilderness, and fine flour abundantly in Canaan; it is called the fat of wheat in Psal. lxxxi. 16. Solomon spent in a day thirty measures of fine flour, in that 1 Kings iv. 22; and it was cheap, "A measure of fine flour was sold for a shekel," 2 Kings vii. 16, which was about two shillings; and their land was "a land of wheat," Deut. viii. 8, and so abounded therein, that Solomon gave twenty thousand measures of wheat unto Hiram, 1 Kings v. 11: the word for measure is, כֹּר core; now a core is the same with the homer, eight or ten bushels, so that he gave him twenty thousand quarters at the least.

"Honey." Hebrew is, דְּבַשׁ which notes all sweet things, honey, sugar, dates, figs, grapes, &c. 2 Chron. xxxi. 5, there the people brought for offerings, the first-fruit of corn, wine, oil, and honey, דְּבַשׁ. Now it is not well translated honey in this place, because honey was forbid in offerings; Lev. ii. 11, no honey was to be in any offering made with fire. It is better in the margin, where you find it rendered dates. Junius and Tremellius have it palme, that is, dates, or the fruit of the palm tree. The law speaks not at all of the first-fruits of honey, but of other things it doth. דְּבַשׁ may there in Chronicles be translated, sweet things, or sweet fruits; and here in Ezekiel you may understand not only honey, but all honeyish and sweet things. You have that phrase oft, "A land flowing with milk and honey," Exod. iii. 8: xiii. 5; Deut. vi. 3; Josh. v. 6; Jer. xi. 5; Ezek. xx. 6; which comprehend all other blessings, and declare what sweet and delicate things they had to feed upon. When you read of honey in the word of God, you must not always confine it to that we strictly call honey, but you must extend it to any pleasant or sweet things edible. Deut. xxxii. 13, "He made him to suck honey out of the rock;" the rocks do not yield honey; but God gave them water out of rocks, which was as sweet as honey, and God made rocks, barren places, fruitful, which was as pleasant and delightful to them as honey. It is true, they had much honey itself in the land, as you may see from 1 Sam. xiv. 26, and they did eat it, Isa. vii. 22; yet honey comprehended other things also.

"Oil." Hebrew is, שֶׁן from שָׁן to make fat. Oil is very nourishing, it makes plump and fat; Neh. ix. 25, "They took strong cities, and a fat land, and possessed houses full of all goods, wells digged, vineyards, and oliveyards, and fruit trees in abundance: so they did eat, were filled, and became fat, and delighted themselves in thy great goodness." Canaan was called a fat land, it abounded with oil and other choice things, which they fed upon and became fat with. Now oil here is comprehensive, and notes also plenty of mercies belonging to the belly; Deut. xxxiii. 24, "Let Asher dip his foot in oil;" that is, let him enjoy a country that abounds with fatness. Job xxix. 6, "I washed my steps with butter, and the rock poured me out rivers of oil;" these expressions show the plenty and prosperity he had; the rock did not send out rivers of oil, but rocky places became fruitful through God's blessing; and this was as if he had been anointed with or eaten oil. Isa. xxv. 6, "the word is put there for fat things," "In this mountain shall the Lord make a feast of fat things," שֶׁן שֶׁן a feast of oils. By these three, flour, honey, and oil, are set out the delicate and abundant provision of the holy land.

"Thou wast exceeding beautiful." Hebrew is emphatical, וְהָיָה כְּאֵרֶן מְאֹד. The doubling of the word sets a weight upon the sense, and imports that she was come to exceeding great beauty, her silken garments and costly ornaments made her beautiful; her feeding delicately, and feasting with the choicest dainties, made her have a fresh and lively colour, and to be very beautiful. But I conceive the beautifulness of the Jews' persons is not the thing so much aimed at here, as the beauty of her state, viz. that spiritual beauty this people had, which none of the nations had; they had the temple, which was called the "beautiful house," Isa. lxix. 11; and because it was upon "mount Zion," Psal. xlviii. 2, that is said to be beautiful, yea, "the perfection of beauty," Psal. l. 2. "Strength and beauty are in his sanctuary," Psal. xcvi. 6; before that they had the sanctuary, which was called "the beauty of holiness," Psal. xxix. 2; xevi. 9; 1 Chron. xvi. 29.

They had the priests, who had garments glorious and beautiful, Exod. xxviii. 2, 4; when Aaron had on his robes, the twelve stones in his breastplate representing the twelve tribes, how beautiful did he appear and they in him! They had the covenant, and seals of it, circumcision and the passover; they had the law, the prophets, Urim and Thummim, sabbaths, new moons, solemn feasts and assemblies; they had the sanhedrim, and other judicatories: all which were their great glory and beauty.

"Thou didst prosper into a kingdom." This is the sixth choice mercy that the Lord did bestow upon her. In ver. 7, it is said, she had multiplied "as the bud of the field, had increased and waxen great," and so great, as that she attained and came to the honour of a kingdom; not into the place of other kings, that were of the hills and valleys in Canaan and at Jerusalem, of which you may read, Josh. ix. x. xi. and xii; but this state itself grew up to a kingly state. At first it was governed by judges, it was a free estate, and they chose whom they pleased to rule over them; afterwards they mounted to royal dignity, and out of their own loins sprang kings, Saul, David, Solomon, and many others. And in Solomon's days did this kingdom most flourish, as you may see, Psal. lxxii. and 1 Kings iv. 24—26, &c.; he reigned over all kingdoms, from the river (that was, Euphrates) unto the Philistines, and unto the border of Egypt; they brought presents, and served Solomon all the days of his life: "Judah and Israel dwelt safely, every man under his vine, and under his fig-tree, from Dan even to Beersheba. And Solomon had forty thousand stalls of horses for his chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen."

Or thus, if we will follow the metaphorical allusion: God entered into covenant with this Jewish state, took it to be his, and married himself to it, being a great King, and so it became, or passed into, a kingdom, for the word מלכות signifies, to pass over, as well as, to be in a prosperous state. God therefore becoming the King of Israel, the Israelitish state became a kingdom; Exod. xix. 6, "Ye shall be unto me a kingdom." King and people are like husband and wife; Isa. lvi. 5, "Thy Maker is thine husband;" God, who was the King of this people, was their Husband; Lam. i. 1, "How doth the city sit solitary, that was full of people! how is she become as a widow! she that was great among the nations, and princess among the provinces, how is she become tributary!" while God was in her, with her, she was a princess, but now having left her, she sat as a widow, her King and Husband was gone. This exposition suits with what you had in ver. 12, "I put a beautiful crown upon thine head;" I married thee, and gave thee princely dignity, dominion, and power.

Obs. 1. The Lord allows his people dainty and delicious fare. "Thou didst eat fine flour, and honey, and oil;" under these are comprehended all the choice edibles, and the pleasant meats, the land of Canaan brought forth. At first green herbs and fruit were their meats, Gen. i. 29, but afterwards, when sin had gotten into the world, and men's desires were enlarged after the creatures, God gave them license to eat of all creatures; Gen. ix. 3, "Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you; even as the green herb have I given you all things." Old Isaac must have savoury meat provided for him, Gen. xxvii. 4; and Job speaks of dainty meats, chap. xxxiii. 20, Hebrew is, meat of desire; and Lam. iv. 5, they fed delicately; Psal. lxxviii. 25, "man did eat angels' food;" ver. 27, "He rained flesh also upon them as dust, and feathered fowls like as the sand of the sea." God gave them the best and choicest of meats, and so still doth unto his people.

Now, that we may not abuse that liberty which God gives us, to eat and drink, and that of the best, we must consider these cautions and rules:

(1.) We must not eat to the offence of others: Rom. xiv. 21, "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak." God allows us not meat to be offensive therewith; 1 Cor. viii. 13, "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend:" much less doth he allow us dainties.

(2.) You must not be too expensive in diet, nor go beyond the place you are set in, and abilities God hath given you. Some waste all they have upon their backs and bellies, so that they have nothing for the cause of God, public occasions, for their poor friends, or the poor in general. It will be a sad complaint, if you shall hear Christ say at last, "I was an hungred, and you gave me no meat," Matt. xxv. 42.

(3.) You must not fare deliciously in times of public calamity: Isa. xxii. 12, 13, "In that day did the Lord God of hosts call to mourning, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth: and, behold, joy and gladness, slaying oxen and killing sheep, eating flesh and drinking wine." When God's judgments are abroad, he would have us lay aside our dainties, and drink our own tears, to eat the bread of mourners; and because they did not, God threatens them grievously; Amos vi. 1, 4, 6, 7, "Woe to them that are at ease in Zion, that eat the lambs out of the flock, and the calves out of the midst of the stall; that drink wine in bowls, and anoint themselves with the chief ointments; but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph. Therefore now shall they go captive with the first that go captive, and the banquet of them that stretched themselves shall be removed:" ver. 8, "The Lord God hath sworn by himself, saith the Lord, the God of hosts, I abhor the excellency of Jacob;" what is that? the pomp and riches; pomp in feasting, pomp in apparel, &c.; "and hate his palaces: therefore will I deliver up the city, with all that is therein."

(4.) Dainties must not be too frequent. It is a brand upon the rich man, Luke xvi. 19, that "he fared sumptuously every day," he feasted daily; so the kings of the earth are censured, Rev. xviii. 9, for that they "lived deliciously" with the whore. The choice and best of the creatures should be used sparingly.

(5.) In the use of them, you must not forget those who want necessaries: Neh. viii. 10, "Go your way, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared." Christ bids you, when you make a feast, and have dainties, to call the poor; he counsels you to make them your guests; Luke xiv. 13, "When thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind." There may be maimed soldiers, poor widows, and orphans, did you ever invite any of these? if you mind them not to make them your guests, and eat your dainties, yet so far mind them, as to give them your scraps: Dives would not give Lazarus the crumbs which fell from his table.

(6.) Your dishes and dainties must not be too many, excessive. Some are so pompous, that they must have mess upon mess, course upon course, exceeding in quality and quantity: Sodom had fulness of bread; 1 Pet. iv. 3, the gentiles had excess of wine, and banquetings.

(7.) We must so eat and drink as to maintain health and strength, not impair them. Eccl. x. 17, Solomon tells you, that land is happy, where "princes eat in due season, for strength, and not for drunkenness." Meat was appointed of God to nourish and strengthen; Psal. civ. 15, "Bread," that is, all things given to eat, "strengtheneth man's heart." When princes and others eat for that end, to strengthen them to do service to the public, then they use the creature comfortably. Many sin in eating too much, few on the other hand: large and delicate diet breed abundance of humours, diseases, &c.

(8.) So must we partake of them, as to further us in the operations of body and mind, to make us more active and lively in the duties of our callings. A man hath not eat and drunk warrantably, when, as Terence saith, nec pes, nec manus, nec lingua officium suum fungi possit, neither foot, nor hand, nor tongue, can discharge its duty. You give horses provender, that they may more freely do their work. Tertullian saith of the primitive christians, that they were wont so to feed and feast, as to remember they were to pray: Luke xxi. 34, 36, "Take heed, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting. Watch ye therefore, and pray always;" so eat and drink should a man, as that he should ever be fit to watch and pray: 1 Pet. v. 8, "Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about seeking whom he may devour."

(9.) You must feed and feast with fear. It is a charge upon some in Jude, ver. 12, that they did feed and feast without fear; they sinned in eating and drinking too liberally, they did not consider the nature of the meats, nor of their appetites, but inconsiderately ventured upon what was before them, and so gluttonized; whereas, Prov. xxiii. 1, 2, he bids a man, when he is at a ruler's table, where dainties and delicacies usually are, to consider diligently what is before him, and to put a knife to his throat, if he be a man given to appetite; what is that? put thyself into a condition as if thou wert to die: when the knife was at Isaac's throat, he was near death; so putting of the knife to the throat, is serious minding of death, account, judgment, eternity, which will keep thee from surfeiting. Paul tells you of some with a sad heart, that they make their bellies their gods, Phil. iii. 19; and they are dunghill gods; how do they make these their gods? by over-minding and over-pampering them. The rabbies say, he is a glutton, or a belly-god, that eats a pound of flesh, and that he is a drunkard who drinks a quart of wine. I know there is a difference in men's constitutions and inclinations, but whosoever eats too much, he is guilty of gluttonizing. 2 Pet. ii. 13, 14, they "riot in the day time, while they feast with you; having eyes full of adultery;" they maintain and strengthen their lusts by the dainties they feed upon: James v. 5, "Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton;" now the rule is, "Make no provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof." Men should rather look at, and choose, that which is wholesome, than what is delicious.

(10.) There must be spiritual care had of the time. Too much time must not be spent about dressing or eating of meats, whole nights spent in preparing for feasts, and making provision for lusts; and do not multitudes in this city sit more hours at feasting their bodies, than ever they have done at feasting their souls? Here, an hour or two is enough, or too much, there, half days, half nights: Isa. v. 11, they rose early, and continued till night in following strong drink, and other dainties, to please their lusts; and 1 Thess. v. 7, "They that be drunken, are drunken in the night;" they spent that time which was allotted by God for rest in eating and drinking; and too many spend that time which is allotted for labour, Psal. civ. 22, 23, in pampering their flesh, yea, that time which should be for prayer.

(11.) You must have God's glory in your eye. When you are eating fine flour, honey, and oil, when you eat your daily dainties, that must not be forgotten, 1 Cor. x. 31, "Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

This is done,

[1.] When we acknowledge God to be the Author: Hos. ii. 8, "She did not know," that is, acknowledge, "that I gave her corn, and wine, and oil."

[2.] When we look for the sweet blessings and comfort to come from the Lord, rather than from the creature: Matt. iv. 4, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

[3.] When we season our tables with heavenly and gracious discourse. Many vent corrupt, filthy, and lewd speeches, they fill their bellies, and foam out their shame; but Christ, when he was at meat with his disciples or strangers, he took occasion to speak some gracious things, to reprove misdemeanours, Luke xxii. 15; xi. 38; Matt. ix. 10, 12, 13.

[4.] When we see somewhat of God in the creature, and pass speedily through the creature unto God. Many stick in the creature.

[5.] When we take these as pledges of God's love in Christ, as coming through the covenant of grace, and are thankful for them: Eph. v. 20, "Giving thanks always for all things unto God, and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Obs. 2. The Lord bestows beautifying mercies upon his people, and not only so, but such mercies as make them very beautiful. "Thou wast exceeding beautiful," thou wast made beautiful very much. God made her so; he gave her such vestments and ornaments as made herauteous; he gave her "fine flour, honey, and oil," the choicest diet, which added to her lustre, and made her look lovely. If we put the beauty of this Israelitish woman, or state, in temporals, she had the choicest of them; her land was, Deut. viii. 7—9, "A good land; a land of brooks, fountains, depths, springs; a land of wheat, barley, vines, fig-trees, pomegranates; a land of olive, and honey;" she had goodly mountains: Deut. iii. 25, Tabor, Hermon, Olives, Lebanon; she had great and goodly cities, Deut. vi. 10; goodly houses, Deut. viii. 12; multitudes of gardens, Amos iv. 9; pleasant fields, Isa. xxxii. 12; goodly cedars, Psal. lxxx. 10; great and thick oaks, 2 Sam. xviii. 9; Ezek. vi. 13; her pastures were clothed with flocks, and her valleys were covered over with corn, Psal. lxxv. 13; she had her navy of ships at sea, 1 Kings ix. 26, and thirteen hundred thousand fighting men on land at once, 2 Sam. xxiv. 9.

But if you place her beauty in spirituals, all nations of the earth were in ignorance when compared to her, they were without God and his worship: Psal. lxxvi. 1, 2, "In Judah is God known; his name is great in Israel. In Salem also is his tabernacle, and his dwelling-place in Zion;" there he gave more special testimonies of his presence than in any parts of the world besides; there he conversed with and converted sinners; there he poured out his Spirit, inspired the prophets, gave out divine truths; there he wrought miracles; there were all his ordinances and worship, the sanctuary, the temple, priests, sacrifices, altars, the covenant, seals, promises, the election, adoption, the law, the glory, salvation: Isa. xlvi. 13, "I will place salvation in Zion for Israel my glory." This Jewish state was the glory of the Lord, and the Lord was her glory; he was her God, her Husband, her Counsellor, her Strength. Spiritual mercies are the beauty, the glory, of any people, therefore Phinehas's wife did rightly call the ark the glory of Israel, 1 Sam. iv. 21. Jerusalem is said to be comely; it was the spiritual mercies which were there that made her comely, and this caused David to say, Psal. lxxxix. 1, "How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts!"

Obs. 3. From low and mean conditions God raises up a people to greatness. "Thou didst prosper into a kingdom." A little before, you may remember, this woman's birth and condition are set out; her father was an Amorite, her mother an Hittite, she was cast out into the open field, lay in her blood, had none to pity her; only the Lord himself did pity her, caused her to multiply, as the bud of the field, to become great, and prosper into a kingdom. From Adam and Eve, God raised up the old world, which was very populous; from Noah and seven more, the world is come to that populousness you now find it in; from Abraham and Sarah, which were even dry roots, came the whole race of the Jews: Isa. li. 1, 2, "Look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit, whence ye are digged. Look unto Abraham your father, and unto Sarah that bare you: for I called him alone, and blessed him, and increased him." Ruth iv. 11, Rachel and Leah are said to build the house of Israel: two weak women were the pillars of the Israelitish state, they bare many children, multiplied the posterity of Jacob, and so reared up the building of Israel. That in Deut. xxvi. 5, is remarkable: "Thou shalt say, A Syrian ready to perish was my father; and he went down into Egypt, and sojourned there with a few, and became there a nation, great, mighty, and populous." Jacob fled from Esau (who sought his death) into Syria, to his uncle Laban, and therefore is called a Syrian; and after went down into Egypt, when Joseph sent for him, and there he grew to a great nation. Great cities began with single houses, great woods with single trees, great armies with single men, and great floods with little drops; how low was the state of christianity at first, in Christ, and some few!

Obs. 4. It is the Lord that forms people into a kingdom, that gives them kingly power and dignity. Ver. 12, "I put a beautiful crown upon thine head;" and, ver. 13, "thou didst prosper into a kingdom;" I followed thee so with blessings and increase, as that thou becamest a kingdom: this caused David to say, 1 Chron. xxix. 11, "Thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and thou art exalted as head above all." God hath made Israel a kingdom, and given it to David to reign over under himself, and this he acknowledged. If any people in the world have grown great, had a crown set upon their heads, and prospered into a kingdom, the Lord did it, his hand brought it to pass; hence saith Hezekiah, 2 Kings xix. 15, "O Lord God of Israel, thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth." There is not a heathen or christian kingdom, but the Lord is the Author of; the prosperity and welfare of them is of the Lord, so long as he pleases. When Saul sinned, God took the kingdom from him, 1 Sam. xv. 8, yea, slew him, and turned the kingdom to David, 1 Chron. x. 14; he stablisheth kingdoms, 2 Chron. xvii. 5, he shakes kingdoms, Isa. xxiii. 11; he rent the kingdom from Rehoboam, and bestowed it upon Jeroboam; 1 Kings xiv. 7—10, "Go tell Jeroboam," saith God to Abijah, "Forasmuch as I exalted thee among the people, and made thee prince over my people Israel, and rent the kingdom away from the house of David, and gave it thee: and yet thou hast not been as my servant David, who kept my commandments, and who followed me with all his heart, to do that only which was right in mine eyes; but hast done evil above all that were before thee; and hast east me behind thy back; therefore, behold, I will bring evil upon the house of Jeroboam, and will take away the remnant of the house of Jeroboam, as a man taketh away dung till it be all gone." He grew base, and God destroyed him and his, and devolved the kingdom upon others. So that it is frequently made good which Daniel told Nebuchadnezzar, chap. ii. 21, "He changeth the times and the seasons; he removeth kings, and setteth up kings;" yea, he makes kingdoms to cease, Hos. i. 4; and it is terrible what God saith, Amos ix. 8, "Behold, the eyes of the Lord God are upon the sinful kingdom, and I will destroy it from off the face of the earth;" and he did so, when they were all carried away captives; but after that great destruction, he brought them back again, built them up, prospered them into a kingdom, and set a crown upon their head.

To speak a little of the nature and state of this kingdom: Jacob, prophesying of it, Gen. xlix. 9, compares it to a lion, which in strength and majesty exceeds all other beasts, and therefore is called the king of beasts; so this kingdom of Israel exceeded other kingdoms, and was above them. God was the King of this kingdom; Psal. lxxxix. 18, "The Holy One of Israel is our King; 1 Sam. viii. 7, They have rejected me, that I should not reign over them." They were the Lord's people, and he ruled them, he gave them laws, judicial and ceremonial, which other nations had not.

He chose their kings for them, Saul, David, Solomon; therefore, Deut. xvii. 15, "Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee, whom the Lord thy God shall choose." God chose the house of David, and settled upon his posterity the kingdom itself, which was a glorious monarchy; "And Solomon reigned over all kingdoms from the river unto the land of the Philistines, and unto the border of Egypt," 1 Kings iv. 21. The church and state were so composed, that they made but one body. This kingdom brought forth Messiah, King of the Jews, and the land was called the land of Immanuel, Isa. viii. 1; this kingdom, and the kings of it, were representative of Christ and his kingdom, and standeth still in Christ; Luke i. 32, 33, "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." This kingdom was at the height in Solomon's days, then the glory of it was very glorious; and in Jehoshaphat's days it flourished, 2 Chron. xviii. 1, "Jehoshaphat had riches and honour in abundance:" so in Hezekiah's days; 2 Chron. xxxii. 27—29, he "had exceeding much riches and honour."

Ver. 14. And thy renown went forth among the heathen for thy beauty: for it was perfect through my comeliness, which I had put upon thee, saith the Lord God.

This verse holds out the last benefit which here the Lord tells this Israelitish state he had bestowed upon her, and that was great fame; concerning which you have,

1. The extent of it; "went forth."
11. Ground of it.
 1. Beauty.
 2. Perfection of it.
 3. The cause of all; the comeliness God put upon her.

"Thy renown." Hebrew is, שׁוֹמֵר thy name. It is put in Scripture for renown and fame; Gen. xi. 4, "Let us build us a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven; and let us make us a name;" let us thereby get renown and fame in the world: so in chap. xii. 2. I will "make thy name great," that is, thou shalt be renowned in the world. Ezek. xxxiv. 29, Christ is called "A plant of renown," נֶטֶעַ לְשֵׁם a plant for a name.

"Went forth." Hebrew is, צָיַי thy fame, or renown, spread, and was known among heathens. There were sundry things which made this state renowned.

1. The temple. When Solomon went about the building of it, he sent to Hiram king of Tyre for cedars to build it, 1 Kings v.; and the letters which Solomon wrote to that heathen king were so greatly esteemed, that they were preserved by the Tyrians till the time of Flavius Josephus, as himself affirms, in his first book against Apio the Grammarian.

There were a hundred and fifty-three thousand three hundred men employed about the work of the temple, 1 Kings v. 15, 16; the glory and stateliness of it you may read in the sixth chapter. In the holy of holies the Lord did show himself in a special manner unto the high priest once in the year. This temple was exceeding famous, it was called the house of God, Eccl. v. 1; the temple of the Lord, Jer. vii. 4; the place where God's name should be, 1 Kings viii. 29; the holy and beautiful house, Isa. lxiv. 11; God's resting-place, 2 Chron. vi. 41; the mountain of the Lord, Isa. ii. 3; the desire of their eyes, Ezek. xxiv. 21. David had told Solomon, the house he "builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnificent, of fame and of glory through all countries," 1 Chron. xxii. 5. It was known far and near; hence it was prophesied, Psal. lxxviii. 29, "Because of thy temple at Jerusalem shall kings bring presents unto thee."

2. Solomon's wisdom, house, and justice were such, as caused the name of this state to go out among the heathens: 1 Kings iv. 29, "God gave Solomon wisdom and understanding. And Solomon's wisdom excelled the wisdom of all the children of the east country, and all the wisdom of Egypt. For he was wiser than all men: and his fame was in all nations round about;" and ver. 34, "There came of all people to hear the wisdom of Solomon, from all kings of the earth, which had heard of his wisdom." Among others came the queen of Sheba, to prove him with hard questions, which he satisfied her in; and when she had seen his wisdom, his house, and the order of it, she said to the king, "It was a true report that I heard in mine own land of thy acts and of thy wisdom. Howbeit I believed not the words, until I came, and mine eyes had seen it: and, behold, the half was not told me: thy wisdom and prosperity exceedeth the fame which I heard," 1 Kings x. 1, 3, 4, 6, 7. His justice was foretold; Psal. lxxii. 4, "He shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor."

3. Their battles and victories. They had many choice warriors, and fighting men, among them: Joshua, Othniel, Ehud, Shamgar, Deborah, Barak, Gideon, Jephthah, Samson, David, &c. Asa had an army of five hundred and eighty thousand, and he ruined Zerah's army of a thousand thousand, 2 Chron. xiv. 8, 9, 12, 13; so Jehoshaphat vanquished the army of the Ammonites, Moabites, and those of mount Seir, 2 Chron. xx. The Lord of hosts was with them, and fought their battles for them, which filled the nations with the fame and fear of them.

4. The prophets, and the miraculous things they did, caused the fame of this Israelitish state to go forth. Elijah opened and shut heaven, James v. 17, 18; he raised the widow of Zarephath's son, 1 Kings xvii.; he sacrificed the prophets of Baal and of the groves, chap. xviii. So Elisha, what great things did he! he multiplied the widow's oil, 2 Kings iv.; he gave a son to the good Shunammite, which went childless, and restored him to life when he was dead; his fame spread into Syria, whereupon Naaman came to him, to be cured of his leprosy, 2 Kings v.; he disclosed the secrets of the king of Syria's counsel, chap. vi.

5. Their being in covenant with God, and walking according to his laws, rules, and commands, made them renowned. Hos. xi. 12, "Ephraim compasseth me about with lies, and the house of Israel with deceit;" they went out from God to false and idolatrous worship, they brake the covenant, the law, gave to their own inventions; "but Judah yet ruleth with God," he goeth along with God in his ways, and is faithful with the saints, he keeps covenant and touch with the Lord, and this is his wisdom, glory, renown. Dent. iv. 6, "Keep God's statutes and do them; for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people;" their obedience to God's laws was that which made them honourable abroad, and to be counted wise and understanding. So Dent. xxvi. 18, 19, "The Lord hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people, and that thou shouldst keep all his commandments; and to make thee high above all nations which he hath made, in praise, in name, and in honour:" the way to be exalted in all these, is to walk in the ways of the Lord. It is "righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people," Prov. xiv. 34.

"For thy beauty." I have spoken of this woman's beauty before in ver. 13. Beauty consists in the symmetry or due proportion of all the parts well coloured; here it was so: there was a symmetry between church and state, a fit proportion between princes, prophets, priests, and the people, and they were all well-coloured with temporals and spirituals.

"It was perfect." The Hebrew word כִּלִּי signifies, entire, perfect. You must not take "perfect," for that which wants nothing absolutely, but for that which is complete or perfect in its kind; it is joined to peace, Isa. xxvi. 3; to love, 1 John iv. 18; to faith, James ii. 22: it notes the muchness or entireness of them.

"My comeliness." Hebrew is, בְּדִרְרִי in my comeliness, דִּרְרָה notes all honourable comeliness and adorning decency; Psal. viii. 5, thou "hast crowned him with glory," with honour, comeliness. Whatever this kingdom and people had which was excellent, majestic, honourable, beautiful, glorious, that is comprehended in this word "comeliness."

Obs. 1. That whatever comeliness any kingdoms, states, or persons have, it is not from themselves, but from the Lord. "Through my comeliness, which I had put upon thee." This Jewish state was without beauty, glory, honour, she lay in her blood, filth, was naked and loathsome; but God spread his skirt over her, covered her nakedness, washed away her blood, anointed her with oil, clothed her with brodered work, shod her with skins of tachasch, girded her with fine linen, covered her with silk, decked her with ornaments. Whatever external or internal comeliness is in any, the Lord hath put it upon them. Is a state decked with cities, people, trading, with mountains, woods, rivers, flocks of cattle, &c.? hath it good laws, good magistrates, justice duly executed, the righteous countenanced, the wicked awed?

it is the Lord's doing. Have any spiritual mercies, the word, other ordinances? 1 Cor. iv. 7, who makes thee differ? or what hast thou thou didst not receive? if you receive any thing, you receive it from God. The spouse was comely, Cant. i. 5: her countenance was comely, chap. ii. 14; her speech was comely, chap. iv. 3; this comeliness the Lord put upon her.

Obs. 2. That which we have is the Lord's. "Through my comeliness." God had bestowed many ornaments and excellences upon this woman, which made her comely, and here he calls all his "comeliness." 1 Kings xx. 3, Benhadad said to Ahab, "Thy silver and thy gold is mine; thy wives also and thy children, even the goodliest, are mine." He challenged all injuriously, but God most justly; Hos. ii. 9, "My corn, my wine, my wool, my flax." This woman was the Lord's, ver. 8, "Thou becomest mine," and so all she had was his.

Obs. 3. That renown and fame is a choice mercy, which God gives to his people "Thy renown went forth among the heathen;" God made her beautiful, and eased her renown to go abroad, and reckons it up amongst the mercies he bestowed upon her. Prov. xxii. 1, "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches;" if man might have mountains of gold, the wealth of the Indies, it is nothing to a good name. Eccles. vii. 1, "A good name is better than precious ointment," it pleases, refresheth, is profitable; Prov. xv. 30, "A good report maketh the bones fat." God gives this name; 1 Chron. xvii. 8, speaking of David, "I have made thee a name like the name of the great men that are in the earth;" ver. 21, "What one nation in the earth is like thy people Israel, whom God went to redeem to be his own people, to make thee a name of greatness and terribleness." While they clave to the Lord, as a girdle to the loins, they were to the Lord for a name, for a praise, for a glory, Jer. xiii.; but when they degenerated from God and his ways, they became base. Prov. x. 7, "The memory of the just is blessed: but the name of the wicked shall rot;" Isa. lxv. 15, "Ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen;" Isa. lxvii. 7, "Give him no rest, till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth."

Ver. 15—19. But thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot because of thy renown, and pouredst out thy fornications on every one that passed by; his it was. And of thy garments thou didst take, and deckedst thy high places with divers colours, and playedst the harlot thereupon: the like things shall not come, neither shall it be so. Thou hast also taken thy fair jewels of my gold, and of my silver, which I had given thee, and madest to thyself images of men, and didst commit whoredom with them, and tookest thy broidered garments, and coveredst them: and thou hast set mine oil and my incense before them. My meat also which I gave thee, fine flour, and oil, and honey, wherewith I fed thee, thou hast even set it before them for a sweet savour: and thus it was, saith the Lord God.

From the beginning of the 6th verse unto the 15th, you have heard of the choice mercies the Lord bestowed upon this Jewish state, even such mercies as should have engaged her heart and strength to God for ever. In these verses, and the fifteen following, you have the fourth general part of the chapter, viz. The Lord's exprobration of this Israelitish woman for her ingratitude; he was exceeding kind and merciful unto her, and she was exceeding unkind and unthankful unto him.

This ingratitude is set out,

1. By her defection from God to idolatrous practices, laid down ver. 15—35.

11. By her inhumanity, in slaying and sacrificing her own children, ver. 20, 21.

111. The cause of these, ver. 22.

In ver. 15, you have,

1. Her sinful confidence, "Thou didst trust in thine own beauty."

2. Her whoredom, "and playedst the harlot."

3. The motive thereunto, her "renown."

4. The greatness and extent of her whoredoms, "and pouredst out thy fornications on every one that passed by."

5. The manner of her whorish and idolatrous practices; she took her garments, jewels, oil, incense, fine flour, and honey, and bestowed them all upon her images, ver. 16—19.

"Thou didst trust," Hebrew is, תבטח thou hast trusted. Having received many mercies from God, both temporal and spiritual, she grew proud, confident, and trusted in what the Lord had given her to make her beautiful; she grew secure, presumptuous, and loose, leaving God, who gave her all, and resting in his gifts.

"And playedst the harlot." Hebrew is, תרנני the word רנני signifies, to be impure in body or mind, when one leaves her husband, and wantonizeth with others in mind or body. When it is spoken of the state of the Jews, (as here, and frequently in other places of Scripture,) it notes leaving of God, cleaving to idols, worshipping of them, which is called fornication, whoredom; Hos. i. 2, "The land hath committed great whoredom, departing from the Lord;" Judg. ii. 17, "They went a whoring after other gods, and bowed themselves unto them;" chap. viii. 27, when Gideon set up his ephod, "all Israel went thither a whoring after it." There is spiritual whoredom as well as corporal whoredom; the setting up idols or images, using any reverential gestures in honour of them, the worshipping of them, or God by them, is spiritual whoredom.

I shall show you wherefore idolatry is called fornication and whoredom, and that is, from the resemblances which are between them.

1. A whorish woman leaves and goes out from her husband to another; Prov. ii. 17, "She forsaketh the guide of her youth," that is, her husband; she pleads she had not that content, delight, satisfaction in him as she looked for: so here, this Israelitish woman forsook her husband, and went out to other gods; Jer. ii. 11, 13, "Hath a nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods? but my people have changed their glory; they have forsaken me the fountain of living waters." Hos. ix. 1, "Thou hast gone a whoring from thy God;" and what was that whoring? Jer. iii. 9, committing adultery with stocks and stones; that was, idolatrous worshipping of them.

2. Whoredom is a breach of that covenant which was made between husband and wife at marriage. Prov. ii. 17, she "forgetteth the covenant of her God," that is, the covenant made with her husband, in the presence of God; so a people in covenant with God, going out to idolatrous practices, they break covenant with him; ver. 8, "I entered into covenant with thee, and thou becomest mine;" but this woman, falling into idolatry, brake covenant, therefore, Jer. iii. 20, "As a wife treacherously departed from her husband, so have ye dealt treacherously with me, O house of Israel, saith the Lord;" this God foresaw, and foretold long before; Deut.

xxxii. 16, they will go a whoring after other gods, they "will forsake me, and break my covenant which I have made with them."

3. Whoredom is pleasing and delightful to men and women, but it is abominable and loathsome in the account of God; Prov. vii. 18, saith the harlot there, "Come, let us take our fill of love until the morning: let us solace ourselves with loves." They had pleasure and delight in their sin, but it was abominable in the sight of God, and therefore it is called uncleanness in a special manner, Rom. i. 24; Eph. iv. 19; so in idolatry, and superstitionizing, there is that which pleaseth man, but provokes God greatly. They went a whoring after idols, they saw beauty in them, found pleasure in letting out their hearts unto them, Ezek. xviii. 6, they lifted up their eyes to their idols, they took as much pleasure in beholding them as a man in beholding the beauty of a woman, their idolatry was delightful to them. Isa. xlv. 9, images are called their "delectable things," or desirable, as the Hebrew is; but however they were delightful to them, they were not so to God; Isa. lxxv. 12, they "did choose that wherein I delighted not." God was so far from delighting in them that he abhorred them, and therefore calls them defiling abominations, Jer. xxxii. 34; devils, Deut. xxxii. 17; confusion, Isa. xli. 29; detestable things, Ezek. v. 11.

4. Whoredom darkens men's understandings, infatuates the spirits of men, and steals away their hearts; Hos. iv. 11, "Whoredom and wine and new wine take away the heart." Solomon, that was exceeding wise, had his spirit so besotted with women, that he was not able to see the sinfulness of idolatry, but had his heart turned after other gods, 1 Kings xi. Such is idolatry, it blinds men's understanding, and clouds their judgments; Rom. i. 21, "They became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened," and they, "professing themselves to be wise, they became fools," in making images of God, ver. 22, 23: see their folly, "They worshipped the works of their own hands," Jer. i. 16; they trusted in that which could neither hear, see, speak, smell, nor go, Psal. exv. 5—8; they asked counsel of stocks, Hos. iv. 12; they said "to a stock, Thou art my father; and to a stone, Thou hast brought me forth," Jer. ii. 27.

5. Whoredom is a reproaching sin; Prov. vi. 33, speaking of a man committing adultery, he tells you, "A wound and dishonour shall he get; and his reproach shall not be wiped away:" so idolatry brings reproach upon men: 1 Pet. iv. 3, they are called "abominable idolatries," they make the names of men abominable, as well as their persons and actions. They are termed haters of God, Exod. xx. 5; blasphemers, Isa. lxxv. 7; adulterers, Jer. iii. 9; worshippers of devils, Rev. ix. 20.

6. It is an inflaming sin. Job xxxi. 12, it is called "a fire," and kindles such a flame in the house, as oftentimes consumes it. Idolatry is of the same nature: Isa. lvii. 5, "Inflaming yourselves with idols;" there was a spirit of whoredoms in them, which kindled strong, burning, inflaming lusts after their idols: Jer. l. 38, "They are mad upon their idols:" where there is madness, there is a great inflammation of the blood and spirits.

7. Uncleanness is a sin destructive to body and soul: Prov. v. 11, it consumes the body; it destroys the soul, chap. vi. 32; and the harlot's house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death, chap. vii. 27. So idolatry is a dangerous sin, it threatens destruction of body and soul; Baal's prophets lost their lives for their idolatry, 1 Kings xviii.: Gideon's ephod was a ruin to him and to his household, Judg. viii.; and, in 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10, there is a dreadful place against fornicators and idolaters;" "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived; neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers," &c. "shall inherit the kingdom of God."

8. Whoredom is a costly sin; much is wasted in vestments, much in ornaments, much in meats, drinks, junketings, and perfumes. Prov. vii. 16, 17, "I have decked my bed with coverings of tapestry, with carved works, with fine linen of Egypt. I have perfumed my bed with myrrh, aloes, and cinnamon;" the dressings, deckings, banquetings, perfumings which attend that vice, are very costly. Idolatry, likewise, is a chargeable thing; Isa. xlvi. 6, "They lavish gold out of the bag." When nothing else could fetch the gold out of it, idolatry could, and that in abundance; "they lavish it out," to maintain and adorn an idol-god; see Isa. xl. 19; Jer. x. 4, 9. So here, they decked their high places with brodered garments, with jewels of gold and silver, they bestowed upon them oil and incense, fine flour and honey.

9. It is an impudent sin, it makes bold and brazen-faced: Prov. vii. 13, the harlot had an impudent face, and spake impudent things. Idolatry begets impudence also: Ezek. iii. 7, "All the house of Israel are impudent;" and how impudently did they speak, when they offered incense in the chambers of their imagery, to creeping things, and abominable beasts, portrayed upon the walls! they said, "The Lord seeth us not; the Lord hath forsaken the earth," chap. viii. 10—12.

"Because of thy renown." Hebrew is, על שםך Thou hadst a great name, wast become famous abroad, and this invited the nations to come and visit thee, and brought in the gods of their countries, which thou receivedst, and playedst the harlot with: or thus you may read the words, against thy name; Thou hast played the harlot against thy name; whereas, before, thou hadst an honourable and precious name, now by thy sinful and base practices, thou hast polluted it, and made thy name to stink.

The Vulgate reads it, in thy name; and I find interpreters carry the sense to be this. That this woman having left her husband, under whose authority and power she formerly was, did all now in her own name; she pretended now she was sui juris, and would live as she list, and converse with whom she pleased: Hos. iv. 12, "They have gone a whoring from under their God;" they would not be under the authority and command of God, as a chaste spouse should be, but left him as a whore doth her husband, and so did all in their own name: Jer. ii. 31, "We are lords; we will come no more unto thee;" we are at liberty, are lords over ourselves and our own actions, we will have what gods we please.

"And pourest out thy fornications." Hebrew is, ופצתי like a whore that prostitutes herself to all comers; so did this Jewish state prostitute itself to the idolatrous practices of all nations that came to her. It is sinful for a woman to be taken with the desire of another man, worse to commit folly with him, though one of the same house, but it is far worse to be taken with strangers, and to prostitute herself to all comers, and to be a common strumpet; this Israelitish woman was so, if any had any new gods, or new devices in worship, she entertained them. The word pouring out sets forth the vehement and insatiable desire she had to sin. Or thus: "Pourest out thy fornications;" thou didst communicate and impart thy idolatrous and false ways of worship to all that passed by, thou infectedst them therewith; thou was not content alone to be naught thyself, but drewest in many others to partake of thy sins: she was full of spiritual whoredoms, and taught all nations to be more idolatrous.

"His it was." Hebrew is, יהי לי to him it was. In ver. 8, saith God, "Thou becamest mine;" and in ver. 14, "Thy beauty was perfect through my comeliness, which I put upon thee;" but here it was another's, her comeliness, her beauty, her desire, her body, her estate, were all another's. Vulgate is, that thou shouldst become his: thou wast weary of my love, and hast sought out other lovers, that thou mightest mingle with them, and satisfy thy lust; and not only hast thou left, cast off, me, but thou hast embraced others: whoever passed by thee had thy heart and affection as much as ever I had, for him thou wast, and his was all thou hadst.

Obs. 1. Where God bestows choice mercies upon a people, he looks for answerable returns from them. He gave life to the Israelitish state, ver. 6; he multiplied it as the bud of the field, ver. 7; he loved this people, entered into covenant with them, married them unto himself, ver. 8; he washed away their blood, and anointed them with oil, ver. 9; he gave them costly apparel, precious ointments, fine flour, honey, and oil, royal dignity, special beauty and comeliness, great fame and glory, ver. 10—14; and now expected that they should have lived to him, loved, feared, obeyed, served him, and improved all for the honour of his name. "But thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot." &c. I looked not for this at thy hands; of all the people in the world, I looked that thou shouldst have been faithful and fruitful in all good works, and been as exemplary for holiness and justice to other nations, as I was exemplary in my mercies towards thee above other nations. Isa. v. 2, there God fenced his vineyard, gathered out the stones thereof, planted it with the choicest vine, built a tower in the midst of it, made a wine-press in it, digged it, caused the clouds to rain upon it, and did all that could be done for the good of it; and what then? "I looked that it should bring forth grapes," ver. 4: I looked for judgment and righteousness, ver. 7: where God multiplies mercies, he expects suitable returns. See one place more, Deut. xxxii. 6—16, he shows there that God was their Father, had bought them, made them a great people from low beginnings, set them their bounds, chosen them to be his portion and inheritance, how he had led, instructed, and kept them as the apple of his eye, and what variety of other mercies he had bestowed upon them; "but Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked." This people, that should have been righteous and upright, obeying the laws of their God and Father, rebelled and kicked like a fatted ox; which made Moses say, ver. 6, "Do you thus requite the Lord?" do you corrupt and spot yourselves with the courses of the world? The Lord looked for other things at their hands.

Obs. 2. Ingratitude in God's people is a provoking sin, and causes God to upbraid them for it. I gave thee life, increase, took thee to be mine, cleansed thee from thy filth and blood, anointed thee with oil, I clothed, decked, covered thee, fed thee, I made thee exceeding beautiful and comely, gave thee great renown, set a crown upon thy head, prospered thee into a kingdom; "but thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot." From the beginning of ver. 6, to the end of ver. 14, which are but nine verses, there is "I" seventeen times, and every mention of it is matter of upbraiding unto them; there is hardly the like in all the book of God. When men will not mind God's mercies, to be thankful, he will remember them, to upbraid their unthankfulness for them.

When God had made Adam after his image, planted him in paradise, given him dominion over all the creatures, for him not to obey one little command, this was great ingratitude; provoked the Lord to come down from heaven, to upbraid him, and punish him for it, Gen. iii.; "Adam, where art thou?" what! hast thou forgotten me, and all the mercies so lately heaped upon thee, and eaten the forbidden fruit? "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life," ver. 17. In Isa. xxxvii, you read of Sennacherib's great army before Jerusalem, which filled them with fears, and caused sadnesses in many families; God destroyed this army by an angel in a night. In the next chapter, you find Hezekiah was sick unto death: Jerom delivers it to be the judgment of the learned Jews, that therefore he was struck with sickness, because he was not thankful to God for this great deliverance; and this was a real upbraiding of him for his ingratitude. Isa. i. 2, 3, God was so troubled at the ingratitude of this people, that he could hold no longer, but must call forth a prophet, and cause him to begin his prophecy in this manner, "Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth: for the Lord hath spoken, I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me. The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib;" they give them a little hay, straw, grass, water, and the brute creatures are thankful for them; "but Israel doth not know, my people do not consider:" I give them their oxes, and asses, all that belongs to them, and greater things than so, yet they know not me.

Matt. xi. Christ upbraids Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum, where his mighty works were done, because they brought not forth fruits answerable, but were impenitent and ungrateful; he tells Capernaum, it shall be more easy for Sodom than for her in the day of judgment.

Judg. viii. 34, 35, "The children of Israel remembered not the Lord their God, who had delivered them out of the hands of all their enemies on every side: neither showed they kindness to the house of Gideon, according to all the goodness he had showed unto Israel." Socrates, saith the Athenians, admitted no ungrateful man into the republic.

What ingratitude was it in the men of Keilah, when the Philistines fought against them, robbed them, endangered their liberties and lives, and David with his men smote the Philistines with a great slaughter, and saved the inhabitants of Keilah, 1 Sam. xxiii. 15; and quickly afterwards, they would have delivered David, who had saved them, into the hands of Saul, his enemy! ver. 12.

Obs. 3. We are very apt to trust in, and be proud of, the mercies God bestows upon us. "Thou didst trust in thine own beauty;" those things I gave to make thee beautiful, those thou hast abused, been proud of, put too much confidence in. Such is the heart of man, that it is ready to idolize every mercy God gives.

There are several mercies we are apt to trust in.

(1.) In riches. Prov. x. 15, "The rich man's wealth is his strong city," he confides as much in it as citizens do in a walled, well fortified, and well built city: Psal. lii. 7, "This is the man that made not God his strength; but trusted in the abundance of his riches;" 1 Tim. vi. 17, "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high minded, nor trust in uncertain riches;" he that doth it shall fall, Prov. xi. 28.

(2.) In princes and great ones. Psal. cxlvi. 3, "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help," no salvation: Isa. ii. 22, "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils; for wherein is he to be accounted of?" Jer. xvii. 5, "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm." The Jews put confidence in Egypt, and the king of it; Isa. xxx. 3, "Therefore shall the strength of Pharaoh be your shame, and the trust in the shadow of Egypt your confusion."

(3.) In your own natural excellences. Jer. ix. 23, "Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might;" it shows there is a great propensity in the hearts of men to do it. Prov. xxviii. 26, "He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool;" the heart is the most excellent part of man: Prov. iii. 5, "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding."

(4.) In the ordinances and means of grace. Jer. vii. 4, "Trust ye not in lying words, saying, The temple of the Lord," &c.: ver. 14, 15, "Therefore will I do unto this house, which is called by my name, wherein ye trust, as I have done to Shiloh. And I will east you out of my sight, as I have east out all your brethren, even the whole seed of Ephraim."

Obs. 4. Great renown, through man's corruption, oft proves a snare, occasions great sins. "Thou playedst the harlot because of thy renown;" thou wast grown great, famous abroad, exceededst other nations, who, coming to see thy beauty, and behold thy glory, which they heard of, thou dotedst upon them, and drewest them to fornication: her renown was the bait to allure them, and to induce them, being allured, to spiritual whoredoms. Renown is a great mercy of the Lord, and should be a special motive to make us honour God, and to improve it for his glory, and others' good; but usually estates and persons abuse that renown and esteem they have in the world, making advantage thereof only to serve their own turns and lust. God made this people above all nations, in praise, in name, in honour, that they might be a holy people unto him, Deut. xxvi. 19; their renown should have encouraged them to holiness, and it was an incentive unto looseness. Solomon had great renown abroad in the nations, 1 Kings iv. 31; that drew the princes to bestow their daughters upon him; chap. xi. 3, he had seven hundred wives, princesses; his name made way for unlawful marriages, and they made way for unlawful gods. You read of rooting up Israel, 1 Kings xiv. 15: of blotting out their name from under heaven, Deut. ix. 14; of cutting it off, Isa. xlvi. 19: the reason was, they abused that name God had given them to idolatry, and other sinful practices. Many of great credit take up money and break.

Obs. 5. Going out from God to false gods and ways of worship, is a grievous sin. "Thou playedst the harlot," that is, thou didst leave me, thy God and Husband, and wentest after others; thy body, thy beauty, thy heart and affections were theirs, and with them thou didst commit whoredoms: Psal. cvi. 28, "They joined themselves also unto Baal-peor." This was apostasy in this people, to forsake God, break covenant, all engagements, to go out to others, as if there were more good, content, sweetness to be had in them, than in the Lord; Micah vi. 3, "O my people, what have I done unto thee? and wherein have I wearied thee? testify against me." They made their nations think their gods better than the God of Israel, and their way of worship better than his, which was a great reproach to the Lord, and made him to complain. The Hebrew calls the winter חרף because it is a reproach to the earth; and such is an apostate people; they are חרף a reproach to God and his ordinances, they bring up an ill report upon Canaan, the grapes and God thereof. When the Samaritans worshipped strange gods, the Jews counted and called them bastards for it; but when they practised it themselves, they were blind, and discerned not the evil of it: John viii. 41, "We be not born of fornication;" they meant they were not the children of idolaters, and such as had apostatized from God; whereas their predecessors had been the greatest apostates and idolaters of the world. This sin kindles the jealousy of God, Exod. xx. 5; Prov. vi. 34; and made the Lord say, Heb. x. 38, "If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him;" no, his soul should be exceedingly against them. Hence saith God of the Levites, that fell to idolatry, that they should "bear their iniquity. And they shall not come near unto me to do the office of a priest unto me," Ezek. xlv. 10, 13.

Some of the ancients have thought that a man falling away from the truth once, or twice especially, there is no mercy for him.

Obs. 6. The most beautiful and renowned church may degenerate, apostatize, and become so corrupt, that it may be questionable whether there be the face of a true visible church in all the world. This Israelitish woman was the only spouse of God, he entered into a covenant with her, she became his, ver. 8; he did great things for her, he put more spiritual beauty and comeliness upon her than upon all the nations, and made her renowned throughout the world; yet she forsook God, played the harlot, multiplied fornications, prostituted herself to every idol and idolater; and now where was the church of God? She "played the harlot with many lovers," Jer. iii. 1; here was visible apostasy, visible idolatry, but no true visible church in joining communion with God in his own way. Neither was God without a true church at this time. There were some godly ones in secret, which kept themselves from those idolatrous pollutions, who mourned in secret for the abominations done in the temple, city, and every where, Ezek. ix. 4; but these lay hid, and durst not appear in the ways of worship then amongst them. So in Elijah's days, Ahab, Jezebel, the false prophets and priests of Baal had so corrupted the worship of God, and the people so apostatized, that there was no visible face of a church left in the view of Elijah himself; for he saith, "The children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets; and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life, to take it away," 1 Kings xix. 10; but God had then seven thousand in secret, ver. 18.

The true church may be brought to such a paucity, such a lowness, as that there may be no public meetings, or view thereof. Whilst this church hearkened to her Husband, obeyed his voice, followed the rules of the word, she was chaste, and free from errors; but when she grew proud of her fame, and trusted in her beauty, then she fell into errors, defiled herself with idols, and sinned shamefully.

The papists say, their church cannot err, especially in things necessary to salvation; and why? because it is the spouse of Christ. Was not this Israelitish church the spouse of God? and did it not err in the great and weighty things of salvation? did it not leave God, and fall to idolatry, such practices as exclude the kingdom of heaven? What privilege hath the Roman church more than this had? Whatever papists say or write, their church hath trusted in her beauty, been proud of her renown, and played the harlot, as notoriously as ever Jerusalem did.

Ver. 16. "And deckedst thy high places with divers colours." The Hebrew is, And hast made to themselves spotted high places. In their high places were altars made for the honour of their idols, those they decked with tapestry, and clothes bespotted with divers colours, that so they might affect and allure more strongly the worshippers, and those that came to see them worshipping.

Ver. 17. "Thou hast also taken thy fair jewels." The Hebrew is, בלי תכשיטך, the vessels or instruments of thy glory. Some refer these instruments of glory to the golden or silver vessels of the temple, which were glorious vessels, and vessels of their glory. It is said that Ahaz, 2 Chron. xxviii. 24, "gathered together the vessels of the house of God, and cut them in pieces, and made him altars in every corner of Jerusalem." It is like he might convert the gold and silver of the temple to idolatrous uses; or you may interpret it of their plate, those vessels of glory they had for their domestic use, not excluding the golden and silver ornaments they had for their own adorning.

"And madest to thyself images of men." The Hebrew is, צלמי זכר, images of man; not images of God, who was her Husband and beloved, but images of man. The nations had their gods and goddesses, he-gods and she-gods; Baal, Milchom, Chamos, Molech, were masculine gods; Ashtoreth, Isis, Derceto, were feminine gods. The Jewish state being here compared unto a woman, a whorish woman, who loves and affects the presence, beauty, and embracings of men, that is fitly said to make unto herself images of men, with which she might adulterize and idolize, and satiate her lusts both fleshly and spiritual. The Hebrew word for masculine, or of a man, is from זכר to remember; these images were memorials and remembrancers of their idol gods, of pleasures they had in accompanying with or worshipping of them.

Ver. 19. "My meat also which I gave thee." The Hebrew is, לחמי, my bread. Though לחם ordinarily signifies bread, yet here it must be taken comprehensively for any thing edible: the enumeration following shows it, as "fine flour, and oil, and honey;" and the word is so to be understood in Luke xiv. 1; Christ went into one of the Pharisees' houses to eat bread; by "bread" is meant whatever should be set before him: so Gen. xxxix. 6, Potiphar left all in Joseph's hand, he knew not aught he had, save the bread which he did eat; "bread," that is, all things he did eat: so Matt. vi. 11, daily bread comprehends all edible things, and more too.

"Thou hast even set it before them for a sweet savour." The Hebrew is, לריח ניחח, That which is sweet and pleasing to the smell, we rest in as delightful to us. She set these things before the images of men, and the false gods, to practise them if they were offended, and to endear them more unto herself hereby, as if she had merited their favours and embraces. The offering of incense and sweet odours was a part of divine worship, and when sacrifice was made to him by Noah, he smelled a sweet savour; the Hebrew is the same with what was here, he was well pleased therewith. It is taken from the practice of men, who used sweet smells, Isa. iii. 24.

Obs. 1. The making of high places, altars, images for religious uses, the adorning of them, and offering unto them, is idolatrous and provoking. Here God upbraids and condemns this woman in ver. 16; in ver. 17, for making of images; in ver. 18, for covering of them with brodered garments; and in this verse and ver. 19, for offering oil, incense, flour, honey unto them. God calls these things playing the harlot, committing whoredom.

This practice of theirs hath many aggravations in it.

(1.) That they made high places the places of their idolatry, which were open to view; they would worship false gods in the sight of heaven and earth.

(2.) That they made masculine images, which showed their filthy lust, and filthy idolatry, and set them up in the stead of God.

(3.) That they covered them with divers colours, and brodered garments: those of one colour, of worse materials, might have sufficed them, but these pleased their eyes, and inveigled others.

(4.) That they offered the Lord's oil, incense, and meat unto them.

(5.) That they thought these made them acceptable to the idols, and the idols propitious unto them, and put some divineness in them.

Obs. 2. Idolaters and false worshippers think no expenses, no charges, too much, to accomplish their devices, and maintain their way. If they want a god, or an image, to mind them of the true God, they will take their vessels of glory, the gold and silver of the temple, their plate, their fair jewels and ornaments of their bodies, and have gods and images made with them; if these gods and images seem naked, they will bestow their own clothes, their brodered and best garments, their coloured hangings, yea, they will spare their meat out of their own bellies, and set it before them. When Moses was in the mount, the people were set upon it to have a new visible god to go before them, and they call upon Aaron to make them such a god; he thought they would not have been at any great cost for an idol-god, and therefore saith, If you will have a god, you must break the golden earrings out of the ears of your wives, sons, and daughters; if you will part with them which are your glory and ornament, which will put you to much pain before you get them out, for you must break them; if you will do so, you shall have a golden god, Exod. xxxii. 1, 2. Did they stick at this? no, no; ver. 3, "All the people brake off the golden earrings which were in their ears, and brought them unto Aaron;" here was no compulsion, no delay, they brake and brought. Hos. ii. 8, God "multiplied her silver and gold, which they prepared for Baal," or therewith made Baal; they freely bestowed it upon idols, and idolatrous worship. Should we come to people now, and say, You would gladly have the true God to be your God, his ways and ordinances to walk in, and serve him by, but it must cost you your vessels of glory, your plate, jewels, ornaments, embroidery; what could they think of it?

Obs. 3. It is a detestable sin to abuse the mercies God gives us, for our necessities, ornaments, or delights, to the dishonour of his name. I gave thee gold and silver, and thou madest images of them; I clothed thee with brodered work, and thou coveredst thine images with them; I gave thee oil, incense, honey, and fine flour, and thou hast set them before thine images. Here was abominable ingratitude; as if God should say here, Consider and commiserate my case, all ye my friends and faithful servants, men and angels, I have showed great kindness, and dealt bountifully with this people, honoured them above others, given them the choicest blessings the world hath, and they turn all against me, and bestow my blessings upon false gods; they take their vestments and ornaments, clothe, adorn, and beautify their abominable idols with them. Suppose a prince, most amiable and virtuous, should take a poor, beggarly maid, having nothing, sick unto death, be at great cost to cure her, clothe, adorn her, and make her his wife, and she should bestow her embroideries and jewels upon whore-masters, and prostitute her body unto common rogues, leaving the prince who had done so much for her, were it not horrible ingratitude? would not every one who heard of it commiserate the prince, and condemn her. Absalom turned all against his father, and it was intolerable ingratitude.

If a man should set up his child with a great stoek, give him house and land, and he should spend it in suing and vexing of his father, who would not cry out of such a child? Many men take the blessings God bestows upon them, and spend them wholly in the service of their lusts: their bellies are their gods, their honours, their pleasures are so, and all is wasted about them, to the grief and dishonour of that God who gave them all.

It was never the intent or end of God that he should pervert his blessings, and bestow them upon idols, or any of our base lusts; he aimed at our good and his own glory, and we cross both when we abuse his mercies, we wound his honour, darken his glory, and destroy ourselves.

Ver. 20, 21. Moreover thou hast taken thy sons and thy daughters, whom thou hast borne unto me, and these hast thou sacrificed unto them to be devoured. Is this of thy whoredoms a small matter, that thou hast slain my children, and delivered them to cause them to pass through the fire for them?

These words do set out the ingratitude of this woman yet more fully, viz. from her unnaturalness: God gave her children, and she slew and sacrificed them unto false gods.

"Whom thou hast borne unto me." Not brought forth that they should be the Lord's, but they were his; for in ver. 21 he calls them his children: though this Israelitish woman had forsaken God, and was become a notorious idolatress, yet the children she brought forth were the Lord's,

1. By the right of the Lord. He is the God of nature, having sovereign authority over all creatures, and so both the parents and children were the Lord's, as well as other creatures; he calls it his gold, his silver, his oil, his incense, &c.

2. By the right of the covenant. God had made a covenant with them, and promised to be their God, and the God of their seed, Gen. xvii. 7. He speaks of his being in covenant with his people, ver. 8 of this chapter; he took this Israelitish woman to be his, and though she played the whore, yet the children she bore were the Lord's, because God had not given her a bill of divorce, but her children had circumcision, which was a token of the covenant between God and them, Gen. xvii. 11; and it is called the covenant of circumcision, Acts vii. 8. In themselves considered, they were worthy rather the name of bastards, than to be honoured with the title of sons.

"These hast thou sacrificed." The Hebrew word וַכַּח is, to kill, slay, as you do beasts, either for eating or sacrificing. Thou hast slain; so you have it in the next verse, "Thou hast slain my children," וַיַּחַיֵּם from וַיַּחַיֵּם to kill, or extend, because, when the beast was killed, they extended the parts of it; here they killed their children, either before they put them into the fire and sacrificed them to idols, or by casting them alive into the fire. Jer. vii. 31, there is mention made of "Tophet in the valley of the son of Hinnom," and it was to burn their sons and daughters in the fire. Expositors say, this Tophet was a chapel, or altar, where Molech was, and here they offered their children to that idol. This idol Molech, the Hebrews tell us, was made of brass, hollow and capacious in the concave of it; they put their children either in it, or under it, there being a great fire; they burned them in honour to the idol. Others think they were put in the arms of the idol, being red hot, and so roasted to death; and because the lamentable shrieks and cries of the children in the fire should not be heard, they played upon tabrets, beat on drums or pans, whence it was called Tophet, for תֹּפֶת is a tabret, or drum.

This inhuman practice was frequent among the Jews, as you may observe from 2 Kings xvi. 3; xvii. 17; and xxi. 6; Jer. xix. 5; xxxii. 35. Ahaz "walked in the way of the kings of Israel, and made his son to pass through the fire," (that was their ordinary practice,) "according to the abominations of the heathen." And, 2 Kings xvii. 31, "The Sepharvites burnt their children in fire to Adrammelech and Anammelech, the gods of Sepharvaim."

This custom of sacrificing their children, it is judged, by the learned, that the heathens took up from the example of Abraham, who would have offered his son in sacrifice to God; they thought (though this was not done) surely such sacrifices were acceptable to God; if God took it well at Abraham's hands, who did but attempt it, he would much more take it well at their hands, who should do it: their children were dear to them, and when they should thus part with them for the honour of their God, as they conceived, how could it be but he should take it well at their hands: they considered not that Abraham did it upon special command. Besides, it is probable that the heathens had learned the meaning of their sacrifices, which typed out Christ, who should take man's nature upon him, and be a sacrifice to pacify the wrath of God. They thought, hereupon, that the sacrificing of children and men would do the like with their gods, and make them acceptable to them. Micah vi. 7, "Shall I give my firstborn for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul?" These words import, that both the heathens and idolatrous Jews did imagine, that the sacrificing of their children did make atonement for their sins, which the prophet confutes and condemns.

"To be devoured." The Hebrew is, to eat or to be eaten: they put their children into the fire, which did eat them up, and consume them. In Isa. v. 24, you have the same word, "as the fire devoureth;" the original is, eateth the stubble; and the word fire, in the Hebrew, is אש לשון the tongue of the fire: the tongue licks in the meat, and eats it; so the flame catches hold of combustible matter, and consumes it.

"To pass through the fire." The Hebrew is, in causing them to pass through. Some children they burned wholly in the fire; others, as it is usually conceived, they caused to pass through the fire, which was a purging of them from the filth and defilements, as also a consecrating of them to the idol and his service: they placed much efficacy in fire, for the hallowing of those who passed through it.

The Tartars, saith Abuiensis, think all strangers, such as are not of their own race, unclean; and before they can see or speak with their king, they must pass between two fires, by which being purged, they are deemed worthy of his presence. We must pass through the fire of the law and gospel, before we come to the sight of the Lord.

Whether authors have not mistaken in this, thinking that some children only were drawn through the fire, and not burnt, I desire one thing may be taken into consideration, and that is, what the Scripture calls passing through the fire in one place, it calls burning in another: 2 Kings xvi. 3, it is said, Ahaz

"made his son to pass through the fire;" 2 Chron. xxviii. 3, it is said, "He burnt his children in the fire;" so here in our prophet, that which is called devouring in ver. 20, is termed passing through the fire in ver. 21; not under correction, that they passed through the fire and so lived, but passed through it to the honour of the idol.

Obs. 1. When men leave God and his word, they fall into wicked practices, and proceed further and further daily. This Jewish state left God and his word, fell to idolatry, the idolatry of all the nations, yea, more than that, to the sacrificing of her children; "Moreover, thou hast taken thy sons," &c. Jehoram slew his brethren, divers princes of Israel, wrought evil in the eyes of the Lord, 2 Chron. xxi. 4, 6; ver. 11, "Moreover he made high places in the mountains of Judah, and caused the inhabitants of Jerusalem to commit fornication, and compelled Judah thereto." So Abaz, besides his walking in the ways of the kings of Israel, and making molten images for Baalim, it is said, "Moreover he burnt incense in the valley of the son of Hinnom." See chap. xxxvi. 14; this 16th of Ezekiel, ver. 29, sinners have their more-overs, they add sin to sin. Herod had done much evil, yet he added more to it; Luke iii. 19, 20, he shut up John in prison. As sinners have their more-overs, so God hath his more-overs; Deut. xxviii. 45, after the Lord had threatened them with judgments and curses, ver. 15—45, there he saith, "Moreover all these curses shall come upon thee, and shall pursue thee, and overtake thee, till thou be destroyed;" so Ezek. v. 14, "Moreover I will make thee waste, and a reproach among the nations that are round about thee."

Obs. 2. Sinners may come to such a height of sinning, as to violate all bonds and bounds of restraint. "Thou hast taken thy sons and thy daughters, whom thou hast borne unto me, and these hast thou sacrificed unto them to be devoured. Is this of thy whoredoms a small matter?"

There were many bonds and considerations to have kept them off from this bloody work.

(1.) It was against the light of nature. The light which is in the souls of men, naturally tells them they should not murder, especially innocents, such as children; they should do as they would be done by: it was an unreasonable act.

(2.) It was against the law of nature, which Ulpian thus defines, It is that which nature hath taught all creatures living. You know nature hath put a law or instinct into all creatures to preserve their young, and if they be endangered by any, they will contend and venture much for them, even timorous creatures, as birds for their young, hens for their chickens, and all creatures more or less. The law and impulse of nature is strong in them, but here the law of nature had no force, "Thou hast taken thy sons," &c.: they came out of their loins, were parts and pieces of themselves, and nature should have moved, wrought strongly in them, for the preservation of their little ones; but they were unnatural, beneath the brute creatures in this act, they are so far from destroying their young, that they hazard themselves to preserve them.

(3.) Those were children consecrated unto the Lord, yet being circumcised, and having the token of the covenant, were the Lord's; therefore it is said, "Which thou hast borne unto me." This should have restrained them from so sacrilegious an act, as to take them from God and sacrifice them unto devils, for, Psal. cvi. 37, "They sacrificed their sons and daughters unto devils:" to take them from an infinite, gracious, blessed, holy God, and give them unto idols and devils, what an accursed and horrible thing was this! as if a mother should take the child out of the father's arms, who is loving, tender over it, and throw it to lions, bears, or any other ravenous creatures.

(4.) They had a full command to the contrary; Lev. xviii. 21, "Thou shalt not let any of thy seed pass through the fire to Molech:" yea, this was backed with no less penalty than death; Lev. xx. 2, 3, 5, "Whosoever he be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn in Israel, that giveth any of his seed unto Molech; he shall surely be put to death: the people of the land shall stone him with stones. And I will set my face against that man, and against his family, and will cut him off."

(5.) The manner of the death should have prevailed with them not to have yielded to it. It was the most terrible death of all deaths, to be burnt in the fire; oh the shrieks, cries, and lamentations of poor innocents! but see the hand of God upon them for it, Lam. iv. 10, "They sod their own children."

Obs. 3. A whorish, idolatrous church may bring forth children unto God. This Jewish church was fallen to as gross idolatry and practices as were to be found among heathen, and yet the children she brought forth are termed to be the Lord's; in what sense, I showed you in opening of the words. A church may have ordinances which may entitle its children to be the Lord's, and yet not prove itself to be a true church. The Jews had circumcision, which the children partaking of, were counted the Lord's, but themselves were so corrupt, whorish, idolatrous, bloody in offering their children to idols, that the Lord did not own them for a lawful spouse and true church, as you may see, ver. 38, "I will judge thee, as women that break wedlock and shed blood are judged." So the tribes brought forth children unto God, but the Lord said of them, Hos. i. 9, "Loammi; ye are not my people." The Romish church may bring forth some children unto God, because she hath baptism and other ordinances in her: yet she is so corrupt, idolatrous, bloody in persecuting the saints, that she is rather the whore of antichrist, the synagogue of Satan, than the true spouse of Christ.

Obs. 4. In matters of worship, it is not men's zeal and good intentions will justify their actions. They sacrifice their children with zeal as hot as fire, they thought to pacify and please their idol-gods, that they did acceptable service in parting with their dearest comforts, their tender babes, for the honour of their god; but this was so far from acceptance, that it fearfully provoked God; "Is this of thy whoredoms a small matter?" the more zealous thou art in this, the worse; thy good intentions are abominations; who required this at thy hands? Gideon, in making an ephod, Jeroboam, in setting up the golden calves, the Galatians, in observing of days, the Colossians, in subjecting to ordinances, had their zeal and good intentions, but not one of them were justifiable by the word of God. Will-worship hath no acceptance in divine worship; men's inventions are nothing the better for their good intentions. The papists pretend good intentions for all their additions to baptism, and other parts of the worship of God, but, notwithstanding their intentions, they are no better than superstitious.

Obs. 5. In pretended ways of worship, men grow cruel and bloody. "Thou hast slain my children, and delivered them to cause them to pass through the fire for them;" they pretended this was a right and good way of worship, and, in honour of their false gods and ways, they become cruel, and murder their own children. False ways of worship have this grand evil intrinsic unto them, they have cruelty and bloodiness attending them; whereas true religion only, and the ways of it, hath this honour, to be mild and merciful, bearing and forbearing, James iii. 17. The Pharisees pretended they knew the law, were only in the right way, but they were deceived; and how bitter, bloody, and persecuting were they against Christ's apostles, and those who embraced the truths they delivered! John xvi. 2, 3, Christ tells them what would be the practice of men in false ways, they would kill them, and think they did God good service in it; and why? they knew not the Father, nor Christ, they were strangers unto their ways, which were full of love, meekness, kindness, and had ways of their own, which made them zealous, bitter, plot, and to break out into open violence: Rev. xvi. 5, 6, the Babylonish whore slew the children of the Lord, and was drunk with the blood of saints and martyrs; in her was found the blood of all the slain upon the earth, all that suffered for the truth; she succeeded the former, justified their ways, filled up what was wanting in them.

Ver. 22. And in all thine abominations and thy whoredoms thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth, when thou wast naked and bare, and wast polluted in thy blood.

This verse contains the ground and cause of this woman's sinful departure from God, of her idolatry and cruelty, viz. she forgot in what a poor, forlorn, and miserable condition she had been in, and what God had done for her; she neither remembered her own misery, nor God's mercies: she was naked, bare, and he clothed her; she was polluted in her blood, and he washed her; she was very deformed, and he put beauty upon her; she was hase, contemptible, and he made her renowned in the world; but these things were not thought on. Had she kept in her heart what a low estate she once was in, and how the Lord dealt by her in that estate, she would never have left him, broken out into, and proceeded on in, such wicked ways as she did.

Obs. 1. When God's people are raised, they are apt to forget God and themselves, and to break out into sinful courses. This Israelitish woman being exalted by God, thought not upon her former low estate, nor what God had been unto her in that estate: Psal. evi. 21, "They forgot God their saviour;" he saved them from the plagues in Egypt, from the Egyptians, from the Red sea, the fiery serpents, and other evils; and what! did they forget him? yea, they soon forgot him; ver. 13, they "soon forgot his works;" the Hebrew is, they made haste, they forgot. Man at first was called Adam, earth, or red earth, but after the fall, Enosh, which some render, forgetful, because through sin he was so cracked, that he could not hold or remember any thing. God had done great and many wonderful things for this people, Deut. iv. 32—34, and charged them they should not forget them or him, chap. iv. 9; xxiii. 12; viii. 11, 14; yet look into chap. xxxii. 18, where it is said, "Of the Rock that begat thee thou art unmindful, and hast forgotten God that formed thee:" God begot them, and formed them into a people, kingdom, did all for them, yet they forgot him. And is it not so among us, whom he hath begotten into families, and formed into cities, counties, and a kingdom? may we not say, with David, Psal. viii. 4, Lord, "what is man, that thou art mindful of him?" what is Enosh? he is a sorry, miserable, wretched, forgetful creature; do what thou wilt for him, be what thou wilt to him, he will soon forget thee, and all thou hast done.

Obs. 2. Consideration of men's misery, and God's mercy to them in that misery, is a special help to prevent sin. "In all thy whoredoms thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth, when thou wast naked and bare, and polluted in thy blood:" their forgetfulness of them opened the door unto sin; the remembrance of them would have shut it against, and kept them from, sin. When the heart is seriously exercised about a low, miserable, lost, perishing condition, and what undeserved kindness God showed in it, ingratitude, pride, carnal confidence, bud not out, grow not up, bring not forth; and as it is a curb to keep us from sin, so it is a strong trace to draw us out of sin: "In all thine abominations and thy whoredoms thou hast not remembered," &c. intimating, that if this woman had laid to heart her former condition, and the great kindnesses of God to her, she would have repented her of her ways, and turned to the Lord; thoughts thereof would have begot such thoughts, workings of spirit, as these: What! did God pity me when none would pity? did he take me in when I was cast out? did he bestow life upon me, make me grow and increase? hath he washed, anointed me, covered, adorned, beautified me? and have I gone out from him, left him, sinned against him, requited him ill for all his kindness? I am ashamed of it; I will turn to him and ask him forgiveness. When David had sinned, and lay in it, the prophet minds him of his former condition, and what God had done for him: 2 Sam. xii. 7, "I anointed thee king over Israel," thee who wast at the sheepfold, low, mean, despised; "I delivered thee out of the hand of Saul," he sought thy life; "I gave thee thy master's house," wives, the houses of Judah and Israel: these he sets before him, that upon the due minding of them he might be affected, and led to repentance for his sinful practices. If you would think what low estates you were lately in, what God did for you then, it would be a special means to keep you from sin.

Ver. 23—29. And it came to pass after all thy wickedness, (woe, woe unto thee! saith the Lord God;) that thou hast also built unto thee an eminent place, and hast made thee an high place in every street. Thou hast built thy high place at every head of the way, and hast made thy beauty to be abhorred, and hast opened thy feet to every one that passed by, and multiplied thy whoredoms. Thou hast also committed fornication with the Egyptians thy neighbours, great of flesh; and hast increased thy whoredoms, to provoke me to anger. Behold, therefore I have stretched out my hand over thee, and have diminished thine ordinary food, and delivered thee unto the will of them that hate thee, the daughters of the Philistines, which are ashamed of thy lewd way. Thou hast played the whore also with the Assyrians, because thou wast unsatiable; yea, thou hast played the harlot with them, and yet couldest not be satisfied. Thou hast moreover multiplied thy fornication in the land of Canaan unto Chuldea; and yet thou wast not satisfied herewith.

In these verses the Lord doth further accuse and charge this woman, that she made no stop nor stand in her wickedness, but proceeded further and further; "after all thy wickedness, thou hast also built unto thee an eminent place, and hast made thee an high place in every street."

This is set out unto us,

1. By the eminency of the place. She built not some little, low place, obscure, unnoted, but one eminent, great, glorious, high.

II. From the multitude of high places and altars. She made not here and there one, but "in every street, at every head of the way," where was the most concourse of people.

III. From her impudence; "Thou hast opened thy feet to every one that passed by." Thou didst not, through frailty of nature, violence of temptation, transgress with one, two, or a few, but like an arrant whore past shame, "thou hast opened thy feet to every one."

IV. From the several nations she committed folly with. She was not content to be idolatrous herself, but made covenants and leagues with others, and drew them in; as,

1. The Egyptians, who are described to be,

(1.) Her "neighbours."

(2.) "Great of flesh," ver. 26.

2. The "Assyrians," ver. 28.

V. From the extent of her whoredoms, which was from "Canaan unto Chaldea," ver. 29. Not only in Canaan, but in Chaldea, she was idolatrous.

VI. From her insatiableness, ver. 28, 29.

VII. From the effects; which are,

1. Threatening from God; ver. 23, "Woe, woe unto thee!"

2. Abhorrence of her beauty; ver. 25, "And hast made thy beauty to be abhorred."

3. Punishment, ver. 27:

(1.) Set down in general, under this expression, "I have stretched out my hand over thee."

(2.) In particular, and that in two things,

[1.] In diminution of their comforts; "I have diminished thine ordinary food."

[2.] In putting them into the power of their enemies; "I delivered thee unto the will of them that hate thee."

4. Shame; so low and vile were her ways, that even her enemies were ashamed of her, ver. 27.

In ver. 23 there is nothing to open.

Obs. 1. That when God's own people go on in sinful ways, it is grievous unto him, it affects, yea afflicts, his heart. Here God, taking notice and speaking of this Israelitish woman's sinful practices, and proceeding on in them, breaks out in the midst of a sentence, saying, "Woe, woe unto thee!" he was so full with thoughts of her ingratitude, unkindness, rebellion, idolatry, &c. that he opens, empties, and eases himself in these expressions. Gen. vi. 5, 6, when God saw the wickedness of man to be great, it repented him that he had made man on the earth, and grieved him at the heart; Psal. lxxxviii. 40, they did oft grieve him in the desert; Psal. xc. 10, God saith, "Forty years long was I grieved with this generation;" Isa. lxiii. 10, they "vexed his holy Spirit," therefore, Isa. i. 24, "Ah, I will ease me of mine adversaries, and avenge me of mine enemies." Christ wept over Jerusalem.

Obs. 2. The end of wickedness is woe. She had been notoriously wicked, and what followed upon it? "woe, woe," it is double, and notes intension; she had been intense in sinning, and God was intense in threatening: Woe to thee, thou hast left me, woe to thee, thou hast embraced other gods; woe to thy estate and body, Assyrians shall come and destroy them, and woe to thy soul, I will destroy that. God was greatly exasperated, and therefore pours out a double woe against her, one temporal, another eternal. Let who will be wicked, be it Judah and Jerusalem, woe and woe must be their portion; let it be the Lord's own people, he will not spare; if they repent not, if they turn not from their evil ways, he will denounce woes against them, and bring woes upon them. "The wages of sin is death;" a temporal death, there is one woe; an eternal death, there is another woe.

Ver. 25. "Thou hast made thy beauty to be abhorred." This woman was very lovely, through her state and church beauty, she was renowned among the nations for it; but when she became idolatrous, she spotted her beauty, so as it became abominable. Take the fairest woman, that is most desirable and prized, if once she come to be common, and open her feet to all comers, as the phrase here is, she grows loathsome, abominable. Such was the Jewish state of our prophet's metaphorical woman, who multiplied altars, idolatries, and committed fornication with the nations far and near. The Lord had said long before, when they fell to idolatry, that their spot was not the spot of his children, Deut. xxxii. 5; when they were free from this sin they were beautiful and glorious; Numb. xxiv. 5, "How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!" chap. xxiii. 21, "He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he seen perverseness in Israel." The Vulgate reads it thus; "There is not an idol in Jacob, nor is an image seen in Israel. Idolatry makes the most glorious nation abominable; Prov. xiv. 34, "Sin is a reproach to any people," and especially this sin; 1 Pet. iv. 3, they are called "abominable idolatries;" they are so in themselves, and they make so. Whatever a woman's beauty is, if she be mad and frantic, you despise her and her beauty, you will not have to do with her: idolatry is a madness; Jer. 1. 38, "They are mad upon their idols;" and such madness makes the beauty of a state or church loathsome.

Ver. 27. "And have diminished thine ordinary food." The Hebrew for ordinary food is, חֵקֶךָ Jerom interprets it of their ceremonies, sabbaths, and solemnities; Theodoret of the law itself; others of their holy things. But God, dealing here with this Jewish state as a husband with an expensive and adulterous wife, saith, I have cut thee short of thy allowance, I have diminished thy portion. Prov. xxxi. 15, "She riseth also while it is yet night, and giveth meat to her household, and a portion to her maidens;" it is חֵקֶךָ and it is taken for a portion of meat and drink; and it is not amiss to take it so here; Thou hast abused thy fine flour, honey, and oil, but I will lessen them, thou shalt have little of these hereafter, thy portion shall be smaller. The confining it to things edible I like not; let us extend it to other things also, and the sense will be more full, viz. to her garments, ornaments, silver, gold, incense, &c.; Hos. ii. 9, I will "take away my corn, my wine, recover my wool and my flax;" and so it suits with the Chaldee interpretation, I will take away thy good. It is our sin that causes God to diminish our comforts.

"Delivered thee unto the will of them that hate thee." The Hebrew for will is כַּפְּסָךְ to the soul. It is a hebraism, the soul put for the will, lust or desire in it, and so it is frequently used; Exod. xv. 9, "My lust shall be satisfied upon them;" Psal. lxxxviii. 18, "They asked meat for their lust;" the Hebrew is, soul; Psal. cv. 22, "To bind his princes at his pleasure," according to the lust and pleasure of his soul; Psal. xli. 2, Give him not "to the will of his enemies," Hebrew, soul of his enemies; Luke xxiii. 25, "He delivered Jesus to their will."

"The daughters of the Philistines." In Scripture sense, villages and towns are counted daughters, as chief cities were called mothers; 2 Sam. xx. 19, "Thou seekest to destroy a city and a mother in Israel," that was Abel, where they asked counsel. And because cities had towns and villages belonging to them, as you may read, 1 Chron. vii. 28, "Bethel, and the towns thereof; Gezer, with the towns thereof; Shechem, Gaza, and the towns thereof;" so, ver. 29, "Bethshean and her towns, Taanach and her towns," &c.; these towns were accounted the daughters of those cities, because they were either made, governed by, or some ways belonging to those cities and the citizens thereof. And so divers expositors do take the daughters of the Philistines here to be the towns and villages of Palestina; and so the daughters of Jerusalem, oft mentioned in the Canticles, to be the villages adjacent. But it is better to interpret the words of the persons than of the places, and to understand by daughters of Philistines, the Philistines themselves: 2 Sam. i. 20, "Tell it not in Gath; lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice;" that is, not the villages, but the Philistines themselves. So, Psal. xlviii. 11, "Let the daughters of Judah be glad," that is, the people of Judah. In ver. 2; that which is "Egyptians," in the original is, sons of Egypt; and ver. 28, "with the Assyrians," in the Hebrew is, the sons of Ashur; and here, by "daughters of the Philistines," is meant the Philistines; and daughters are mentioned rather than sons, because the Lord had spoken of the Jewish state as a woman, and so continues the allegory in the same sex. The Philistines hated the Jews much, often warred against them, and brought them under, as you may observe in the book of Judges, chap. x. and xiii; they were glad when mischief befell them, therefore, when Saul and Jonathan were slain, David would not have it told in Gath or Askelon, lest the Philistines should triumph, 2 Sam. i. 20.

Obs. 1. To be delivered up to the wills of men that hate us is a sad judgment. To be given up to the wills and lusts of men is sad, but especially to the wills and lusts of those that hate us. David, when God propounded the three sad things to him, 2 Sam. xxiv. one whereof was to flee before his enemies, he chose rather famine or plague, than to fall into the hands of man, ver. 14; he knew that the hands and hearts of men were merciless: Psal. xxvii. 12, "Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies;" why? they bear false witness, they breathe out cruelty. Lev. xxvi. 17, "They that hate you shall reign over you;" the Philistines and Babylonians hated them, and they were lords over them, and very sad was their bondage under them. 2 Chron. xxviii. 18, "The Philistines invaded the cities of the low country, and of the south of Judah, and had taken Beth-shemesh, Ajalon, Gederoth, Shochu, Timnah, Gimzo, with the villages thereof: for the Lord brought Judah low because of Ahaz king of Israel; who made Judah naked, and transgressed sore against the Lord."

Obs. 2. Those who are accounted God's people may so exceed in sin, as that God's enemies may be ashamed of them. The Philistines, who hated God and the Jews, were ashamed of their lewd ways, they blushed at the sins the Jews gloried in: they gloried in their idolatry, they made high places every where; they committed spiritual whoredom with greediness; other nations kept their gods, but they changed their God and glory for that which did not profit, Jer. ii. 11. This lewity and idolatry of theirs made the heavens astonished, and the Philistines ashamed: they saw more filth and loathsomeness in this sin than the Jews; such abominable idolatry affected their hearts. The word in Hebrew for lewd is זָנָה wickedness, yea, some notable and emphatical wickedness. The abusing and forcing the Levite's concubine unto death, Judg. xix. is called, chap. xx. 6, זָנָה lewdness, wickedness, abomination; and Hierom, upon the 24th of Ezekiel, interprets it, an execrable and villanous filthiness. The impudence of this Jewish woman was such in her accursed idolatry, that the daughters of the Philistines were ashamed at it, durst not do the like, and were chaste in comparison of Jerusalem and her daughters, who lusted after the gods and worship of the nations on every side. The Egyptians deified onions, leeks, cats, beetles, oxen, sheep, dogs, apes, hawks, crocodiles, serpents, bats, moles, &c.; and with Egyptian idolatry did the Jews entangle themselves, as also with the Assyrian and Chaldean. If they had any new gods, the Jewish hearts were on fire for them, and unquiet till they enjoyed them: the nations were content with their own gods, but Jerusalem must have all.

Obs. 3. Wicked and wanton lusts are insatiable. This metaphorical woman had vile lusts in her, she lusted after the Egyptians, Assyrians, Chaldeans, committed fornication with them, opened her feet to all passengers, yet she was not satisfied therewith, ver. 29; and in ver. 28, it is said, she was insatiable, and could not be satisfied. Eccles. i. 8, "The eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing;" the one would see more, the other hear more; and so it is with the lusts of men and women, they would see, hear, and have more. "There are four things that are never satisfied, that say not, It is enough: the grave, the barren womb, the earth, the fire," Prov. xxx. 15, 16. And I may add, there are four evils, or lusts, that will never be satisfied.

(1.) Is the covetous lust; it would have more when it hath most: Eccles. iv. 8, the covetous man's eye is not satisfied with riches: chap. v. 10, "He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver."

(2.) Is revenge: he that is haunted with this lust, be he great or small, will not be satisfied; Prov. vi. 34, 35, "He will not spare in the day of vengeance. He will not regard any ransom: neither will he rest content, though thou givest many gifts."

(3.) Frowardness of spirit: Prov. xvii. 20, "A froward heart findeth no good;" do what you will to him or for him who hath it, he finds no satisfying good in it.

(4.) Is the lust of the flesh, which is the most insatiable: Eph. iv. 19, they gave "themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness." Rom. i. 26, 27, they "burned in their lust one towards another," not in a natural way, but in that which was against nature, men with men and women with women. To this lust idolatry is compared, and called fornication, because idolaters are as insatiable in their way, as men and women in the lusts of the flesh. Hos. ii. 5, "I will go after my lovers," I will have more idols and more idolatrous practices, Ephraim was not satisfied with what she had; so Jerusalem had the Egyptian, Assyrian, and Chaldean gods, and they did not quench, but increase, her thirst after more still. Thus it is with any lust whatsoever, if you give way to it, it grows strong, insatiable, like water breaking over the banks, and will not be stopped, like fire getting strength, and cannot be quenched; it is wisdom therefore to deal with our lusts betimes, to keep them in, under, yea, to crucify and mortify them.

Some interpreters understand the fornication and whoredom committed with the Egyptians, Assyrians, and Chaldeans, in ver. 26, 28, 29, to be meant of those sinful leagues the Jews made with them, Isa. xx. 5, 6; xxx. 1—3; 2 Kings xviii. 21, 24; Isa. xxxi. 1; 2 Kings xvi. 7, 8; 2 Chron. xxviii. 16. They had little cause to confederate with any of the nations, especially the Egyptians, who had kept them under hard bondage many years, drowned their children, were the grossest idolaters under heaven, and pursued them to the Red sea, to bring them back to their tasks of brick, clay, and straw, or to destroy them: and God had forbid them to seek help from the nations: and therefore, Jer. ii. 18, "What hast thou to do in the way of Egypt, to drink the water of Sihor? or what hast thou to do in the way of Assyria, to drink the waters of the river?" What hast thou to do to treat and covenant with, or to fetch help from them, to drink of Nilus and Euphrates, those muddy rivers, and forsake the fountain of living waters, the Lord God of Israel? Ver. 19, "Thine own wickedness shall correct thee," &c. thou shalt fall by them, and suffer. It was a wicked thing, an evil and bitter thing, a forsaking of God, and casting him off, who had taken the protection of that land and people to himself in a peculiar manner.

It is questioned whether a nation or prince may covenant and confederate with them that are of a false religion; it should seem to be negative, because here the Jews' confederating with the Egyptians and Assyrians is called fornication, whoredom; and God was twice wroth with Jehoshaphat for entering into league with the kings of Israel, who had set up false worship; once for joining with Ahab, 2 Chron. xix. 2. and after for joining with Ahaziah, 2 Chron. xx. 36, 37. But notwithstanding these instances, it is not unlawful for those of the true religion to make leagues and covenants with foreigners that are of another religion. Abraham was in confederacy with Esheel and Aner, who were Amorites, Gen. xiv. 13, with Abimelech, chap. xxi. 27; Jacob with Laban, Gen. xxxi. 44, 45; Solomon with Hiram, 1 Kings v. 12; Joshua with the Gibeonites, Josh. ix. 15. If they were unlawful, these men must all lie under censure. Those leagues that are for defence against violence of wicked men, for preservation of peace, without prejudice to the true religion, tending to the propagation of it, they are warrantable. But when distrust of divine assistance, covetousness, compliance with idolaters, unjust war with and oppression of others, and hazard of corrupting the worship of God, are the grounds and ends of making leagues with them, they are unlawful. The Jews distrusted God, and sought to Egypt and Assyria for help, complied with idolaters, corrupted the pure worship of God thereby: therefore their leagues were unlawful. As for that of Jehoshaphat with Ahab and Ahaziah, besides his compliance and covetousness, there was a special consideration in it, viz. that they being revolters from God, (for the ten tribes fell from the true God, and set up the calves,) he should join in covenant with them; he helped Ahab in his war against Ramoth-gilead, which the prophet Micah had told them they should not prosper in; there being a law against revolters, Deut. xiii. 13—15.

Howbeit leagues be lawful with others, yet they are dangerous, and should cautiously be made.

Ver. 30. How weak is thine heart, saith the Lord God, seeing thou doest all these things, the work of an imperious whorish woman.

This verse is another effect of this woman's wickedness, and that is, weakness of heart; set out,

I. By way of admiration: "How weak," &c.

II. By way of comparison, viz. of an imperious whorish woman; she doth those things which enfeeble her heart, enervate her spirits, and thou doest the like, thy heart must therefore be weak.

"Weak," Hebrew חַלְשָׁה The word anah signifies a thing which hath no virtue, power, efficacy in it. Jer. xv. 9, "She that hath borne seven languisheth; she hath given up the ghost;" it is the same word; she was so without strength that her soul was ready to leave her. It notes not any weakness, but extreme weakness, and therefore sometimes it is put for a thing withered or dried up: Isa. xxiv. 7, "The vine languisheth," it was withered and dried up; so Joel i. 10, 12; Nah. i. 4; Lam. ii. 8. Pradus saith, the word signifieth, cut off, destroyed, corrupted, perverse, and makes the sense thus, How perverse, depraved, and corrupt is thy heart, when thou doest such things as declare that thou hast not only banished the fear of God from thy heart, but also all modesty from thy face! Jerom. What shall I do to thy heart? She was unstable, desired society with the gods of other nations; she could not contain, but used all means to accomplish her wicked desires.

"Imperious," Hebrew אִמְרָאָה a woman that hath a domineering spirit; from אָמַר to domineer and exercise lordliness over others, to usurp authority. Septuagint παρρησιαζομένης, of one that is at liberty, that hath no husband, but runs up and down according to her own lust and will. The Vulgate is, wanton, impudent; when ^{Pro ax idem quod petas.} the mask of modesty and bridle of continency are laid aside, and a bold forwardness to filthiness is manifested, when a woman doth not only expect and wait for her lovers, but desires, invites, and constrains them to satisfy her lusts, and will have no nay. Such a shameless, saucy, imperious whore was she in Prov. vii. who, ver. 21, caused the young man to yield; so here Jerusalem was like a queen of whores, daring and doing any thing.

"The work." What is that work?

1. To slight and leave her husband, or parents, friends, if she have no husband; so did this woman, Jer. ii. 13; Ezek. vi. 9.

2. To seek out, invite, follow, fetch in others, and to communicate herself to them; so did this woman, Ezek. xxiii. 16, 17, she sent to the Chaldeans and Babylonians, and they "came to her into the bed of love."

3. To waste her husband's estate; so here, Thou hast taken my gold and silver, made images, set mine oil, &c.

4. To neglect, deal harshly with the children of her husband; so here, Thou hast taken the sons and daughters thou didst bear unto me, and hast sacrificed them unto idols.

5. To excuse, clear, and justify herself: Prov. xxx. 29, "The adulterous woman eateth, wipeth her mouth, and saith, I have done no evil:" so this Jewish woman; Jer. ii. 23, "How canst thou say, I am not polluted, I have not gone after Baalim?" ver. 29, "Wherefore will ye plead with me? ye all have transgressed against me."

6. To be excessive in feasting and filthiness: Prov. vii. 18, "Come, let us take our fill of love;" 2 Pet. ii. 13, 14, they feast and have eyes full of adultery; so here, ver. 15, "Thou pouredst out thy fornications on every one that passeth by;" ver. 29, she multiplied her fornications in Canaan and Chaldea.

Obs. I. That sin, especially whoredom and idolatry, do effeminate and enfeeble the hearts of people. Hos. iv. 11, whoredom is one of the things which takes away the heart, that is, the reason, understanding, judgment, so that a man becomes unstable, weak, and foolish. Corporal whoredom subjects men to the wild and insatiable lusts of the flesh; spiritual, to an idol, which is the work of man's hands; and what folly is this! Such sins weaken men's credit, consciences, hearts, and spirits. Adultery is the destruction of the soul, it wounds; Prov. vii. 26, "She hath cast down many wounded," and the more wound the more weakness. Delilah weakened Samson's hands and heart, and wounded him deeply. Gen. xlix. 4, Reuben, unstable as water, he went up to his father's bed. Prov. x. 29, "The way of the Lord is strength."

Obs. 2. Adulterers and idolaters are imperious. The Jewish state was guilty of those sins, and is compared here to an imperious whorish woman. All lusts are masterly and domineering. James iv. 1, "Whence come wars and fightings among you? come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members?" The word for lusts is ἡδοναί, pleasures, they are pleasing things, and must be pleased; they must have the heads, hearts, and hands of men to do them service, else they will make war in you; if they cannot win consent, they will force it, they are imperious things. Ver. 12, "There is one law-giver, who is able to save and to destroy; who art thou that judgest another?" Here he shows the imperiousness of men's lusts, when they are rigid and censorious; they sit in judgment upon others, they thrust themselves into the throne of God, they take his prerogative upon them, and will be judges of the law, save and destroy at their pleasure. Psal. xii. 4, "With our tongue will we prevail; our lips are our own: who is Lord over us?" Their lusts were so imperious, they lorded it in their hearts and tongues. Exod. xv. 9, what said Pharaoh? "I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil; my lust shall be satisfied upon them; I will draw my sword, my hand shall destroy them." Pharaoh was a great king, yet his lusts were above him. 2 Pet. ii. 14, "Having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease from sin;" their fleshly lusts commanded their hearts and eyes, and carried them with greediness to uncleanness. So for idolaters, Jer. xlv. 16, 17, "As for the word that thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken unto thee. But we will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth, to burn incense unto the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink offerings unto her, as we have done, we, and our fathers, our kings, and our princes, in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem."

Obs. 3. Imperiousness argues weakness. "How weak is thine heart, seeing thou doest the work of an imperious whorish woman." The more weak the more imperious, and the more imperious the more evidence of weakness. Prov. xxix. 8, "Scornful men:" the Hebrew is, men of derision and scorn; the Septuagint, men without law, that are imperious, and make their wills and lusts their laws, they "bring a city into a snare," or set it on fire, which shows their weakness: "but wise men turn away wrath," which shows their strength. When men are hasty, violent, and imperious, they exalt folly, Prov. xiv. 29, and proclaim their weakness. The apostle saith, that women are the weaker vessels, 1 Pet. iii. 7, and being weak they are prone to be imperious; which Paul observing, gave out that rule, 1 Tim. ii. 12, "I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man." Many think that greatness and strength of spirit consists in imperiousness and stoutness; but it is otherwise, they who are the weakest are most imperious.

Ver. 31—34. In that thou buildest thine eminent place in the head of every way, and makest thine high place in every street; and hast not been as an harlot, in that thou scornest hire; but as a wife that committeth adultery, which taketh strangers instead of her husband! They give gifts to all whores: but thou givest thy gifts to all thy lovers, and hirest them, that they may come unto thee on every side for thy whoredom. And the contrary is in thee from other women in thy whoredoms, whereas none followeth thee to commit whoredoms: and in that thou givest a reward, and no reward is given unto thee, therefore thou art contrary.

These verses contain a repetition of what this whorish woman did, and also a further amplification and aggravation of her lewd and abominable practices.

The repetition is in ver. 31, which falls in with what you have in ver. 24, and beginning of ver. 25.

The amplification and aggravation of her lewd ways is set out,

I. From a dissimilitude, in the end of ver. 31; "And hast not been as an harlot, in that thou scornest hire;" other harlots took hire, but thou wouldst none.

II. From a similitude, in ver. 32; "as a wife," &c.: for a wife that bath a husband to take in strangers, that is great lewdness.

III. From the contrariety of her practice to other whores, ver. 33, 34. They had those who followed them, gave gifts unto them which they received; but Jerusalem had no followers, no gifts, but she gave gifts, and hired men to come unto her.

"Eminent place." Hebrew is גב which signifies whatsoever excels or appears above another; here it is an "eminent place," (a place raised above others,) it is so rendered in ver. 24. Septuagint translates it, ὕψωμα πορνικόν, there and here; πορνείον is a stews or house of fornication. These eminent places were for commission of those sins which drowned them in perdition. From this word גב it is more than probable that that word Gabbatha, in John xix. 13, doth proceed: the words are thus, "Pilate sat down in the judgment seat in a place that is called the Pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha," which signifies βήμα, locum Grot. in loc. excelsam, a lofty place, such a place as judges sit in to pronounce sentence against malefactors; it is called the Pavement, or λιθόστρωτον, because it was covered or paved with stones.

"Thine high place." Hebrew רמה רמה is a place higher than others, from רמה to lift up; they made altars and places for false worship higher than all the rest. Septuagint renders it by two words; in ver. 24, by ἱεθεμα, prostibulum, a place where they did prostitute themselves to whoredom, or to idolatry, or both; in this verse they render it βάσις, it being the foundation of the false worship offered up there.

"In that thou scornest hire." Hebrew is לקים from קים or קיים which bath a double, yea, contrary signification; sometimes it signifies to praise, and so the Jews used it in their prayers; Psal. lxxviii. 5, what there is סלי extol, the Targum Pagn. in Thesauro. bath it, קיימי praise him who rides upon the heavens; hence Shindler renders the word לקים to be praised: and so the meaning must be, that Jerusalem was not like other whores, who did praise and magnify the gifts and hire they had from their lovers, that so they might draw more; no, she did not value or praise them. Sometimes, and most frequently, the word signifies to mock, despise, dispraise, and vilify; in this verse it is generally taken by interpreters so: the meaning then Meretrices a mercendo. is, that Jerusalem was so far from praising, that she scorned hire; not in policy, to increase the hire, as common harlots do, who make advantage of their sin; but in way of opposition, to manifest that she was not for profit, but for pleasure; not for the purses of her lovers, but for their persons.

"Hire." Hebrew מזון hire that belongs to a whore, from מנה, to hire, and properly it is, to give Pagn in Thes. a reward. Deut. xxiii. 18, Ethnan zonah, the hire of a whore: so Hos. ix. 1; Micah i. 7. Tamar, when Judah came in to her, would have hire, "What wilt thou give me," Gen. xxxviii. 16; and Hos. ii. 12, "These are my rewards that my lovers have given me."

Ver. 32. "As a wife that commits adultery." Hebrew is אשה זונה a woman an adulteress. A single woman that plays the harlot doth very ill; but a woman that hath a husband, to leave him, and receive others in his stead, that is exceeding grievous; especially when she wants nothing, hath abundance, and her husband is most loving, meek, delightful, wise, and faithful: this was the case of Jerusalem, yet she plays the adulteress, takes in strangers in the room of her husband.

Ver. 33. "They give gifts, but thou givest gifts." The word for gift is תנה and תתן which is merces meretricia, from תנה which signifies to separate, and remove a thing as unclean. The hire of a whore was not to be brought into the temple, because gotten from that which was sinful, and therefore was to be kept, and separated from the temple, Deut. xxiii. 18.

Ver. 34. "The contrary is in thee." Hebrew is הפך oppositum, from הפך to invert, change, alter. This Jewish woman did invert, change, and alter the way that other women went in, for satisfaction of their lusts, in the abuse of their bodies: they had gifts given them, but this woman gave gifts; they were hired, this woman did hire. Septuagint is ἀσεπιπύρον, perversum quid; Vulgate, contra consuetudinem mulierum. "Whereas none followeth thee to commit whoredoms:" the Hebrew runs thus, after thee it hath not whored. So the Septuagint, μητις οὐκ ἀσεπιπέσασαι, they have not gone a whoring after thee. The meaning is, Jerusalem sought after the idol gods of other nations, was at expenses, gave gifts to them to get and fetch in their idolatry; but no nation did so by them. Hos. viii. 9, "Ephraim hath hired lovers." 2 Kings xvi. 8, 10, Ahaz sent the silver and gold of the temple to the king of Assyria, and was at no small charges for the altar of Damascus. Isa. lvii. 7, "Upon a lofty and high mountain hast thou set thy bed;" that is, altars, chapels, temples, which he calls beds, because there they committed spiritual adultery: and they were upon the eminent and high places, because the more might see them, turn in, and worship their idol gods, and so commit folly with them; for it follows, "even thither wentest thou up to offer sacrifice." And in ver.

² KINGS XVI 4. "Thou hast discovered thyself to another than me, and art gone up; thou hast enlarged thy bed, and made thee a covenant with them; thou lovedst their bed when thou savest it." The sense is this, the Jewish state was not content with God alone to be her husband, but like a whorish wife left her husband, and went up to the bed of others: and not only so, but enlarged her own bed, made more room, built more altars, high places, and temples, for the gods of other nations to be taken in to her, and made covenant with them to worship and honour them; and whatever bed, that is, altar, temple, idol, she saw among the nations, she fell in love with it, and must have it, cost it never so dear.

Obs. 1. That the worship of God is not to be modelled according to the wisdom of states or churches. This Jewish state and church built high places, altars, fetched in the worship and ways of it, which other nations had, were at much cost and charges to accomplish the same, and thought herein they did acceptable service; but God was provoked sorely; and the more expensive any state or church is that way, the more they exasperate the Lord against them; as a husband, the more prodigal his wife is to entertain others, the more offended is he. God is a jealous God, and it is dangerous to alter in, or add any thing to his worship, especially to corrupt it with idolatrous inventions. Ahaz did so; but what saith the text, 2 Chron. xxviii. 22, "This is that king Ahaz" that spent the gold and silver found in the house of the Lord, that was affected with and brought into the temple the altar of Damascus, that sacrificed to the gods of Damascus, that shut up the doors of the temple, that made altars in every corner of Jerusalem, that burned incense to other gods, and provoked the Lord to anger, ver. 25.

Obs. 2. A pure virgin church may in process of time become whorish, adulterous, idolatrous, and worse than others. This church of Jerusalem was at first chaste, holy, glorious; but when she had left the Lord, and those ways and rules of worship which he had given her, then she became a strumpet, a common whore, did worse, yea, contrary to all whores; she sought for and hired lovers to come in to her. If churches would therefore not degenerate, let them "hold fast the form of wholesome words," 2 Tim. i. 13. Let them be content with the way of worship which God hath prescribed them, and lead such lives as may not blemish the religion they profess; and then they shall never provoke God to complain of them.

Ver. 35—38. Wherefore, O harlot, hear the word of the Lord: thus saith the Lord God; Because thy filthiness was poured out, and thy nakedness discovered through thy whoredoms with thy lovers, and with all the idols of thy abominations, and by the blood of thy children, which thou didst give unto them; behold, therefore I will gather all thy lovers, with whom thou hast taken pleasure, and all them that thou hast loved, with all them that thou hast hated; I will even gather them round about against thee, and will discover thy nakedness unto them, that they may see all thy nakedness. And I will judge thee, as women that break wedlock and shed blood are judged; and I will give thee blood in fury and jealousy.

Here begins the fifth general part of the chapter, viz. a commination of grievous judgments, together with the aggravation of their sins, the cause of those judgments, and this extends to ver. 60.

In the words from ver. 35, to ver. 44, you shall find,

1. An introduction to the judgments threatened, ver. 35.

II. A specification of the causes moving God to bring such judgments upon this woman, namely, her idolatry, murdering of her children, and forgetfulness of her low condition, and God's dealing with her in it, ver. 36, 43.

III. The enumeration of the judgments threatened; which are,

1. The gathering together of her lovers and enemies, and setting them against her, ver. 37.
 2. Publication of her nakedness and shame, ver. 37.
 3. Condemnation to die, ver. 38.
 4. Rendition into the hands of her enemies, ver. 39.
 5. Plundering, spoiling, and laying all waste, ver. 39.
 6. Death itself by stones and swords, ver. 40.
 7. Burning their houses, ver. 41.
- IV. The consequents hereupon, which are two:
1. The cessation of this woman from her idolatries, ver. 41, last part of it.
 2. Cessation of God's anger, ver. 42.

Ver. 35. "O harlot." The Lord calls her not wife, but harlot; he would not vouchsafe her that name, it carries honour in it; but gives her a disgraceful name, "harlot," the Jewish nation he calls a harlot.

Obs. 1. Sin brings reproachful names and terms upon people and persons; Isa. i. 10, "Rulers of Sodom, and people of Gomorrah." It causes God to fasten disgracing titles and epithets upon them: Deut. xxxii. 5, "A perverse and crooked generation;" Isa. lvii. 4, "Children of transgression, a seed of falsehood;" Jer. vi. 28, "Grievous revolters, corrupters;" chap. ii. 21, "Degenerate plants;" Isa. x. 6, "An hypocritical nation;" chap. lxxv. 2, "A rebellious people;" chap. xvi. 3, "Outcasts;" chap. i. 4, "A people laden with iniquities;" Jer. vi. 30, "Reprobate silver;" Isa. lvii. 3, "Sons of the sorceress, the seed of the adulterer and the whore;" chap. xxi. 2, Treacherous dealers.

Formerly this people were very dear to God, and he gave them honourable titles: Exod. iv. 22, "Israel my son, my first born;" chap. xix. 6, "A kingdom of priests, an holy nation;" Deut. xxxii. 9, "The Lord's portion, and inheritance;" Psal. cxxxv. 4, "His peculiar treasure;" Isa. v. 7, "The Lord's vineyard;" Jer. ii. 21, "A noble vine;" Isa. iv. 5, "The glory;" chap. vi. 13, "The holy seed;" Jer. xlii. 13, "The virgin of Israel."

It is true you see what Solomon gave out long since; "Righteousness exalts a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people."

Obs. 2. From these words, "hear the word of the Lord;" They who will not hear the word of the Lord for their consolation, shall hear it for their condemnation. God had often spoken to this metaphorical woman, this Jewish state, by his prophets, and she would not hear: Isa. lxxv. 2, "I have spread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people;" God had sent prophets at the third, sixth, and ninth hour, and yet she would not hear: he had dealt like a loving husband by her, invited her to repent and turn, as you may read, Jer. iii. and iv. and in divers other places promised mercy and forgiveness, and nothing would prevail; here therefore the Lord speaks like a just judge, giving out a sentence of death; "Hear the word of the Lord, O harlot:" seeing that thou wouldst not hearken to my loving entreaties, gracious invitations, wholesome counsels, the word of grace and mercy: now thou must hear and hearken to my threats, my words of wrath, of condemnation, and destruction.

Ver. 36. "Thy filthiness." Hebrew נִשְׁתַּחֲוֶה which Montanus renders, thy money; showing how lavish and profuse she was in spending her estate to hire lovers to come in unto her.

"Thy lovers." These lovers were the Assyrians, Babylonians, Chaldeans: Ezek. xxiii. 12, "She doted upon the Assyrians;" ver. 16, "She sent messengers unto them into Chaldea;" ver. 17, "The Babylonians came to her into the bed of love;" and in ver. 19—21, you shall find that the Egyptians were her lovers. So Jer. ii. 36; and iii. 1, "Thou hast played the harlot with many lovers;" she had lovers out of most nations.

Ver. 37. "Thou hast taken pleasure." Hebrew יָדַעְתְּ dulceisti, or jocondata es: the word יָדַע is of the largest signification amongst the Hebrew words; the primitive and chief signification of it is, to mingle: and so here notes that pleasure, delight, which comes upon mixture: this woman mingled herself with strangers, all comers, especially Assyrians, Babylonians, Egyptians, in bodily and spiritual whoredoms. God would gather together her lovers, and those she hated, having fallen off from her loves, and they should be against her, and besiege her.

Obs. 1. When God threatens, or brings judgments upon a people, it is upon considerable and just grounds. "Because thy filthiness was poured out," &c.: "Behold, therefore I will," &c.

Obs. 2. That when God by the sin of man is provoked, he will set his friends and lovers against him. The Assyrians and Chaldeans had been Jerusalem's lovers; but because she sinned against God, he turns them to be her enemies: Lam. i. 2, "All her friends have dealt treacherously with her, they are become her enemies." Ahithophel was a choice friend and counsellor to David; and because he offended the Lord in the matter of Uriah and Bathsheba, therefore he turned the heart and head of Ahithophel against David, which went very near to him, and troubled his heart sorely: he speaks of it twice in the Psalms: once in Psal. xli. 9, "Mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, who did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me," i. e. hath dealt injuriously with me, and like a brute creature, kicked at his master who feeds him; or thus, he hath looked at me as one down, and lift up his heel to tread me under. Again he mentions it in Psal. lv. 12—14. Vashti refused to come at the king's call, and God set Ahasuerus and all the princes against her, Esth. i. So Obad. 7, "The men that were at peace with thee have deceived thee; they that eat thy bread have laid a wound under thee." See Matt. x. 36.

Obs. 3. God in his infinite wisdom and justice doth oftentimes make them instruments of his wrath, to punish us, with whom we have sinned. The Jews had pleased themselves in making covenants with the Assyrians, Chaldeans, and Egyptians, in fetching in their gods, forms of worship, in following their manners and practices; and what saith the Lord here? "I will even gather them round about against thee," they shall besiege thee, and lay thee waste. Rev. xvii. 16, "The ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast," and so did sin by the counsel and power of the beast; those horns, being so many kings, "shall hate the whore" with whom they had committed fornication: ver. 2, "and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire." As they had sinned with her, so God would use them to execute his wrath upon her. Martia, the concubine of Commodus the emperor, having espied her own name in a catalogue of chief persons, intended to be made away by him, consulting with others, she poisoned him in a cup of wine.

Obs. 4. In what kind people sin, in that kind sometimes God doth punish them. Jerusalem sinned in discovering her nakedness to others, ver. 35; and God doth punish her by discovering her nakedness to others, ver. 37, "I will discover thy nakedness unto them, that they may see all thy nakedness." Lam. i. 8, "All that honoured her despise her, because they have seen her nakedness." She committed sin in a shameful manner, and God would punish her shamefully. Adoni-bezek cut off thumbs and toes of seventy kings, and his thumbs and toes were cut off, Judg. i. 6, 7. Agag he had slain many by the sword, and himself suffers by it; 1 Sam. xv. 33, "As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women." Obad. 15, "As thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee." Rev. xiii. 10, "He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity; he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword." Isa. xxxiii. 1, "When thou shalt cease to spoil, thou shalt be spoiled; and when thou shalt make an end to deal treacherously, they shall deal treacherously with thee."

This discovering of nakedness which was the punishment here threatened, was a grievous judgment, and should have caused this woman to have given over her whoredom and filthiness, as once it did the Milesian virgins their murders; for they being troubled and perplexed in their minds, were set upon it to make away themselves, no tears or entreaties of friends could prevail with them; many did make away themselves, notwithstanding all means used to prevent the same: at the last, one amongst them, wiser than the rest, made a law, that if they did make away themselves, they should be drawn naked through the market; this so prevailed with them, that they gave over that wretched practice; the thought of the shame of having their nakedness discovered, kept them from that bloody sin of self-murder.

Ver. 38. "I will judge thee as women that break wedlock." The Hebrew is, I will judge thee with the judgment of adulteresses. What the judgments of whores and adulteresses were, we shall find in Lev. xx. 10; Dent. xxii. 22. The adulterer and adulteress were both to be put to death, but what death is not specified. The Jews had four capital punishments or deaths.

1. Chenek, strangling; and this was the death they affirm that the adulterer and the adulteress were to suffer; for where the kind of death is not expressed, their rule is, it is strangling, because that is the easiest.

2. Is hereg, beheading.

3. Sheriphah, burning; so Judah judged Tamar, when she had played the whore, to be burnt, Gen. xxxviii. 24. The priest's daughter, if she played the whore, was to be burnt with fire, Lev. xxi. 9.

4. Sehilah, stoning; so the Pharisees tell Christ, John viii. 5, adulteresses should be stoned by the law of Moses; yet there is no express law in him for it, only those who committed sins of like nature were to be stoned, as Dent. xxii. 24; and it is evident from our prophet, who, in ver. 40, tells this adulteress woman she shall be stoned with stones.

The manner of stoning was, to lead the offender bound to a place without the gates, where one of the witnesses struck him behind upon the loins; then they took a very great and heavy stone and threw upon him; and if that did not kill him, then all the people threw stones upon him, according to Dent. xvii. 7. This death was counted the most grievous.

Among the Romans, adulteresses were beheaded by the Julian law. Tacitus relates, that among the old Germans, the adulteress being found out by her husband, she was stripped and set naked in the sight of her kindred; and afterward, her hair being cut off, her husband with rods drove her through the street so. Diodorus Siculus tells that the Egyptians did cut off and maim the nostrils of the adulteress, that so they might deform the face which had pleased; and the adulterer had a thousand stripes, with which he was almost beaten to death. Fid. Pet. Mart. upon 2 Sam. xii.

"And shed blood." Their judgment was to have their blood shed, Gen. ix. 6; Exod. xxi. 12. No satisfaction was to be taken for the life of a murderer, but he was absolutely to be put to death, Num. xxxv. 31, 32; whatever friends he could make, whatever ransom he could give, whatever quality he were of, these were not to be respected, but die he must. So here, Jerusalem had shed blood, even the blood of her infants, ver. 20, 21; and now her blood should be shed, she should be thrust through with swords, ver. 40.

"In fury and jealousy." Hebrew runs thus, I will give thee the blood of wrath and jealousy. The words show how severely the Lord will deal with her, even like a husband whose rage and jealousy is up, and nothing will pacify it but the blood of the adulterer and adulteress; Prov. vi. 34, "Jealousy is the rage of a man;" nothing exasperates him more than the falsehood of his wife; and so nothing exasperates God more than the falsehood and whoredom of his spouse. Psal. lxxix. 5, "Shall thy jealousy burn like fire?" yea, it burns like the hottest fire, and cannot be quenched. His fury and jealousy consumed Jerusalem before they ceased. These words agree with those in chap. v. 11, "Mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have any pity." God would give her blood without any mercy; no sacrifices, no tears, no prayers, no means should prevail with him.

Obs. 1. Adultery and bloodshed are sins which the Lord punisheth severely. He propounds the punishment of these sins to be the pattern of Jerusalem's punishment; I will judge thee with the judgments of adulteresses, and of those that shed blood. Their punishments are exemplary. Jer. xxix. 22, Zedekiah and Ahab are said to be roasted in the fire, which was a terrible judgment, a grievous torture; and what was the reason of it? "Because they have committed villany in Israel, and have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives." Mal. iii. 5, "I will be a swift witness against the adulterers;" that is so provoking a sin, and deserves such heavy judgment, that God will make haste to punish them. Heb. xiii. 4, "Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge;" that is, punish with emphatical punishments. Sodom's great sin was uncleanness, and God judged and punished them with fire and brimstone from heaven. The forcing of the Levite's concubine cost the blood of sixty thousand men, Judg. xx.; there uncleanness and murder were punished with severity. Psal. ix. 12, God "makes inquisition for blood;" he is so stirred at this sin, that he will up, search out the authors, contrivers, and commissioners of this scarlet sin; he will avenge for blood. Hos. i. 4, "I will avenge the blood of Jezreel upon the house of Jehu." Ezek. xxxv. 5, 6, because mount Seir had shed blood, "Therefore, as I live, saith the Lord God, I will prepare thee unto blood, and blood shall pursue thee. See how the Spirit of the Lord is up, he swears to it, that he would prepare them unto blood, and that blood should pursue them. Chap. xxxvi. 18, "I poured my fury upon them for the blood that they had shed upon the land, and for their idols wherewith they had polluted it.

Obs. 2. Note, there is difference of sin and punishments. Women that break wedlock and shed blood, their sin more grievously than others do, and their punishments are greater than others; their sins are scarlet and crying sins, abominations; and their punishments are answerable; they are judged otherwise than liars, slanderers, drunkards, thieves, &c. God punisheth some sins without blood; but these sins, adultery, murder, idolatry, with blood, and not only with blood, but with blood in fury and jealousy.

Ver. 39—43. And I will also give thee into their hand, and they shall throw down thine eminent place, and shall break down thy high places; they shall strip thee also of thy clothes, and shall take thy fair jewels, and leave thee naked and bare. They shall also bring up a company against thee, and they shall stone thee with stones, and thrust thee through with their swords. And they shall burn thine houses with fire, and execute judgments upon thee in the sight of many women: and I will cause thee to cease from playing the harlot, and thou also shalt give no hire any more. So will I make my fury toward thee to rest, and my jealousy shall depart from thee, and I will be quiet, and will be no more angry. Because thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth, but hast fretted me in all these things; behold, therefore I also will recompense thy way upon thine head, saith the Lord God: and thou shalt not commit this lewdness above all thine abominations.

The analysis of these words is before; I shall open some things in them, and then give you the observation.

Ver. 39. "Give thee into their hand." This phrase is sometimes expressed by delivering into the hand, 2 Chron. xxv. 20; sometimes by leaving in the hand, Neh. ix. 28; sometimes by giving up, 1 Kings xiv. 16. States, churches, cities, families, persons, come not into the hands of wicked men without the providence of God. They may all say as Christ did to Pilate, John xix. 11, "Thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above." So neither Chaldeans, Babylonians, nor any other could have had power against Jerusalem and the Jews, unless it had been given them from above. Psal. cvi. 41, "He gave them into the hand of the heathen;" he brought the heathen upon them, and delivered them up into their hands; see Jer. xx. 5; xxi. 7. Till God puts a people out of his own hands, and into the hands of others, they cannot hurt them.

"They shall throw down." Hebrew הרסו from הרס to pull down, subvert, demolish.

"Eminent place." Not the temple, or city, but some eminent place they had built, as it is in ver. 24 and 31, and with it all other high places where they had been idolatrous.

Obs. God's hatred is so great against idolatry and idolaters, that he will not endure the places where they have used idolatrous worship; the places where they sinned must be destroyed, broken, utterly razed and ruined. 2 Kings xviii. 4, Hezekiah is commended for four things; and the first is, for removing the high places; then for breaking the images, cutting down the groves, and breaking the brazen serpent. Amos v. 5, "Bethel shall come to nought." What was the matter that that place should come to nought? 1 Kings xii. 28, 29, Jeroboam had set up a golden calf there, made an altar, and brought the people to worship God in a false way, and in a false place. God's anger was so kindled against this, that presently he sent a prophet to cry against that altar in that place, and to threaten the ruin of it, chap. xiii. 2, 3; and in 2 Kings xxiii. 15, it is made good; Josiah breaks down the altar, the high place, stamps it to powder, and burns them and the grove to ashes; and afterwards God laid waste both city and temple, because they had filled them with altars and idols. They would not hear the prophets crying out against those things; God raised up means, &c. And so here against altars, crosses, &c.

"They shall strip thee also of thy clothes, and shall take thy fair jewels." Hebrew for fair jewels is, thy instruments of ornament, or vessels of glory; those things that did adorn, make thee glorious, as in ver. 17.

Obs. When we abuse the mercies of God, we give him cause to take them away. They decked their high places with their garments, ver. 16; they made images of their jewels, ver. 17, &c.; here God threatens to take away both the one and the other; he would give them into their hands who should rob them of their fair jewels, and strip them of all their clothes. Isa. xlii. 22, "This is a people robbed and spoiled." Ver. 24, 25, "Who gave Jacob for a spoil, and Israel to the robbers? did not the Lord, he against whom we have sinned? for they would not walk in his ways, neither were they obedient unto his law. Therefore he hath poured out upon him the fury of his anger," &c. Ofttimes you are robbed of your clothes and goods, because you have abused them to the dishonour of God.

"And leave thee naked and bare." Before, in ver. 8, it is said, that God covered her nakedness; he found her naked, and now he would leave her naked and bare.

Obs. When God hath showed much kindness to a people, and they have been ungrateful, he will reduce them to their former condition. He found this woman naked, and he would leave her naked. God did much for Ephraim, yet Ephraim was ungrateful, forgot God, went out to other lovers; and what saith the Lord? Hos. ii. 2, 3, "Plead with your mother: let her put away her whoredoms and adulteries, lest I strip her naked, and set her as in the day when she was born." God was upon the doing of it, and therefore put her upon a course of preventing it; but because she took not his counsel, in ver. 9, he saith, "I will return, and take away my corn in the time thereof, and my wine in the season thereof, and will recover my wool and my flax given to cover her nakedness," and then her condition would be as at the first. God had spread his skirt over this Jewish woman, clothed her with embroidered silk and fine linen, decked her with choice ornaments and jewels, put his comeliness upon her; but she abused all his bounty and love, proved ungrateful and whorish, and therefore he would put her into her first condition, strip her of all, and leave her naked: she came out of captivity, she should go into captivity; she was cast out, and now she should be cast out again; she was poor, beggarly, and had nothing, and should be made so again.

Ver. 40, 41. From the 40th verse, and beginning of the 41st.

Note, when God intends the ruin of a people, he will bring sore judgments upon them one after another, till they be consumed. "They shall bring up a company against thee." What company this was you may see, Hab. i. 6, "The Chaldeans, that hasty and bitter nation:" and what should they do?

1. They should stone her like a harlot, with stones; great stones should they sling in, which should kill many of her children.

2. They should thrust her through with swords; they should cut in pieces her sons and daughters.

3. They should burn her houses with fire. Each of these judgments was very dreadful. What sad apprehensions had the Jews, when they saw the Chaldeans before the walls and gates of Jerusalem, and called to mind what the prophets had foretold they should do to Jerusalem! In 2 Kings xxv. 8—10; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 17—20; Jer. lii. 12—14, &c. you may find these judgments executed, when the army came up; and that in Micah made good, where it is said, that for the judges', priests', and prophets' sins, Zion should be ploughed as a field, Jerusalem become as heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest.

"In the sight of many women." By "women" I find expositors understand other nations, cities, and towns, and it suits well with the matter in hand; for here the Jewish state and nation is treated of under the notion of a woman: and therefore other nations and cities may be meant by the name of women, and so some interpret the word "women" in Isa. xxxii. 9, 11. The Jews say, these women were kingdoms and provinces: yet some think by "women" here are to be understood the women in the Chaldean army, which were of divers nations. Maldonate thinks here is an allusion to the punishment of adulteresses, who were to be stoned or burned in the sight of other women, for the greater shaming of the sufferers, and for admonition of the spectators, that they beholding adulteresses brought to so shameful and dreadful an end, might learn to be faithful both to God and man; and such was the case here with Jerusalem, she was punished as a whore in the sight of nations, for the learning of the nations. When the Lord punisheth a nation with sharp and heavy judgments, other nations should take notice thereof, and be instructed thereby to take heed of those sins that nation is judged for; else God is provoked more, and the judgment will be heavier. Jer. iii. 8, "I put Israel away, and gave her a bill of divorce; yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also." God looked that Judah should have learned by Israel's judgments to have taken heed of such sins she was guilty of; but she did not, and that exasperated him the more. So Edom, Obad. 10—14, because she made no good use of Jerusalem's sufferings, but was glad at it: therefore the Lord threatens her, that shame should cover her, and that she should be cut off for ever.

Ver. 41. "And I will cause thee to cease from playing the harlot, and thou also shalt give no hire any more." These words afford us this observation.

Obs. That by great judgments God causeth a people to give over their great sins, to cease and rest from them. God would take away Jerusalem's wealth, her jewels, her gold and silver, her change of raiment: diminish her portion, cast her into captivity; and then she should not have to give to lovers, or spend upon idols, then she should not have leisure nor opportunity to seek or serve them. Isa. xxvii. 9, the fruit of God's judgments is to take away sin; by these sore judgments God cured them of their idolatry for ever.

Thus God hath dealt of late with Germany, Ireland, England; by his sore judgments he hath taken away the matter and occasion of sinning from thousands, they have not wherewithal to sin as formerly.

Poverty, sickness, imprisonment, loss of places, make men cease from sin, though their hearts be still the same.

Ver. 42. In this verse is mentioned God's fury, jealousy, anger. Fury is the excess of anger: Isa. xlii. 25, "He hath poured upon him the fury of his anger:" when anger is boiled up to the height, that is the fury of it. Jealousy is hot displeasure, Psal. lxxix. 5; 1 Cor. x. 22. Anger is a desire of punishing that which hath wronged us. Now these are given to God as becomes God; he is not as man, to become furious, jealous, angry, with perturbation, distemper, and imperfection: but he doth such acts as do entitle him to fury, jealousy, anger, yet without any change or weakness.

"So will I make my fury toward thee to rest." Some read it, I will make my fury to rest upon thee; and so it may refer to the whole time of their being in Babylon. Chap. v. 13, the Lord said, he would cause his fury to rest upon them. It is very dreadful when God's fury is out against a people, but it is most dreadful when his fury rests upon them. Hebrew is thus, I will make to rest my fury towards thee, that is, I will be furious no longer; when I have judged thee as adulteresses and murderers are judged, when I have stoned thee with stones, thrust thee through with swords, and burned thee with fire, there will be no more materials for my fury to feed upon, it shall rest and end. Septuagint, ἐπαρήσω τὸν θυμὸν μου ἐπὶ σέ, I will dismiss mine anger upon thee, there shall be an end of it; this sense the words following do evince; "and my jealousy shall depart from thee." &c.

Obs. 1. When God's people sin against him, especially in ways of false worship and idolatry, they disquiet and trouble him, they cause his anger to kindle, his jealousy to burn, and provoke him to fury. A man, when his wife goes to other men, is enraged, so divided and perplexed, that he knows not what to do. The Septuagint reads it, for I will be no more angry: I will not be solicitous any longer; I will not be divided and distracted with cares and thoughts about thee. The heart and spirit of God was much troubled about his people when they left him, and went out to sinful practices. Hos. vi. 4, "O Ephraim, what shall I do unto thee?" O Judah, what shall I do unto thee?" God was even at a stand with them. Hos. xi. 8, "How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? how shall I deliver thee, Israel?" He was divided in himself; he considered this people were his wife, and so his mercy led him to spare them; yet a whorish wife, and so his anger, jealousy, and fury provoked him to punish them. Hence saith he, Ezek. vi. 9, "I am broken with their whorish heart, which hath departed from me." Jer. v. 7, "How shall I pardon thee for this? thy children have forsaken me." God had a fire and strife within himself: for he would have pardoned Jerusalem, but he knew not how to accomplish it without prejudice to his justice, truth, and glory.

Obs. 2. When judgments are thoroughly executed upon a whorish and backsliding people, then God is at rest, and satisfied. When this woman, this Jewish state, fell into the hands of enemies, was plundered and spoiled, had her children stoned and thrust through, her city burnt to ashes, and all her glory laid in the dust; then God caused his fury to rest, his jealousy to depart, then he was quiet, and angry no more. Before judgment be thoroughly executed, God is troubled, and restless; but when it is done, he is pacified, comforted, as it is Ezek. v. 13. Before Jonah had judgment passed upon him, there was a great wind, and a mighty tempest in the sea, the Lord's anger, jealousy, and fury were up, and let out: but when Jonah was sent, and cast into the sea, justice done, it is said the sea ceased from her raging, it was so presently; and what was the reason of it? The Lord first ceased from his fury, he was pacified, and manifested it by stilling of the seas. The mariners did it not so much out of love to justice, as love to save themselves: they saw all like to perish, a common shipwreck at hand, Jonah was detected to be the delinquent; and so to secure themselves, they threw him over, and had their desire. When justice was executed upon Saul's bloody house for slaying the Gibeonites, the three years' famine ceased: till that was done, there was nothing but fury, jealousy, and anger from God; but being done, the Lord caused his displeasure to cease, and was at rest, 2 Sam. xxi. God would bring the Assyrians upon the Jews; and what then? "the indignation shall cease, and mine anger in their destruction." Isa. x. 25: when I have laid all waste, and destroyed them, then shall I be angry, jealous, furious no more. Esth. vii. 10, "They hanged Haman on the gallows, and then was the king's wrath pacified."

Ver. 43. "Because thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth, but hast fretted me in all these things." This verse contains two of the principal causes moving God to bring such dreadful judgments upon Jerusalem.

1. Her forgetfulness of her youth.

2. Her fretting of God by her lewd courses.

Of her not remembering the days of her youth was spoken in ver. 22.

"Hast fretted me." Hebrew נָחַרְתָּ מֵיָגוּר from נָחַר to move, stir up, provoke. Septuagint, ἔστησας, hast grieved me.

"This lewdness." Hebrew, אִתְּהוֹמָה. Something I said of zimmah in ver. 27; it signifies properly a premeditated evil or villany, which is shameful and abominable, as Lev. xviii. 17, the uncovering a woman's nakedness and her daughter's, it is zimmah, a wickedness; chap. xix. 29, whoredom is zimmah. Now what is this lewdness here spoken of? Piscator saith, it was the murdering of her children, ver. 20, 21, upon which act God sets an emphasis, "Is this of thy whoredoms a small matter?" Some read the words otherwise, thus; Neither hast thou made a thought upon all thine abominations, taking zimmah in a good sense, viz. thou hast never thought of thy wicked ways and abominations to repent thee of them, but gone on securely.

Obs. 1. The Lord expects we should be mindful of our primitive condition and estate he began with us in. "Thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth?" so in ver. 22. Psal. lxxviii. 42, "They remembered not his hand, nor the day when he delivered them from the enemy:" their poverty and bondage in Egypt they thought not of, and what God did for them in bringing them out of that land, and drowning their enemies in the Red sea; ver. 11, "They forgot his works, and his wonders he had showed them." It is often put upon them to mind their former estate. Deut. xv. 15, "Thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in the land of Egypt, and the Lord thy God redeemed thee." So chap. xvi. 12; xxiv. 18, 22. And that they might not forget their first condition, the Lord appointed the offering of the first-fruits, at which they were to profess before the Lord, that a Syrian ready to perish was their father, who went down into Egypt, sojourned there with a few, and became a nation, great, mighty, and populous. It is the way to keep us humble, make us thankful, and to walk answerably.

Obs. 2. When man is advanced, he is apt to forget the low, poor, and miserable condition he was in. "Thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth." There was a time, saith God, wherein thou wast inconsiderable: when Jacob served Laban, was in Egypt with seventy souls, how mean, how low was thy condition! but this thou hast forgotten. When Pharaoh's butler was brought out of prison, he forgot the prison, and Joseph who had been his companion there, Gen. xl. Saul was taken from seeking his father's asses, and set upon the throne of Israel, where he quickly forgot God and himself. When men or states are become great oaks and mountains, they forget what little acorns and hillocks once they were; when arrived to the height of cedars, they are loth to look what rushes once they were, growing in the mire. Deut. viii. 12—14, beware lest when thou art full, hast built goodly houses, and art multiplied with herds, flocks, silver, gold, &c. thine heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord, and the condition he brought thee out of, viz. Egypt, the house of bondage: and notwithstanding this caution, Israel did forget her first condition, and God's first and great kindness unto her, Deut. xxxii. 15; Hos. xiii. 6.

Obs. 3. When men forget the low, poor, and miserable estate they were once in, and God's loving-kindness and bounty in exalting them to a rich, high, or honourable condition, they exasperate the Lord greatly. "Because thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth, but hast fretted me." This sin frets and provokes God, that he should pity a nation when it is low, at the door of death, brink of despair, do great things for it, and then prove ungrateful and forgetful! Thus was it with the Jewish state. God did much for Jeroboam, preserved his life, called him out of Egypt, bestowed ten tribes upon him; and he forgot what he had been, what he was at the present through God's mercy, and therefore see what a message the Lord sent him; 1 Kings xiv. 7—10, "Go, tell Jeroboam, Forasmuch as I exalted thee from among the people," he was as low as others, "and made thee prince over my people Israel, and rent the kingdom away from the house of David, and gave it to thee; and yet thou hast not been as David, but hast done evil above all that were before thee, &c., therefore I will bring evil upon the house of Jeroboam," &c. God would utterly destroy it. So chap. xvi. 2, concerning Baasha; "Forasmuch as I exalted thee out of the dust, and made thee prince over my people Israel; and thou hast walked in the ways of Jeroboam, and made my people sin to provoke me to anger; behold, I will take away thy posterity, and make thy house like Jeroboam's," dogs and fowls shall devour those that die thereof. This was the sin which made the Lord to be as a lion, as a leopard, and as a bear bereaved of whelps, unto Ephraim, Hos. xiii. 6—8.

Obs. 4. God will deal with sinners according to their ways. "I will recompense thy way upon thine head;" if thy ways be sinful, thou shalt have the fruit and reward of them upon thy head. Prov. x. 6, "Blessings are upon the head of the just." God recompenseth to the just according to their way, and to the wicked according to their way. If men shed blood, God will return that blood upon their heads. Joab he slew Abner and Amasa, and see what is recorded, 1 Kings ii. 31—34; Benaiah falls upon him, and slays him at the horns of the altar; so their blood, which is called "his blood," returned upon his own head: this blood rested upon Joab's head all David's reign, 2 Sam. iii. 29. and was recompensed upon his head in Solomon's days: whatever a man's ways be, God will return them upon his head. Hence saith Solomon to Shimei, "Thou knowest all the wickedness which thine heart is privy to, that thou didst to David my father: therefore the Lord shall return thy wickedness upon thine own head," 1 Kings ii. 44. Solomon knew God was so just and exact in this point, that he prays God would distinguish between the wicked and the just, by recompensing their ways upon their heads, 2 Chron. vi. 23; and so Nehemiah, "Turn their reproach upon their own head," chap. iv. 4. Edria had slain Edmund the king for ^{Canadd. Rem.} the sake of Chute, who after put him ^{p. 552.} to death, saying, His blood be upon thy head.

Obs. 5. Some sins God eyes, and brands, and beats off from above others. "Thou shalt not commit this lewdness above all thine abominations;" the slaying of her children; God took special notice of that wickedness, set a mark upon it, "this lewdness," and tells her that he would so punish her, as that she should not commit it any more. Deut. xvii. 5, the serving other gods is called there the committing "that wicked thing." When the Jews married the daughters of the nations, God was much displeased at it, and brands it with "this trespass," Ezra ix. 2, "this thing," ver. 3. So their sin in Jer. xlv. 4, is called an "abominable thing;" "Do not this abominable thing that I hate." Jer. ii. 10, 11, "Consider diligently, and see if there be such a thing: hath a nation changed their gods?" &c. So Judg. xix. 30, "There was no such deed done nor seen." Deut. xiii. 11, they should stone the seducer, and then all Israel should fear.

Ver. 44—46. Behold, every one that useth proverbs shall use this proverb against thee, saying, As is the mother, so is her daughter. Thou art thy mother's daughter, that lotheth her husband and her children; and thou art the sister of thy sisters, which lothed their husbands and their children: your mother was an Hittite, and your father an Amorite. And thine elder sister is Samaria, she and her daughters that dwell at thy left hand: and thy younger sister, that dwelleth at thy right hand, is Sodom and her daughters.

In these words you have,

1. Another judgment threatened, which is common reproach, ver. 44.

11. A comparison of her for wickedness with her parents and sisters; her parents were the Hittites and Amorites, ver. 45, her sisters Samaria and Sodom, ver. 46.

"That useth proverbs." Upon chap. xii. ver. 22. I opened the word proverb, and showed you the nature and meaning of it. All nations have their proverbs, which they much account of. Every one that can jeer and scoff shall disgrace thee.

"As is the mother, so is her daughter." The mother is lewd, idolatrous, bloody, rebellious, and the daughter is such; look therefore what befell the mother for her sins, what punishment was inflicted upon her, the like shall befall and be inflicted upon thee. Proverbs suitable unto this are these: "Ill birds lay ill eggs;" "Roses grow not out of shrimps;" "From the wicked proceeds wickedness;" "Ill seed, ill corn;" "By the children you may know the parents." Now these are not always true; but sometimes it falls out, that wicked parents have good children, and good parents wicked ones. Noah had a Ham, Isaac an Esau, David an Absalom, Hezekiah a Manasseh: and so contrary, Abaz that wicked king had good Hezekiah for his son; Amon, Josiah; Lam-mech, Noah.

Ver. 45. "Thou art thy mother's daughter," &c. We must inquire who was her mother, and wherein the likeness between them lieth.

Her mother is said here to be an Hittite, and her father an Amorite, vid. supra in ver. 3. She was so unlike to Sarah and Abraham, out of whose loins by nature she came, and so like to the Amorites and Hittites, as that the Lord calls her the daughter of them.

Her sisters were, 1. Samaria: that was the chief city of the ten tribes, the royal city; it was upon a hill, built by Omri king of Israel, who bought the hill of one Shemer, so from him called it Samaria, 1 Kings xvi. 24, afterwards called Sebaste.

2. Sodom: this was the city where Lot dwelt, given so to filthiness and uncleanness, that one sin of that kind hath its name from hence; and was one of the five cities, yea the chief, that God consumed with fire and brimstone from heaven.

The daughters of these were the lesser cities, towns, and villages which depended on them for protection, counsel, maintenance, and were under the government of their kings.

The likeness between them is set out in these words, "which lothed their husbands and their children." The word ly signifieth, to cast out, to loathe with contempt, and spitting at. These nations forsook Jehovah the true God, who was their Creator, Lawgiver, and Benefactor, and served idols, murdered their children, and walked in all lewd ways, not regarding the light or laws of nature: see Dent. xviii.

9, 10, they made their children pass through the fire. They were so unclean, idolatrous, and profane, that the land vomited them out, Lev. xviii. 25, spewed out those nations, ver. 28.

Jerusalem was come to that pass, that she rejected God her Husband, and loathed his worship, violated all bonds of religion and humanity, sacrificing her children unto devils. She was exceeding like the Sodomites; Dent. xxxii. 32, "Their vine is the vine of Sodom;" Isa. i. 10, "Rulers of Sodom, and people of Gomorrah." The Jews were transformed into their natures, dispositions, customs. Samaria was at her left hand, that was the north part, and Sodom at her right hand, which was the south part.

It seems strange that Samaria here is called the elder sister, whereas Sodom was many years before her, and destroyed ere she had her birth. The original therefore consulted, and rightly interpreted, will help us in this; for the word for elder is הגדולה magna, thy sister, the great Samaria; הקטנה parva, or minor, thy sister, the little one in comparison of thee; or Samaria had more power, cities, and citizens belonging to her than Sodom had.

Obs. 1. When states, churches, cities, persons dishonour God by sinful and lewd ways, God will dishonour them, and set men to work that are skilful at and exercised in jeering, scoffing, and reviling, to disgrace them. This woman had brought up an ill report upon the land of Canaan and God of Israel; and therefore saith God, Those who are used to proverbs, yea, every one that is skilled that way, "shall use this proverb against thee, As is the mother, so is her daughter;" thy mother was a whore, an idolatress, a murderess, and so art thou. Jer. xxiv. 9, "I will deliver them to be removed into all kingdoms of the earth for their hurt, to be a reproach and a proverb, a taunt and a curse, in all places whither I shall drive them." 2 Chron. vii. 20, if they dishonoured God, he tells them he would pull them up by the roots out of the land, make them and their temple a proverb and by-word among all nations. Jer. xxiii. 40, "I will bring an everlasting reproach upon you, and a perpetual shame, which shall not be forgotten." Ezek. xxii. 5, "Those that be near, and those that be far, shall mock thee, which art infamous." Lam. v. 1, "Consider, and behold our reproach:" their princes, prophets, people, city, temple, land, were all reproached. Job xii. 21, "He poureth contempt upon princes."

Obs. 2. Children usually tread in the steps of their parents. "As is the mother, so is her daughter," of the same disposition, spirit, practice. Drunken parents have drunken children; unclean, covetous, proud, froward, contentious parents have had such children, they have learned of them to be and do as they were and did. 1 Kings xxii. 52. Ahaziah did evil in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the way of his father, who was Ahab, and of his mother, who was Jezebel. Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat, it is said, "he walked in the way of the kings of Israel, for the daughter of Ahab was his wife," 2 Kings viii. 18. Take heed whom you marry, for the children will resemble the parent; and take heed what you do before your children, for your examples have great influence into them; they are strong traces to draw your children into your ways, especially if bad.

Obs. 3. Cities, states, churches, people, are their children in the account of the Scripture, whose manners, ways, and examples they follow. Jerusalem took up the ways, worship, manners, and customs of the nations and cities near to her; hence her mother is said to be an Hittite, her father an Amorite, her sisters Sodom and Samaria; according to their ways she fashioned herself. Those that follow the faith and steps of Abraham, are the children of Abraham, Gal. iii. 7; Rom. iv. 16. Those who are peaceable, and labour to make peace, they are children of God, Matt. v. 9. Men that mind the world are provident, frugal, and saving; they following courses of the world, are called children of the world, Luke xvi. 8. So those that do wickedly, they are the children of the devil, 1 John iii. 8, 10, 12; Matt. xiii. 38. "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do," John viii. 44; they did imitate him; and here Jerusalem declared her sin as Sodom, Isa. iii. 9, and as the nations, and therefore is styled the daughter and sister of them.

Obs. 4. Those who are in near relation to God, and think well of themselves, may be hateful to him, and as bad as any. Jerusalem was in covenant with God, his spouse, the Jews his peculiar people, and thought themselves more holy, righteous, in a better condition than any of all the nations; and thought the prophets wronged them when they compared them to the nations, to Sodom and Samaria; but what saith the Lord here? "Thy mother is an Hittite, and thy father an Amorite;" whatever thou thinkest of thyself, that thou art of the stock of Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Jacob, a true Israelite; yet it is otherwise, thou art of the seed of the nations, and worst of the nations, viz. the Hittites and Amorites; thou thinkest thou art holy, but art profane; that thou art dear to me above them, but thou art as odious and hateful as any.

The priests were near the Lord, stood before him, offered sacrifice, thought themselves to be somebodies. Mal. ii. 1, 2, they thought they did glorify God, and should be glorified by God; but, ver. 8, 9, "Ye are departed out of the way; ye have caused many to stumble at the law; ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi, saith the Lord of hosts. Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people, according as ye have not kept my ways, but have been partial in the law." Matt. vii. 22, 23, "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?" You see they stood in near relation to God, pretend they did all in his name, thought themselves in a good condition, looked for some good and great reward; but what follows? "Then will I profess, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity." There is vast difference between man's and God's judgment.

Ver. 47—50. Yet hast thou not walked after their ways, nor done after their abominations; but, as if that were a very little thing, thou wast corrupted more than they in all thy ways. As I live, saith the Lord God, Sodom thy sister hath not done, she nor her daughters, as thou hast done, thou and thy daughters. Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy. And they were haughty, and committed abomination before me: therefore I took them away as I saw good.

In these verses, and the two next, the comparison is still carried on between Jerusalem, the nations, Sodom, and Samaria, wherein the sins of Jerusalem are declared to exceed their sins.

1. This is laid down in general, ver. 47.

II. In special, in ver. 48, where the sin of Jerusalem is not only asserted to exceed the sin of Sodom, but ratified with an oath, "As I live," &c.

Now concerning Sodom you have,

1. The catalogue of her sins, ver. 49, and beginning of ver. 50.

2. God's dealing with the Sodomites for their sins, ver. 50, "Therefore I took them away," &c.

Ver. 47. "Yet hast thou not walked after their ways," &c. Before he had said, "As is the mother, so is her daughter," and, "Thou art thy mother's daughter, that loatheth her husband," &c. and here, "Yet hast thou not walked after their ways, nor done after their abominations;" how do these cohere?

The prophet doth not acquit Jerusalem for imitation of the Hittites, Amorites, Sodomites, and Samaritans, he grants she had done that; but by a figure called epanorthosis, correcting himself, he carries it on further, Thou hast not walked after their ways, nor done, &c. but thou hast gone beyond them all in thy wickedness. Thou thoughtest to be like unto them a small matter, a very little thing, this contented not thee, but thou hast done more abominably than they, and corrupted thyself more deeply.

Some take the words thus, Thou hast not walked after their ways, nor done after their abominations for a little and a little time; and so refer the time to the reign of Uzzekiah, wherein Jerusalem having sinned greatly in Ahaz's days, after Samaria was taken by Sennacherib, repented, and abstained from idolatry; but presently after, in Manasseh's days, returned more fully to it, and exceeded Samaria, Sodom, and the nations; which hints this unto us, that state repentance and reformation are seldom sound or long-lived; it is fear of authority, not hatred of sin, conscience of duty, love of truth, virtue, justice, holiness, that set them on work; and when the bridle of fear is lax or removed, they return to their old ways, which cannot be otherwise, having their old natures.

Obs. 1. The Lord takes notice of the ways of a people even from their beginning to their end. This observation arises from ver. 45, 46, and this verse, laid together; there the Lord said their mother is an Hittite, their father an Amorite, their sisters, Samaria and Sodom; and here, "Thou wast corrupted more than they in all thy ways;" I have observed thee from the first to the last, from thy birth to thy end. God eyes the infancy, youth, growth, and age of a state, and what the ways of it are; whose tenets, manners, customs, and ways it follows. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 26, of Ahaz, a wicked king, it is said, "The rest of his acts and of all his ways, first and last, behold they are written," &c.; there was nothing escaped the eye of Heaven. Jer. xxxii. 19, "Thine eyes are open upon all the ways of the sons of men;" even from the beginning to the end it is so. God doth not chop in like man, and observe here a passage and there a passage; but he is a constant observer of every thing, of every way; Prov. v. 21, "The ways of man are before the eyes of the Lord, and he pondereth all his goings."

Obs. 2. Sinful republics and states think it no great matter to be like their neighbour nations and cities in wickedness and villainies. The Lord told this commonwealth of Israel that she was like the Canaanites, Hittites, Amorites, Sodomites, Samaritans, in idolatry, uncleanness, and other sins; and she thought this no great matter, a little, yea a very little thing. Ver. 20, "Is this of thy whoredom a small matter?" she thought it so. 1 Kings xvi. 31, Ahab's walking in the sins of Jeroboam was reputed but a light thing; and Jehu saith of him, that he "served Baal a little," 2 Kings x. 18; yet, 1 Kings

xxi. 25, 26, "There was none like unto Ahab, which did sell himself to work wickedness in the sight of the Lord; and he did very abominably in following idols, according to all things as did the Amorites:" though he equalled the Amorites, yet this was a little thing. Ezek. viii. 17, "Is it a light thing to the house of Judah that they commit the abominations which they commit here?" they thought it so. Take any nation, even this nation, is it not like other nations for injustice, oppression, drunkenness, whoredom, swearing, falsehood, excess, fantasticalness, &c.? yet we say it is no great matter; sin, the greatest evil, is made nothing.

Obs. 3. Those God hath done much for, taken very near to himself, may degenerate so far, as to prove worse than others, than any. Thou whom I exalted from so low an estate, and took into my special favour, even thou hast corrupted thyself more than they in all thy ways. So notorious was Jerusalem in her abominable practices, that, ver. 27, the Philistines were ashamed of her low ways. Chap. v. 7, she multiplied sin more than the nations round about her. How desperately did this state sin in the days of Ahaz and Mana-seh! is not Jerusalem called the filthy, polluted, oppressing city? Zeph. iii. 1. And is it not thus at this day? are not many christian states, which God hath done great things for, and blessed with choice means and mercies, are they not worse than heathenish nations? those sins found amongst us which are unknown to them? I fear Rome, Madrid, Paris, &c. with Italy, Spain, France, England, will be found to exceed the heathens.

Ver. 48. "As I live." Hebrew is אֲנִי חַיִּים I living, or I live. Septuagint, ὡς ἐγὼ ζῶ , I do live. When God swears, most usually it is by his Philologia Sacra, l. 5 Tractat. 2. p. 540. life; and Glassius tells us, that by the life of God is meant his eternal glory, majesty, power, and truth; so that all these are impawned in God's oath, and he had rather not be, than be found false and unfaithful. Of this oath of God was spoken in chap. v. 1. The Lord swears thus,

1. To let them know he did not hyperbolize: he had been in an allegory before, and spoken allegorically of this Jewish state; and that they might not think he did now allegorize or hyperbolize, he swears plainly that their sins were greater than Sodom's. This assertion was both odious and incredible; to take away both the odiousness and incredibility thereof, he binds it with an oath, and the greatest oath of all, by his life, by himself, as sure as he was God, as he lived, it was so.

2. To affect them, as with the greatness of their sins, so with the heinousness of their punishments; if they exceeded Sodom in sinning, surely they deserved more dreadful punishments and judgments than Sodom.

Obs. 1. That those who profess God, and are in common account God's people, may come to such a height of sinning, as exceeds belief. Who would, who could have thought that any city or nation should have been worse than Sodom; especially that Jerusalem, the holy city, the habitation of the Lord, and that the Jews, who were the Lord's first-born, his treasure and peculiar people, that these should outgo Sodom and the Sodomites in wickedness? It is matter of wonder; what! a Jew worse than a Sodomite? who can believe it; Jerusalem and her daughters worse than Sodom and her daughters?

Obs. 2. What great cities are, usually such are the lesser cities. The bordering towns and villages, which are called daughters, they imitate their mothers, learn their ways, receive their opinions, follow their counsels, practices, manners. Samaria and her daughters were alike, Sodom and her daughters, ver. 45, 46; and so Jerusalem and her daughters. Great cities have great influence into the adjacent towns and villages; if they be idolatrous, unjust, bitter, contentions, proud, excessive in diet and apparel, so will all about them be: Rev. xvii. 3. "Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth."

Obs. 3. To assure us of the truth of things, God is pleased to take an oath. The Lord knew this would not easily be entertained, that Jerusalem and her daughters were greater sinners than Sodom and her daughters; to put it out of doubt, therefore, the Lord swears a great oath, "As I live" it is so, as sure as I am the living God it is truth: so God swears, Ezek. xxxiii. 11, to assure man. O happy they in whose cause God swears! but great their misery who do not believe a God giving such confirmation!

Ver. 49. Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy.

In this 49th verse he tells us the sins of Sodom; and the first was,

"Pride." Hebrew גָּבַח pride, or lifting up of the mind against a precept, or an inordinate desire of excellency in any thing. It is a tumour and swelling of the mind, and lieth principally in contemning and slighting of God himself, his word, promises, threats, ordinances, worship, works: in self-esteem and admiration; in a swelling for gifts and graces, successfulness of endeavours, for birth, breeding, wealth, honour, place, relation, and in despising of others.

It is either inward in the heart, Hab. ii. 4; Prov. xvi. 5; or outward, and that,

1. In the speech: Dan. iv. 30, "Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom?" So chap. iii. 15, "Who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hands?" Here was a tongue that spake proud things, Psal. xii. 3; 1 Sam. ii. 3.

2. In the looks: Prov. vi. 17, "A proud look." Psal. cxxxi. 1, "My heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty."

3. In the habit of the body: so Herod's pride appeared, Acts xii. 21; so the rich man's, Luke xvi. 19.

4. In the gesture and carriage of the body: Isa. iii. 16, "The daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched forth necks, wanton eyes, mincing and tinkling with their feet."

5. In actions: Isa. iii. 5, "The child shall behave himself proudly against the ancient." Neh. ix. 16, 29, "They and our fathers dealt proudly, and hearkened not to thy commandments." So in feasting and furniture, and in tenacity of opinions.

The evil and sinfulness of this sin will appear in several particulars:

(1.) It blinds and hardens the mind and heart of man. Dan. v. 20, Nebuchadnezzar's mind was "hardened in pride," and reason so blinded, that he became brutish.

(2.) Pride sets a man in opposition to God. Other sins are aversions from God, this sin is coming against God; in other sins they fly from God, in this sin they fly upon God. James iv. 6, "God resisteth the proud." Men do not resist till they are set upon: when thieves set upon travellers, if able they make resistance; when the devil sets upon a christian with his temptations, then he resists: so here, proud men set upon God, his truths, his church, and then he resists them. Psal. lxxiii. 9, "They set their mouth against the heavens."

(3.) It is the root of other sins. Absalom's pride carried him on to rebellion and other vile practices: it was Athaliah's pride which put her upon slaying the seed royal, that so she might reign, 2 Kings xi. Prov. xiii. 10, "Only by pride cometh contention:" all the contention in families, in suits of law, in trading, in the pulpits, in the wars, have sprung from pride. Ezek. vii. 10, "Pride hath budded." It is the nurse of covetousness: it was Haman's pride put him upon seeking and plotting the death of all the Jews in Babylon.

(4.) It is that makes us like the devil. 1 Tim. iii. 6, "Not a novice, lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil." God therefore sets Satan upon his servants sometimes to prevent this evil. 2 Cor. xii. 7, God had rather see him buffeted by Satan, than swell with pride.

(5.) It is that sin which makes God abhor man. Prov. xvi. 5, "Every one that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord." "A proud look" is one of the things God hates, Prov. vi. 16, 17. His hatred is great against proud men; Psal. exix. 21, Proud men are cursed. God delights in nothing more than his glory, and he hates nothing more than pride, which would rob him of his glory.

(6.) It is a grand enemy to the spiritual good and salvation of man. The gospel saith, He that thinks he knows any thing, knows nothing as he ought to know: a proud man thinks he knows something, if not all things. The gospel saith, A man must become a fool, that he may be wise, deny himself, and go to Christ for wisdom, righteousness, redemption, grace, salvation; but a proud heart will not, he will be his own alpha and omega, the efficient and end of his own actions: "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life," John v. 40. Therefore it is twice upon record, Jam. iv. 6; 1 Pet. v. 5, "God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble." Full stomachs loathe the honey-comb. Matt. xi. 25, Christ thanketh his Father that he had hid the things of the gospel from the wise and prudent, from the proud men of the world.

(7.) It brings sad calamities and sore judgments upon men and places. Pride hath blasted many a man's parts. Prov. xv. 25, "The Lord will destroy the house of the proud." Haman, Abithophel, were proud persons, and God destroyed them and their houses. Herod was presently smitten, and eaten of worms, Acts xii. 23. Isa. ii. 12-17, "The day of the Lord of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud, and he shall be brought low; upon all the cedars of Lebanon, all the oaks of Bashan, high mountains and hills; upon every high tower and fenced wall; upon all the ships of Tarshish, and all pleasant pictures: and the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low." The Jews would not have Christ to reign over them, and they were quickly after scattered and destroyed, and Jerusalem laid waste. So Moab, Ammon, Assyria, and Nineveh are threatened for their pride, Zeph. ii.; Tyre, Ezek. xxviii. And here pride was the first firebrand that set Sodom on fire.

Pride must down; as Christ said of the buildings of the temple, not a stone shall be left upon a stone. 2 Sam. xxii. 28, God's eyes are upon the haughty that he may bring them down; he watches his opportunities to do it. He commands us not to be proud; Prov. iii. 7, "Be not wise in thine own eyes." Godly men have prayed against it: Psal. xxxvi. 11, "Let not the foot of pride come against me." Psal. xix. 12, 13, "Cleanse me from secret faults; keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins." Paul beat down his body lest he should be a reprobate; let us beat down our spirits, lest, &c.

We have spoken of the first sin, viz. pride, now we are come to the second,

"Fulness of bread." Hebrew, שבעות לחם.

"Bread" is sometimes used in holy language for all things needful for the support and comfort of this life, as Luke xi. 3, "Give us this day our daily bread:" sometimes only for what is edible and potable, and tends to the nourishment of man; 2 Sam. ix. 7, saith David to Mephibosheth, "Thou shalt eat bread at my table continually." In this sense we are to take it here, for whatsoever men eat or drink.

"Fulness." Sodom was seated in a most fertile place, in the plain of Jordan, which was "well watered every where, even as the garden of the Lord, like the land of Egypt," Gen. xiii. 10. It was like Paradise and Egypt for fruitfulness; one was watered with Euphrates, the other with Nilus, and this plain with Jordan, so that it abounded with grass, corn, cattle, fruit, and other pleasant things. It was so fertile, that Luther thinks it was the place where Paradise was: that is disputable, but we are sure it was the place Lot chose for its fruitfulness when he left his brother Abraham; and it yielded such abundance, that the Sodomites had great plenty. You may demand whether a plentiful estate in corn, cattle, oil, wine, fowl, fish, fruit, &c. be sinful, because fulness of bread, which imports these things, is reckoned up among Sodom's iniquities? The answer is, that plentifulness of such things is not evil, but a great blessing, and men thereby have occasion to do much good. The sin lieth not in having much meat and drink, but in their excessive eating and drinking; they were intemperate, feeding and drinking so fully, that instead of satisfying, they surfeited nature: and here by fulness of bread is meant both gluttony and drunkenness; of both which something is to be spoken.

Gluttony may seem to be no sin upon a double ground:

1. From Matt. xv. 11, "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth the man," saith Christ; "that goeth into the belly, and is cast out into the draught," ver. 17: that which is a sin doth defile, but nothing eaten doth so. It is true, that the meat eaten in its own nature doth not defile: the meats forbidden to the Jews, if any did eat of them at any time, the defilement lay not simply in the meat, but in the breach of the command, viz. eating forbidden meat; for if any meat did defile, ratione sui, of its own substance and nature, it were never lawful to eat that meat; but so doth no meat: it is therefore not the meat, but the inordinate desire of meat, which makes the sin, and causeth the defilement.

2. In whatsoever is sinful, the first motion thereunto is so; the first motion to anger, to idolatry, to uncleanness is so: but now the principle or first motion to eating is hunger, and it is most certain that is not sinful; for then the more hungry any should be, the greater sinner he is.

For clearing this doubt you must know there is a double desire of meat: one natural, simply tending to the nourishment of the creature, and subservient to the vegetative power of the soul; and this rises not from any apprehension of this or that in the meat, but only from want in nature; and this is truly called hunger, and so far from being sinful, that the greater it is, the more it excuseth liberal eating. There is another desire of meat, which is sensitive, and tendeth to the pleasing of the sensual part in man, and falls under the power of reason; which the other did not, being merely natural; and here the first motion or desire of meat beyond what sound reason approves, is inordinate in the sensitive appetite, and so sinful.

Gluttony, the nature of it lies in an inordinate desire of eating, and men are said to gluttonize several ways:

1. When they desire delicacies, not being content with those meats Providence hath given in. Numb. xi. 4, the children of Israel being discontented with their manna, "fell a lusting, and said, Who shall give us flesh to eat?" Manna, heavenly and angelical food, was loathed by them, and now they must have some dainties to satisfy their lusts.

2. When they are too solicitous about the cooking and dressing of their meats. 1 Sam. ii. 15, "The priest's servant came, and said to the man that sacrificed, Give flesh to roast for the priest; for he will not have sodden flesh of thee, but raw." Why would he have raw flesh? that he might prepare and cook it more curiously.

3. When men eat unseasonably, and prevent the due time. Eccles. x. 16, 17, there is a woe threatened when "princes eat in the morning," and the land is blessed when they "eat in due season." The morning is the time for them to do justice, Jer. xxi. 12, "Execute judgment in the morning;" and now for them to eat, drink, feast, when neither nature requires it nor the time is seasonable for it, this argues an inordinate desire of the creature. Isa. v. 11, "Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning to follow strong drink!" that is not a time to have the heart and thoughts taken up about pots and dishes. So when men are set upon eating, before there be a half or full concoction of what they took in before.

4. When men are greedy of meat, not observing such a decorum as becomes men. Swine are greedy and hasty of their meat, and ravenous in eating, but it ill becomes men to be so. The schoolmen say this was Esau's sin, who slighting his birth-right, sold it for pottage, and greedily devoured it.

5. When men eat too much, exceeding in the quantity; and this is most properly gluttony; and this was Sodom's sin, "fulness of bread" and drink. Now too much is eaten and drunk.

(1.) When the health or strength of the party eating and drinking is impaired thereby. Some overcharge nature with surfeiting and drunkenness, Luke xxi. 34, and so bring sickness and weakness upon themselves. Hence, Eccles. x. 17, "Blessed is the land, when princes eat for strength, and not for drunkenness."

(2.) When made heavy and dull, so that the operations of body and mind are hindered thereby, and men unfitted for the duties of their callings in public or private. Prov. xxiii. 21, speaking of the drunkard and glutton, he presently mentions drowsiness; because too much eating and drinking makes drowsy, and unfits for all action.

(3.) When men sit much at meat and drink, and through custom or strength can bear away much; though no prejudice come to their health, though they be not retarded and dulled in the operations of body or mind; yet if men are given to eating and drinking, this falls within the compass of sin, and under the notion of gluttony and drunkenness. When a man is "given to covetousness," as Jer. vi. 13, he is a covetous man; when one is "given to pleasures," as Isa. xlvii. 8, he is a man of pleasure; so when one is given to eat and drink, he is a man of eating, a man of drinking, "a man given to appetite," Prov. xxiii. 2; a man that lives to eat, and doth not eat to live.

I shall next come to show you the evil of intemperate eating and drinking, I. As it respects God; 2. Others; 3. Themselves.

1. In respect of God; and so,

(1.) It makes men forget God and his laws: Hos. xiii. 6, "According to their pasture, so were they filled: they were filled, and their heart was exalted; therefore have they forgotten me." Prov. xxxi. 4, 5, drinking wine and strong drink will make men forget the law of God and man.

(2.) It is setting up another god, which is a notorious sin. Phil. iii. 19, "Whose god is their belly?" The Babylonians had Bel for their god, a god of brass; but these men make their bellies their god, a god of flesh; their thoughts, care, endeavours are more to please their bellies, their idol-god, than the true God; they do all things for the indulgence of appetite. Their end is delight in edibles and potables. They are ventricole, belly-gods, which love good liquor and good cheer. They serve their bellies, Rom. xvi. 18. The rabbies say, he is a glutton or belly-god that eats a pound of flesh, and drinks a quart of wine: we have many such. And do not those who drink healths upon their knees, sacrifice it to those they drink unto, and make gods of them?

(3.) They abuse the good creatures of God, which they should use for the honour and glory of his name; them they abuse to the maintenance, pleasing, and pampering of their lusts, which are bitter enemies to God and his truths, and ought to be mortified. 1 Cor. x. 31, "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." What glory hath the Lord, when men make their bellies barrels and pantries; so victual the camp, that they are unfit for motion, and must sleep?

(4.) It is sacrilegious, robbing God of his worship. You know we must honour God with all our hearts, mights, strength; for he is an infinite excellency, worthy of all: but when a man hath crammed himself with meats, is much liquored, how unfit is he to do any acts of worship! his head is heavy, his spirits dull, and God may have his carcass, but as for heart or spirit he hath none for him: Hos. iv. 11, "Wine and new wine take away the heart." Excess in meat and drink causeth defects in the worship of God; he may have bodily worship, lip-labour, sleepy performances; but as for spiritual worship, that is not to be had, though the Lord be a Spirit most holy, great, and glorious, and ought to be worshipped in spirit and truth.

2. As it respects others.

(1.) Those who are given to their bellies, they mind not the condition of the church or state, at least not so much as they should do; so they may have fullness of bread, they care not how it goes with others. Amos vi. 4, 6, "They eat the lambs out of the flock, and the calves out of the midst of the stall; they drink wine in bowls, and anoint themselves with the chief ointments; but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph." By Joseph is meant the ten tribes, which were greatly infested and afflicted by the Assyrians; but these men laid it not to heart, did not condole and sympathize with them; they poured not out prayers or tears for them; they minded their own bellies, not their miseries. So Isa. xxii. 12, 13, when God's hand was upon them, and he called to weeping and mourning, what did their gluttonous men? Slay oxen, kill sheep, eat flesh, drink wine; chap. v. 12, "They regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of his hands."

(2.) They wrong the poorer sort. Gluttons and drunkards are like caterpillars, locusts, canker, palmer-worms, which devour that which should maintain others. Did not men exceed so much in eating and drinking, there would be more plenty, more cheapness, more relief for the poor: who, had they what is superfluously and sinfully spent in eating and drinking, I believe we should see no beggars in our streets, nor hear any cry at our doors. Prov. xxx. 14, "There is a generation, whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw-teeth as knives, to devour the poor from off the earth, and the needy from among men:" such are the teeth and jaw-teeth of gluttons; they make bread, malt, and grapes dear.

(3.) They wrong the chastity of others. Who make more attempts, or commit fouler acts, than they that feed and drink most liberally? Fulness of bread breeds fulness of lusts: 2 Pet. ii. 13, 14, they rioted, feasted, and had eyes full of adultery, which could not cease from sinning. High diet is the mark of high lusts, and they the parents of heinous actions. Jer. v. 7, 8, "When I had fed them to the full:" God gave them abundance, and thereupon they pampered the flesh, and "then committed adultery, and assembled themselves by troops in the harlots' houses: they were as fed horses in the morning; every one neighed after his neighbour's wife." Intemperance begets incontinency; after rioting and drunkenness follow chambering and wantonness, Rom. xiii. 13. When Lot was filled with wine, then was he fit for incest, Gen. xix. 31—36; and the Sodomites, of whom our text speaks, were guilty of horrible uncleanness, as appears in that chapter, ver. 5, "Where are the men which came in to thee this night? bring them out unto us, that we may know them."

(4.) They give ill example, and draw others to their own practice, to intemperate eating and drinking, which is a great evil. 1 Pet. iv. 4, "They think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot:" there is a great propensity in men to follow others in eating and drinking excessively; they not only go, but run, to it, a little encouragement that way doth much. Prov. xxviii. 7, "He that is a companion of riotous men shameth his father;" therefore Solomon counselleth his son, chap. xxiii. 29, thus; "Be not among wine-bibbers; amongst riotous eaters of flesh:" he knew that their example, company, and cheer, were strong attractives. Hab. ii. 15, "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbour drink;" the Hebrew is, Woe to him that drinketh to his neighbour. It is not unlawful to drink to another but when it is done with an ill intent, to draw him to excess; and therefore it follows, "that putteth thy bottle to him, and maketh him drunken also." The word for bottle is קַמְרֵת which Montanus renders, venenum tuum, thy poison: it is spoken of Nebuchadnezzar and the Babylonians, who drew in neighbour princes, and others, to eating and drinking, and so poisoned them with gluttony and drunkenness, and spotted themselves with their sin and nakedness; men are poisoned in ill company.

(5.) This sin, fulness of bread, brings down heavy judgments upon places: Eccles. x. 16, "Woe to thee, O land, when thy king is a child, and thy princes eat in the morning!" The surfeiting of great ones brings woes and great judgments to kingdoms: Isa. v. 11, 12, there their intemperance is set down, feasting, drinking, and merry-making; and, ver. 13, behold the judgments, "therefore my people are gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge:" their gluttony and drunkenness made them sensual; "and their honourable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst." So Belshazzar, he feasts and revels with a thousand of his lords, and that night was he slain, and the kingdom was taken by Darius and the Medes, Dan. v.

3. As it respects themselves.

- (1.) The soul.
- (2.) The body.
- (3.) The whole man.
- (4.) Their estate.
- (5.) Their name.

(1.) The soul: and evils which intemperance causeth, are,

[1.] It clouds the understanding. Such fumes and vapours possess the brain from immoderate eating and drinking, as that men are altogether inept to discourse or judge of things: Prov. xxvii. 7, "The full soul loatheth an honey-comb," it judgeth amiss of it. Fulness of bread infatuates the understanding, blinds the mind, and dams up the spirits with mud: Isa. xxviii. 7, the priests and prophets were given to their appetites; and what then? "they err in vision, they stumble in judgment."

[2.] Disorders the affections; for when, through overmuch eating and drinking, the government of reason is laid aside, or asleep, the affections take their opportunity, and grow disorderly; then wanton lusts, thoughts, desires, and pleasures travel up and down the region of the soul, and peep out at the windows of the house, 2 Pet. ii. 13, 14.

[3.] It hinders the activity of gifts and graces in the soul. When a man is loaded with any burden, he cannot move nimbly; so when one is loaded with meat and drink, his soul cannot act lively, there is so much earth and mud about it, that the operations of it are greatly impeded. Gal. v. 21, the word there for revellings, is καρμῶν, eating together, and notes such eating as is a fruit of the flesh, an eating so much as the flesh craves, or can well bear, such eating as strengthens the flesh, the corrupt part in man, which opposes and hinders the spirit and activity of it. How poorly doth grace act in those who are full, and have pampered their bellies! Paul knew this, and therefore was very abstemious, temperate, and much in fasting, 2 Cor. vi. 5.

(2.) The body. Excess causeth sickness, and is destructive of health; the most diseases men have, do come from the abundance of humours which are in their bodies; and whence come these but from intemperance in eating and drinking? take men that are moderate, and sparing in diet, and they are seldom troubled with any diseases. Sobriety is the best nurse to health, and a greater enemy it finds not than intemperance. 1 Cor. xi. 21, 30, the Corinthians were faulty in their feasting and drinking: and what saith Paul? For this cause many are sick and weak. Hos. vii. 5, the princes made the king sick with bottles of wine. It weakens the body; concoction being hindered by fulness, crude humours are generated, and nourishment of the spirits by pure blood is letted.

(3.) The whole man.

[1.] By intemperance a man is brought into bondage unto the creatures, he is a slave to his appetite, and whatever pleases that: and this is a great evil, for man that hath dominion given him by God over all sublunaries, to become a servant to any of them. Paul was more heroic; 1 Cor. vi. 12, 13, "All things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any. Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats:" let the belly crave what meats it will, let meats be never so pleasant or desirable, yet I will not be brought under the power of either of them: but few are so noble-spirited as Paul. The most men are apprentices to their own appetites: the rich man, Luke xvi. 19, "fared sumptuously every day;" no cost must be spared to please his palate.

[2.] Hereby a man is put beneath a brute creature; for those creatures eat and drink only to satisfy nature, and when they have taken so much, you cannot persuade or force them to take more; they observe the law of nature, and follow the instinct thereof; but many men do eat and drink, not only to satisfy nature, but to the surfeiting thereof, and without any persuasion or force overcharge nature with variety of meats and drinks. Yea, sometimes they are so excessive herein, that they become void of sense; Prov. xxiii. 35, when the drunkard was beaten, he felt it not. So void are intemperate persons oftentimes of common sense, as that they neither foresee future danger, to prevent it, nor feel present smart, to profit by it: horse and ass may teach men.

[3.] It hastens death. Many might have lived longer, had they been more sober, more sparing at their tables; many diseases breed in the womb of intemperance, and one or other of them shortens a man's days; many die by the sword, but more by surfeits. Because it is lawful to eat and drink, and what we eat and drink is pleasing, therefore we exceed the due bounds, and so increase humours, quench our natural heat, and precipitate death. The Corinthians' excess sent them to their long sleep: this sin abbreviates or takes away life.

[4.] It makes men very secure and fearless: Isa. lvi. 12, "Come, we will fill ourselves with strong drink; and to-morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant." A ship laden much, sinks deep into the water, if overladen, drowns; so man, that is laden with the creatures, sinks deep into the sea of security, if he be overladen, he drowns himself. Luke xxi. 34, 35, if men's hearts are overcharged, that day will come unawares, as a snare, suddenly.

[5.] Intemperance is such a sin as endangers your eternal estate, yea, and excludes you from coming into heaven. The rich glutton, you know, was cast into hell, that was his portion, Luke xvi. Gal. v. 21, those that "do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God:" what things? that eat and drink intemperately. Drunkenness and revelling are fruits of the flesh, and suffer not men to enter into the kingdom of heaven.

(4.) Their estates. It brings a consumption upon them: Prov. xxiii. 21, "The drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty; and drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags." Many who have gluttonized in their youth, have wanted bread in their old age, and instead of feasting, have fasted more than once or twice in a week. The prodigal's excess among the harlots brought him to want among the swine. Prov. xxi. 17, "He that loveth wine and oil shall not be rich."

Diogenes, seeing the house of an intemperate person set to sale, said, I knew the house was so overcharged with meat and wine that it would quickly vomit out the cormorant. He seeing another brought to beggary, and eating olives for his supper, said, If you had so dined, you should not have needed to have so supped.

(5.) Their names and professions suffer by it. Intemperance brings an ill report upon men; Noah's intemperance was a great disgrace to him. Prov. xxviii. 7, "He that is a companion of riotous men shameth his father:" if being only a companion of them be so ill, what is it then to be a riotous person, intemperate in meats and drinks? that doth much more shame the son, and the father too; such a one will men say is a belly-god. Isa. xxviii. 8, "All tables are full of vomit and filthiness, so that there is no place clean." What a disgrace was this to the priests and prophets in those days, and to their profession! Rom. xiii. 13, "Let us walk honestly, as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenness." Let us not be intemperate; intemperance is a night-work, and hath no honesty in it. If it be, therefore, a work of darkness and dishonesty, as the apostle makes it, it must needs disgrace a man. Fabius, who had spent his patrimony, a great estate, was called Gurgus, a gulf which swallows all; among us such men are called heluones, gluttons.

Let us take heed of this sin: why should we pamper our bodies, which must see corruption, and be worm's meat? The apostle's rule is, "Make no provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof." He doth not forbid to eat or provide meat, but to make provision for the flesh, their inordinate desires, to satisfy them. Luke vi. 25, "Woe unto you that are full! for you shall hunger."

Christ bids us deny ourselves; and if we will not do it in a little meat and drink, how shall we forsake all, wives, children, friends, lands, life? It was a notable saying of Seneca, Major sum, et ad majora genitus, quam ut corporis mei mancipium fiam, I am greater, and born to greater things, than to be servant or slave to my body. He was a heathen, we are christians; let us say, we are greater, and born to greater things, better born, and better taught, than to be slaves to our appetites.

Let us say, as it is Tit. ii. 11, 12, "The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world."

"And abundance of idleness was in her and in her daughters." Having spoken of two of the sins of Sodom, we come now to the third, which is, "abundance of idleness."

"Idleness." Hebrew, השקט which is from שקט signifying, to rest, to live in peace, quietly, idly. When people are in peace, they grow secure and idle.

"Abundance." Hebrew, שלה from שלה to be quiet, to rest, to live at ease, and notes tranquillity; so that both words signify the same thing, and may be rendered, rest of rest; the sense whereof is well expressed by our translation, "abundance of idleness," or deep idleness.

I shall show you two things touching idleness:

1. When a man is said to be idle.
2. The evil of idleness.

For the first, a man is said to be idle three ways.

(1.) When he doth nothing, is unemployed. Matt. xx. 3, Christ "saw some standing idle in the market-place." The word for "idle" is, ἀργος, a man without work; so in ver. 6, "Why stand ye here all the day idle?" Many are idle all the day of their life, nothing is done by them; of this sort are many gentlemen and others, that have no calling nor employment for the good of the public: such was Solomon's sluggard, that would not plough by reason of the cold, Prov. xx. 4; but had rather sleep and slumber in his bed, than dig in his vineyard; chap. xxiv. 33, "Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep."

(2.) When they do not what they should do. Some of the learned say, he is idle who does not God's work. There is work of God's appointment for the day, which you ought to take notice of, and do. 2 Thess. iii. 11, "There are some among you which work not at all, but are busy-bodies; μηδὲν ἔργαζομένους, ἀλλὰ περιπαροῦσθαι, doing no work, yet working about every where. When persons are busy, and do much of that which doth not belong to them to do, it is doing of nothing; therefore Paul, in the first

Epistle, chap. iv. 11, exhorts them to do their "own business."

(3.) When they do not so much as they ought to do, but are lazy in doing little. Rom. xii. 11, "Not slothful in business." Eccl. ix. 10, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." When men put not forth themselves to do what they ought to do in conscience, and according to right reason, they are justly said to be idle, Prov. xviii. 9.

2. The evil of this sin you may discern in sundry particulars.

(1.) It is against the end of man's creation. God made man for labour; when he was in a state of innocency, he was to dress and keep the garden, Gen. ii. 15; he must not be idle there, taking his pleasure in a paradise, but work he must, though not for a living: so after the fall, Gen. iii. 19, in the sweat of his face he was to eat his bread; he was now to work for bread, and to work hard; if he will have food, he must sweat for it. It is the end of man's creation and birth to be doing: Job v. 7, "Man is born unto trouble," labour, saith the margin, and Montanus, "as the sparks fly upward."

(2.) It is a sin against the light of nature, which puts every thing upon motion. The heavens, with the glorious lights thereof, move, and are constant in their motions: Psal. xix. 5, the sun "rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race." The wind and air fly up and down, the waters run, the earth brings forth, plants and trees grow up; the fishes in the sea, fowls in the air, beasts in the field, have their motions and operations, which is a loud dictate to man that he should not be idle. Prov. vi. 6, "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise." The ant is a very little creature, but exceeding laborious; nature hath put an instinct into her to be active and working all the summer; she is early and late at it, and will not lose an hour, unless the weather hinder. So the bee is little in bulk, but great in employment, and wonderful busy; and Solomon might have added, Go to the bee, and consider her ways: she flies far, examines the fields, hedges, trees, orchards, gardens, loads herself with honey and wax, and then presently makes return. These creatures, with many others, confute the sluggard daily, preach down idleness, and call for action. Yea, the sluggard's own soul is always in motion and action, and thereby tells him he should not be idle.

(3.) It puts God's family out of order. The world is God's family, and he hath appointed men unto, and fitted them for, some employment: as a wise artist makes no wheel in a clock, or watch, but to move and help on the general work; and if one wheel stand, it is out of order, and hinders all the rest; so here, when men are idle, they stand still, are out of order, and hinder the motion of others. Idle persons are disorderly persons; 1 Thess. v. 14, "Warn them that are unruly," ἀράκτους, men out of rank, such are idle ones; when others march, they stand still; when others are up, they are down. 2 Thess. iii. 11, "We hear there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all;" by "walking" is meant living, and their disorderly living was not working.

(4.) It sets a man among the dead. An idle man is both unsavoury and unactive, as a dead man is, and therefore may well be counted a guest of the grave: 1 Tim. v. 6, the widow that liveth in pleasure, idly, disorderly, neglecting or out of a calling, is dead while she lives. Eccl. ix. 4, "A living dog is better than a dead lion:" the dead lion, saith Paris, is the great man, in wealth and honour, but idle and loose; the living dog is the poor man, but diligent and active. Now the poorest and meanest man of the world that follows a calling, and is laborious in it, is better than the greatest, richest, and most eminent man in the world who lives out of a calling, and doth nothing; one is a living, and the other a dead man: and what the odds is between life and death, such is the difference between idleness and action, sloth and labour.

(5.) Idleness exposes a man to variety of temptations, lays him open to Satan; a man unemployed, is like a city without walls and gates, whither any enemy may easily have entrance: Ezek. xxxviii. 11, "I will go up to the land of unwalled villages; I will go to them that are at rest, that dwell safely, all of them dwelling without walls, and having neither bars nor gates." What God saith here, that Satan saith of idle persons; they are unwalled villages, they have neither bars nor gates, no defensive or offensive weapons, and therefore the devil doth boldly invade, and easily conquer, them with his temptations. Paul knew this, and therefore counselled the Ephesians to make provision against Satan; chap. vi. 11, "Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." An idle man either hath no armour, or if he hath, will not take the pains to put it on. It will require more than ordinary pains to put on the whole armour of God, to be armed completely, and then to stand armed, and withstand all the onsets of principalities and powers; this the sluggard will not do, he must needs therefore become a prey to Satan. A man out of employment, and idle, is like a vessel which is empty, any one that comes to it may put in what he will; so Satan pours into idle persons, which are empty vessels, what liquor he pleases. When men are thoroughly employed, they are incapable of the devil's temptations: you see it daily, that those who are out of God's work are most exercised with the devil's.

(6.) Idleness is the mother and nurse of our most dangerous enemies, viz. lusts. Standing waters corrupt soonest, and more mud, filth, and vermin are to be found in them than in the running waters. To the sink in the ship is the confluence of all filth; idleness is the sink in the ship, and comprehends all noisome lusts in it: silver, gold, iron, out of use, canker and rust. Idleness bringeth much evil, and breeds many evils. Idle and sluggish persons have the foulest bodies, and breed most diseases; and such have the foulest souls, and abound with most noisome lusts. Among the Sodomites was abundance of idleness, and abundance of lusts, which fight and war against the soul; and what madness is it for a man to harbour, feed his enemies that seek his life! idleness, like dung upon the earth, fattens the spoil, makes all rank, especially the weeds, so that the flesh and lusts thereof, even in godly people, they grow head-strong, violent and furious against the Spirit; and in others, they break out into drunkenness, theft, and uncleanness. Nihil agendo homines discunt male agere. In doing nothing men learn to do ill. If ever occasion should put as much power into their hands, as idleness hath put villany into their hearts and heads, they will be ready to fire your houses, ravish your daughters, and cut your throats.

(7.) It is against common equity and justice to live upon others, who get their living by the sweat of their brows, and to eat their bread from them. Drones, that eat up the honey of the laborious bee, we condemn: they beat them out, and sting to death; a just punishment for so unjust an act.

Thieves that rob particular persons suffer death, because they do acts of injustice against common equity: and what are idle ones but thieves, robbing the public of its maintenance? This made Paul to command the Thessalonians to "work, and eat their own bread," 2 Thess. iii. 12.

(8.) It deprives a man of that privilege which a beast hath. You know a beast may eat, work or work not, but it is not so with man, except he work he may not eat; 2 Thess. iii. 10. "This we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat." If sickness or weakness hinder not, let man be great or small, rich or poor, what he will, the rule is, if he will not work, he must not eat, neither the state nor the church must maintain such a one.

The Jews say, Qui non laboraverit in prosabbato, ne edat in sabbato. The sabbath was a day of rest, and if any had not so laboured on the day before, as to get wherewithal to maintain him on that day, he must fast.

Matt. x. 10, Christ tells you, "the workman is worthy of his meat," others not; you sin therefore when you relieve such beggars or persons as are able to work, but will not; they are neither worthy of meat, nor should you let them eat. And what if they should perish for want of meat? their destruction is of themselves; the ease of the simple slayeth them. Prov. i. 32. He that will not have a part in daily labour, should not have a part of daily bread.

(9.) Poverty and beggary are the issues of idleness. Prov. vi. 11, Solomon tells the sluggard, that his "poverty shall come as one that travelleth, and his want as an armed man;" he lieth still, but poverty is up, and marching towards him; he is without defence, but that comes armed; the meaning is, poverty will come upon an idle and slothful person suddenly and irresistibly. Prov. xxiii. 21, "Drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags;" by drowsiness understand sloth; and when men go about things as if they were half asleep, lazily, they shall certainly come to a poor condition, which is intimated by rags; the coat that sloth gives is rags. Prov. xviii. 9, A man "slothful in his work is brother to him that is a great waster;" the Hebrew is, A man remiss in his work is brother to a great waster, a much waster; a man that spends profusely must needs come to beggary, he hastens swiftly to it; so doth a sluggard, who is remiss in his work, and so an idle person. Other things may bring some to beggary; sickness, suretyship, fire, robbery, plundering wars; but put them altogether, they beget not so many beggars, so much poverty, as idleness doth; this fills towns and cities with swarms of them.

(10.) Idleness is such a sin as exempts a man from the protection of the angels. A man that hath no calling to walk in, that lives unemployed, he is a vagabond upon the face of the earth. Psal. xci. 11, "He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways;" what ways? those which are according to his will, which his providence leads unto; not in ways of sin. A man that is idle, is in the devil's way, not in God's way; he hath appointed callings for men; 1 Cor. vii. 20, "Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called;" ver. 24, "Let every man, wherein he is called, therein abide with God." Some refer the words "called" in both verses, to the spiritual call, viz. to grace and communion with Christ; he that so, yet there is an outward condition of life, a calling that God would have men to be in, and abide in, because it is an abiding with God. God approves it, blesses them in it, if they honour him in a calling according to the rules he hath given in his word, and vouchsafes them a guard of angels to defend them therein; but idle persons that have no calling, go out from God and the guard of his angels; and it is questionable whether those that may work and will not, have any true fear of God, or faith, in them. Did they fear God, they would walk in a calling, and the angels of God would be about them, Psal. xxxiv. 7; and faith is a working grace, witness Heb. xi.; 1 Tim. v. 8.

(11.) Idle persons are burdensome creatures. The fig tree that bare no fruit was a burden to the ground where it stood; Luke xiii. 7, "Why cumbereth it the ground?" it was a burden to the garden, to the gardener, to the other trees, to the lord and master of all. Matt. xx. 6, "Why stand ye here all the day idle?" you do no good to yourselves, none to your neighbours, none to the public, none to posterity, nor bring any glory to God. An idle and fruitless person is good for nothing; Ezek. xv. the vine tree that bare no fruit was not fit to make a pin of, nor for any use but only for the fire.

(12.) It is a wasting of precious time, a hiding of our talent, and so a great provocation of divine Majesty. An idle man trifles away time, which, when men are in straits, they value, and would give thousands for a few days or hours, as it is like the Sodomites would, when their city was on fire; but such persons make no account of time, how precious soever it be, but pass it away in doing nothing, which is a dreadful evil. Time, that is given us to get grace, to work out our salvation in, to glorify God, and do good in, even that doth the idle person squander away, though eternity be in the bowels of it; not minding the apostolical rule, Eph. v. 15, 16, "See that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time." He that sits still and will not walk, he is a fool; and he is the greatest of fools that will not redeem time for the good of his soul, but loiter it away, and lose it daily; though God have given him a talent, yet he will not use it. Matt. xxv. 25, 26, the man who had one talent would not use it, but hid it in the earth; and what followed hereupon? he provoked God greatly, who said, "Thou wicked and slothful servant," (wickedness and sloth go together,) thou oughtest to have improved my talent or money well; seeing it is not done, take it from him, and cast the unprofitable servant into utter darkness, ver. 27, 30.

Having now heard the evil of idleness, let us gird up the loins of our minds, stir up ourselves, and be more diligent in our callings. Sloth brings judgments; the men of Laish were quiet, secure, and had no business with any man, and the Danites came upon them, "smote them with the edge of the sword, and burnt the city with fire," Judg. xviii. 7, 27. Though all idle people meet not with such judgments, yet there is a woe pronounced "to them that are at ease in Zion," Amos vi. 1. Some woe or other will be the portion of those that live idly. We have a multitude of such amongst us, and it were well some course were taken by those in authority to set idle persons on work.

The Athenians did sue idle persons at law; idleness among them did bear an action, and they made inquiry after each man and woman, what trade or course of life they had to live upon. Rivet. in Gen. 3.

When Joseph's brethren came into Egypt, and were before Pharaoh, the first question he asked them was, "What is your occupation?" Gen. xlvii. 3. This was a good question of a king, when strangers were to come and dwell in his land, to know whether they had any calling, could get their livings, and not be burdensome to his kingdom and subjects. The Massilians forbade any to come into their city who had no trade or art to live by. And there was a law among the Persians, that every subject, at the year's end, should come to the magistrate and give account of his year's work; it were happy if we had some such laws amongst us. They were great enemies to idleness, and so was Alexander, who, discovering two idle persons in his dominions, made one to flee out of them, and the other to drive him.

In Marcus Aurelius' days, the Romans followed their callings so earnestly, that having occasion to send a letter two or three days' journey from the town, he could not find one idle body in all the city of Rome to carry it. When will it be so with this city? idleness abounds in the streets, and I fear within doors too. But however it be with others, let us hate sin, be diligent in those places and callings God hath set us; for "the hand of the diligent maketh rich," Prov. x. 4; "shall bear rule," chap. xii. 24, and will cause to stand before princes, chap. xxii. 29.

"Neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy." This is the fourth sin of Sodom and her daughters, unmercifulness, inhumanity.

"Did she strengthen." Hebrew is, לֹא הִרְחִיקָהּ she hath not taken them by the hand, and held them up, but let them sink. Jer. xxxi. 32. "In the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt," being there, they were in a low, poor, needy, sinking condition, and God reached out his hand from heaven, took hold of them, and upheld them; he gave them counsel and help. It is the same word there which you have here: these Sodomites did not reach out a hand to support and strengthen their poor and needy. The Septuagint is, they did not succour and help them; the Vulgate, they reached not out a hand to them. She did not make firm and strong the hands of the needy, she did not give them counsel and aid, that they might not despair.

"The poor." Hebrew, עָנִי from עָנָה to afflict, humble: because poor men are afflicted and humbled under the burden of their poverty. The Hebrew word עָנִי signifies both affliction and poverty; Exod. iii. 7. "I have surely seen the affliction of my people which are in Egypt;" 1 Chron. xxii. 14. "Behold, in my poverty I have prepared for the house of the Lord:" it is the same word in both places; and poor men find their poverty an affliction. Poverty causeth much fear, care, sadness, dejection of spirit, and hath many temptations accompanying it. Montanus reads the word for poor, egeni, of the needy, or wanting, which seems to be the true sense of πτωχος in the gospel: for as the word is used there, it notes not absolutely a beggar, but one needy: 2 Cor. viii. 9, it is said of Christ, ἐπτώχευσας, "he became poor," he had not a house to hide his head in, yet he did not go up and down and beg lodging, bread, and other things; and Mark xii. 42, there came χήρα πτωχή, a poor widow, yet she had two mites to throw into the treasury: Rom. xv. 26, "Those of Macedonia and Achaia made a contribution for the poor saints at Jerusalem: ἵς ταῖς πτωχοῦστων ἀγαθῶν, the church did not suffer the poor saints in it to go from house to house begging: this had been a great reproach to the church and way of the gospel. That which hath made men to think πτωχος notes such poor as go from door to door, hath been, that they might distinguish it from πένη, which is a poor man also: 2 Cor. ix. 9, "He hath given to the poor," ἔδωκε τοῖς πένησιν. There is a difference between these words, and so the poor meant by them, but not that difference which by some learned is made. Aristophanes in Pluto saith, πτωχος ἔστιν μηδὲν ἔχων, he is a beggar, or poor man, who hath nothing, and πένη is ὅς τις φιλότιμος καὶ τοῖς ἰσχυροῖς προσέχων, who lives sparingly, following his work, that spends all he gets, and hath much ado to live. So Pastor makes πένη to be a man who by his labour gets his living, from πένωμαι, to labour: and he is right in this, but out in πτωχος, whom he saith to be one qui ostium petit, who begs an alms at men's doors. It is true

Lazarus was such, Luke xvi. 20, but usually in the gospel it notes such poor as have something, though not enough, to live upon, be they aged, sick, weak, lame, or compassed about with any other infirmities,

"Needy." Hebrew is עָנִי it comes from עָנָה to will, desire, and notes a man not simply poor and needy, but very poor: so poor, saith Pagnine, quod omnibus carens, omnia concupiscat, that wanting all things, he desires all things: rich in desires, but having nothing else, a man of desires. Amos ii. 6, "They sold the poor for a pair of shoes:" the word for poor is the same we have here; and certainly they were very poor that were worth no more than a pair of shoes, and likely old ones too. Montanus interprets the word in our prophet, mendicis, a beggar, which notes the extreme poverty that some were in, yet had no help from the rich and full Sodomites. Æcol. hath it humilis, of one so needy, that he is humbled to purpose, and lies on the earth, desiring relief. Servius upon Virgil saith, pejorem esse egestatem paupertate, that need is worse than poverty. The Vulgate accords with our English, and hath it egeno, they reached not out a hand to the poor and needy, which sorts best with the original words. The sum and scope of the words is this: That the Sodomites were unmerciful and hard-hearted; they were not affected with the necessities of the poor; neither their wants, prayers, tears, nor their sad countenance, mournful complaints, nor stretched-out hands, prevailed at all with them.

Men are backward to, if not averse from, giving; 1 Tim. vi. 17, 18, "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not highminded, nor trust in uncertain riches; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute." Dives would not give the crumbs and scraps of his table to poor Lazarus, Luke xvi.; so the young man, Matt. xix. 21, 22.

I shall show you what an evil unmercifulness is.

1. It is an argument and evidence of covetousness. When Christ, Luke xvi. 9, bids them make to themselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, (which he so calls, because men usually sin in the getting, keeping, or using of them,) and said, they could not serve God and mammon, ver. 13, the Pharisees, who were covetous, derided him; they thought Christ spake like an ignorant man; they could serve God, keep their wealth, and not cast it away upon poor people: this showed their covetousness. And what an evil that is, let Paul tell you: 1 Tim. vi. 10, "The love of money is the root of all evil;" inward and outward evils do spring from it. A covetous man is "an idolater," Eph. v. 5; he hath no inheritance in the kingdom of heaven, 1 Cor. vi. 10; he is abhorred of God, Psal. x. 3. Chrysostom saith, he had rather dwell with a thousand possessed, than with one covetous man; for they hurt their garments and themselves, but a covetous man hurts his neighbours. Chrysostom on Matt. x. as cited by Stella on Luke xvi.

2. It is argument of unbelief. Men think if they give to the poor, and strengthen the hands of the needy, that themselves shall want and come to poverty. Prov. xxviii. 27, "He that giveth unto the poor shall not lack." Here is the voice of God, who is truth itself, and hath power enough to make good what he hath said, for the earth and fullness of it is his, Psal. xxiv. 1. And yet man's heart distrusts God, and thinks of other ways to provide for itself: I will keep what I have; if this be gone, I know not what I shall have; it is a hard world, and one bird in the hand is worth two in the bush. Thus unbelief discovers itself, and had rather trust in uncertain riches, than in the all-sufficient and omnipotent

God. Saith God, Give to the poor, and thou shalt not lack; saith the hard-hearted man, Give to the poor, and thou shalt lack. Thus doth he cross the will of God, and put the lie upon him: Eccles. xi. 1, "Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days:" No, saith the unmerciful man, I will never cast my bread upon them, for I shall never see it again; and so makes God a liar, and declares himself an unbeliever.

3. It is argument there is no love of God in that man. It is a sad charge to tell any man he doth not love God. John is peremptory in it; 1 John iii. 17, "Whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" he may think he loves God, and others may think and say so, but there is not any dram of God's love in that man. How dwells it in him? this interrogation imports a full negation; for if a man loved God, he would love man, who is the image of God, Christ's command is, that we love one another as he hath loved us, John xv. 12; he testified his love, by giving his blood, his flesh, his life; and we will not give a little bread, an old garment, a little silver; it is a clear demonstration there is no love of God in us.

The primitive christians were distinguished from others by their love, and that made them sell all, bring it and lay it down at the apostles' feet for the relief of the poor christians, Acts iv. 34, 35.

4. It is a sin that hath much cruelty and unnaturalness in it. Isa. lviii. 7, "Deal thy bread to the hungry, cover the naked, and hide not thyself from thine own flesh;" the poor are our own flesh; Mal. ii. 10, "Have we not all one father? hath not one God created us?" Prov. xxii. 2, "The rich and poor meet together; the Lord is the maker of them all;" hence he hath commanded that we should love our neighbours as ourselves, Matt. xxii. 39. Now, if we hide away our eyes from them, if we will not consider their necessities, wants, and relieve them, we are cruel and unnatural. If a man be naked or hungry, a man will seek to clothe and feed himself, he will not hate his own flesh; Eph. v. 29, "No man ever yet hated his own flesh; but nourisheth and cherisheth it." When men, therefore, refuse to strengthen the hands of the poor and needy, they despise, they hate their own flesh, they are unnatural; and to prevent this, God hath laid a command to be merciful, where the strongest reason and plea might be against it; Prov. xxv. 21, "If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat; and if he be thirsty, give him water to drink."

5. It brings a curse, yea many curses, upon men and their estates. Prov. xxviii. 27, "He that hideth his eyes from the poor shall have many a curse;" the poor will curse them; but who bids them curse? When Shimei cursed David wrongfully, saith he, The Lord bid him do it; so, when the poor do curse hard-hearted men that will not pity them, there is something of God in it; this Scripture must be fulfilled though it be their sin, yet it is a just judgment of God upon a merciless man. And not only doth man, but even God himself curseth them. Psalm xli. 1, "Blessed is he that considereth the poor." If a man do it not, shall he have a blessing? Matt. xxv. 41, 42, "Depart, ye cursed, for I was an hungred," &c. The curse of God was upon them before, according to what you find in Prov. iii. 33, "The curse of the Lord is in the house of the wicked." Sometimes they have not a heart to eat, and take the comfort of their estates themselves; sometimes they are perplexed with fears, cares, sorrows about their estates; sometimes they are wasted at law; sometimes by fire, plundering; sometimes in a secret way, that none can give any rational account of, but know the curse of God was there.

6. It makes men altogether unlike God. He is "the Father of mercies, and God of all comfort," 2 Cor. i. 3; "he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust," Matt. v. 45; he "giveth food to all flesh," Psal. cxxxvi. 25; he hears the desires of the humble and poor, Psal. x. 17; "he is kind to the unthankful and to the evil. Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful," Luke vi. 35, 36. But now a man that is near, pinching, miserable, and regards not the condition of the poor, to comfort their hearts, and strengthen their hands, he is unlike and contrary to God, who is love, bowels, pity, compassion, mercy, and very mindful of the poor. He made a law, Deut. xv. 7, 8, "If there be a poor man in thy land, thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother; but thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him:" so Lev. xxv. 35. Luke xiv. 13, 14, "When thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind; and thou shalt be blessed." Luke iv. 18, God anointed Christ "to preach the gospel to the poor;" and, "hath not God chosen the poor to be rich in faith?" Jam. ii. 5. Judas was a hard-hearted wretch that "cared not for the poor," John xii. 6.

7. It puts in a caveat and bar in the court of heaven against their prayers, they must have no entertainment there. Prov. xxi. 13, "Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard;" this man, before he dies, shall come to some great strait or other, so as to cry either to man or God, and when he cries, he shall not be heard; he would not hear the poor crying, nor God who sent those poor, and cried to him in those poor, therefore when he cries unto man for help, God will stop their ears, turn their hearts from him, yea, stop his own ear, and turn away his own heart. Luke vi. 38, "With the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again;" you stop your ears, God will stop his ear; you shut up your bowels, God will shut up his; you withhold your pence, God will withhold his talents. The rich man cried for a drop of water, being in torment, but neither Abraham nor God would hearken to his request; he that would not give one crumb, must not receive one drop; Matt. v. 7, "The merciful shall obtain mercy."

8. It is a shrewd badge of a reprobate condition. A merciless man's name will hardly be found in the book of life. Col. iii. 12, "Put on as 'elect of God, bowels of mercies, kindness;" those who are elect of God have had mercy, and being called, they find and feel that mercy, and cannot but put on bowels of mercy, which declares their election. Before, as Paul saith, Tit. iii. 3, men live "in malice and envy, hateful and hating one another;" but when God hath once called them, and manifested their election, then they put on bowels of mercy, and they are as natural to them now, as their lusts were before, as bowels are to a parent; they pity others, as God pitied them; but where there are no bowels of mercy, but churlishness, hardness, unmercifulness, there is the black badge of reprobation rather than of election.

9. It is a degree of murder. Some men hate and curse the poor, and the Scripture bluseth not to call them murderers; 1 John iii. 15, "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer;" Job xxiv. 14, "The murderer rising with the light killeth the poor and needy;" he devises ways how to oppress, suck, and squeeze them, and this is killing of them, and he is a murderer for it as well as the other; so, when a man sees his brother or neighbour poor, sinking, and like to be ruined, and will not relieve him, being able to do it, he falls into a degree of murder. The heathen, Publius Mimus, could see this, who said, Qui succurrere perituro potest, cum non succurrit, occidit. He that hath power to succour a man being ready to perish, and succours him not, he kills him. Suppose a man in the water or fire, you pass by, and lend him not your hand, which if you had done, his life had been saved, are not you now guilty of his death? When the priest and Levite passed by the man that, going from Jerusalem to Jericho, fell among thieves, and relieved him not, it was their sin; and had he died in that condition, they had been accessaries to his death. If the poor be our flesh, then our goods are theirs as well as ours; and if we let them perish, we murder them and ourselves.

10. The end of that man will be very sad who hath been merciless to others; he must have the end of a fruitless, or dead tree, he must be hewn down, and cast into the fire. Jam. ii. 13, "He shall have judgment without mercy, that hath showed no mercy;" all judgment, mere severity, pure wrath, shall be his portion. Matt. xxv. 41, 42, &c. it is the chief, if not the only, sin which Christ mentions at the day of judgment: "I was hungry, and ye gave me no meat, I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink;" you showed me in my poor members no mercy; "therefore depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels."

Seeing, then, uncharitableness is so great an evil, let us put on bowels of mercy, and strengthen the hands of the poor and needy. It is a hard time, things are dear, trading little, poor abound, and therefore now it is seasonable for the rich to open the bowels of their compassion, and to succour those that are in want. Job was "a father to the poor," chap. xxix. 16; he did not eat his morsels alone, the fatherless ate thereof, chap. xxxi. 17; the bellies and loins of the poor blessed him, being filled and warmed with the flesh and fleece of his sheep, ver. 20. Dorcas, Acts ix. 39. It were well if Job's and Dorcas's spirit and compassions were in all rich men, that so the hungry might be fed, the naked clothed, and necessities of the poor supplied. Spare something out of your superfluities for them. Can you adorn your houses with pictures and hangings, your tables with carpets, your shelves with pewter and brass, your closets and cupboards with plate, and have you nothing for the poor, who are the temples of God? can you feed your dogs, parrots, monkeys, pamper your horses, and not mind poor christians which lie at your doors? If it be so, how will the Lord take it at your hands? Remember Dives; he had been better to have given all to Lazarus, than to have met with such an end for his unmercifulness. The Lord Christ hath told you it is a blessed thing to give, Acts xx. 35. You would count it a blessed thing to show kindness to Christ; the paps that gave Christ suck were counted blessed, Luke xi. 27. When you give to the poor, you give to Christ: Matt. xxv. 40, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me;" they are Christ's brethren thou dost it unto, and he accounts it done to himself, yea, the least or meanest it is done unto.

Again, is it not a blessed thing to have the Lord of heaven and earth to be indebted to one: Prov. xix. 17, "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again."

1. God is the poor man's Surety.
2. He takes the debt upon himself.
3. Gives thee his word for security; his faithfulness and his honour are engaged for performance. Had you the city's bond, the parliament's security, the public faith, for repayment of what you expend upon the poor, it were nothing to this. O give, give unto the poor, and make God as much as you can indebted to you, he is a good Paymaster: Luke vi. 38, "Give, and it shall be given unto you, good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over." If you will not make God your debtor by giving, he will be your judge for not giving.

We live in dangerous times, and riches are uncertain things: the way to make them safe, is to bestow them upon the poor: Eccles. xi. 1, "Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days;" if you keep it, you lose; if you cast it away, you shall find it again.

One had this epitaph upon his tomb:

Habeo quod dedi, perdidit quod servavi: I possess what I gave; I have lost that which I kept.

If you would keep wine or meal, you put them into empty vessels: Isa. lviii. 10, 11, "If thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul; then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noon day: and the Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought, and make fat thy bones: and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not."

Quest. Seeing we are to strengthen the hands of the poor and needy, whether are we to give to all in such case?

Ans. It is the judgment of some, that no beggars should be relieved that go from door to door: they think it an unwarrantable practice for people to do so, and to be relieved upon so doing, it is the nursery of many vagabonds and vile persons: such live in no calling, are under no government, are the shame of the magistrate, a disorder in a commonwealth, and reproach of the laws made for relief of the poor in their several respective places. Certainly those that beg up and down, being able to work, and will not, you ought not to relieve, you sin in doing of it; the apostle's rule is, If any will not work, he must not eat, 2 Thess. iii. 10. And further, when begging is made a trade, I see not how it is justifiable before God, or can be countenanced by man; there are few but can do something towards their living, and if they cannot, they ought to be relieved otherwise than by begging.

Yet, to conclude it unlawful to give to any that beg, I dare not: Christ healed two blind beggars, Luke xviii. 35, 42; John ix. 7, 8, and did not reprove them for their begging. Besides, he hath given out a rule, Luke vi. 30, "Give to every man that asketh of thee;" which would be void and useless, if I might give to no beggars.

1. Then, if you be able, you ought to give to all that are truly poor and needy, justly necessitated to ask, even those that are able to work, and willingly would work, but through the ill disposition of the times cannot get any, or not sufficient to maintain them.

2. If men be not able to relieve all that shall ask, then caution and christian wisdom are to be used. You are to observe the rule of nature, which leads you to give,

(1.) To your kindred according to the degrees thereof.

(2.) To your affinity.

(3.) Your friends.

(4.) Cohabitators of the same village, parish, city, country, kingdom.

(5.) To strangers, whom Providence shall offer unto you.

But more specially, 1. You are to consider whether they be godly poor or not; and if godly, there to place your charity: Gal. vi. 10, "As we have opportunity," &c.

2. Their necessity, and so.

(1.) It may be extreme, they may be in danger of life, ready to starve, as Lazarus did at Dives' door: or in danger of sinning, as captives to turn Turks, and poor amongst us of turning to popery, or to steal: now such are to have help before others.

(2.) It may be great, attended with some grievous inconvenience, as loss of liberty, sinking of a family, scandal to religion: now these are to have a hand reached out to them, when others may not.

(3.) There is a common necessity: when poor want, live not so comfortably as they would: and these, as we have ability and occasion, we may, the other we must relieve.

3. Their impotency: they may be sick, infirm, lame, blind, aged, so that they are not able to do ought for a livelihood.

4. You are to consider their serviceableness formerly. The more useful any have been in church or state, the more good they have done to either or both, the rather should they, in case of want, feel your charity than others: as many now, that have ventured their lives in the wars.

5. The cause of their poverty and want. If men have been brought to it by sickness, by special acts of Providence, fire, losses at sea, plundering, robbery, unfaithfulness of men and their dealings: these are to be pitied, supported before others that have brought themselves to beggary by ill courses.

Ver. 50. And they were haughty, and committed abomination before me: therefore I took them away as I saw good.

Here he goeth on in numbering Sodom's sins, and showing Sodom's end; they sinned against God, and he took them away for their sins.

"They were haughty." The Septuagint, they gloried; sin they did grievously, and gloried in their sins. Montanus, they are lifted up. Some expositors read it participially, thus, exalting themselves, they committed abominations.

In the former verse was spoken of pride, and therefore I shall say nothing of haughtiness, it being so near of kin to pride, if not the same.

"Committed abomination." By abomination we may understand that sin which is denominated from that place, viz. "sodomy, unnatural lusts, filthy uncleanness;" for they being proud and haughty, excessive in eating and drinking, abounding in idleness, neglective of the poor and needy, how could it be that they should be chaste? no, they were unclean, and abominably unclean; according to that you read, Rom. i. 27, "The men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lust one towards another; men with men working that which is unseemly." When the angels came to Lot, Gen. xix. the Sodomites, thinking they were men, both old and young, and all the people from every quarter, compassed his house, and said, Bring out the men that came unto thee, that we may know them, ver. 4, 5.

This lying with the male, an unnatural sin, we first find practised by these Sodomites, who, as Jude saith, gave themselves over to fornication, and went after strange, or other flesh: the women did not content them, but they burned in their lusts men towards men, and committed abomination one with another; it was other flesh than God appointed for generation. Man and wife are one flesh, but man and man, woman and woman, can never be so.

"Before me." That is, publicly, at noon-tide, in the sight of all; suitable to what you find in Isa. iii. 9, "They declare their sin as Sodom, they hide it not." Lawful acts of this nature should be in secret, but they did unlawful acts against the light of nature, and that openly: Zeph. iii. 5, "The unjust knoweth no shame;" such were these Sodomites.

Their sin is set out emphatically, in Gen. xiii. 13, "The men of Sodom were wicked, and sinners before the Lord exceedingly."

1. They were wicked, and intensively wicked, which the words "wicked" and "sinners" import; for the Spirit saith not only they are wicked, but wicked and sinners.

2. Sinners before the Lord; they sinned impudently, openly, and as in the presence of God, himself looking on; and they were sinners against the Lord, as some do read the words, that is, they sinned with a high hand. 1 Sam. ii. 25, "If a man sin against the Lord, who shall entreat for him?" they are heinous sins: and these Sodomites sinned against conscience, common equity, and light of nature.

3. Exceedingly; they were not seldom or little in sinning, but frequent, and much, and their sins of a transcendent nature. As Nimrod was a mighty hunter before God, so these were mighty sinners before him, none equal to them then on the earth.

"I took them away." The Hebrew is, yes, I caused them to be removed. What this removing or taking away was, you may see Gen. xix. 24, 25, "The Lord rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah, brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven; and he overthrew those cities, and all the plain, and all the inhabitants of the cities, and that which grew upon the ground."

Here is one of the most dreadful judgments, if not the dreadfulest, of all that we find in the book of God, executed upon sinners. The Lord, from himself, immediately, miraculously, suddenly sends a rain from heaven, of fire and brimstone, which was dreadful to the sight, to the smell, but worst of all to feel; and they, having been hellish in sinning, are made hellish in suffering; for fire and brimstone is the punishment of hell, Rev. xix. 20; xx. 10. Jude tells us, they suffered the vengeance of eternal fire, ver. 7; they passed through a temporal, or temporary, fire, to an eternal fire: and Peter saith, they were condemned, 2 Epist. ii. 6, God, "turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes, condemned them with an overthrow," he condemned them here, and to eternity. And the prophet Jeremiah, when he was in a cursing vein, curses the man who brought tidings of his birth, thus: "Let that man be as the cities which the Lord overthrew, and repented not," Jer. xx. 16. The prophet judged them accursed, and so separate from God for ever: they repented not of their sin, for Sodom was overthrown in a moment, Lam. iv. 6; neither did God repent of what he had done, and therefore no reconciliation could be between them, but they perished utterly. Not only were the men consumed in this judgment, their houses and buildings turned to ashes, their cattle, corn, and whatever grew upon the ground, but even the ground itself is under a curse still, being lacus asphaltites, or mare mortuum, nourishing no living creature, and so extremely salt, that it bears up whatever is thrown thereinto; and birds that fly over fall down into it, being suffocated with the poisonous vapours which rise from it: so that now this plain, which was a fruitful valley, and as Paradise, is become, through the people's sins, and just judgment of God, a filthy, and sulphurous, and poisonous lake.

"As I saw good." Some read it, as thou hast seen. The men of Jerusalem from the turrets of the temple, their prospects in Zion and Jerusalem, could see this lake, and the hand of God upon the Sodomites therein, and therefore saith, as thou hast seen: but the Hebrew is, וירא as I have seen. Gen. xviii. 21, the Lord went down to see whether Sodom had done according to the cry of it. The cry of her sins was great and grievous, and the Lord finding it so, he did as he saw good and cause, he dealt with it as you have heard.

Obs. 1. The Lord remembers the iniquities of people long after they are committed, yea, after they are dead and gone. Sodom's sins were not forgotten, though they had sinned them many hundreds of years before: no vestiges left of them or their cities.

"Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride," &c. God remembered the provocation of him by the Jews at the Red sea, in David's days, which was long before, Psal. cvi. 7, the calf they made at Horeb, ver. 19: their idolatry, fornication, and murmuring, were fresh in God's thoughts in Paul's days, 1 Cor. x. 7, 8, 10. Balaam's, Sodom's, the old world's, the angels', were minded by God, and mentioned by his Spirit, in Peter's days, 2 Pet. ii. 15, 6, 5, 4: the angels had sinned four thousand years before, and above, yet was not their sin forgotten. 1 Sam. xv. 2. "I remember, saith the Lord of hosts, what Amalek did to Israel, how he laid wait for him in the way when he came up from Egypt:" this was four hundred years before. It was twice fourteen generations from David to Christ, and yet there is a gentle touch upon David's sins, Matt. i. 6, 17. God hath a firm and tenacious memory, it lets nothing slip which once it receives: you see sinful acts of men in states are kept upon the file, and on record, and many hundreds of years after are brought forth: God keeps the sins of cities, kingdoms, princes, and people in his book of remembrance, which should lesson us to take heed what we do. Men do not more easily sin, than forget their sins, but God doth not so easily or quickly forget them, Job xiii. 26, "Thou makest me to possess the iniquities of my youth:" Psal. xxv. 7, "Remember not the sins of my youth."

Obs. 2. Plenty is the parent of sin, yea, many sins. Sodom, as hath been shown, was situate in a plain very fruitful and delightful, as appears, Gen. xiii. 10: it had abundance: and what was the effect thereof? pride, fulness, of bread, idleness, unmercifulness, haughtiness, and uncleanness. Deut. xxxii. 15, "Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked: thou art waxen fat, grown thick, thou art covered with fatness: then he forsook God which made him, and lightly esteemed the Rock of his salvation."

When Israel grew rich, had plenty of all things about her, then she became like a fatted ox that kicks at the owner, and cares for none. 1 Sam. ii. 29, "Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice and at mine offering?" they slighted the sacrifices and offerings of God, and, in so doing, they slighted, they kicked, at God. Nehem. ix. 25, 26, when God had brought them into Canaan, "they took strong cities, and a fat land, and possessed houses full of all goods, wells digged, vineyards, and olive-yards, and fruit trees in abundance: so they did eat and were filled, and became fat, and delighted themselves in thy great goodness. Nevertheless they were disobedient, and rebelled against thee, and cast thy law behind their backs, and slew thy prophets, which testified against them to turn them to thee; and they wrought great provocations."

Solomon, when he abounded most with God's blessings, then he loved strange women, multiplied wives and concubines, and fell to idolatry, as you may see from 1 Kings x. and xi. Jer. v. 27, 28, "They are become great, and waxen rich. They are waxen fat, they shine: they overpass the dead of the wicked:" they went beyond the very heathen in wickedness, Ezek. v. 6, 7. Jerusalem here, in this chapter, the metaphorical woman, for whom God had done so much, and upon whom he had bestowed brodered work, skins of tuchsch, fine linen, silk, ornaments, bracelets, chains, jewels, rings, a crown, gold, silver, fine flour, honey, oil, she plays the harlot, abuses those choice blessings and abundance she had to idolatry: she sacrificed her children to idols, and walked in such lewd ways, that the daughters of the Philistines were ashamed of her, ver. 27. Dives was wealthy, and as wicked as wealthy. James v. the rich men, that had plenty of all things, withheld the labourers' hire that reaped down their fields: they lived in pleasure, were wanton, condemned the just.

Plenty is dangerous, yet all men labour to be rich, and have much about them. Men's tables and estates prove snares. The bag caught Judas; and many in prosperity have fallen who stood in the days of adversity.

Obs. 3. The Lord gives outward blessings, not only to saints but to sinners, yea, to great and notorious sinners. Even the Sodomites, that were wicked, and sinners before God exceedingly, had bread, and abundance thereof; that is, of all outward blessings, edible and potable, they had variety, and likewise other things plentifully. Matt. v. 45, "He maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and the unjust." Not only Abraham and Lot had the sun and rain, who were righteous persons, but Sodomites, who exceeded all sinners then in the world, had the sun shining upon them, Gen. xix. 23.

Other nations had the dews of heaven, and fatness of the earth, as well as the Jews, God's own people. The Canaanites and others had that pleasant land which flowed with milk and honey before they had it; and they were so wicked that the land could bear them no longer, but even spewed them out, Lev. xviii. 28.

Antiochus, a vile person, had the kingdom, Dan. xi. 21: so Ahab, that sold himself to work wickedness in the sight of the Lord, 1 Kings xxi. 25, he was a king in Israel. The whore of Babylon was arrayed in purple, decked with gold, precious stones, and pearls; and when Jerusalem here was grown worse than the nations round about her, yet then she had the blessings of God in great store: so that "all things come alike to all, and no man knoweth love or hatred by all that is before them," Eccles. ix. 1, 2.

If any man should conclude himself a good man, beloved of God, because he gives him many blessings, much of the creature, then may it be said the Sodomites were good men, for they had plenty. If any should say he is an evil man because he wants these, then Lazarus, the apostles, Christ himself, should be so, because they had little or nothing. God gives his outward blessings promiscuously to good and bad, that men may see he is impartial in his outward dispensations: that good men using them well, and honouring him therewith, might increase their comforts and rewards; that evil men abusing them to the service of their lusts, and dishonour of their Giver, might have the deeper condemnation.

Obs. 4. Cities commonly are guilty of great sins. Sodom was a city: 2 Pet. ii. 6, "the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah:" and there were two more, which you have specified in Deut. xxix. 23, together with the other: "Sodom and Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboim, which the Lord overthrew in his anger and wrath." These four cities perished together, and they were full of crying sins, pride, gluttony, idleness, inhumanity, uncleanness, and the like; these sins run through them all: Jude 7, "Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, they gave themselves to fornication, and went after strange flesh."

There were high places and idols in the cities of Samaria, 1 Kings xiii. 32; Isa. x. 10; Hos. viii. 5. The woman of one of the cities of Samaria, that talked with Christ, John iv. was very bitter, lived in uncleanness, and worshipped she knew not what. Babylon was full of cruelty and pride, Jer. 1.; the bloody city, Ezek. xxiv. 6. Nineveh so abounded with sin in Jonah's days, that had they not repented, destruction had been upon them: see Nahum iii. 13. Jerusalem had violence and strife in it; Psal. lv. 9—11, "Mischief, sorrow, and wickedness are in the midst thereof, deceit and guile depart not from her streets:" Zeph. iii. 1—4, she is called the filthy, polluted, oppressing city; her princes were roaring lions, her judges evening wolves, her prophets light and treacherous persons, her priests polluted the sanctuary, and did violence to the law: Ezek. viii. you may read what horrible abominations were in the temple and city; Lam. iv. 13, her prophets and her priests "shed the blood of the just in the midst of her."

Obs. 5. Sinners in time come to a height and impudency of sinning. "They committed abomination before me;" nothing restrained them, not conscience, light of nature, shame amongst men, fear of punishment, spectacles of death, but they go on and sin in the sight and presence of God: Isa. lxvi. 4, "They did evil before mine eyes;" even in the temple, where God dwelt, they sinned, set up idols, and worshipped them. To what a height of sinning did Manasseh come, and the Jews in his days! they did that which was evil in God's sight, and provoked him to anger, 2 Kings xxi. 15. In tract of time sinners become stout, and will contest: Mal. iii. 13, "Your words have been stout against me. Yet ye say, What have we spoken so much against thee? Ye have said, It is in vain to serve God," &c.

Obs. 6. When God brings terrible judgments upon kingdoms, persons, he seeth cause for it. "Therefore I took them away as I saw good." I saw what sinners they were, I came down from heaven, examined the cry of their sins, and saw sufficient cause to make me stretch out my hand, and rain down fire and brimstone upon them. When God drowned the old world, confounded their language, made the earth to swallow up Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, when he sent fiery serpents amongst them, famines, plagues, wars, captivity, he saw cause for all these.

There is never any public or private judgment befalls states, cities, or persons, but the Lord hath great and just cause to do so; if there were no sin, there would be no punishment: Lam. iii. 39, "Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins?"

Obs. 7. We ought to take notice of God's judgments upon sinful places, and to beware of their sins. God doth therefore tell us in his holy word what he hath done to Sodom and other places for that end: this judgment upon Sodom is oft mentioned, Gen. xiii. 10; Isa. i. 9; Lam. iv. 6; Luke xvii. 29; Rom. ix. 29; 2 Pet. ii. 6; Jude 7. And here also, when God threatens to punish sinful persons and places severely, he tells them they shall be made like Sodom, as in Deut. xxix. 23; Isa. xiii. 19; Jer. xlix. 18; 1. 40; Zeph. ii. 9; and in Amos iv. 11, he saith, he had overthrown some of them as he overthrew Sodom. In thirteen places this sore judgment is mentioned, that so we might frequently meet with it, and abhor the sins which brought it upon them. If the sins of Sodom be found in cities, pride, fulness of bread, abundance of idleness, unmercifulness to the poor, uncleanness, they shall have Sodom's judgment, or some equivalent. It may be, we are free from Sodom's sins, and I would we were; but are we not guilty of worse? I fear we are, if we receive not the gospel in the power of it, as Capernaum did not: Christ tells you it shall be easier for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day, &c. Matt. xi.

Ver. 51, 52. Neither hath Samaria committed half of thy sins; but thou hast multiplied thine abominations more than they, and hast justified thy sisters in all thine abominations which thou hast done. Thou also, which hast judged thy sisters, bear thine own shame for thy sins that thou hast committed more abominable than they: they are more righteous than thou: yea, be thou confounded also, and bear thy shame, in that thou hast justified thy sisters.

The scope of these two verses is to convince Jerusalem that she was more wicked than others, than Samaria or Sodom her sisters, and therefore ought proportionably to be confounded and shamed for her abominations.

"Samaria." This was the chief city of the ten tribes, and is here put for the kingdom of Israel, as it is distinct from the kingdom of Judah, and is oft called Israel and Ephraim; and the sins of the Israelites or Ephraimites were exceeding great. Their kingdom was begun in rebellion and idolatry, 1 Kings xii. 19, 28, 29; they rebelled against the house of David, chose Jeroboam to be their king, who set up the golden calves at Dan and Bethel, and drew the people to worship them; he "made priests of the lowest of the people," set up high places, devised feasts and worship of his own, ver. 31—33. And all the kings of Israel were wicked: Ahab so abominably wicked, that none was like unto him, 1 Kings xxi. 25. Jezebel filled the land with wickedness; she caused Naboth to be unjustly accused and stoned to death, chap. xxi. 10; the true prophets were persecuted, eight hundred and fifty false prophets countenanced, chap. xviii.

There was no truth, mercy, or knowledge of God left in the land; swearing, lying, killing, stealing, adultery abounded, Hos. iv. 1, 2; they were profound in slaughtering, chap. v. 2; the priests of Israel were murderers, chap. vi. 9; the pride of Israel was great, chap. vii. 10; they had "deeply corrupted themselves," chap. ix. 9; confederated with the Assyrians and Egyptians, chap. xii. 1; "provoked God to anger most bitterly," ver. 14. They walked in the statutes of the heathen, and of the kings of Israel; they sinned secretly and openly; they set up images and groves on every high hill, under every green tree, burnt incense in all the high places as did the heathen; they rejected the statutes and covenant of God, they left all his commandments; caused their sons and daughters to pass through the fire; they used divination and enchantments, and sold themselves to do evil, 2 Kings xvii. 8—11, 15—17. Now, although the ten tribes, comprised in the word Samaria, were guilty of these and many other sins, yet they were not the half of Jerusalem's sins; "Samaria hath not committed the half of thy sins;" which we are not to account of by arith-metrical proportion, as if Jerusalem's sins for number were more than so many more; but the quality and nature thereof were such, so dreadful, so grievous, clothed with such circumstances and aggravations, that, compared together, and all things considered, those of Sodom and Samaria were not half so bad. The Sodomites had only the light of nature to direct them, the Samaritans had a devised worship forced upon them by Jeroboam, and were held to it by succeeding idolatrous kings; they had not the law, the temple, the ark, the prophets, the true priests, sacrifices, solemn feasts, and good kings, as Jerusalem had, therefore Jerusalem's sins were the greater. Samaria had heard and read of God's heavy judgment upon Sodom, for her wickedness; Jerusalem, besides that, had seen God's dealing with Samaria, that the ten tribes were ruined and carried away into captivity, that she alone was preserved and reserved as God's peculiar; and now for Jerusalem to be ungrateful, to fall into, and to continue in, those sins, for which the Israelites suffered so much, notwithstanding the threats of the prophets; yea, to set up the image of jealousy at the gate of the altar, to picture the forms of all creeping things and abominable beasts, and to portray all the idols of the house of Israel upon the walls of the court, and for the elders to offer incense before them; to place Tammuz in the temple, women to weep for that abominable idol, men therein to worship the sun towards the east, and put the branch to their nose, and fill the land with violence, Ezek. viii.; these things make the Lord to say, that "Samaria committed not half of thy sins, but thou hast multiplied thine abominations more than they;" and, as it is Jer. iii. 5, "Behold, thou hast spoken and done evil things as thou couldst." She was become so wicked, had sinned with so high a hand, that she could not do worse, she exceeded all; Ezek. v. 6, 7, "She hath changed my judgments into wickedness more than the nations, and my statutes more than the countries that are round about her; and multiplied more than the nations," more sins, more aggravations.

"And hast justified thy sisters." Hebrew, התעריקי not, hast made them holy, just, righteous, as the papists do interpret the word when they treat of justification, but by the greatness of thy sins hast declared them to be less sinners than thyself: so Sanctius saith, that justificare in this place is the same with justum ostendere; and Vatablus, justiores te esse ostenderit, thou dost manifest that they are more righteous than thyself; for, set their sins with thine, and the disproportion is so great, that they are not half such sinners as thou art, they seem just in comparison of thee, thy sins are heavy, and theirs are light. This doth not lessen the sins of the Sodomites or Samaritans, or suppose them to be innocent, but only showeth that their sins had not such heinous aggravations as theirs of Jerusalem had.

Ver. 52. "Hast judged thy sisters." Hebrew, כנסת hast pronounced judgment. Saith Montanus, כנס signifies, to pray, to appeal, and it is likely the Latin word, appello, and English, appeal, do come from it; but frequently, to judge. Avenarius saith it is verbum juridicum, and כנסת is, judges, Exod. xxi. 22; Deut. xxxii. 31; Job xxxi. 11. Vatablus saith that pilati signifies in alios decernere sententiam tanquam merito punitos. Thus Jerusalem, when she heard of God's severe proceedings with Sodom, she said, their sins were great, and those judgments deserved; when she saw Samaria besieged, taken, and the ten tribes carried away by Shalmaneser into captivity, she did not pity, but censure them, looking at them as rebels, idolaters, apostates, and persecutors, and so adjudged all those punishments due unto them which they underwent, thinking herself more righteous than they of Sodom or Samaria.

"Bear thine own shame." Hebrew, בלישתך שמי the word for shame notes more than ordinary shame; ignominy, reproach, from בלם which signifies, to be calumniated, to have such words and usage as if one were a dog, or esteemed no better than a dog; hence the word calumnia, calumny; and it is always used in contemptuous, or in an ill sense, as some critics observe; whereas כניז is not, neither notes so deep a shame, reproach, as בלם doth. Jer. xiv. 3, "They were ashamed and confounded." כניז ובהלתי here are both words; one imports, shame, the other, confounding shame, exceeding great shame. Isa. l. 6, "I hid not my face from shame and spitting." When Christ was put to death, you know how ignominiously they used him, scoffing at him, and spitting upon him; they slighted and reproached him to the utmost. The Septuagint renders the word shame in our prophet, βάσανον, torment, because such shame is a torment, a burden.

"Bear thine own shame." The meaning of the phrase is this: Seeing thou hast done shameful things, yea so shameful, as the sins of Samaria and Sodom seem little in respect thereof; now look for and submit unto shameful judgments which I shall bring upon thee. I will bring the Assyrians, they shall discover thy wickedness, strip thee of all thy jewels and ornaments, stone thy children, burn thy habitations, carry thee away captive. I will make thee a reproach and hissing in the open view of all the world, as I did the Sodomites and ten tribes, when I punished them for their abominations; I know it will be very heavy for thee, but, however, "bear thine own shame."

This expression of bearing shame you have it not elsewhere than in this prophet, it is peculiar to him, and frequent. It follows here in this verse again, "be thou confounded, and bear thy shame."

The words being opened, and sense given, we should come to the observations; but before we do that, one query is to be made and answered.

The query is, Seeing that Jerusalem's sins were greater than Sodom's and Samaria's, and they righteous in comparison thereof, why had she not greater punishments than they? Sodom was consumed with fire from heaven; the ten tribes so extirpated and captivated, as that they never returned, or became the Lord's people, to this day: God is just, and the greatest sinners should have the greatest punishments.

To this I answer,

1. That as God would have wholly spared Sodom had there been ten righteous in it, Gen. xviii. 32; so there being many righteous in Jerusalem, who cried for mercy, and bewailed the abominations thereof, the Lord lessened the judgment. That there were many righteous in it, who sighed and cried to the Lord, you may see, Ezek. ix. 6: and if the Lord will divert judgments for their sakes, he may also lessen them.

2. God's judgments upon Jerusalem, all laid together, were greater than the fiery hand of God upon Sodom. The famine, which made the pitiful women to eat their children, Lam. iv. 10, the fathers to eat their sons, and the sons their fathers openly, Ezek. v. 10; the pestilence, the sword, and captivity, were, all things considered, sorer strokes of God upon Jerusalem, than the fire from heaven upon Sodom; and you have divine testimony for it, Lam. iv. 6, "The punishment of the iniquity of the daughter of my people is greater than the punishment of the sin of Sodom, that was overthrown as in a moment, and no hand stayed on her." Sodom's punishment was sharp, but short; Jerusalem's was sharp and long. To kill a man by degrees, by cutting off fingers, toes, ears, arms, legs, is far worse than cutting off the head at once; such was God's dealings with Jerusalem.

3. If the punishment of the ten tribes were greater; for they endured three years' siege, 2 Kings xvii. 5, and were carried away into Assyria, and never returned; I answer, God hath his prerogative to punish sinners with what degree of punishment he please here in this life; he may punish lesser sinners with greater punishments, and greater sinners with lesser punishments, and yet be free from partiality or injustice, because he hath a day to reckon with sinners hereafter, and then will render to them fully according to the merit of their sins: Ezra ix. 13, God punished them less than their iniquities deserved. And if Jerusalem's punishment came short of the ten tribes, the more remained behind, without repentance, and God rendered it in due time: but upon search into the world, it may appear that Jerusalem's punishment was not short, but beyond the ten tribes, Ezek. v. 9—12, God saith there, he will do that in her which he had not done, and whereunto he would not do any more the like. The meaning is, he would punish Jerusalem more and otherwise than he had done Sodom, Samaria, or any other before. God swears there, that he would not spare them, nor have any pity. Samaria was not burned, when taken, and the tribes carried away; but Jerusalem, the temple, and all the holy things in it were burned, and taken away, the people divided into thirds, and each third pursued with judgment.

4. God may show mercy to the greatest sinners, and bring them to a condition of enjoying the greatest privileges, to show the riches of his free grace and mercy; and so he did here those that sinned more than Sodomites or Samaritans; after great sufferings and seventy years' captivity, he brings back to Jerusalem, bestows a new city and temple upon them, with the privileges and ordinances thereof. And besides, we may remember that the promise of return from Babylon was not made to Samaria or the ten tribes after seventy years, but unto Jerusalem, and the two tribes that were left, Jer. xxxix. 10. The ten tribes were gone into captivity before Jeremiah's days; about the sixth year of Hezekiah they were carried away, and Jeremiah prophesied not till the thirteenth year of Josiah, Jer. i. 2, and he was then come to the days and reign of Zedekiah, as appears, chap. xxi. 1; and it was above a hundred and twenty years that the tribes had been then carried away, as is evident upon compute of the years, from the sixth of Hezekiah to the times of Zedekiah; therefore it is said, Ezra i. 5, when the time of return came, that the fathers of Judah and Benjamin rose up to go and build the house of the Lord at Jerusalem. God's promise was given out to show mercy to them, and bring them back, which he did, notwithstanding their great sins, to show his faithfulness and fulness of mercy.

Obs. 1. The sins of one people may be greater than the sins of another; all sins are not equal, nor all sinners equally guilty. Jerusalem's sins exceeded Samaria's and Sodom's, they were not half so great sinners as she was.

The more mercies any people enjoy, the greater are their sins if they answer not those mercies.

Jerusalem was taken from a low, bloody, beggarly, perishing condition; God blessed and multiplied her exceedingly, entered into covenant with her, and took her to be his; he bestowed upon her beauty, honour, renown, wealth, all things desirable; he set her in the midst of the nations, Ezek. v. 5, that all might see what he had done for her. She was the "holy city," Matt. iv. 5, and had those privileges, ordinances, and advantages which no city in the world had; he had often delivered her out of the hands of enemies, especially in the days of Hezekiah, when Sennacherib lay before her with one hundred and eighty-five thousand men, 2 Kings xix. 35. Yea, God had wooed her by his prophets, made many gracious promises to her, watered her, and watched her night and day, Isa. xxvii. 3, done what he could for her, chap. v. 4; and yet she sinned notoriously, excessively against God more than the nations. Those who had not half her mercies, did not commit half her sins; such abominations, lewdness, villainies, were not to be found elsewhere. She sinned wilfully, Jer. xlv. 16, 17; she continued in sin, notwithstanding great means used to reclaim her, Neh. ix. 26; she provoked God to his face, Isa. lxxv. 3; she was insatiable in wickedness, ver. 28, 29 of this chapter; she caused other nations to sin with her, Ezek. xxiii. 16, 17. These and many other aggravations were in her sins; and as the Jews then sinned greater sins than the Sodomites and Samaritans, so Christians now sin greater sins than the Jews did then. Gospel sins are the greatest sins: in the gospel is held out the greatest grace, mercy, and love to sinners; and if these be refused or abused by them, their sins will be exceeding sinful, and it will be more tolerable for Sodomites, Samaritans, Hierosolymites, Ninevites, or any, than for such. Christians' sins will be found the scarlet and unparallelable sins.

Obs. 2. That comparing of sins and sinners together, makes great sins seem little, and great sinners seem righteous.

Sodom's and Samaria's sins were great and grievous; yet compared with Jerusalem's, they seemed little, not half so great or grievous: "Thou hast justified thy sisters, and they are more righteous than thou." Neither of them were little sinners, or had any righteousness; but being laid together, sins and sinners, Jerusalem was transcendently sinful and unrighteous, and they less sinful, less unrighteous. Great things when they are exceeded by greater in view, they seem little; a great house is nothing to a great rock, a great mountain or city; a great river is nothing to the ocean; so a great heap of sins is as nothing to a greater; what is a cartful of dung to a great dunghill? And as it is in quantities, so in qualities: some poisons are so poisonous, so strong, that they kill immediately; others, though more in quantity, yet are longer in producing such an effect, and in comparison they are no poisons; so some sins and sinners compared with others, are as none. Luke xviii. 14, the publican went down to his house justified rather than the Pharisee; this Pharisee compared himself with the publican, and thought himself righteous; but the publican in comparison of him was righteous. There is a righteousness which doth condemn, and there is a sinfulness which doth justify, and both are naught; a pharisaical righteousness damns a man, when a Jerusalem's sinfulness justifies a man. Take heed therefore of comparing yourselves with others who are worse and greater sinners than you, and from thence of framing a righteousness to yourselves notwithstanding. Sodom and Samaria were less sinners, more righteous than Jerusalem, yet you know how God dealt with them, and destruction will be the end of all those who trust to such righteousness.

Obs. 3. Great sinners see not, or forget their own sins, and are apt to censure, judge, and condemn others who are less sinful than themselves, and especially when they are under the hand of God.

Jerusalem, whose iniquities and abominations were incomparable, beyond Sodom's and Samaria's, sees not her own sins, remembers not how she had dealt with her God, her Lord and Husband, but forgets him, Jer. ii. 32; and here judges her sister Samaria, and thought her sins and courses so grievous, so foul, and provoking, that when she was besieged three years, carried into captivity, and suffered sad things, it was well done of the Lord to deal so by her; that she was more wicked than herself or any others. Luke xiii. 1—5, when some out of Galilee were sacrificing, Pilate gave command they should be slain, and so made sacrifices of them; they that saw them brought to such an end, presently judged them to be the greatest sinners of all the Galileans; so those who were slain by the fall of the tower in Siloam: they thought Jerusalem had not greater sins in it; but it was otherwise, Christ told them that they were as great or greater sinners: "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." It is not warrantable to conclude them to be the greatest sinners who are smitten with some heavy hand of God; then Job and Josiah might have been censured to be the greatest sinners of their times. You may observe in human politics, that oft accessories and instruments in plots, treasons, rebellions, and murders, do suffer, when principals escape; and so God sometimes executes judgments upon lesser sinners, and lets others who are greater supervive. Let us instead therefore of judging others, judge ourselves, and fear we are reserved for the like or worse judgments, if we repent not. Jerusalem, who judged her sister to be the greatest of sinners, and justified her by the greatness of her own sins, was reserved for greater judgments, and a worse end, because she repented not.

Obs. 4. It is a shame for those who are guilty of the same or greater sins, to judge others. Jerusalem committed the same sins, and did worse, yet she judged Samaria; and this was her sin and shame: in the Hebrew the words run thus, Thou also bear thy shame, who hast judged thy sisters in thy sins, in which thou hast done abominations more than they. It is a shameful thing to reprove, censure, or judge those who are less sinful than ourselves, and especially being under the hand of God for their sins.

(1.) We justify ourselves in so doing, and step into God's throne.

(2.) We give occasion to the censured to say, Thou hypocrite, pull the beam out of thine own eye, before thou meddle with the mote in mine.

(3.) We condemn ourselves in so doing: Rom. ii. 1, he that doth the same thing, or worse, and judges another, he condemns himself.

(4.) We insult over them, and add affliction to affliction, if they be judged by the Lord.

And all these are matters of shame: he that reproveth or judges others, should be innocent himself.

When the scribes and Pharisees brought and complained unto Christ of the woman taken in adultery, he said unto them, "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her." Christ did not mean simply, he that is without sin, for he knew there were none such living except himself; but he that is without that sin, or sins equivalent, (as they were not, who came to tempt Christ, and get advantage against him, being malicious, and bloodily minded,) let him first throw a stone at her: here-upon being convicted by their own consciences, that they were sinners, and very faulty, they were ashamed, hung down their heads, and went sneaking away, John viii. 9.

Obs. 5. Sin brings shame. "Bear thy shame" for thine iniquities; thou hast sinned, and sinned more than others; thy sins are thy shame, and will bring shame upon thee. What a shame was it to Jerusalem, that she was a greater sinner than Samaria, than Sodom; that she did such things as made the daughters of the Philistines ashamed of her! ver. 27. When Moses was in the mount, this people would have gods to go before them; and the calf being made, what saith the text? Exod. xxxii. 25, "Aaron had made them naked unto their shame amongst their enemies." They were made naked of their ornaments, of God's protection, by this calf, and "changed their glory into the similitude of an ox that eateth grass," Psal. cvi. 20; and this was their shame. When Amnon would have his will upon Tamar, she opposed him with an argument taken from the shame of sin; 2 Sam. xiii. 13, "Whither shall I cause my shame to go? and as for thee, thou shalt be as one of the fools in Israel;" it will be a great reproach unto us both.

The Corinthians' going to law before the unjust, and not taking up the matter among themselves, was their shame, 1 Cor. vi. 1, 5; and chap. xv. 34, "Some have not the knowledge of God; I speak this to their shame." Ignorance is a shame to people, and so is all sin: Rom. vi. 21, the Romans were ashamed of their false worship and sinful lives. Shame is the lackey that waits upon sin, and causeth the conscience to blush as well as the face: Prov. xiv. 34, sin is a reproach to nations.

Obs. 6. Shame in itself, or as it accompanies the judgments of God upon sinners, is a burdensome thing. "Bear thine own shame," reproach, disgrace. Women that are common whores, yet cannot endure to be called so; much less to be used as sometimes they are, carted, pumped, or sent to bridewell. Barrenness in women, because it was a reproach unto them, how burdensome was it of old to them. Rachel was pinched upon this consideration as much as any other, when she said, "Give me children, or else I die," Gen. xxx. 1; for so soon as she had a child, she acknowledged God had taken away her reproach, ver. 23, that was the burden upon her. Psal. lxxix. 20, "Reproach hath broken my heart, and I am full of heaviness." His adversaries did unjustly accuse, slander, and disgrace him, and this lay so heavy, like a mountain or millstone upon him, that it broke his heart, and filled him with heaviness. What did the reproach, then, and shame which came upon his defiling Bathsheba, and murdering Uriah, do? they brake and ground his heart to powder. When men are touched in their reputations, it goeth near them; the burden of dishonour and disgrace is so heavy, that sometimes they will venture their lives in duels and quarrels, and rather die than bear the burden of reproach. Shame and reproach have caused many to make away themselves. Saul, fearing the Philistines would abuse and disgrace him, fell upon his own sword, and slew himself. When this city Jerusalem was laid waste, the inhabitants thereof made a curse, reproach, and hissing among all nations, was it not a torment, a burden, and vexation to them? Ezek. v. 14, 15. Jer. xxiii. 40, "I will bring an everlasting reproach upon you, and a perpetual shame, which shall not be forgotten."

Obs. 7. Sinners must bear the judgments of God, and the shame that is due unto them, whoever they be. "Thou also," even thou Jerusalem, "bear thine own shame." Jerusalem had been the faithful city, Isa. i. 21, but was become a harlot; judgment and righteousness did lodge in her, but now murderers. She had sinned, shamed herself before God and man, and she must bear her burden, bear God's judgments, bear shame before heaven and earth.

Ver. 53—56. When I shall bring again their captivity, the captivity of Sodom and her daughters, and the captivity of Samaria and her daughters, then will I bring again the captivity of thy captives in the midst of them: that thou mayest bear thine own shame, and mayest be confounded in all that thou hast done, in that thou art a comfort unto them. When thy sisters, Sodom and her daughters, shall return to their former estate, and Samaria and her daughters shall return to their former estate, then thou and thy daughters shall return to your former estate. For thy sister Sodom was not mentioned by thy mouth in the day of thy pride.

These verses contain more judgment, and the cause thereof. In them you have,

I. Jerusalem's irrecoverableness of her former estate, in ver. 53, 55, laid down under a double comparison, viz. God's dealings with Sodom and Samaria, and their daughters.

II. The scope and end of God in it, ver. 54, that she might bear her own shame, &c.

III. The causes of this judgment; which are,

1. Her being a comfort to them, ver. 54.

2. Her pride and forgetfulness, ver. 56.

Ver. 53. "When I shall bring again their captivity," &c. Hebrew is, ושבתי את שביהן, Some make this verse, and so the 55th, to be promissory, not minatory; affirming that the Lord here promiseth to show mercy to the captives of Sodom, Samaria, and Jerusalem, and to bring them all back again. But because Sodom and her daughters were utterly destroyed, and they saw not how they could be returned; therefore they labour much to prove, that by Sodom is meant the two tribes and half on the other side Jordan, Reuben, Gad, and half Manasseh; but these are comprehended in Samaria, which was the head city of the ten tribes: and if that should be yielded, the difference between Sodom and her daughters, and Samaria and her daughters, would be great, yet taken away.

Others therefore by Sodom here understand the Moabites and Ammonites, that came from the loins of Lot, who dwelt in Sodom, as appears, Gen. xix. 37, 38. But the Scripture gives no warrant to account these among the Sodomites; rather they should have been called Lothites, or Lottites, seeing they descended from his loins. Besides, the word Sodom is to be taken in its proper and native sense here, as well as Samaria and Jerusalem, and that Sodom to be meant, of which he spake in ver. 49, 50, which was destroyed with her daughters by fire from heaven, and so destroyed that no man can or shall dwell or abide there, Jer. xlix. 18.

Again, if the words do hold out a promise of mercy, it is first to Sodom and her daughters, next to Samaria and hers, and last to Jerusalem and her daughters; so that they must be restored to their former estate before Jerusalem; but neither Sodom nor Samaria were restored before the captivity ended in Babylon. It is clear enough that the words are not a promise of mercy, but a threatening of severity; and it lies thus: When I shall bring again the captivity of Sodom and Samaria, which I will never do, then will I bring again thy captivity. I have destroyed them utterly, and intend not to replant them, but to let them lie in the dark, and abide in captivity; and thy condition shall be like unto theirs.

Some read the words with an interrogation, thus: Shall I bring again their captivity? the captivity of Sodom and her daughters, the captivity of Samaria and her daughters? and shall I bring again the captives? No, I will neither do the one nor the other; thou hast sinned above them, and hast no cause but to expect more rigorous dealings from me than they have had. Piscator, Junius, Polanus read the words conditionally, thus: If I shall return the captivity of Sodom and Samaria, then I will return thine; but it is not in my thoughts, counsels, or purposes to return and restore them, who never provoked me as thou hast done; therefore much less do I intend to do so by thee.

Some take the words ironically: When I restore Sodom and Samaria, then will I restore thee. But they are so destroyed that they are past recovery: I intend never to bring the Sodomites out of the fire, and seat them in Sodom; nor the ten tribes out of captivity, and settle them in Samaria; and no more do I mean to restore thee and thy captives.

Quest. Did not the Lord return the captivity of Jerusalem after seventy years? how is it then true which is said here if this be the sense?

Answe. I. When God threatens them with utter desolation, it is to be meant of the body of people in general, who had apostatized from God as the ten tribes had done, and there was no help left for them; they were destroyed the most of them in the war, famine, plague, captivity; and so not they, but some of their posterity, were restored, and brought back again. God had promised the Jews who came out of Egypt, that they should enter into Canaan; but observe, Numb. xiv. the people murmured, and God told them, ver. 29—31, their carcasses should fall in this wilderness, and all from twenty years old and upward, that none of them but Caleb and Joshua should come into the land: only their little ones, which they said should be a prey, he would bring into it. So here, it was not the body of the people that returned, but some of their posterity. Those Jews who were at Jerusalem when Ezekiel thus prophesied, it is probable were utterly destroyed, and never had their captivity returned.

2. We may understand it of a full return, which never was; though some Jews came back again, yet multitudes staid behind, and continued in Babylon, as may be gathered from Ezra i. 5.

3. Though the Jews were brought back from Babylon, yet never was Jerusalem in that glory as before; neither was her temple, state, or kingly dignity such as formerly. Ezra iii. 12, many wept when they saw the difference between the latter temple and the former.

Ver. 54. Of bearing shame, and being confounded, was spoken in ver. 52.

"In that thou art a comfort to them." Septuagint reads it thus, ἐν τῷ σε παροργίσαι με, in that thou hast provoked me to anger. Jerusalem's sins exceeding the sins of Sodom and Samaria, this justified them. Some refer it to the punishments and judgments of God upon Jerusalem, which was some ease and comfort to Sodom and Samaria, when they saw her in a suffering condition with themselves.

Ver. 55. "When thy sisters, Sodom and her daughters," &c. This verse is the same for substance with ver. 53.

Ver. 56. "Thy sister Sodom was not mentioned," &c. Hebrew is, לֹא שָׁמַעְתָּ בְּכִי, there was no hearing of Sodom in thy mouth. Thou didst neither think nor speak of her and my dealings with her for her sins, that so thou mightest have feared, and not fallen into her sins, or greater.

"In the day of thy pride." Hebrew, בַּיּוֹם גְּאוּנֶיךָ, in the day of thy prides or prosperities. When thou hadst honour, wealth, renown, greatness, and abundance of all things, thy heart was lifted up; thou thoughtest thyself happy and innocent, disdaining to mind or mention Sodom, whom thou contemnedst and slightedst; but thy wickedness is come to such a height that Sodom's sin is little in comparison of thine.

Obs. 1. The sins of people may come to such a height, admit of such dreadful aggravations, as to cause God to cut off all hopes of mercy, and cast them into irrecoverable misery. Jerusalem had so sinned here, provoked God so heinously, that he saith he would sooner bring back the captivity of Sodom and Samaria, than hers; they were cut off and cast into such conditions as were irrecoverable, for less sins, and therefore what could she look for? God would not show her any pity, Ezek. v. 11; vii. 4. Read Jer. xv. 1—6, where you shall find God was so provoked by the sins of this people, that though Moses and Samuel should plead for them, his mind could not be towards them; he would cast them out of his sight, and death, sword, famine, captivity should devour them.

Jer. li. 25, 26, "I am against thee, O destroying mountain: I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain. And they shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations; but thou shalt be desolate for ever." It is spoken of Babylon, whose sins had gotten up to such a height, that the Lord threatened her with irrecoverable ruin: he would deal with this Babylonish state as with a thing burnt to ashes, which is unserviceable, irrecoverable; he would so break the power and state of the Babylonish empire, that it should never recover itself more.

Obs. 2. One great end of God's denying hope of mercy, and casting into irrecoverable misery, is to bring sinners to shame and confusion. God saith he will never return her captivity, that she might bear her own shame, and be confounded in all she had done. You have disgraced the holy temple with your idols, the holy city and land with your violence and bloody crimes, my holy name with your inventions and abominations; therefore when once I have sent you into captivity, you shall not return thence at all, but live in disgrace, perish in what you have done, your estate is hopeless and helpless; you have made me to bear shame, but in your captivity you shall bear shame and reproach enough, even to confusion: Jer. xxii. 22, "Thy lovers shall go into captivity: surely then shalt thou be ashamed and confounded for all thy wickedness."

Obs. 3. Great sinners and great sufferers afford comfort, such as it is, to other sinners and sufferers. Jerusalem was a greater sinner, and, all things considered, a greater sufferer, than Sodom or Samaria; and it is here said, "in that thou art a comfort unto them:" her sins justified their sins, her sufferings justified their sufferings. When cities, republics, or persons do see others to exceed them in sins or punishments, they conceive theirs are the less, and so frame a kind of comfort. Those who are miserable, through sin or punishment, do think it some relief to have companions, equals, or those who go beyond them, especially in the same kind. Mark vi. 11, "It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city." This will be a comfort when that day comes, that any have been worse than they in sinning, and suffer more grievously for their sins. When the Jews in Babylon saw those of Jerusalem brought into the same condition with themselves, to be captives, it eased their hearts. When men suffer alone, it stings. In a storm at sea, if one man be shipwrecked, that afflicts more deeply; but if there be fellows, and those suffering more hard things, it eases in some measure. It will be an ease to thousands at the last day, when they shall see the children of the kingdom cast out into utter darkness, that their sins and punishments exceeded theirs.

Obs. 4. God's blessings, and abundance of creature-comforts, through the corruption that is in man, swells them with pride. Jerusalem had variety of mercies, peace and plenty, and she was pulled up. "In the day of thy pride," Prosperity makes proud, and fills with windy conceits of happiness, and continuance in that happiness. Prov. xviii. 11, "The rich man's wealth is his strong city, and as an high wall in his own conceit;" he thinks himself fenced and guarded so strongly, that he is secure, and despises dangers. Ezek. xxviii. 5, speaking of the prince of Tyrus, the prophet saith, "By thy great wisdom and by thy traffic hast thou increased thy riches, and thine heart is lifted up because of thy riches."

It is a hard matter for men of high estates not to have high minds; therefore Paul counsels Timothy to "charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not highminded," 1 Tim. vi. 17. I have lately spoken of this subject: it was Sodom's sin, Jerusalem's sin; and I shall not insist upon it.

Obs. 5. Proud persons mind not God's dealings with others, though like themselves. Sodom's sin was pride, haughtiness, and for these sins she and her daughters were destroyed with fire from heaven; but Jerusalem in her pride forgets Sodom, and never once names her; "thy sister Sodom was not mentioned by thy mouth." She should have considered God's severity against Sodom for her sins, and seen to it that they had not been found in herself; but plenty bred pride, pride blinded, and made her forgetful of that example of divine vengeance. It was near unto them; the place where Sodom stood was a sulphureous lake, a lively monument of Heaven's displeasure against pride and other sins, Lot's wife turned into a pillar of salt, to season them with fear, yet they took no notice of these things; Isa. v. 12, "They regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of his hands."

Obs. 6. The Lord expects that we should take notice of and improve his judgments upon others. He blames Jerusalem here for not minding Sodom's condition; "thy sister Sodom was not mentioned." God dealt so severely with Sodom, Gomorrah, and the other cities, that all who should hear thereof might be instructed, and fear to offend that God which can at his pleasure rain fire and brimstone. Though judgments were executed long before, yet the Lord would not have men forget them, but keep them fresh in memory, and advantage themselves by them. Jer. vii. 12, "Go to my place which was in Shiloh, where I set my name at the first, and see what I did to it for the wickedness of my people." They had forgotten the judgment of Hophni and Phinehas, and the ark, and therefore he minds them of it. In 1 Sam. iv. 11; Psal. lxxviii. 60; Jer. xxvi. 6, he mentions it unto them.

There are no judgments of God in the world or Scripture, but men ought to mind them, and make use of them. The drowning of the old world, confusion of Babel, seven years' famine in Canaan and Egypt, the ten plagues of Egypt, the fiery serpents in the wilderness, earth opening her mouth and swallowing up Korah, Dathan, and Abiram; the men of Bethshemesh, Sennacherib's army, Jezebel, Ahab and his sons, Baal's priests, Athaliah, Ananias and Sapphira, &c.; these and many others ought to be thought upon to awake our secure spirits, to breed and maintain fear in us, to provoke us to repentance for what is past, and more exact walking for time to come. Luke xvii. 32, "Remember Lot's wife." And 2 Pet. ii. 6, God hath made Sodom and Gomorrah ensamples to "those that after should live ungodly." There is much in the words "that after should live;" what! hath God turned those cities into ashes, set them up as burning beacons, to warn all in the world that they live not ungodly? and shall their very sins be found in cities and families? will any dare to do such things as draw down such judgments? Surely none will; if they do, they must suffer such things for their sins, and hotter fire, yea, more scalding brimstone, because they took not warning by these examples.

Ver. 57, 58. Before thy wickedness was discovered, as at the time of thy reproach of the daughters of Syria, and all that are round about her, the daughters of the Philistines, which despise thee round about. Thou hast borne thy lewdness and thine abominations, saith the Lord.

The prophets had told Jerusalem of her wickedness, but she would take no notice of it: much like strumpets, who though they be the common talk of the world for wickedness, yet because they enjoy their lovers, have pleasure and prosperity, mind not their sin or shame: but when some stroke of God is upon them, then their wickedness appears wickedness indeed, however they think of themselves. The 57th verse sets out Jerusalem's pertinacy and stubbornness.

"Of thy reproach of the daughters of Syria." Hebrew is, of the reproach of the daughters of Aram. Aram was one of the sons of Shem, Gen. x. 22, from whom the Aramites descended, who peopled many places, which therefore are mentioned with distinction: Gen. xxviii. 2, "Padan-aram." 2 Sam. x. 6, "The Syrians of Beth-rehob, and the Syrians of Zoba:" the original is, the Aramites of Beth-rehob, and the Aramites of Zoba. "Aram-naharaim," Psal. lx. title; that is, Aram which was between two rivers, called Mesopotamia, Gen. xxiv. 10. So Aram-maachab, 1 Chron. xix. 6, "Syria-maachab;" the original is, Aram-maachab; and 2 Sam. viii. 5, Aram-dammeseck, which in our translation is, "the Syrians of Damascus." The Septuagint renders the word Aram, Syria constantly, as Mizraim, Egypt, and Cush, Ethiopia; and under the name of Syrians were included also the Mesopotamians, Chaldeans, and Assyrians, as Pliny testifies in the fifth book of his Natural History.

Some refer this time to the days of Ahaz, who was exceedingly wicked. In his reign Rezin king of Syria, 2 Kings xvi. 6, the Edomites and Philistines, invaded the land, and brought Judah low; and Tilgath-pilneser, king of Assyria, whom he sent for to help him, distressed him, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 17—21, and helped him not, though he gave him the gold and silver of the temple, a portion of his own, and of the princes. This was a great reproach, that they were impoverished, disappointed, and spoiled: and in the time of this distress did Ahaz trespass yet more against the Lord.

This did Jerusalem no good, but she sinned more, and so her wickedness was discovered, both former and present. Or thus you may take the sense: Before thy wickedness was discovered by my sending the Syrians and Philistines upon thee, thou didst never take notice of my proceedings with Sodom and her daughters.

"Which despise thee." Hebrew is, הַשֹּׂאֵת מִפְּנֵי from שׂוּ or שָׂו a Chaldee word, which signifies to despise, contemn, disgrace, as also to spoil: or from עָשׂוּ, to prick as with a thorn, and so are either spoilings or despisings, they are as thorns in the sides of those that are spoiled or despised.

Ver. 58. "Thou hast borne thy lewdness." By lewdness here is meant, the punishment of lewdness. In ver. 52, he saith, "bear thy shame;" here, "thou hast borne thy lewdness." She had had a part of her punishment, not all, more was behind than she had received. The Hebrew word for "thou hast borne" is rendered diversely; by some in the future, thou shalt bear; by some in the imperative, bear thou. The context seems to me to call for one of these, either, bear thou thy lewdness; or, thou shalt bear it. The learned do observe, and say, that in the Hebrew tongue off the preter tense is put for the future, and so it is most suitable here; God was bringing of judgments upon her, and saith in the next verse, "I will deal with thee as thou hast done."

Obs. 1. That wickedness is a close and covert thing, it walks masked, and in the dark. "Before thy wickedness was discovered." Jerusalem's wickedness lay hid: chap. viii. 12, "Son of man, hast thou seen what the ancients of the house of Israel do in the dark, every man in the chambers of his imagery?" Sin loves corners and chambers; they that were the chief men in public, were the chief sinners in secret: Isa. xxix. 15, they "seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark;" they would neither be seen of men or God: Job xxiv. 15—17, "The eye of the adulterer waiteth for the twilight, saying, No eye shall see me: and disguiseth his face. In the dark they dig through houses, which they had marked for themselves in the day time: they know not the light. For the morning is to them even as the shadow of death," they are afraid of being discovered.

Men whose deeds are evil hate the light, John iii. 20. Wickedness is a night-bird, and loves darkness, veiling, muffling, secrecy: wicked ones take secret counsel, Psal. lxxiv. 2: and privily lay snares, ver. 5; and secretly murder the innocent, Psal. x. 8; and slander their neighbours, Psal. ci. 5. Paul tells you it is a shame to speak of those things which are done in secret, Eph. v. 12. The greatest mischiefs, treasons, rebellions, murders are hatched in the dark, and covered over with the fairest pretences: wickedness hath a black and ugly face, which if seen, would affrighten men; she therefore appears covered and disguised.

Obs. 2. Wickedness shall not always be veiled and hid. God will reveal and make known the wickedness of men, cities, states, and kingdoms, he will pluck the vizard from their faces, and discover them to the world, how closely soever their sin was contrived and acted. David sinned closely and cunningly, 2 Sam. ii. 12, but God discovered it. The Israelites did secretly those things that were not right against the Lord their God, 2 Kings xvii. 9, and God made them known. Sinful thoughts, counsels, affections, words, actions, gestures have been discovered, Psal. l. 21; Nahum i. 11; James iv. 4; Mal. iii. 15; 1 Kings xxi. 19; Prov. vi. 13. Christ told you long since, "there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; and hid that shall not be known," Matt. x. 26; and before Christ's time, Solomon left it upon record, Eccles. xii. 14, that "God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil."

Let us judge ourselves thoroughly for wickedness committed, that so it may be hid, and take heed for the future that we do evil no more, lest it be discovered to our shame and confusion. You may remember what discoveries God hath made of treasons, murders, plots, and mischiefs in our days; things have been brought to light that lay in deep darkness, and men have wondered at the discoveries: Job xii. 22, "He discovereth deep things out of darkness."

Obs. 3. Times of trouble are times of discovery: when great afflictions are upon sinners, then their wickedness is made known. When the Syrians and Philistines came against Jerusalem and her territories, spoiled and plundered them sorely, then her wickedness appeared: "Before thy wickedness was discovered, as at the time of thy reproach." &c. Somewhat her wickedness was seen before, but not so fully, so greatly, as then. When cities and states have peace, prosperity, they dissemble and cloak their wickedness, and many that know things, are afraid to speak out; but when God's hand is heavy, by war, plague, or other sad judgments, then men will speak freely, and judge of the sins by the punishments: What grievous punishments! there were grievous sins. When Sodom's judgment was so dreadful, it was a proclamation to the world that her sins were answerable. When winter comes, the birds' nests are seen that were hid before; and so, when the winter of affliction comes, the nests of wickedness do appear. When the leprosy clave to Gehazi, it discovered his covetousness, 2 Kings v. 26, 27. Have not the troubles of England discovered the wickedness of England? I believe England never appeared abroad or at home more ulcerous, black, and loathsome, than now.

Obs. 4. Times of warring, plundering, spoiling, are times of reproach. When the Syrians and Philistines warred against the Jews, took Elath, 2 Kings xvi. 6, Beth-shemesh, Ajalon, Gederoth, Shocho, Timnah, Gimzo, with the villages thereof, 2 Chron. xxviii. 18, this was a time of reproach. "As at the time of thy reproach." It was a reproach to have strangers come armed and invade their land, to beat their men of war, to carry away their wealth, to conquer and keep their towns and cities.

Obs. 5. When people are unfaithful with God, and fall to base ways, and unwarrantable courses, it is just with God to leave them to be contemned and despised of all about them.

Jerusalem was not faithful to her God and Husband, but fell to foul courses, dealt unjustly with God and man; and what then? the daughters of the Philistines despised her round about. Those that honour God he will honour, but those that despise him shall be lightly esteemed, 1 Sam. ii. 30.

Jerusalem despised the holy things of God; Ezek. xxii. 8, "Thou hast despised mine holy things:" therefore the Lord caused her to be despised; and so he will any that turn from him after lying vanities. Job xii. 21, "He poureth contempt upon princes;" Psal. cvii. 40, "And causeth them to wander in the wilderness, where there is no way."

Ver. 59. For thus saith the Lord God; I will even deal with thee as thou hast done, which hast despised the oath in breaking the covenant.

This verse is the conclusion of the fifth part of the chapter, which was a declaration of threatening, and contains the sum of all those judgments fore-mentioned. The parts of it are these:

I. A judicial sentence, "I will even deal," &c.

II. The cause of God's so dealing, which is, "despising the oath, and breaking the covenant."

III. The ratification of this judicial sentence, "Thus saith the Lord."

"I will even deal with thee as thou hast done."

Septuagint is, I will do in thee as thou hast done. The Hebrew is, with thee. Thou hast broken the covenant thou madest with me, promising to worship, honour, and obey me, and I will not keep it, who promised to counsel, comfort, and protect thee. Because I entered into covenant with Abraham and your fathers at mount Sinai, you think that whatsoever you do, howsoever you provoke me by your ingratitude, disobedience, idolatries, and apostasies, yet that I am bound by covenant and promise to you, and that there must be performance on my part however things are on your part. But you are deceived; seeing you have first broken with me, I am free, and shall render to you according to your merits: you have sinned excessively, and I will punish you answerably; neither have you cause to blame or censure me as being unfaithful and false, whenas you yourselves are perfidious and covenant-breakers.

"Which hast despised the oath." Hebrew is, בִּיתָּ which is from בָּיַן or בָּוַה to contemn, despise, disdain: and Avenarius makes it to have affinity with בָּוַה to tread under foot, because we tread upon things despised. The Septuagint is, ὡς ἡγρώσας, as thou hast dishonoured, disgraced the oath.

"The oath." Hebrew is, אָוַה which signifies, not simply an oath, but an oath with execration, or cursing: it is such an oath as ties a man to keep promise or covenant, cum imprecatione mali, if he do not, and differs from שָׁבַע־עָוִל which is an oath without imprecation of evil, as you have it, Neh. vi. 18; Deut. vii. 8; Psal. cv. 9. But אָוַה notes swearing with a wishing of evil, as that a man perish, be annihilated, suffer some grievous thing, if he do not perform what he swears: Numb. v. 21, it is called an oath of cursing; and Jer. xlv. 12, "They shall be אָוַה־לָּא for an execration or a curse;" so the verb is used, Judg. xvii. 2; Hos. x. 4; 2 Chron. vi. 22; and when they did swear, it is said, Neh. x. 29, they "entered into a curse," בָּרַכְתִּים and sometimes the curse was expressed, as 1 Sam. xiv. 44, saith Saul, when Jonathan had tasted the honey, "God do so and more also." His meaning is this: I have cursed the man that shall eat any food this day before evening; and seeing thou hast transgressed, God do so to me and more, let me be accursed, let me die the death, if thou die not. The like to this is that of Jezebel, 1 Kings xix. 2, "So let the gods do to me, and more also, if I make not thy life as the life of one of them by to-morrow about this time;" so chap. xx. 10. Sometimes it was implied, as Gen. xiv. 22, 23, "I have lift up mine hand unto the Lord, that I will not take from a thread even to a shoelatchet, and that I will not take any thing that is thine." Now it is implied here, if I do, let the Lord do so and so by me. Psal. xc. 11, "Unto whom I swear in my wrath that they should not enter into my rest;" so it runs in the Hebrew: here is a part of the oath concealed, implied, and not expressed, as thus, If they enter into my rest, let not me live, or let not me be God any longer.

The Septuagint renders אָוַה by ἀνά and κάρᾶρα, malediction and execration: they wished themselves accursed and execrable, if they did not perform what they had sworn. It is the judgment of some, that the curses mentioned in Deut. xxvii. by which the law was established, and unto which they said Amen, are here meant; and doubtless they are, for these curses are pronounced against idolatry, bribery, murder, and other sins; yea, against every man that should not confirm all the words of the law to do them. Now, they did not observe them, but violate them all in a grievous manner, and so despised the oath, that is, the execrations and curses which are called "the curses of the covenant," Deut. xxix. 21.

"In breaking the covenant." God entered into a covenant with his people, ver. 8, and they joined in covenant with him. Exod. xxiv. 7, Moses "took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they said, All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient:" here was a solemn engagement. Deut. xxvi. 17, 18, "Thou hast avouched the Lord this day to be thy God, and to walk in his ways: and the Lord hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people:" here was a mutual avouching and owning one another. And Deut. xxix. 12, the people are said to "enter into covenant with the Lord, and into his oath," which he made with them. This covenant they brake.

The Hebrew word is, לִבְרֵךְ from בָּרַךְ to break; which in Hiphil. is, to weaken, make void, abrogate. Psal. xxxiii. 10, "The Lord bringeth the counsel of the heathen to nought," הִפְרֵךְ he makes them frustrate; δακνείαζου, Septuagint. He scattered and dashed in pieces their counsels. Here in Ezekiel the Septuagint is, παράβηνας, to violate, or transgress. When any thing material is done contrary to agreement, that is a breaking of covenant.

There are some things set down in the word more particularly, which are violations of the covenant; as not circumcising their males, Gen. xvii. 14; idolatry, Deut. xvii. 2, 3; Jesh. xxiii. 16; making a league with the inhabitants of Canaan, Judg. ii. 2, 20; bringing the uncircumcised into the sanctuary, who polluted the worship and ordinances, Ezek. xlv. 7; and the general was, the not observing all things which God had commanded them in the law, Lev. xxvi. 15, 16: if they did not all his commandments, they brake covenant.

This breaking of covenant is set out in the word by several expressions. Sometimes it is called, not continuing in the covenant; as Heb. viii. 9, "They continued not in my covenant:" sometimes unsteadfastness in it; Psal. lxxviii. 37, they were "not steadfast in his covenant:" sometimes forgetting of it; Deut. iv. 23, "Take heed, lest ye forget the covenant" sometimes, yea oft, forsaking of it; as Deut. xxix. 25; Jer. xxii. 9; 1 Kings xix. 10, 14; and transgressing it, Hos. vi. 7; Judg. ii. 20; 2 Kings xviii. 12.

Quest. The Scripture saith, that God is a God which keeps covenant, Nehem. ix. 32; yea, faithful in keeping covenant, Deut. vii. 9, and God saith, he will not suffer his faithfulness to fail, nor break his covenant, nor alter the thing gone out of his lips, Psal. lxxxix. 33, 34: how doth the Lord then say here, "I will deal with thee as thou hast done?" Is not he bound up by his faithfulness and promise to do them good though they fail? according to that in 2 Tim. ii. 13, "If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself."

Ans. 1. If the covenant were made upon conditions, and those not observed, no imputation could be laid upon the Lord if he perform not what was his part. The covenant you may see how it runs in several places; Deut. vii. 9, "The Lord thy God, he is God, the faithful God, which keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him and keep his commandments to a thousand generations; and repayeth them that hate him to their face, to destroy them." All the blessings and cursings, Deut. xxviii. depend upon obedience and disobedience, keeping and breaking covenant, so that the Lord is free to punish if man perform not; Lev. xxvi. 15—17, "If ye will not do all my commandments, but break my covenant, I also will do this unto you; I will even appoint over you terror, consumption, and the burning ague. I will set my face against you, and ye shall be slain before your enemies: they that hate you shall reign over you; and ye shall flee when none pursueth:" so Deut. xxxi. 16, 17, "They will forsake me, and break my covenant. Then my anger shall be kindled against them in that day, and I will forsake them, and I will hide my face from them, and they shall be devoured, and many evils and troubles shall befall them."

2. Though God afflicted them very sorely, and cut off the body of this people by severe judgments, yet he reserved some, continued his faithfulness, kept covenant with them, and manifested his loving-kindness unto them, according to that written, Psal. lxxxix. 28—34. God owned them in Babylon for his people, and dealt like a God in covenant with them there: Ezek. xxxvii. 12, "O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel."

Obs. 1. The tie of a covenant between God and man is a strong tie, it hath the nature of an oath, and an oath is the strongest tie of all. "Thou hast despised the oath in breaking the covenant;" that strong tie of an oath wherewith thou wast bound to me thou hast broken.

God promised unto Abraham to give him and his seed the land of Canaan, Gen. xii. 7; xiii. 15. Chap. xv. 18, it is said, God "made a covenant with Abraham, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land." Now this promise and covenant is called an oath; Gen. xxvi. 3, "I will perform the oath which I swear unto Abraham thy father;" Deut. xxxiv. 4, "This is the land which I swore unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob."

The covenant also which God made with them at mount Sinai is called an oath, Dan. ix. 11. It is so called because of the bindingness of it: a man that enters into covenant with God, is bound as much as if he had taken the most solemn oath. Acts xxiii. 12, they "bound themselves under a curse," or with an oath of execration; as was at the giving out of the law, and making the covenant, Deut. xi. 26—28; they agreed to it, that if they did not do what God commanded, what they covenanted, that the curse should come upon them, Deut. xxvii. when they said "Amen" to the curses; so that there was a strong obligation upon them: hence you have that expression, Ezek. xx. 37, "The bond of the covenant." A wife is not tied more strongly to her husband by the bond of marriage, than a people is unto God by the bond of that covenant they make with him.

God would bring them under the bond of the covenant by those judgments and curses he would pour out upon them, and make them acknowledge him for their God and King, as they did, Dan. ix. 10, 11, We obeyed not the "voice of the Lord our God, to walk in the laws, which he set before us by his servants the prophets. Yea, all Israel have transgressed thy law: therefore the curse is poured upon us, and the oath that is written in the law of Moses."

Obs. 2. Such is the corruption of man, that it violates, frustrates, and makes void the strongest obligations. They brake the covenant, which was a sacred bond, and had the strength of an oath, and bound them under penalty of being cursed. God had set life and death before them, good and evil, Deut. xxx. 15; blessing and cursing, Deut. xi. 26; he had hedged them about with promises, with threats, bound them in a covenant and oath; yet all would not do, such strong bands held them not in, they brake all. God had broken the bands of captivity, Lev. xxvi. 13, and bound them with cords of love, and looked they should have kept close to him; but, Jer. ii. 20, "Of old time I broke thy yoke, burst thy bands; and thou saidst, I will not transgress; when upon every high hill and under every green tree thou wanderest, playing the harlot."

God brake the Egyptian yoke and bonds by a mighty power, and freed them, and they brake his yoke, his bonds, by the mighty power of their corruption, and would rather be in bondage to sin, than in covenant with him; neither was it here and there a man that did so, but it was the body of the people: therefore, Jer. xi. 10, "The house of Israel and the house of Judah have broken my covenant which I made with their fathers;" all Israel and all Judah have done it. Lest God should mistake, he would make trial of those he thought were most likely to have kept his covenant: Jer. v. 5, "I will get me unto the great men, and will speak unto them; for they have known the way of the Lord, and the judgment of their God:" they are in places of authority and honour, and resemble me; they have understanding, knowledge, and time to consider of the covenant, the engagements they are in, the benefits of keeping and evils of breaking it; "but these have altogether broken the yoke, and burst the bonds;" notwithstanding their breeding, the means of knowledge, and many mereies they had above others, and such strong ties to have kept them in bonds; yet they have not regarded me, my commands, threatenings, covenant, or curses. Man's corruption is violent, and will violate all engagements and relations.

Obs. 3. Breaking of the covenant by sinning against God, is a slighting and despising of the threats and curses of God. "Thou hast despised the oath in breaking the covenant."

God hath threatened all sin with woes and curses: see Lev. xxvi. and Deut. xxviii. "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them," Gal. iii. 10; and, "The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men," Rom. i. 18.

Now if men did not slight and despise threatening, wrath, curses, they would not dare to sin, and break covenant with God: they think words are but wind, that threatenings are but scarecrows, having no great matter in them, or, if they have, they will not suddenly come; as Ezek. xii. when the Lord threatened destruction to the prince, people, cities, and the whole land, they slighted all, and said, "The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth," ver. 22; yea, "the vision is for many days to come," ver. 27; and so went on in their sinful ways, and despised the truths of God.

When a man reproacheth and slanders another privily, he despiseth that branch of the oath, "Cursed be he that smiteth his neighbour secretly."

When children set light by their parents, they despise that part of it, "Cursed be he that setteth light by his father or his mother."

When men take bribes, or reward, to pervert justice, they despise that clause of the oath, "Cursed is he that taketh reward to slay an innocent person;" and so of the rest, Deut. xxvii.

Now what presumption and boldness is it in men to despise the oath, break the covenant, of God, presume they shall do well enough though they sin, and continue in sinful ways: Lev. xxvi. 15, "If ye shall despise my statutes, or if your soul abhor my judgments, so that ye will not do all my commandments, but that ye break my covenant;" I will do so and so by you.

Despising of the law is a despising of God, judging both to be little worth. Shall the infinite, wise, great, and glorious God magnify his law, and make it honourable, Isa. xlii. 1; yea, magnify it above all his name, Psal. cxxxviii. 2; and shall sorry, sinful, foolish man slight, contemn the same? shall he despise the oath, and break the covenant?

Obs. 4. See here the admirable justice of God. "I will deal with thee as thou hast done;" thou shalt be judge thyself; is it not equal to do like for like? "Thou hast despised the oath," I will despise thee; thou hast broken the covenant unjustly to sin against me, I will break it justly to punish thee. Marvel not at that expression of God's breaking the covenant; you have in the word that which is equivalent to it, Numb. xiv. 34, "Ye shall know my breach of promise." God had promised them, sworn to them, that they should enter into Canaan; but they brought up an ill report concerning that land, murmured against God, who thereupon told them they should not come into that land, but wander forty years in the wilderness, till their carcases were wasted, and so they should know his breach of promise. Had they made good their promise, he would have made good his promise, but because they brake with him in sinning, he brake with them in punishing, and so here was exact justice; as in our prophet's words also, they brake covenant, and despised the oath, and so made God and his ways contemptible; whereupon God breaks with them, and makes them and their ways despicable: Jer. xxii. 28, "Coniah, a despised broken idol." Lam. i. 8, speaking of Jerusalem, he saith, "All that honoured her despise her;" she was a derision, chap. iii. 14; a reproach, Ezek. v. 14; they said, "Sing us one of the songs of Zion," Psal. cxxxvii. 3; a hissing, Jer. xix. 8; "All that pass by clap their hands at her, hiss, and wag their heads," Lam. ii. 15; a curse, Jer. xlv. 12. They despised the curse God made them.

Obs. 5. Breach of covenant is so provoking a sin as God will certainly punish. "Thus saith the Lord God; I will even deal with thee;" thou hast broken the covenant, and I will not put it up at thy hands. The Lord appeared in a judiciary way, and gave out a judicial sentence, ratifying it with "Thus saith the Lord God:" he is a God of truth and power, and will undoubtedly punish the breach of covenant. God is infinitely beyond all creatures: "The nations" to him "are as a drop of a bucket, the small dust of the balance," Isa. xl. 15; yea, "all nations before him are as nothing, less than nothing, and vanity," ver. 17. What was this nation of the Jews, then, for the great God to mind, and so far to mind, affect, as to take to be his people, to enter into covenant withal, to counsel, comfort, protect, prosper, and exalt with privileges above all the nations in the world? It was no better nor bigger than other nations, but it pleased God to bestow himself and his love upon this people, and to join in covenant with them, the highest favour a people could have; but what did they? they brake covenant with God, left him, the fountain of life, love, mercy, and of all good, fell to other gods, other worship, and went a whoring after the sight of their eyes, the inventions of the nations, and imaginations of their own hearts. This provoked God greatly, and made him say, "Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, and be horribly afraid, be ye very desolate. For my people have committed two evils; they have forsaken me the fountain of living waters, and have hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water," Jer. ii. 12, 13. They violated the covenant, and God would visit for it: Josh. xxiii. 16, "When ye have transgressed the covenant of the Lord your God, which he commanded you; then shall the anger of the Lord be kindled against you, and ye shall perish quickly from off the good land which he hath given unto you." God will make quick work with them: Hos. viii. 1, "He shall come as an eagle against the house of the Lord, because they have transgressed my covenant." Eagles fly swiftly; the eagle was the king of Assyria, who hastened to their destruction. Needs must breach of covenant provoke sorely, when it canseth God to pronounce a curse upon the man that shall do it; Jer. xi. 3. "Thus saith the Lord God of Israel; Cursed be the man that obeyeth not the words of this covenant."

A curse is a consuming thing. Persons, towns, cities, nations consume away, because the curse of God is upon them for breaking covenant with him: Isa. xxiv. 5, 6, "The earth is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate." One place more; Lev. xxvi. 25, "I will bring a sword upon you, that shall avenge the quarrel of my covenant; and when ye are gathered together within your cities, I will send the pestilence among you; and ye shall be delivered into the hand of the enemy." When the covenant is broken, it hath a quarrel with man, pleads against him, calls for vengeance: the original is, נקם ברית; the vengeance of the covenant. As there is much mercy in the covenant if it be kept, so there is much vengeance if it be broken; all the woes and curses mentioned in the book of the law are the vengeance of the covenant; therefore, when the Lord told them by Huldah what he would do for the breach of covenant, he said, "Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the curses that are written in the book which they have read before the king of Judah," 2 Chron. xxxiv. 24.

Ver. 60—63. Nevertheless I will remember my covenant with thee in the days of thy youth, and I will establish unto thee an everlasting covenant. Then thou shalt remember thy ways, and be ashamed, when thou shalt receive thy sisters, thine elder and thy younger; and I will give them unto thee for daughters, but not by thy covenant. And I will establish my covenant with thee; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord: that thou mayest remember, and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more because of thy shame, when I am pacified toward thee for all that thou hast done, saith the Lord God.

We are now come to the sixth and last part of the chapter, which is evangelical, and contains promises of mercy and comfort. Formerly, the prophet had thundered out the threats of God against the multitude and wicked ones; here, he brings forth cordials to refresh the sad hearts and drooping spirits of the saints who were amongst them.

In the words are held out,

- I. Mention of a covenant made, and the time of it, "My covenant with thee in the days of thy youth."
- II. A double promise.
 - I. Of remembering that covenant.
 2. Of establishing an everlasting covenant, ver. 60, 62.
- III. The benefits of the covenant, or effects thereof; which are,
 1. Evangelical repentance; ver. 61, "Then thou shalt remember thy ways, and be ashamed;" ver. 63, "That thou mayest remember," &c.
 2. Reception of her sisters to mercy, the incorporation of Jews and gentiles into one body, which is done by way of gift and free grace; "I will give them unto thee, but not by thy covenant."
 3. Acknowledgment of the Lord; ver. 62, "And thou shalt know that I am the Lord."
 4. Patient submission unto the hand of God; ver. 63, "And never open thy mouth any more."

5. Propitiation or pacification; "When I am pacified toward thee."

Ver. 60. "Nevertheless I will remember my covenant with thee." God properly doth neither remember nor forget; they are human acts: remembrance is an act of the understanding, recollecting the species of things forgotten; and forgetfulness is a separation between the understanding and the species of things, not always an abolition: in these senses neither the one nor the other doth befall God. He is said to remember, when he doth that which demonstrates he hath regard to us; and so, to remember his covenant when he deals with us according to the grace and mercy comprehended in it: Psal. cxi. 12, "The Lord hath been mindful of us: he will bless us:" his blessing is evidence of his mindfulness: Psal. cxxxvi. 23, "Who remembered us in our low estate;" God did that which convinced them that he was mindful of them: so Psal. cxviii. 2, 3, "The Lord hath made known his salvation: his righteousness hath he openly showed. He hath remembered his mercy and truth."

God is said to remember in regard of us, not of himself, Chrysostom, Homily 27, in Genesis, because he makes us to know and remember. When he doth such things as are tokens that he is mindful of his covenant; as when God punisheth, lays his hand heavy upon people; he remembers them and their iniquities: and thus Maldonate carries it here, I will remember my covenant; that is, saith he, I will punish you; for punishments are part of the covenant as well as promises. But although he be right in this, that when God punishes, he remembers men, and makes them remember him, yet he is alone with all interpreters I meet with, in putting that sense here upon the words. They all take them to be meant of a gracious remembrance of his covenant; I will remember my covenant; I showed thee much kindness then, and I will again show thee kindness.

"My covenant." I spake largely of the word berith, whence it was derived, and of the nature of a covenant, in ver. 8. He saith here, not the covenant, but "my covenant;" he was principal in it, he swore and entered into covenant with them.

"In the days of thy youth." When thou wast in Abraham's family and loins, or when thou wast brought out of Egypt, and wanderest in the wilderness at mount Sinai, I made a covenant with thee, being newly come out of the house of bondage.

"I will establish." Hebrew is, אקיים, I will confirm. You have the same word, Isa. xxix. 3, and it is translated, "I will raise forts against thee." Septuagint is, ἀναστήσω, you have broken, nullified the covenant what lies in you, but I will raise it up again, and put life and power into it, make it firm and stable.

"An everlasting covenant." Hebrew is, ברית עולם, Septuagint, εὐαγγέλιον αἰώνιον, an eternal testament. What covenant this was is to be opened. When this people had so grievously sinned, as to be in a great part ruined, and the rest sent into captivity, to outward view God seemed to have no people; the promise made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, that in their seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed, seemed to be void, and the covenant made between God and them at mount Sinai wholly dissolved: but however things appeared, it was otherwise: God minded his covenant, and would establish it with the remnant of them, and make additions of more grace and mercy to it; before, he gave them the law in tables of stone; now, he would write it in their hearts, and give them power to keep it. In Jer. xxxi. 31—34, you have the covenant set down which our prophet here means, and it is called a "new covenant," because of the new addition and new administrations: not that the substance of it is altered; it is the same law which is written in the hearts of those God makes his covenant with as was written in the tables of stone. It is again mentioned in Heb. viii. 10—12. That covenant at mount Sinai some make to be mixed partly of works, and partly of grace; some looked for life and justification by it, but therein it was faulty and weak: see Rom. ix. 31, 32; Gal. iii. 21; Rom. iii. 20; chap. viii. 3: and so far as it comprehended aught of the covenant of works, it was antiquated, and more grace added, Christ and the gospel brought in more clearly and fully.

Obs. 1. Although God's people sin greatly, break covenant with him, meet with sad judgments, yet he will spare some of them, and show mercy to them. Jerusalem had grievously sinned, despised the oath, broken covenant, deserved as ill at God's hands as could be; but what saith God? "Nevertheless I will," &c. However the people of God sin, however he deal with them for a season, yet he will not altogether take mercy from them. Judg. ii. 13, "They forsook the Lord and served Baal and Ashtaroth: whereupon God sold them into the hands of their enemies round about: God was against them for evil, and they were greatly distressed." Ver. 16, "Nevertheless the Lord raised up judges, which delivered them out of the hand of their spoilers." Psal. cvi. 7, 8, "They understood not the works of God in Egypt, nor remembered the multitude of his mercies, but provoked him at the sea, even at the Red sea. Nevertheless he saved them for his name's sake." Psal. lxxxix. 31—33, "If they break my statutes, and keep not my commandments; I will visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes. Nevertheless my loving-kindness will I not utterly take from you." Isa. lvii. 17, 18, "For the iniquity of his covetousness was I wroth, and smote him: I hid me, and was wroth, and he went on forwardly in the way of his heart." This was bad enough; and, though God hid himself, yet he saw what he did: "I have seen his ways," cross, perverse, provoking: "nevertheless I will heal him also, and restore comforts unto him."

This sets out the glory and greatness of divine mercy. Are a people rich in sinning? God is rich in mercy; are their sins great? his mercies are greater; are their sins old? his mercies are from everlasting. Let not sour, hard, sinking thoughts lodge in our breasts, whatever our sins have been. Psal. cxlviii. 11, "The Lord hath pleasure in those that hope in his mercy."

Obs. 2. However men forget their promises, covenants, yea, break them; yet God will not forget his promises, his covenant. "I will remember my covenant." Though man had a strict charge not to forget the covenant, Deut. iv. 23, "Take heed unto yourselves, lest ye forget the covenant of the Lord your God," yet he forgot it: yet God doth not so, he is a God who forgets not covenant, ver. 31; he is mindful of it, Psal. cxi. 5; he keeps covenant, 2 Chron. vi. 14; he remembers it for ever, Psal. cv. 8. Men are deceitful, lying, vain things; Psal. lxxii. 9, "Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie;" but God is real, faithful, and true; hence it is said, Deut. vii. 9, "The faithful God, which keepeth covenant;" Titus i. 2, "God, that cannot lie, promised;" and 2 Tim. ii. 13, "If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful; he cannot deny himself." However the creature prove, God doth things upon the account of his faithfulness: 1 Thess. v. 24, "Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it"

Solomon justifies God in this point of his faithfulness observably: 1 Kings viii. 56, "Blessed be the Lord, which hath given rest unto his people Israel, according to all that he promised: there hath not failed one word of all his good promise which he promised by the hand of Moses his servant. So, in Josh. xxiii. 14, saith he, "I am going the way of all the earth: and ye know in all your hearts and in all your souls, that not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God spake concerning you; all are come to pass unto you."

Therefore doubting of God's performance is a great sin; to distrust him who cannot fail us or deceive us is intolerable. We apprehend it so through weakness of grace and strength of corruption: Psal. lxxxix. 39, "Thou hast made void the covenant of thy servant;" because things went ill, the church was sorely afflicted, and many suffered hard things, he thought so. God had told David a little before, that he would not suffer his faithfulness to fail. Psal. lxxvii. 8, saith Asaph, "Is his mercy clean gone? doth his promise fail for evermore?"

Let us trust in the Lord for ever, and trust perfectly; he is a God of truth, remembers his covenant: Psal. cxlvi. 5, "Happy is he whose hope is in the Lord," &c.

It should be encouragement to prayer. Psal. lxxxix. 49, "Lord, where are thy former loving-kindnesses, which thou swarest unto David in thy truth?" Psal. lxxiv. 20, "Have respect unto the covenant: for the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty:" the covenant with Abraham, Isaac, &c. Abraham is father of all the faithful now; and we may press God with the covenant, as David, "for the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty."

Obs. 3. Mercies come from God to a people through the covenant, or for the covenant's sake. Had not the Lord been in covenant with this people, he would have minded them no more than other nations; but because he had made a covenant with them in the days of their youth, therefore he would show mercy, do for them: 2 Kings xiii. 23, "The Lord was gracious unto them, and had respect unto them, and compassion on them, because of his covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob." Though they were very wicked, murmuring, provoked God many ways, yet, for his covenant sake, he did show them kindness. Psal. cv. 9, he gave them quails, water out of the rock: and why? did they deserve it? no; "for he remembered his holy promise, and Abraham his servant." Moses knew this, and therefore when the people had sinned, so as that God was resolved to destroy them, Exod. xxxii. (the calf, &c.) ver. 13, he sets upon God with this argument: "Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, thy servants, to whom thou swarest by thine ownself." As it is a great condescension in God to make covenant with any, so it is unspeakable mercy to those that are in covenant with him.

Obs. 4. When a covenant is shaken, broken, fallen to the earth, and nulled on man's part, God can raise it up again. "I will establish." Jerusalem had sinned, suffered grievous things, was carried into Babylon, abode there seventy years, and lay buried as in a grave, the Jews were even out of hope; Ezek. xxxvii. 11, "Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost; and we are cut off for our parts." But in the next verse, saith God, "O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of them, and bring you into the land of Israel."

Obs. 5. When God doth renew the covenant with his people, he makes some comfortable or gracious additions; as when a house, town, or city are repaired or new built, some enlargements or beautifyings there are, which were not before; so here, "I will establish to thee an everlasting covenant." The covenant before, they brake: but this was a covenant they should not break, Jer. xxxi. 32; therefore this covenant is said, Heb. vii. 6, to be "a better covenant, and established upon better promises." The promises are: "That he will write his law in their hearts;" "That all shall know him from," &c.; "That he will forgive their iniquity, and remember their sin no more." These promises are better:

(1.) More spiritual.

(2.) More free without conditions.

(3.) More extensive.

Second editions have additions. Adam had the promise. Abraham more fully, &c. "with an oath."

Obs. 6. God doth all here upon the account of his own good pleasure; "I will remember," "I will establish."

What saw God now in Jerusalem to cause or incline him to renew the covenant? She had despised the oath, broken the covenant, run out to excessive idolatry; yet, saith God, "I will," &c. Isa. xliii. 25. "I am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake," not their sakes. 1 John ii. 12, "I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake." "A new heart will I give you, a new spirit will I put within you. I will put my spirit within you," &c. Ezek. xxxvi. 26, 27.

Ver. 61. Then thou shalt remember thy ways, and be ashamed, when thou shalt receive thy sisters, thine elder and thy younger: and I will give them unto thee for daughters, but not by thy covenant.

God having renewed and established the covenant with Jerusalem, yea, an everlasting covenant, here begin the benefits and fruits thereof; which are,

I. Remembrance of her ways, and shame upon it.

II. Reception of her sisters, "elder, younger," amplified,

1. From the true ground and cause thereof, God's free grace, "I will give," &c.

2. By removal of a supposed and false ground, "not by thy covenant."

"Thou shalt remember thy ways." It imports more than a bare remembrance; for the word זכר as Avenarius observes, signifies reservare et revolvare in corde, to keep and roll a thing up and down in the mind, so as thereby to be stirred up to the avoiding of evil, or doing good. Psal. exix. 55, "I have remembered thy name, O Lord, in the night, and have kept thy law;" Exod. xx. 8, "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy;" that is, so muse, meditate on it, as to be stirred up thereby to do those holy duties belonging to it. So here, "Thou shalt remember thy ways;" so think of, consider, and mind them, as to be stirred up thereby to renounce them, and turn from them; suitable to that of David, Psal. exix. 59, "I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies." It was an efficacious thinking on them.

"Thy ways." The Hebrew word דרך signifies, a path which leads from place to place, which men do walk in; and metaphorically, it is applied to the customs, manners, actions, religions, and lives of men. Jer. x. 2, "Learn not the ways of the heathen," that is, their customs and manners. Prov. i. 19, "So are the ways of every one that is greedy of gain;" that is, their actions. 2 Chron. xxviii. 2, "Ahaz walked in the ways of the kings of Israel, and made also molten images for Baalim;" that is, he did idolatrously, his religion and worship was as theirs were. Prov. iv. 19, "The way of the wicked is as darkness;" that is, their lives and conversations are as darkness. The ways of sinners in the word are said to be crooked, Psal. cxxv. 5; stubborn, Judg. ii. 19; false, Psal. cxix. 104; grievous, Psal. x. 5; pernicious, 2 Pet. ii. 2. Jerusalem's ways had been crooked, stubborn, false, grievous, pernicious, and these she should remember.

"Be ashamed." The Hebrew is, תכלמת shall blush. The word כלם I opened in ver. 52, when I spake of those words, "bear thine own shame." The Septuagint is, ἐξετιμωθήσῃ, which Kircker renders despicies, thou shalt despise thy ways; but Stephanus in Thesaur. saith it is, prorsus et penitus infamia notare, utterly and thoroughly to brand and infamize; yea, infamit et ignominiosa damnatione plectere, to sentence and punish in an infamous and reproachful way. So should Jerusalem, upon serious remembrance of her ways, she should utterly renounce them, brand them, yea, shame and condemn herself for them, as not worthy to live.

"When thou shalt receive thy sisters." Hebrew is, in thy receiving; there is no "when." Here the calling and incorporation of the gentiles into the church is presented to consideration, of which much had been said and promised of old. That in Gen. ix. 27, falls in here; "God shall enlarge Japheth, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem." The posterity of Japheth spread over many parts, and became heathenish; but God in his time did bring them into the tents of Shem, that was, the church; by the sweet voice of the gospel they were wrought upon, and brought in. The promise was to Abraham, that in him and his seed all the families and nations of the earth should be blessed, Gen. xii. 3; xviii. 18; xxii. 18. The heathen were promised Christ for his inheritance, Psal. ii. 8. Isaiah makes frequent mention of the calling and coming in of the gentiles, chap. liv. throughout; xlii. 4: lx. 3-5, &c. "The gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising. Thy sons shall come from far, and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side. The abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee, the forces of the gentiles shall come unto thee," &c. This was made good in Christ's time, and after; when the apostles, who were Jews, preached the gospel, converted some out of several nations, and received them into the christian church.

"Thy sisters." The nations were sisters to the Jews, coming from the posterity of Noah, as the Jews did: or here they may be called sisters, for their likeness in qualities and conditions; Jerusalem was very wicked, and so were the nations. Upon this account you may take that expression, Jer. iii. 7, 8, "Her treacherous sister Judah;" Judah was like Israel in treachery and apostasy from God.

"Thine elder and thy younger." Not Sodom and Samaria, unless taken synecdochically for all the rest. Sodom was not, and Samaria, by which is meant the ten tribes, to this day is not come in to the christian Jerusalem: we must therefore include the nations. The words "elder and younger," in the original are, the greater and lesser, קטנות הגדולות. Those nations that are greater in extent, in people, in honour, in wealth; or less than thyself, that were before thee, or since thee; when thou shalt receive them.

"I will give them unto thee for daughters." Thou shalt by the preaching of the gospel beget them unto thee. In Jerusalem was the first christian church, which consisted most of Jews; and when any were converted in Jerusalem, they were added to that church, Acts ii. 41, 47. Hence Jerusalem had the honour to be called the primitive church. Yea, the christian church is called Jerusalem, and said to be "the mother of us all," Gal. iv. 26. All converted nations or persons are the daughters of the christian Jerusalem.

"But not by thy covenant." Lest thou shouldst think it is for thy faithfulness, holiness, obedience that I do this, I tell thee I will do it, "but not by thy covenant;" which, as thou didst carry it, gendered unto bondage, and made the very sons servants, Gal. iv. 1—3, 24. Thou shalt have daughters, but not ex vi testamenti veteris, but ex vi pacti mei, by virtue of my covenant made with Abraham; not by the law of works, but by the law of faith; faith in Christ the promised Seed, who is called a Father, Isa. ix. 6, and acknowledges the children which God had given him, Heb. ii. 13, "Behold I and the children which God hath given me." So that thy covenant doth nothing herein, but all this shall be done by the covenant of grace.

Obs. 1. The love, kindness, and mercy of God, is that which causeth a sinful, guilty, unfaithful people to remember their ways, and turn from them. Saith God in the words immediately before, "I will establish unto thee an everlasting covenant," show thee much kindness and mercy; and "then thou shalt remember thy ways;" then thy heart shall melt, break within thee, and renounce the ways thou hast walked in. Ezek. xxxvi. 24—31, God would gather them from the heathen, plant them in their own land, cleanse them from their filthiness and idols, give them new hearts, new spirits, be their God, own them for his people, multiply their corn and fruit: and what upon all this? "Then shall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and shall loathe yourselves in your own sight for your iniquities and for your abominations." When God did let out love, show kindness, and multiply mercy, then did they remember to purpose their evil ways, how they had profaned his name, his sanctuary, rejected his counsel, his ordinances, his prophets; despised his threatenings, broken covenant, apostatized from him, turned idolaters, became heathenish, yea worse than heathenish, and loathed themselves for such things.

Undeserved or unexpected kindnesses do work upon the hearts of men who have any ingenuity in them; they are coals of fire, and will warm, yea thaw a frozen, icy heart. Prov. xxv. 21, 22, "If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat; and if he be thirsty, give him water to drink: for" in so doing "thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head:" thy kindnesses will work in his head and heart, make him reason thus; Why should I think, speak, or do evil to this man who is so loving, who relieves me in my necessities, and preserves my life? ah, what a wretch was I that had such hard thoughts, spake such bitter words, and did so ill by him! I will never think, speak, or do so more. Here are coals upon his head and heart, that have warmed and melted him to good purpose. If man's kindness prove such coals, how much more will the Lord's! When he heaps kindness upon a people unexpectedly, undeservedly, they will be coals of juniper, causing a flame in their bosoms, making them to say, Ah, what have we done! how have we sinned against a God of love, against mercy, against grace! we will do it no more. Ezek. vi. 9, "They that escape of you shall remember me among the nations whither they shall be carried captives, and they shall loathe themselves for the evils which they have committed." When God did give them their lives for a prey, which was a great mercy, this affected them, caused them to remember how they had sinned against God, and to loathe themselves for what they had done. If common mercies will do this, much more covenant mercies, which was the case here. So when Christ looked upon Peter, how did it affect and break his heart, make him go out and weep bitterly for what he had done, Luke xxii. 61, 62. It was a covenant look, such a look as had influence into his heart, and made him to think, with himself; What! will the Lord Christ vouchsafe to look upon me, who denied him to be my Lord and Master, who denied that I knew him, who forswore him? will he yet mind me? Ah, wretch, that, &c.

Obs. 2. Former ways are matter of shame to true converts and penitents. "Thou shalt remember thy ways, and be ashamed;" not only because she had wounded her honour, her conscience, but especially because she had broken covenant with her God, violated his law, defiled his worship, and stained his glory. That which causeth shame is something evil and naught properly, things forbidden, dishonest, dishonourable. Rom. vi. 21, "What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed?" When the Romans were converted to the faith, they were ashamed of their former ways, those sins mentioned, chap. i. 29—31. When grace hath got possession of the heart, such a deformity is seen in men's former ways, that their blood appears in their cheeks, and they are greatly ashamed of them. Jer. xxxi. 19, "After that I was turned, I repented; and after that I was instructed, I smote upon my thigh: I was ashamed, yea, even confounded, because I did bear the reproach of my youth." After Ephraim was converted, became truly penitent, then Ephraim's sins were burdensome, shameful, and confounding. When men are changed by grace, then they loathe their sins and themselves: Ezek. xx. 42, 43, they should know God, and remember their ways, and loathe themselves in their own sight for all the evils that they had committed; every sin would be matter of shame and self-abhorrence: they should loathe themselves, not for evil to come upon them, but for evil done by them, for the evil of sin.

Obs. 3. The church under Christ and the gospel, is of larger extent than that under Moses and the law. The church was then shut up under the narrow bounds of Judea or the holy land, but since it is enlarged to other nations: In thy receiving thy sisters, the greater and the lesser.

The gentiles were a long time aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenant of promise; they were sisters, but not espoused or married till Christ's time; Jerusalem was taken in to be the Lord's, but not the gentiles. Cant. viii. 8, "We have a little sister, and she hath no breasts; what shall we do for our sister when she shall be spoken for?" Here the church, by a prophetic eye, seeing what should befall the gentiles, that they should be spoken for, and taken in by Christ; or spoken against, when taken in, (for she will bear both,) calls her sister, and a sister without breasts; she had no means of grace, which are breasts, and breasts of consolation, Isa. lxvi. 11; but, however, a sister she was, and "what shall we do for her?" The Jewish church minded the gentiles, and had it in her thoughts to do for her; why? she was a sister; yet not a daughter: when it pleased God actually to bring in the nations to Christ, then they were Jerusalem's daughters. Some were formerly received in from the gentiles, who were neither called daughters nor brethren, but strangers, Exod. xii. 48, and these were few; but in Christ's time the partition-wall was broken down, and they came flocking in "as doves to their windows," Isa. lx. 8; and they were no longer "strangers and foreigners, and fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God," Eph. ii. 19; and Jerusalem was the mother of them all. So that was made good, Isa. lxvi. 18, "It shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come, and see my glory;" my glory in Christ, my glory in the gospel. Read Isa. liv. 23.

Obs. 4. The coming in of the gentiles, as it was of special grace and favour, so most certain, infallible. It notes a powerful giving; John vi. 37, "I will give them to thee;" he saith not, they will come to thee, others will bring them; no, but "I will give them." God would work upon them by his word and Spirit, and cause them, being given, to come in. God had given the gentiles to Christ long before, Psal. ii. 8; and though they minded not prophecies, promises, Christ, gospel, Jerusalem, themselves, or their own good; yet God minded them; and as he had freely given them, so freely brought them in, and powerfully. Hence these expressions: Psal. lxxii. 14, "All kings shall fall down before him; all nations shall serve him." Psal. lxxxvi. 9, "All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O Lord, and shall glorify thy name." Isa. xi. 10, "In that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the gentiles seek; and his rest shall be glorious." While Christ lay in the sacrifices and ceremonies, in the prophecies and promises, he was a dark, hidden thing, like a root under ground; but when God sent him into the world, then he was as an ensign lifted up; then he caused the gentiles to see him, and seek to him, and Jerusalem, the place of his rest, was glorious. Isa. xlix. 20, 21, Zion should have so many children come in from the nations, that she should say, "Who hath begotten me these?" It was the Lord begot them by the power of his Spirit, he made them to run unto Christ, Isa. lv. 5. Read the 60th of Isaiah; consider and observe the conclusion, "I the Lord will hasten it in his time." And he did so, pouring out his Spirit upon the apostles, whom he sent abroad into the nations to preach Christ and the gospel, to bring all their brethren for an offering unto the Lord, out of all nations, unto his holy mountain Jerusalem, (that was, the christian church,) Isa. lxvi. 20. So the kingdom was given to the gentiles, Matt. xxi. 43, &c.; they made subjects of Christ, and that fulfilled which you have in Psal. xxii. 30, 31, "A seed shall serve him; it shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation. They shall come, and shall declare his righteousness unto a people that shall be born;" that he hath done this: the Lord did it, and that powerfully; nothing could hinder, neither ignorance, profaneness, nor unbelief.

Obs. 5. When nations or any people receive the gospel of Christ, they have a new relation put upon them, they are daughters of Jerusalem; not Jerusalem in a literal or carnal notion, but of Jerusalem in a spiritual and mystical sense, as it notes out the church, which is the spouse of Christ and God, Hos. ii. 19, 20; 2 Cor. xi. 2. Eph. v. 32. Christ and the church are a great mystery. Rev. xix. 7, the church is called the "Lamb's wife;" so chap. xxi. 9: and she is the mother of the faithful, as Abraham was the father of them; for she brings forth, and with difficulty. Rev. xii. 2, the woman clothed with the sun, viz. the christian church, was with child, fell into labour, and was pained to be delivered; and when any are born of the Spirit, and immortal seed of the word, they are her children, and their privileges are great: I will name two.

(1.) God will be their teacher: Isa. liv. 13, "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord;" and, "who teacheth like him?" Job xxxvi. 22.

(2.) They shall have peace, yea, great peace: "Great shall be the peace of thy children," Isa. liv. 13. Psal. exix. 165, "Great peace have they which love thy law, and nothing shall offend them:" they are taught of God, and cannot but love the law of God. Therefore let us walk as children of God; 1 Pet. i. 14, 15, as obedient children, not fashioning ourselves according to our former lusts, in our ignorance; but as he which hath called us is holy, so let us be holy in all manner of conversation. It is an honour to be a son or daughter of Zion: Psal. lxxxvii. 5, "Of Zion it shall be said, This and that man was born in her."

Obs. 6. When holy things are abused, many times, God owns them not, but calls them theirs that have abused them; as here, "thy covenant." Jerusalem had broken the oath, and despised the covenant, and God calls it her covenant. Isa. i. 11, 14, "To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices. Your new moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth."

Obs. 7. People are apt to think, who are in relation to God, that for their sakes God doth much. Jerusalem was near unto God, he had taken her to be his; and she thought when the gentiles should be given in to her for daughters, it was for her sake; but the Lord says, No, it is not for thy sake; thou hast not kept covenant with me, nor pleased me; thou couldst not challenge any such thing at my hands, hadst thou walked never so exactly, much less now, having walked contrary unto me; it is not for thy covenant. When God showed mercy to the Jews, Ezek. xxxvi. 32, "Not for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord God, be it known unto you;" you may think it is so, but it is otherwise.

Obs. 8. Not legal, but evangelical dispensations, tenders of free grace and mercy by Jesus Christ, wrought upon the gentiles. It was Christ, not Moses, prevailed with them. The commission was, Mark xvi. 15, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." The gospel is the seed of faith; the way in which the Spirit is given, 2 Cor. iii. 8; "word of grace," Acts xx. 32; "grace of God," Titus ii. 11; "word of life," Phil. ii. 16; "power of God to salvation," Rom. i. 16.

Ver. 62, 63. And I will establish my covenant with thee: and thou shalt know that I am the Lord: that thou mayest remember, and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more because of thy shame, when I am pacified toward thee for all that thou hast done, saith the Lord God.

The former verse contained two benefits of the covenant established with Jerusalem after her breach of covenant. These verses tell you of more, which we shall open to you, and finish the chapter.

"I will establish my covenant with thee." Of establishing or raising up the covenant was spoken in ver. 60, and therefore I shall not insist upon that; only note, the repetition of it argues our backwardness to believe it, and God's readiness to assure us of it. Men once sensible of breach with God, are not easily induced to believe that God will bestow great mercies upon them, to make a covenant with them, and to bestow covenant mercies: the Lord therefore, out of his abundant goodness, doubles the promise of making and establishing his covenant with Jerusalem, that so her fears, doubts, and disputes may cease, and she be ascertained thereof.

"Thou shalt know that I am the Lord." The Hebrew word יָדָע signifies to know, to acknowledge, to understand, to be certain, and properly refers to the mind and understanding: Gen. xlviii. 19, "I know it, I know it;" that is, I certainly know it. The Septuagint, for the word here, saith, ἐπιγνώση, thou shalt acknowledge that I am the Lord.

The knowledge here meant is not common knowledge, but a saving knowledge; not a legal, but an evangelical knowledge; for he speaks not of that knowledge which arises from afflictions and judgments, of which he had oft spoken before. Chap. vi. 7, 13; vii. 4, 9; xi. 10, 12; xii. 20; xiii. 9, 14, 21, 23; xiv. 8; xv. 7; thirteen times the Lord saith, they should know that he was the Lord, that it was by his judgments: but here he speaks of such knowledge as springs from a fountain and foundation of mercy. "I will establish my covenant with thee, and thou shalt know me;" that is, in another manner than thou didst before; thou shalt know me spiritually, with a knowledge of faith and salvation: so much the word know imports in John vii. 17; x. 4. Now this knowledge differs from vulgar, legal, and literal knowledge; for,

1. It is a more distinct knowledge of God; human is more mixed, dark, and confused. Job x. 22, "The light is as darkness:" every ungodly man's light is darkness: but he who hath light from God in covenant, his light is clear. Prov. xiii. 9, "The light of the righteous rejoiceth;" if it were confused and obscure, it would not rejoice. James iii. 17, "The wisdom from above is pure;" and the more pure, the more clear, the more distinct.

2. It is a savoury, relishing knowledge, the soul is affected with it; "Taste and see that the Lord is good." No meat, no wine, no spice tastes more pleasant to the palate of a man, than the goodness of God doth to a man who hath the spiritual knowledge thereof. Tasting notes knowledge and experience: Prov. xxxi. 18, "She perceiveth that her merchandise is good:" the Hebrew word is, she tasteth; the gain of her labour is pleasant and delightful. Exod. xvi. 31, manna had a taste like wafers made of honey. The true knowledge and taste of God is as sweet as any gain, as ever manna was: Cant. ii. 3, "His fruit was sweet to my taste;" and his knowledge hath a savour in it, 2 Cor. ii. 14.

3. It is a deep-rooted and well-settled knowledge. Job xxxviii. 36, "Who hath put wisdom in the inward parts? or who hath given understanding to the heart?" the Lord doth it to those he strikes his covenant with; "Thou shalt know me;" thou shalt have a deeper and more rooted and settled knowledge than others. 2 Cor. iv. 6, "God, who commanded light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts:" not in our heads only, not on our hearts only, but in our hearts. God seats the knowledge of himself in the hearts of his people; he puts and writes his law in their hearts, Jer. xxxi. 33. Wicked men have knowledge and light in their heads, but darkness in their hearts.

4. It is a knowledge distinguishable from other knowledge by the effects.

(1.) It is peaceable, and causeth men to live peaceably: James iii. 17, "The wisdom from above is pure and peaceable." Isa. xi. 9, "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord." When men know God savingly, they love peace, and pursue peace; but when knowledge is literal, they are contentious and bitter.

(2.) It humbleth much; the more men know God in his holiness, glory, and goodness, the more humble they will be. Ezek. xx. 42, 43, "Ye shall know that I am the Lord, and remember your ways and doings: and ye shall loathe yourselves in your own sight for all your evils that ye have done." When Job had a clear and spiritual sight of God, he abhorred himself in dust and ashes, chap. xlii. 5. So Isa. vi. 5, "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." See 1 Cor. xv. 8, 9.

(3.) It is working and powerful; like fire, it consumes the lusts of men's hearts, and separates the dross of their spirits. 1 Pet. i. 22, the truth purified their souls. Psal. cxix. 34, "Give me understanding, and I shall keep thy law; yea, I shall observe it with my whole heart." Divine knowledge keeps under what hinders practice, and leads out the soul to action. 1 John ii. 4, "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." Men have not the true knowledge of God when their lusts overpower them, and make them disobedient.

4. Trust and confidence in the Lord. The knowledge we speak of hath certainty in it, and causeth venturing: Psal. ix. 10, "They that know thy name will put their trust in thee:" they that know God spiritually, his truths, promises, covenant, faithfulness, will resign up themselves to him, and lean upon him. What is the bottom and ground of the prophet's exhortation? Isa. xxvi. 4, "Trust ye in the Lord for ever; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." When a man hath the true, real, and clear knowledge of this, he will trust in God. David had the right knowledge of God, he said of him, "He is my refuge and my fortress; my God; in him will I trust," Psal. xci. 2.

Obs. The true knowledge of God is a covenant mercy; those who are in covenant with God, they have the saving and spiritual knowledge of him. "I will establish my covenant with thee, and thou shalt know that I am the Lord." Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, speaking there of the covenant of grace, saith the Lord, "I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall all know me, from the least of them to the greatest of them:" so Heb. viii. 10, 11. The knowledge here spoken of is not a common, but a choice knowledge, and it is given to those who are in covenant, it is a covenant mercy; none have such knowledge who are out of covenant. They may by their industry get a general, unsavoury, and powerless knowledge of God, but they have not this knowledge we speak of: it is "given," 1 John v. 20, and is called seeing of God. Job xlii. 5; Isa. vi. 5; Mic. vi. 9; "the true light," 1 John ii. 8; "the truth which is after godliness," Tit. i. 1; "the mystery manifest to saints," Col. i. 26; "sound wisdom," Prov. ii. 7; "marvellous light," 1 Pet. ii. 9; "the light of life," John viii. 12; excellent knowledge, Phil. iii. 8; the teaching of God, Psal. xxxii. 8, and his Spirit, John xiv. 26, according to that in Isa. liv. 13, "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord:" he speaks of Jerusalem in covenant: God would give her spiritual children, and they should have spiritual instruction, whereby they should know God to be their God, a Father of mercies, and God of consolations; they should know the riches of his grace, and things freely given them of their God, all the good of the covenant.

Ver. 63. "That thou mayest remember, and be confounded." Of remembering and being ashamed was spoken in ver. 61; and of being confounded in ver. 52, 54.

"And never open thy mouth any more." Hebrew is, וְלֹא תִפְתָּח פִּי the words run thus, and there may not be to thee further opening of thy mouth; that is, that thou mayest be silent, and not open thy mouth any more. In the book of divine things you read of several openings; the opening of the hand, Deut. xv. 11; of the eyes, 2 Kings vi. 17; of the womb, Gen. xxx. 22; of the ear, Job xxxvi. 10; of the lips and mouth, Psal. li. 15; lxxviii. 2: and likewise of answerable shuttings, as the shutting of the hand, Deut. xv. 7; of the eyes, Isa. vi. 10; of the womb, 1 Sam. i. 6; of the ears, Prov. xxi. 13; of the month, Isa. lii. 15, "Kings shall shut their mouths at him:" that is, they shall be silent and submit to Christ: so here the not opening of the mouth imports silence, patience, quiet submission; Thou shalt have nothing justly to complain of me, or excuse thyself; thou shalt justify me in all my proceedings with thee, give me glory, and take shame to thyself.

"When I am pacified towards thee." Hebrew is, כִּסְּפִי in my being propitious. כִּסַּר properly signifieth to cover a thing, with that which cleaveth and sticks to the thing covered; not with dust, grass, earth, wood, for such things may easily be removed; but with pitch, glue, cement, so that the thing covered cannot easily be brought to sight again. Gen. vi. 14, "Pitch it within and without with pitch;" it is the same word: when a thing is pitched over, you cannot suddenly come at the sight of it; and by way of metaphor it is applied to the covering of sin, and wrath caused by sin. Isa. xxii. 14, "This iniquity shall not be purged till ye die:" Hebrew is, covered. So Psal. lxxviii. 38, "He forgave their iniquity:" Hebrew, he covered it. When sin is so covered as not to be seen again, it is purged away, it is forgiven. So for wrath and anger stirred up by sin: Gen. xxxii. 20, Jacob had offended Esau by getting the blessing, and he saith, I will appease his face: Hebrew is, cover his face, or anger that appears in the face. To come to our purpose; Jerusalem had sinned grievously, and God's anger was greatly up, and something there must be to cover her sins, and appease his wrath; and that was, the sacrifice, death, and blood of Christ, who is the only coverer of sin, and appeaser of anger: he is, ἀσπασ, the true propitiation for man's sin, and only pacifier of God's anger, 1 John ii. 2. He is the peacemaker, Eph. ii. 14, the purger of sin, Heb. i. 3, the Mediator, Heb. ix. 15, reconciliation, Eph. ii. 16.

Some read the words thus: When I shall expiate thee from all that thou hast done. Others, When I shall pardon thee, or blot out all thou hast done.

Obs. 1. Godly sorrow and shame for sin arises from the right knowledge of God in the covenant of grace. "I will establish my covenant with thee; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord;" gracious, faithful, merciful; and what then? "that thou mayest remember, and be confounded" and ashamed. Men's sorrow is according to their knowledge; a vulgar knowledge, and a vulgar repentance; a legal knowledge, and a legal repentance: but if the knowledge be spiritual and evangelical, the fruit of the covenant, men's repentance will be suitable; sanctified knowledge will produce sanctified shame, sorrow, and tears. Zech. xii. 10, "I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son." When men are in covenant with God, and have the spiritual knowledge of his love and bounty, in giving Christ to take away sin, and look upon him in his piercings and sufferings by and for their sins, then will they mourn with a great, but a spiritual mourning, which is the most kindly and acceptable. When we apprehend God to have taken us into covenant with him, to be our God, to have done great things for us, to have pronounced great things to us, and to have been very good to us, then the remembrance of our wretched ways causeth a holy shame and a holy sorrow.

Obs. 2. Those who rightly know God in the covenant of grace, will not murmur against or accuse God for any of his dealings with them, but be silent and submissive before him. They know God is infinitely wise, just, and holy; that all their afflictions, chastisements, troubles, temptations, sufferings, are exceeding short of what they deserve; that nothing comes to pass without his providence; that he can wrong none; that he doth use unholy instruments holily, and hath holy ends in all his ways. Till men know the Lord spiritually, in a covenant and gospel manner, they are apt to open their mouths to accuse and blame God; yea, oft they utter unsavoury speeches; but when it is known, it is otherwise. Job i. 22, "In all this Job sinned not, nor charged God foolishly:" he met with very hard things; but knowing God the right way, he opened not his mouth against him, but for him, ver. 21. So David, Psal. xxxix. 9, "I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, because thou didst it." He was silent, and patiently submitted unto the hand of God; he neither accused him, nor excused himself: If I be reproached, persecuted, afflicted any way, I know it is thy doing, and I will be dumb.

When Absalom, that rebellious and unnatural son, had driven David out of all, and sought his life; what said he to it? If God have no delight in me, "behold, here am I, let him do to me as seemeth good unto him." If he will have me cut off and cut down by the hand of mine own wicked son, I am content; if he will have me driven out from the holy city and land, and live in a profane land amongst his enemies, I leave it to him, let him do what he pleases, I know what I have deserved, 2 Sam. xv. 26. When God sent out a fire which consumed Nadab and Abihu for offering strange fire, it was a sad affliction even for a godly parent, and might have made Aaron open his mouth; but saith the text, "he held his peace," Lev. x. 3. It is fit all flesh should be silent before the Lord, as it is Zech. ii. 13; and that every mouth should be stopped, Rom. iii. 19. But most mouths are open against God, more or less; only those who have spiritual knowledge of him, and spiritual sorrow for their sins, are most silent; what condition soever they be cast into, they will say with the church, Micah vii. 9, "We will bear the indignation of the Lord, because we have sinned against him."

Obs. 3. Sin is such an evil as provokes God. "When I am pacified toward thee;" there can be pacification where there is no provocation. Esth. vii. 10, "Then was the king's wrath pacified;" Haman had offended Alasuerus before, and being hanged for it, his wrath was pacified. Eccles. x. 4, "Yielding pacifieth great offences." If there were not offence, no place would be found for pacification; where this is to be made, provocation hath gone before. Sin is that which provokes a God of patience and long-suffering, it makes him angry and wrathful: Jer. xlv. 8, "Ye provoke me to wrath." Sin provokes him bitterly, Hos. xii. 14, and makes him angry every day, Psal. vii. 11; yea, it provoketh him to jealousy, 1 Kings xiv. 22. Let us take heed of sin, and offending God any way; to kindle his anger but a little is a dangerous thing, Psal. ii. 12. Paul knew it when he said, "Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy? are we stronger than he?" 1 Cor. x. 22. We would not provoke a lion, a man of war, such a one as Samson was; and shall we provoke God, who puts all strength into beasts and men, who is a roaring lion and the Lord of hosts?

Obs. 4. Though sin do provoke God greatly and bitterly, yet he is to be pacified. "When I am pacified towards you:" he is not implacable. Jer. iii. 12, he saith, "I will not keep anger for ever." His mercy endures for ever, but not his anger; his wrath is momentary, but his kindness is everlasting, Isa. liv. 8. Aaron made an atonement for the people, Numb. xvi. 46; Phinehas turned away his wrath, Numb. xxv. 11; Moses prevailed with God, and pacified him when he was very angry, Exod. xxxii. 14. The Lord is "a God ready to pardon;" Neh. ix. 17; though men have sinned much, long, provoked exceedingly; yet if they sue unto him, he is ready to forgive. When the man who owed ten thousand talents came to the Lord for patience, "Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all;" he did not only forbear him, but forgave him, Matt. xviii. 26, 27. With men it falls out oft, that they will never forgive; but the Lord is forward to it. And when the people were full of sin, had greatly trespassed, "he, being full of compassion, forgave their iniquity, and destroyed them not; yea, many a time turned he his anger away, and did not stir up all his wrath," Psal. lxxviii. 38. When man persists in sin, God ceaseth from his wrath, and reacheth out mercy; Isa. lvii. 17, 18, "I have seen his ways, and will heal him."

Obs. 5. God's being pacified towards a people is a great mercy, which appears here in two things:

(1.) All that hath offended is passed by and forgiven. "When I am pacified towards thee for all that thou hast done:" not for one, two, or three, or a hundred things done, but for all done; the idolatry, oppression, pride, fulness of bread, idleness, neglect of the poor, injustice, profaneness, &c. When God is once pacified, he is fully pacified for all sins. And here is the greatness of divine grace, he sins never so great, old, many, they are all done away.

(2.) He is so pacified, as that he will not be angry again with them for those evil deeds. I told you in the opening the words, that ephar notes such covering of them, as they cannot easily be seen again; expiation, blotting out. Isa. xliii. 25, "I am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins;" God so blots out when he is pacified, as not to remember them. Heb. viii. 12. God being in covenant, and so pacified towards his people, he is "merciful to their unrighteousness, and their iniquity will he remember no more." Jer. i. 20, "The iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none; and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found."

CHAPTER XVII.

Ver. 1—6. And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, put forth a riddle, and speak a parable unto the house of Israel; and say, Thus saith the Lord God; A great eagle with great wings, long-winged, full of feathers, which had divers colours, came unto Lebanon, and took the highest branch of the cedar: he cropped off the top of his young twigs, and carried it into a land of traffick; he set it in a city of merchants. He took also of the seed of the land, and planted it in a fruitful field; he placed it by great waters, and set it as a willow tree. And it grew, and became a spreading vine of low stature, whose branches turned toward him, and the roots thereof were under him: so it became a vine, and brought forth branches, and shot forth sprigs.

This 17th chapter contains,

I. A preface, in the first two verses.

II. A riddle or parable, from the beginning of the 3rd to the end of the 8th verse.

III. The application of this parable, from the 11th verse to the 22nd.

IV. A promise of mercy, from the 22nd to the end. In the preface you have,

1. The author of what is prophesied in this chapter, who is the Lord; "The word of the Lord."

2. The instrument by which it was conveyed; Ezekiel, it came to him.

3. His appellation or title; "Son of man."

4. A command laid upon him; "Put forth, speak."

5. What; "a riddle, a parable."

6. Unto whom; "to the house of Israel."

I shall pass over all in the preface but these words, "Put forth a riddle, and speak a parable," which I shall open.

"Put forth a riddle." Hebrew is, riddle a riddle, or sharpen a sharpening, whet a whetting. רמז signifies, to propound hard questions, difficult and obscure theses, to sharpen and whet the understanding. Judg. xiv. 12, "I will put forth a riddle." Samson put it forth to try and exercise their wit. Ver. 14, "They could not in three days expound the riddle;" for, saith Avenarius, it is acuteness rather than search which discovers such secrets.

A riddle is a dark and subtle sentence or allegory, containing a sense different from the sound of the words; as that Judg. xiv. 14, "Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness." The sense and meaning of the riddle is another thing than the words import. The Septuagint here put εἰρηγμα for riddle, which is a narration; but in other places πρόβλημα, a problem or hard question, as Psal. lxxviii. 2; Dan. viii. 23. The Vulgate and others have it ænigma, from αἰνιττω, to speak obscurely and perplexedly.

"Speak a parable." Hebrew, מאמר of this word was spoken. Ezek. xii. 22, where we insisted largely upon it. There it is called "proverb," here "parable." Mashal is a sentence, a speech, axiom, metaphor, allegory, which hath choiceness in it, and is worthy memory. Solomon's wise and excellent sayings are called Proverbs; tried, proved words. Parables are similitudes, much like unto riddles, comprehending the same in them; as Psal. lxxviii. 2, compared with Matt. xiii. 35. Mashal and chidosh are called parables or similitudes. Heb. xi. 13, Abraham received Isaac from the dead, ἐν παραβολῇ, "in a figure;" figuratively, or representatively, he was dead, and rose. The rabbies say it was in the hand of a parable; here was a lively parable or representation of his death and resurrection. The words are used promiscuously here; and whether riddles or parables, they present one thing in words, another in sense, and require interpretation.

The papists assert the Scriptures are obscure. Barradius the Jesuit saith they are enigmatical, and brings this place for it; "Son of man, put forth a riddle, speak a parable unto the house of Israel;" but he forgot the explication of the riddle and parable afterwards in the chapter. And the father saith, if a thing be spoken obscurely in one place, it is cleared up in another.

We grant there are riddles, parables, hard and deep things in the Scriptures; 1 Cor. xv. 29; Heb. vi. 4, and many places in the Revelation and other books, are difficult, obscure; and the wisdom of God is seen in it: for hereby man's pride is stained and beaten down, his abilities, whatever, moral or spiritual, exercised, and the dignity of Scripture kept up, but in things necessary to salvation it is plain and easy. Timothy knew the Scriptures when he was a child, 2 Tim. iii. 15. And they are compared unto a light, shining in a dark place, 2 Pet. i. 19. And Christ gives thanks, that the Father hid the things of the gospel from the wise and prudent, and revealed them unto babes, Matt. xi. 25. And Chrysostom saith the Scriptures are so divinely written, that all may read them profitably, both idiots and artists.

The holy Scriptures are frequent in parables; some say they are as many as the weeks in the year, fifty-two. Our prophet and Christ do much parabolize. The use of parables is,

1. To veil divine things, and keep them secret from the knowledge of profane and wicked spirits, as Matt. xiii. 13—15.

2. To help the memory. Parables are taken from things obvious to the senses, and so make a stronger impression upon the memory; as similes are better remembered than naked truths, they take stronger hold of a man's memory: so parables.

3. To stir and quicken the affections and spirits of men. There is a sweetness in truths conveyed by parables, so that they please and provoke to a further inquisition after knowledge. When Christ had spoken in parables, the disciples came to him and said, Declare unto us these parables, Matt. xiii. 36; xv. 15.

4. To convince, and that strongly. When David sinned greatly in slaying Uriah, and defiling Bathsheba, Nathan came with a parable unto him of a rich man having flocks and herds, and a poor man having one lamb, which the rich man took from the poor man, and slew for his friend. David hearing this, gives sentence: "As the Lord liveth, the man who hath done this thing shall surely die." Saith Nathan, "Thou art the man." Now David's mouth was stopped, the conviction strong, he had sentenced himself, 2 Sam. xii. 1—7. So the parable of the householder letting out his vineyard to husbandmen, who beat his servants, and slew his son: When the Lord comes what will he do to those men? They being convinced of this great injustice, pass sentence against themselves, and say, "He will miserably destroy those wicked men," Matt. xxi. 41.

It is the third use our prophet intends here, viz. to quicken their attention, affections, and spirits to those things he was to commend unto them; which had they been in a common and familiar style, they would not have listened unto; but being in a parabolizing way, they caused the greater attention, and made the stronger impression.

Obs. The wisdom of God in giving out Scripture. He ordered it so that all should not be given out in one way, but in several ways, fitting it to the capacities, conditions, and necessities of people; some parts are given out in higher strains, others in lower; some in a plain manner, others in parables and riddles. Isaiah is lofty, Amos is low; sometimes Christ spake plainly, sometimes parabolically; and Ezekiel sometimes is in visions and hieroglyphicals, sometimes in riddles and parables, and sometimes he passes at a lower rate. The manifold wisdom of God shines in it: hereby he invites men to mind his word, to be affected with it so, that, whether great or small, we might repent of our sins, and prevent his judgments.

We come now to the riddle and parable itself.

Ver. 3. A great eagle with great wings, long-winged, full of feathers, which had divers colours, came unto Lebanon, and took the highest branch of the cedar.

This parable leads us to the consideration of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, who is likened unto an eagle. This eagle is discovered,

I. From its greatness; "A great eagle," &c.

II. From the extent of its wings; "long-winged."

III. From its featheriness; "full of feathers."

IV. From the variety of these feathers; "which had divers colours."

V. From its actions, two whereof are set down in this verse:

1. He "came to Lebanon."

2. He "took the highest branch of the cedar."
"A great eagle." This eagle is called the king of Babylon, ver. 12, who was Nebuchadnezzar; and now it concerns us to see the correspondency between him and an eagle, and upon what grounds it is that he is so called. Some have told us an eagle was the Babylonian ensign; but that is denied by those who affirm a dove to be their ensign, which they gather from Jer. xxv. 38, where the words, "because of the fierceness of the oppressor," in the original are, because of the fierceness of the dove: and in Jer. xlvi. 16; l. 16, where the words are, "the oppressing sword," in the original they are, the sword of the dove; that is, the sword of Nebuchadnezzar, who bare in his ensign a dove: but the root whence יונה a dove, comes, is ינה which signifies to oppress, and therefore is not amiss rendered by our translators in the places mentioned; and so hath not sufficient strength to prove that the ensign of the Chaldeans or Babylonians was a dove. It might be an eagle, notwithstanding this conjecture; but because both these opinions are uncertain, we shall inquire after truth.

1. Eagles mind high and great things; flies and petty things they look not after. Eagles soar aloft, and are in the clouds; Job xxxix. 27, the eagle mounts up, and makes her nest on high; so Nebuchadnezzar had a high spirit, and minded high, great things, as monarchs and princes do. He made an image of gold, sixty cubits in height, and six in breadth, Dan. iii. 1. He minded kingdoms and nations, Jer. xxvii. 8. His heart was lifted up high when he said, "Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty?" Dan. iv. 30. He set his nest on high above others.

2. Eagles are swift in their flight and motions. Job xxxix. 30, "Where the slain are, there is she:" she flies swiftly to the prey, and upon all occasions. Dent. xxviii. 49, God threatened if they sinned, to bring "a nation as swift as the eagle flieth." Jer. iv. 13, speaking of Nebuchadnezzar, "He shall come up as clouds, and his chariots as a whirlwind; his horses are swifter than eagles." They found it so; Lam. iv. 19, "Our persecutors are swifter than the eagles of heaven." Alexander was quick in his undertakings; Julius Cæsar expeditious; and Nebuchadnezzar had his excellency; Jer. xlvi. 40, "He shall fly as an eagle, and spread his wings over Moab."

3. Strong and cruel; they are the chief of all which have wings, they are stronger than other fowls; Isa. xl. 31, "They shall mount up with wings as eagles." They have much strength in them, and being strong, do gripe and tear their prey cruelly. Job xxxix. 30, "Her young ones also suck up blood." It is natural to the eagle to be bloody. So Nebuchadnezzar was strong and cruel. Nations served him, Jer. xxvii. 7. He is called an "oppressor," Isa. xiv. 4. "He smote the people in wrath with a continual stroke, he ruled the nations in anger; persecuted, and none hindered," ver. 6. This Nebuchadnezzar broke the bones of Israel, Jer. 1. 17. He heated the fiery furnace seven times hotter than ever, and caused the three children to be thrown in, Dan. iii. 19, 21.

4. Eagles are quick-sighted: Job xxxix. 28, 29, she sits upon the rock, "and her eyes behold afar off." And we use to say of men sagacious and discerning, that they are eagle-eyed. Nebuchadnezzar sat on high in a throne, and so other princes, and they see afar off; they see where prey is to be had; they are greedy of honour, greatness, and wealth, and look every way, far and near, to find out what may satisfy; they have eyes and spies in all parts of their kingdoms, to search and sift out things, and make them known unto them.

"Great." This eagle was no ordinary eagle: Nebuchadnezzar was a great king; Dan. ii. 37. "Thou, O king, art a king of kings; for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, strength, and glory." He was great in titles, great in attendants, great in possessions, great in power, and great in name.

"With great wings." This notes his power. Wings are for motion and flight. Nebuchadnezzar had power to move, and move speedily, as you heard before, for his power was great. By wings we may understand his military forces; Jer. xlix. 22. "Behold, he shall come up and fly as the eagle, and spread his wings over Borsath."

"Long-winged." Hebrew is, long in feather or wing. If you will refer this to the long spears the Babylonians used, you may; but I rather judge it is meant of the vast and extensive greatness of this king; for, Dan. iii. 3, there were many provinces under him, "all the rulers of the provinces were gathered unto him." Chap. iv. 1, "Nebuchadnezzar the king, unto all people, nations, and languages, that dwell in all the earth." His wings were long, that reached to all people: and more than this; ver. 22. "O king, thy greatness is grown, and reacheth unto heaven, and thy dominion to the end of the earth." He had the largest dominions of any prince then living.

"Full of feathers." Hebrew, full of feather, the singular put for the plural. The Septuagint is, full of nails or talons. Others read the words as we do. What is meant by feathers must be seen. Some do understand thereby the great riches and wealth this king had, they were his feathers; and it is a common speech among us, that when men are grown rich, we say they have feathered their nests: and the Germans, when they will punish a man's purse, say, his feathers must be lessened. This eagle had store of these feathers; his empire was oriental, and had exceeding great riches in it: so full of gold, that the king made such an image thereof, as the world never saw before or since, Dan. iii. 1.

But without prejudice to this opinion, I conceive principally by feathers people are understood; they are the feathers of kings. Prov. xiv. 28, "In the multitude of people is the king's honour: but in the want of people is the destruction of the prince." A king may want wealth, and yet be in honour; if the hearts of the people cleave to him, like feathers to the body of an eagle, there is his honour: but though he have treasures of gold and silver, and no people, he is without honour, he is at the border of destruction. That which invites me thus to interpret feathers, is the next words;

"Which had divers colours." Hebrew is, variation, or variety. We had the word in chap. xvi. 10, where I penned it at large, and therefore shall not criticize upon it at all. Septuagint turns it, τὸ ἡγῆμα ἰσαλοῦν, tacitly implying the people by feathers; for, not his wealth, but his people, had a will and desire to come to Lebanon, and spoil the Jews.

Besides, as the feathers of the eagle are of divers colours, and carry a kind of embroidery upon them which adorn her much; so these people were of divers colours, being of divers provinces, and of divers customs, manners, habits, ranks, and orders, which served Nebuchadnezzar in his wars with the Jews; and this variety was an embroidering of the army, and a glory to the king.

The next thing is the action of this eagle, which is twofold:

I. He comes to Lebanon. Lebanon is a mountain in Canaan, rising from the back of Sidon, and running fifteen hundred furlongs towards Symira, as Masius observes out of Pliny. It is a hill very high, delightful, and fruitful. It is so called from the whiteness of it; for the height is such, that the snow continues upon it; Jer. xviii. 14, "Will a man leave the snow of Lebanon?" or from the abundance of frankincense there, which is white. It is very delightful by reason of the sweet frankincense trees which grow there, as also the sweet cedars, (Cant. iv. 11, "The smell of thy garments is as the smell of Lebanon,") whereof it is very fruitful, as appears 1 Kings v. 6, and thrived greatly, Psal. xcii. 12, and excelled, Cant. v. 15. Of the cedars which grew upon this mountain Solomon built the temple, which therefore metonymically is called Lebanon; Zech. xi. 1, "Open thy doors, O Lebanon;" that is, O temple, which are built of the goodly cedars which grew upon that mountain, open thy doors. This eagle Nebuchadnezzar came to Lebanon; that is, invaded the holy land which lay contiguous to Lebanon.

"And took the highest branch of the cedar." Hebrew, the top; Septuagint, the choice things; Vulgate is, the marrow of the cedar. The Hebrew is plural, and notes not one, but many branches, the highest branches; but most interpreters render it singularly, and understand by it Jehoiachin king of Judah. There is much written by Pliny of the cedar, which rather hath a show of truth, than reality. It is a tree of goodly stature, and therefore they are called cedars of God; Psal. lxxx. 10, "Like the goodly cedars," Hebrew is, cedars of God. And the wood of it is very durable: therefore the temple was built of it, and Solomon made himself a chariot of it, Cant. iii. 9.

The cedar is in Scripture used to set forth a flourishing condition: Psal. xcii. 12. "The righteous shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon." Numb. xxiv. 5, 6, Jacob's tents and tabernacles were goodly "as cedar trees beside the waters." Here the kingdom of Judah is represented by the cedar, which was very high and flourishing; so you may see the state of the Amorites, Amos ii. 9, "whose height was like the height of the cedars." And as cedars have some branches higher than others, so had this state a top-branch, Jeconiah.

The taking away the highest branch, was the removal of the king from his throne, 2 Kings xxiv.

Ver. 4. He cropped off the top of his young twigs, and carried it into a land of traffick; he set it in a city of merchants.

The prophet here proceeds in setting down the actions of the great eagle he had spoken of before; and here are three actions:

I. Cropping.

II. Carrying.

III. Setting.

He cropped the top of the cedar's young twigs.

He carried it; whither? into a land of traffick.

He set it; where? in a city of merchants.

"He cropped off the top of his young twigs."

Hebrew is, he pulled away the head of his tender branches. יניקת is from ניק to suck, because those tender shoots or branches do suck the juice of the tree. Septuagint is, he hath cut off, or taken away, the top of his tenderness.

These twigs or plants were the nobility of Judah, the princes and potentates that were highest in the kingdom, and next unto the king. These did Nebuchadnezzar deprive of their power and greatness, and so spoiled the glory of the land; those who were most eminent he took away. Being young himself, he had such about him.

"And carried it into a land of traffick." Hebrew is, into the land of Canaan; and so the Septuagint. But the word Canaan is not to be taken properly, but appellatively, and notes Chaldea, which is so called, because it is a land of trading and merchandizing; for Canaan in Hebrew is a merchant. Prov. xxxi. 24, "She delivereth girdles unto the merchant," סוֹמֵךְ so it is used Isa. xxiii. 8; Hos. xii. 7. And some render that in Zech. xiv. 21, "In that day there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord," a merchant in the house of the Lord. Chaldea was a land of traffic, as appears by Rev. xviii. 11, "The merchants of the earth shall weep over Babylon, for no man buyeth their merchandise any more." And it follows in our prophet,

"He set it in a city of merchants." The word here for merchant is סוֹמֵךְ and noteth especially merchandizing in sweet things, grocery, spicery, perfumes, powders; and therefore in Cant. iii. 6, "With all powders of the merchant," it is the same word, and imports they dealt in myrrh, frankincense, and all powders.

The meaning of this verse is, that Nebuchadnezzar took away the chief men, princes, nobles, counsellors, judges, warriors, and carried them to Babylon, and set them amongst those who were merchants, trading for the chief things the world had. This you may see in ver. 12, and also in 2 Kings xxiv. 12, 14—16.

Ver. 5. He took also of the seed of the land, and planted it in a fruitful field; he placed it by great waters, and set it as a willow tree.

"The seed of the land." Jehoiachin, the princes and nobles, being captives in Babylon, he took Mattaniah, who was of the seed of the land of Judah, not of Babylon; of the seed of the cedars, for he was of the blood-royal, uncle unto Jehoiachin, 2 Kings xxiv. 17; him did Nebuchadnezzar set up for king, and changed his name, calling him Zedekiah. His first name was Mattaniah, signifying the gift of God, and according to the Syriae, the expectation of God; this he had from Josiah that godly king, whose son he was. His second name was Zedekiah, given him by Nebuchadnezzar a heathen king, which signifies, the justice of God, whereby he minded him, being set up king by him, and sworn to be subject unto him, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13, of the justice of God if he should break with him.

"Planted it in a fruitful field." Hebrew, in a field of seed, in a field fit to receive and fertile to bring forth: he did not plant it in Babylon, or any other province of his, but in Judea, which was a fruitful place, Isa. v. 1; it was a land which flowed with milk and honey, and abounded with good things, exceeding all lands, Ezek. xx. 6.

"He placed it by great waters." Husbandmen when they plant trees are observant of the soil, whether dry or moist. So here, Nebuchadnezzar placed this seed and young plant Zedekiah (for he was but twenty-one years old when he began to reign, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 11) near unto or among the waters, that so he might root, grow, and bring forth fruit.

Jehoiachin was planted before, but he took no rooting; he reigned but three months and ten days, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9, and then was plucked up; but Nebuchadnezzar aimed at the rooting and settling of Zedekiah. The Vulgate reads it, that he might strengthen his roots upon or amongst the great waters. Some by waters understand people: so Rev. xvii. 1, the whore sat "upon many waters;" which, ver. 15, are interpreted people: they are inconstant, movable this way or that way, as waters are. By waters are to be understood the poor.

"And set it as a willow tree." Hebrew, he put it a willow, or as a willow, so interpreters have rendered it, but upon what ground I cannot find; for the word נִסְבַּע is either from a word which is to peep, make a noise like birds, as it is in Isa. viii. 19; x. 14. And so Avenarius deriving the word from hence, interprets our prophet thus, Stridore et sibilo emisso posuit semen quod ore sustulerat aquila, He set it with noise and muttering. It is like Nebuchadnezzar was troubled at the doings of former kings, both Jehoiakim and Jehoiachin, and therefore might murmur at the setting up of Zedekiah. Or else it is from a word that signifies to spy, watch, observe, and so signifies circumspection, and here is used adverbially, and may thus be rendered, he set it most circumspectly, or with great circumspection; and so both Junius, Piscator, and Polanus do render it. The Septuagint is, ἐπιβλεπόμενον, he looked into the thing; fearing lest he should fall off, he took an oath of fidelity of him, and he became tributary to him.

Ver. 6. And it grew, and became a spreading vine of low stature, whose branches turned toward him, and the roots thereof were under him: so it became a vine, and brought forth branches, and shot forth sprigs.

Here you have the effects of the seed planted; the meaning is this, that Zedekiah being advanced to the throne, he reigned; and while grateful and faithful to Nebuchadnezzar who raised him, he prospered.

"It grew." This plant or seed budded presently, he let the people of Judah see and know that he had power.

"Became a spreading vine." Hebrew is, a luxuriant vine. The vine abounds with leaves and sprigs, and runs out far. Zedekiah increased in riches, friends, power, strength, but never came to any considerable greatness: he was not like the tall cedar, but as a low vine; for it follows,

"Of low stature." Hebrew is, low in stature; the vine is a plant that creeps upon the earth, and grows not high, unless helped by others. Septuagint saith, he became a weak vine, and little in greatness. There was as much difference between his reign and Jehoiachin's, as between a tall cedar and a low shrub: he was under Nebuchadnezzar.

"Whose branches turned toward him." Some doubt there is, whether this "him" be Nebuchadnezzar the eagle, or Zedekiah the vine: to me it is apparent Nebuchadnezzar is pointed at; for both Zedekiah and his branches did depend upon the king of Babylon; and whilst they looked to him, and kept covenant, they flourished, both root and branches grew and spread; but when they failed to perform engagements, the branches were plucked off, and the vine rooted up.

"The roots thereof were under him." Nebuchadnezzar gave rooting to this vine; what power soever Zedekiah had, it was under him; he planted it in Judea, his own country, tied him to conditions, would have defended him from any other invasive power, and had it in his hand to hold him under, or to make him a free prince again at his pleasure. The root hath life, communicates virtue, and bears up the body and branches. But whence hath it all? is it not from the earth, in and under which it is? so Zedekiah had his political or kingly life, all his power and strength, from Nebuchadnezzar, under whom he was.

Obs. 1. That heathen princes may come to much greatness. Nebuchadnezzar, who was a heathen, is called an eagle, who is the chief of all birds; and not simply an eagle, but a great eagle, with great and long wings, full of feathers. He had great power, great territories, multitudes of people, yea, kings and princes under him. Dan. ii. 37, 38, "Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, strength, and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all." He had vast power over men, fowls, and beasts; he was the greatest eagle of those times.

Profane authors make an eagle an emblem of majesty and greatness. King Pyrrhus would be called an eagle, as Plutarch observes in his Life. Alexander the Great, that day he was born, two eagles were seen to sit upon the top of the house, which pre-saged his greatness; for he conquered Europe and Asia, two great parts of the world; he was an eagle that had great and long wings, which extended from east to west. Ahasuerus was such an eagle, he "reigned from India even unto Ethiopia, over an hundred and seven and twenty provinces," Esth. i. 1.

Obs. 2. Princes, potentates, who are the eagles of the world, have an ill eye at the church and people of God. This great eagle came to Lebanon, his eye was upon the Jews that dwelt in the holy land, that were the only people of God, and them he made a prey of. Eagles have piercing eyes, strong beaks, terrible talons; and let the doves look to it, if any be in danger, it is they; not puttocks, kites, buzzards do eagles mind, but doves. The church is in holy writ called a dove, Cant. vi. 9; Psal. lxxiv. 19; and it is subject to spoil and prey. The eagles have their eyes upon it, and watch their opportunity to tear and devour it. Did not Sennacherib, that great eagle, who had strong and long wings, come to Judah and take the defenced cities thereof? came he not up to the gates and walls of Jerusalem, with full purpose to spoil and devour? Isa. xxxvi. 1, 2. Did he not say, "I am come to the sides of Lebanon, and I will cut down the tall cedars thereof, and the choice fir trees thereof," chap. xxxvii. 24. It is Zion, Lebanon, Jerusalem, that the monarchs and great ones of the earth have spite at. Did not the great ones of Edom, Ishmael, Moab, Hagar, Gebal, Ammon, Amalek, of the Philistines, Tyrians, and Assyrians, conspire together against God's people, consult against his hidden ones, and say, "Come, let us cut them off from being a nation, that the name of Israel may be no more in remembrance," Psal. lxxxiii. Mount Seir "had a perpetual hatred against the children of Israel," Ezek. xxxv. 5. Ammon, Moab, and mount Seir, though spared by the Israelites when they came out of Egypt; yet they came against Jehoshaphat and Judah to cast them out of their possessions, 2 Chron. xx. 10, 11. They would not only plunder them, but root them out; they would utterly extirpate them, and the memory of them. Such was the intention and attempt of Haman. Do not the eagles and great ones of the earth seek to lay waste Zion, and root out the generation of the righteous?

Obs. 3. States may rise to a great height, even the height of cedars. The Jewish state is called a cedar, yea, a cedar upon Lebanon, a hill. Cedars are very high: 2 Kings xix. 23, "The tall cedars;" Hebrew is, the tallness of cedars: Amos ii. 9, "Whose height was like the height of cedars." And they were higher than fir trees; Zech. xi. 2, "Howl, fir tree; for the cedar is fallen:" inferiors howl, mourn, when higher than themselves do fall.

The Jewish state being likened to a cedar, was great, high, glorious, powerful. God prospered it so that it flourished greatly; it was like the cedar for tallness, but not for sweetness, for Jehoiachin, who was the top of this cedar, "did evil in the sight of the Lord," 2 Kings xxiv. 9.

Obs. 4. No kings or kingdoms are so high or great, but the Lord can bring them down, and abase them. A great eagle comes and crops the highest branch of the cedar, and the top of his young twigs; Jehoiachin, the princes and nobles, are taken away by him, and deprived of all their greatness and glory. The top of this tall cedar was broken off, and thrown to the ground, and it was done by the counsel, appointment, and providence of God: "Thus saith the Lord, A great eagle came to Lebanon." God sent this eagle to do it: he hath means, ways, times, to un-power kingdoms, to un-king kings, to un-noble nobles; he can at his pleasure remove kings, and take them and others from all rule and government. Dan. ii. 20, 21, "Wisdom and might are his; he changeth the times and the seasons:" the times of all states, empires, governments, are in his hand, and he removes the kings and governors of them at his pleasure. Job tells us, "he looseth the bond of kings," chap. xii. 18; the bond of kings is their authority, the laws and covenants, by which people are bound unto them; the Lord takes away the one, and makes people regardless of the other. "He leadeth princes away spoiled, and overthroweth the mighty," ver. 19; "he poureth contempt upon princes," ver. 21: thus did he deal by Jehoiachin, he loosed his bond, led him away, spoiled, and made him contemptible.

Sometimes God takes them off from the throne by a stroke in war; so Ahab was removed, 1 Kings xxii. Sometimes by the act of their own hand; so Saul, 1 Sam. xxxi. 4. Sometimes by stirring up their own subjects against them; so Nebuchadnezzar, this great eagle, that cropped the cedars of Lebanon, was driven from his nest by the inferior birds: Dan. iv. 32, "They shall drive thee from men, and thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field:" and, ver. 33, "he was driven from men." Christian, king of Denmark, was put from the throne by his nobles for his great cruelty, himself, wife, and three children, banished, as Sleid. l. 4. The Roman emperors were sixty-three, and only six died a natural and peaceable death, as Fitzherbert observeth in his treatise concerning Policy and Religion, p. 2. c. 13. They were bloody, tyrannical, and God took them off by unnatural deaths.

Other kingdoms, and this also, can tell you of cedars whose top-branches have been cropped: how it fared with Edward H. is not unknown to you.

If kings would not have God to loose their bonds, let them take heed how they break his bonds, and go beyond the bounds of religion and justice which he sets them.

Obs. 5. Though God do deprive great ones of great mercies, yet not always of all mercies. "The highest branch of the cedar, and the top of his young twigs," are cropped, but they are not thrown away, or thrown into the fire; but they are "carried into a land of traffick, and set in a city of merchants." Jehoiachin, the princes, and glory of the land, are deprived of their power and greatness; that was a sad affliction; but they were provided for in a strange land, suffered to trade and live. God mingles mercy with judgments; yea, when they are great, sharp, proclaim the severity of God, yet even then there is some matter of comfort twisted together with them; if there be severity on the one hand, there is goodness on the other.

It seemed to be the height of rigour to pull Jehoiachin, a young king, from the throne, and to deprive him and the nobles of all the comforts that Canaan, Jerusalem, and the temple could afford; but it was not. Their limbs might have been pulled from them, their eyes put out, their lives taken away; but these are spared, and they are seated, not in a country village, but in a city, and a city of merchants, that so they might have commerce with men of quality, be taken up with merchandizing affairs, and not mind their losses too much.

Obs. 6. God prevents men's expectations, and raises up to that honour and greatness they looked not for. God ordered the spirit of Nebuchadnezzar so, that "he took of the seed of the land, and planted it;" that is, he made Zedekiah king, who looked not for it. He was Jehoiachin's father's brother, 2 Kings xxiv. 17; and, seeing the cedar of Lebanon now cropped, had little cause to think himself, or any of the Jewish race, should be advanced: he might have concluded warrantably that himself should have been carried into Babylon, set in the city of merchants, and not have abode in Canaan, be planted in the fruitful field and city of God; but God's thoughts are not the thoughts of men. He exalts whom he pleases: Psal. lxxv. 6, 7, "Promotion is neither from the east, nor from the west, nor from the south; but God is the Judge: he putteth down one, and setteth up another," and doth it unexpectedly many times. "Saul, when looking for asses, had a kingdom, and kingly honour, bestowed on him, 1 Sam. ix. x. When David's thoughts were upon the sheep and sheepfolds, God's thoughts were upon him for higher purposes; he took him from his sheep and sheepfolds to feed Jacob his people, and Israel, &c. Psalm lxxviii. 70, 71. How unexpectedly were Hazael and Jehu raised to kingly dignity, 2 Kings viii. 13; ix. 5, 6. Joseph in Egypt, Daniel, Mordecai, and Esther, in Babylon: did not God prevent their thoughts, and set them higher than their expectations advanced? Hannah saw, and confessed it long since, that the Lord "raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory." Poor and mean men look not for such high things, but the Lord freely bestows it on them: Psal. cxliii. 8, he sets them with princes.

Obs. 7. The disposing of subdued kingdoms is a difficult work, and requires wisdom, care, and caution. Nebuchadnezzar had subdued the land of Canaan, and what doth he? he wisely takes "of the seed of the land," not of the seed of Babylon, not a stranger, which would have bred divisions, contentions, wars, and blood, but one of themselves, and places amongst them, and that with circumspection. He made things sure as he could for himself, and sure for Zedekiah, whom he planted amongst and set over the people; he was very circumspect in this weighty business; so the word saphsaphah signifies: men of this world are wise in their generations. This king, when he took away Jehoiachin, "carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valour, even ten thousand captives, and all the craftsmen and smiths, the king's wives, and his officers, and all that were apt for war, and none remained save the poorest sort of the land," 2 Kings xxiv. 14—16. He took away all that might be of use to the new king; he would leave him none to give him ill counsel, or assist him in ill enterprises; he planted him "by great waters," among multitudes of poor people, that had little for themselves, and less for their king.

Obs. 8. Tributary princes and kingdoms at first are respectful and grateful to those that they depend upon. Zedekiah was planted by Nebuchadnezzar in Judea, and his branches turned toward him, and the roots were under him; himself, and those who belonged to him, acknowledged their dependence on Nebuchadnezzar. Kindness, favour, is to be owned and confessed, though from strangers and heathens. He sent to Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. xxix. 3, yea, he went to him, Jer. li. 59; so that he was very observable of him. And while he was content with this condition of being under that potent king, and faithful in keeping covenant, and performing articles agreed upon, he and the kingdom thrived; it is said of him, "he grew, and became a spreading vine, which brought forth branches, and shot forth twigs." He grew in estate, in children, in nobles, in offices and officers; he came to the condition of a vine, yea, a spreading vine, that hath leaves and branches.

Obs. 9. When the glory and strength of a kingdom is marred and broken by wars, it doth not easily recover its pristine condition, if ever. The kingdom of Judah, after Nebuchadnezzar's plundering and spoiling of it, in time became a vine, but "of low stature;" in all Zedekiah's days it did not recover itself. When a tree is cropped, it requires time to grow up again, and, it may be, never attains its former height and glory. This kingdom was a tall cedar before, now it was a low shrub; it had not that wealth, power, dignity, greatness it had before. If a family or town be ruined by wars, it may be seven years before they get up again, and seven to that: much more when kingdoms are shaken, battered, wounded.

Obs. 10. See hence the instability of all earthly greatness. Kings and kingdoms that were high and most flourishing, are soon brought low. The kingdom of Judah was glorious, powerful, like the highest cedar upon the bill of Lebanon; but it continued not, it suffered many changes. Ten tribes were rent from it in Rehoboam's days; Sennacherib infested it in Hezekiah's days; Pharaoh-necho in Jehoiakin's, and put it under tax; Nebuchadnezzar, he cropped, cropped the cedar, took off the highest branch, and top of the young twigs, &c. So that the kingdoms of this world cannot be holden long by any. Let us fear that God, who batters and shakes kingdoms in pieces; look after, and labour, for that "kingdom which cannot be moved," Heb. xii. 28. Let us not mind the riches of the world, but labour to be poor in spirit, "for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

Ver. 7, 8. There was also another great eagle with great wings and many feathers: and, behold, this vine did bend her roots toward him, and shot forth her branches toward him, that he might water it by the furrows of her plantation. It was planted in a good soil by great waters, that it might bring forth branches, and that it might bear fruit, that it might be a goodly vine.

Here you have the second part of the parable, wherein the king of Egypt and Zedekiah's revolting come into consideration.

"Another great eagle." This eagle was the king of Egypt, as the 15th and 17th verses do certify. Kings are called eagles, and upon what account was opened unto you out of the third verse.

This eagle was great in power and dominion, but not so great as the other; for though this eagle had great wings, yet it is not said, he had long wings, as the other had.

"Many feathers." Much wealth, many people and soldiers.

"This vine did bend her roots toward him, and shot forth her branches toward him." Zedekiah looked at the power and greatness of the king of Egypt, and sent ambassadors to him, that they might join forces. The roots of trees do incline that way there is moisture and succour for them: so Zedekiah, apprehending that Pharaoh, king of Egypt, would succour and relieve him, he falls off from Nebuchadnezzar, and seeks to him. He sent his ambassadors, which were as the branches of this vine, into Egypt for horses and people, ver. 15; Jer. ii. 18, "What hast thou to do in the way of Egypt, to drink the waters of Sihor?" Sihor was a little river before Egypt, Josh. xiii. 3, and is put for Nilus, or Egypt, and waters, for the people and forces. Zedekiah sent thither to draw the forces thereof unto his assistance.

"That he might water it by the furrows of her plantation." Hebrew, from, or by, the lines of her plantation. The Hebrew word signifies, a bed; so it is used, Cant. v. 13, and a furrow, which is a line drawn: and Avenarius saith, it is a water line, or furrow through which the waters ran. In Egypt they made furrows and lines through which the waters of Nilus ran and watered the country; so here, Zedekiah endeavoured, by his ambassadors and presents, to join interest with Pharaoh, and so to gain the help of men and horse from him, whereby he might defend himself against Nebuchadnezzar, whom deserting, he provoked against him. Pharaoh entertaining this notion, sends forces, as you may see, Jer. xxxvii. 5, 6: and this was the watering of the Jewish vine in the furrows of her plantation.

Ver. 8, "It was planted in a good soil," &c. This verse sets out the ingratitude of Zedekiah, who might not only have kept his kingdom, but have prospered in it, and come to greatness, for Nebuchadnezzar had planted him "in a good soil," &c.

If a vine be planted in a good and rich soil, it roots, grows, flourishes with branches, leaves, clusters, and becomes useful, delightful unto many; so might this metaphorical vine Zedekiah, for the soil he was planted in was the land of promise, "a fruitful field," as it is expressed in ver. 5; a good field, as the Hebrew hath it here: a good field is a fruitful field, and a fruitful field is a good field.

"By great waters." What was meant by "waters" was shown in ver. 5. When trees are planted by waters, there is no fear of wanting moisture and withering thereupon. Vines do need much moisture, and draw abundantly from the soil; Zedekiah was among the waters, viz. the poor people, who contributed their endeavours to make him great.

"That it might be a goodly vine." The Hebrew word for goodly is, גָּדוֹל which signifies, comely, magnificent, strong. Septuagint, εὐκαταστατος μεγαλη, that it might be a great vine. Nebuchadnezzar dealt honourably and prince-like by Zedekiah, who being a private man before, and hable to captivity with the rest carried away when Jeconiah was, was not only spared, but advanced to kingly dignity, and set in such a condition that he needed not the help of any, he needed not the waters of Egypt and Nilus: he had Nebuchadnezzar, that great eagle, to be his protector; and had he been faithful in his engagements to him, he might have become a goodly, great, strong, beautiful, excellent, and fruitful vine.

Obs. 1. That the Lord takes special notice of the monarchs and kings of the earth, of their greatness, power, honour, wealth, and glory. In ver. 3, he speaks of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon; "A great eagle with great wings, longwinged, full of feathers, which had divers colours;" in this 7th verse, of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, a "great eagle with great wings and many feathers." God's eye is much upon princes and potentates of the earth: Psal. lxxxix. 27, "I will make David higher than the kings of the earth;" he observed them and their height. He sees and notes their rising; Hos. viii. 4, "They have set up kings, but not by me;" their greatness; Dan. iv. 22, "Thy greatness, O king, is grown, and reacheth unto heaven;" their doings; Luke xxii. 25, "The kings of the gentiles exercise lordship over them;" how they set themselves against God, Psal. ii. 2; against him and his people, him and his army; Rev. xix. 19, "I saw the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army." They are gods upon earth, Psal. lxxxii. 6; they bear his image, have his authority; and if they step aside, and turn their greatness against God, his cause, and people, the Lord will "strike through kings in the day of his wrath," Psal. ex. 5. "He shall cut off the spirit of princes," and be "terrible to the kings of the earth," Psal. lxxxii. 12. Let kings, therefore, be wise, kiss the Son, Psal. ii. 10, 12, and improve all for the interest of Christ.

Obs. 2. The kings and monarchs of the earth are not all alike, they are diverse, and admit of disparity. Nebuchadnezzar and Pharaoh both were eagles, but the Egyptian eagle was not so great and potent as the Babylonian: this was "full of feathers," that had "many feathers;" this had "great and long wings," that only "great;" Pharaoh's power extended not so far as Nebuchadnezzar's. Some princes are little eagles, some are great, and others very great. Those thirty-one kings whom Joshua smote were kings of cities, Josh. xii. 9—24; they were little eagles, and had little nests. Hamor was prince of a country, Gen. xxxiv. 2, he was a greater eagle; so Tidal, king of nations, Gen. xiv. 1, he went beyond Hamor; but others exceeded him. Ahasuerus was an eagle with "great and long wings," his nest was large, a hundred and twenty-seven provinces over which he spread his wings, Esth. i. 1. So Sennacherib, the king of Assyria, is called "the great king, the king of Assyria," Isa. xxxvi. 4. And Nebuchadnezzar, for his greatness, is titled "a king of kings." The Babylon, Assyrian, Grecian, and Roman emperors were great eagles. God gives power, honour, greatness, to whom he pleases, and in what proportion he pleases; some are eagles with greater, longer wings, and more feathers, than others.

Obs. 3. Men's natures are such as that they are seldom content with any condition they are set in. Zedekiah was set in the throne, exalted to kingly honour, but this satisfied him not; "this vine did bend her roots toward" the Egyptian eagle, "and shot forth her branches toward him." Adam and Eve at first were not content with their condition they were set in, but must have and know more than God allowed them, Gen. iii. 6. "Man being in honour abideth not," Psal. xlix. 12: he abides not satisfied, his brutish desires carry him after forbidden fruit. Habakkuk, speaking of a Chaldean prince, saith, "He keeps not at home, he enlargeth his desire as hell, and is as death, and cannot be satisfied, but gathereth unto him all nations, and heaps unto him all people," Hab. ii. 6. Isaiah tells you the king of Babylon was so unsatisfied with his present condition, that he said he would ascend into heaven, and exalt his throne above the stars of God, he like the Most High; he had made the world a wilderness, and destroyed the cities thereof, and now he would up to heaven, Isa. xiv. 4, 13, 14, 17.

Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, having enlarged his dominions by the conquest of Macedonia, thirsted after Italy; and demanding the advice of Cineas, his great counsellor, he asked him what he meant to do when he had conquered Italy? Next I mean to get Sicily, which is near, rich, and powerful. When you have gotten Sicily, said Cineas, what then? Africa, saith the king, is not far off, and there be many goodly kingdoms, which, through my fame and valour of my soldiers, I may subdue. Be it so, said Cineas: when you have Africa, and all in it, what will you do then? Said the king, Then thou and I will be merry, and make good cheer. Cineas replied, Sir, if this be the end you aim at, what need you venture your kingdoms, person, life, honour, and all you have, to purchase that you have already; Epirus and Macedonia are sufficient to make you and me merry; had you all the world you could not be more merry, nor have better cheer.

Obs. 4. Discontentedness with the present condition puts men upon unwarrantable practices to relieve and free themselves from what they apprehend burdensome. Zedekiah was discontented that he was tributary to and dependent upon the king of Babylon, he apprehended this a grievous burden; his predecessors most of them free and absolute kings, and he to be under the power of another, and he a heathen! This kindled an ill, fiery, malignant spirit in his breast, and made him sue to Egypt for help to shake off the Babylonish yoke, which was unwarrantable and unlawful for him to do. This is like an ill wife, that finding the yoke of her husband a little pinching, deserts him, and betakes herself to another. Zedekiah should have applied himself to Nebuchadnezzar for relief if any thing were grievous to him, and not to Pharaoh, on whom he had no dependence, from whom he had received no favour; but discontent, and hope of liberty, puts him upon perfidious practices. The Israelites, being discontented with the taxes laid upon them by Solomon, sued to Rehoboam for relief: he unwisely gives them a rough answer, and exasperates their spirits; presently they fall off from him, stone Adoram the tribute-gatherer, make Jeroboam king, and submit to him, 1 Kings xii. 14, 16, 18, 20.

The Jews, hearing the ill report of the land of Canaan, murmur and say, "Would God that we had died in the land of Egypt, or in this wilderness! Wherefore hath the Lord brought us unto this land, to fall by the sword, that our wives and our children should be a prey? were it not better for us to return into Egypt?" And see what their discontent put them upon: "They said one to another, Let us make a captain, and let us return into Egypt." Numb. xiv. 2-4. They were weary of Moses and Aaron, and their government, and now they would make them a captain, a king, say the rabbies, and return to Egypt to the onions and garlie, to their old ways. Such hath been the condition of the people here: Jeroboam thought, by setting up the calves, to secure himself and the kingdom, but that very thing was his ruin.

Obs. 5. The condition Divine Providence sets any in is good, and therein they may prosper if wise and contented. This vine "was planted in a good soil," and to what end? "that it might bring forth branches, bear fruit, and be a goodly vine." Zedekiah, being made king in Israel, was set in a good condition; and had he wisely managed the affairs of the kingdom, and been content with what God gave him in and by the hand of Nebuchadnezzar, he might have prospered greatly, had a glorious kingdom, been a renowned king.

The kingly office is honourable, and when God sets up kings over people, they might be happy, and grow potent. Solomon, who was a wise king, prospered exceedingly in that soil he was planted in, and lived happily; but Rehoboam his son, through his folly and discontentedness with his people, lost ten parts of his kingdom, and made his reign troublesome afterwards, 1 Kings xii. Zedekiah, by his folly and discontent, undid himself; being impatient of the yoke God had put upon him, he foolishly sends to, and relies upon, Egypt, and thinks by Egyptian hands to re-lift himself into a better condition than God had put him in, but this was his ruin: Isa. xxxi. 1. "Woe to them that go down to Egypt for help; and stay on horses, and trust in chariots, because they are many; and in horsemen, because they are very strong; but they look not unto the Holy One of Israel, neither seek the Lord." Had Zedekiah sought to the Lord, he could have watered the furrows of his plantation better than Egypt. It is a common sickness among men, and especially great ones, kings and princes, that they make the good condition God hath set them in unhappy to themselves; would they keep within bounds, be content with what God hath allowed them, and use that wisely, they might do well, and live happily.

The God of Israel and his worship would not content Ahaz, but he must set up the Damascene altar, sacrifice to the gods of Damascus, hoping for help from them; but they proved his ruin, and the ruin of all Israel, 2 Chron. xxviii. 23.

Ver. 9, 10. Say thou. Thus saith the Lord God; Shall it prosper? shall he not pull up the roots thereof, and cut off the fruit thereof, that it wither? it shall wither in all the leaves of her spring, even without great power or many people to pluck it up by the roots thereof. Yea, behold, being planted, shall it prosper? shall it not utterly wither, when the east wind toucheth it? it shall wither in the furrows where it grew.

These verses do enigmatically proclaim the event of Zedekiah's revolt; he thought to have mended and made himself by it, but it was his ruin. Being formerly compared to a vine, here the vine is sentenced,

I. Not to prosper; "Shall it prosper?"
II. To be rooted up, so that it shall wither, and neither have fruit nor leaves.

III. How? not by any great power, ver. 9, but by an east wind, ver. 10.

"Shall it prosper?" Hebrew תצלח the word צלה signifies, to divide, cut, pass through; and metaphorically, to pass, break through happily, to prosper. This vine was planted under the wings of the great eagle, who did preserve and protect it while it looked and leaned towards him, and then it prospered, ver. 6. But, seeing the roots and branches of this vine bend and move another way, viz. towards Egypt, "shall it prosper?" no, perfidiousness is not the way to prosper, it will bring the axe to lop and cut it down. This interrogation is a vehement negation: "Shall it prosper?" It is so far from prospering, that its utter ruin is at hand.

"Shall he not pull up the roots thereof?" &c. This metaphorical vine, Zedekiah, should be deprived of kingly power; yea, his children, nobles, counsellors, officers, people, which were the branches and leaves of this vine, should wither and come to nothing; yea, the place it grew in, Jerusalem itself, should be laid waste. The destruction of Zedekiah and his kingdom is likened to the cutting down and plucking up of a flourishing vine. The fulfilling of this you may see in 2 Kings xxv. 7, 18—21. It is said, at Riblah they gave judgment upon Zedekiah, there Nebuchadnezzar called a council of war, told him what he had done for him, in what engagements he stood bound to him, which he expected should have been made good; how he had perfidiously revolted from him, betaken himself for help to the king of Egypt against him, and therefore now he should suffer for it. Whereupon he slew his sons before his eyes, put all the nobles of Judah to death; and when he had seen these sad spectacles, then he also put out Zedekiah's eyes, Jer. xxxix. 6, 7.

"Without great power or many people to pluck it up." Hebrew is, and not in, or with, a great arm; that is, without great power, arm noting power. Some read the words by way of interrogation, thus; Shall he not with great power? insinuating, that Nebuchadnezzar should come with great power and many people, as he did, to cut down and pluck up this vine; but this is rather forced than natural. "Without great power or many people" Nebuchadnezzar will bring multitudes and great strength, but half, or a third part, will do the business; for Zedekiah hath sinned by his perfidious dealings, provoked me against him, saith God, and therefore I will give him up to the hand of Nebuchadnezzar without much ado; I will be so far from helping him with counsel or protection, that I will facilitate the way for his utter extirpation and ruin.

Ver. 10. "When the east wind toucheth it." Eastern winds are prejudicial, as to other things, so especially to plants, vines, trees; see Hos. xiii. 15; Ezek. xix. 12, an east wind dried up the fruit. It was an east wind made Jonah to faint, chap. iv. 8; an east wind that blasted the ears of corn, Gen. xli. 6.

By east wind here is meant the king of Babylon and his army, who is so called, either because he should be as an eastern wind unto this vine, dry up all the moisture and sap of it, that it should wither in the branches and roots; or else from the situation, Babylon being north-east from Jerusalem.

Hence is it that Nebuchadnezzar and his forces sometimes are called a wind out of the north: chap. i. 4, "A whirlwind came out of the north." And here, a wind of the east, which should no sooner touch this vine, but it should languish. East winds are violent, sudden, and destructive: so should this be to this vine, even a scorching wind.

Obs. 1. When men are perfidious and false in their trust and obligations, though princes, they shall not speed well, they shall not prosper. "Shall it prosper?" shall Zedekiah, his sons, nobles, counsellors, people, that have had a hand in his perfidious doing, "prosper?" No, they shall not prosper, I am resolved upon it. Let them take counsel together, it shall come to nought, as Isa. viii. 10.

No counsels, no enterprises, no wars, shall succeed well, I will blow upon and blast all; let them get all their power, their soldiery and strong men, together, go out to war, and see what shall be the issue: Jer. xxxii. 5, "Though you fight with the Chaldeans, ye shall not prosper."

When men are false to God and man, they cannot thrive and prosper in their ways. See what is upon record in 2 Chron. xxiv. 20, "Why transgress ye the commandments of the Lord, that ye cannot prosper?" these words were spoken to a king, and to princes. Joash, his princes, and people, had covenanted, through Jehoiada's means, to be for the Lord, chap. xxiii. 16; but Jehoiada being dead, the princes violated the covenant, and drew the king to idolatry; hereupon saith Zachariah unto them, "Why transgress ye the commandments of the Lord, that ye cannot prosper?" God is not with you, and you cannot prosper in any thing. Have any prospered in the late wars amongst us who were perfidious? Let Wales, Kent, Essex, and the sea itself speak.

Obs. 2. Perfidiousness, treachery in kings, nobles, or any, is so provoking a sin, as oft it moves God to bring severe judgments upon them who are guilty thereof, yea, utter destruction upon them and theirs. Saith God of this metaphorical vine, "Shall he not pull up the roots thereof, and cut off the fruit thereof," &c.? Zedekiah thought by his perfidious ways to advance himself, but his perfidiousness so provoked God, that for it he rooted him and his family up, and ruined the whole kingdom: Zedekiah loses his crown, kingdom, sons, nobles, people, eyes, at once, and afterwards his life. What sad things did that perfidious act bring upon them! vide Turkish History, p. 287, battle of Varna, between Uladislau and Amurath, &c.

Obs. 3. It is no difficult thing for God, being provoked, to pluck up, root out, destroy kings and kingdoms, how strong and well accommodated soever they be. Here was a vine planted in a good soil, by many waters, was likely to prosper, grow, and continue long; but "shall he not pull up the roots thereof, without great power or many people?" A gardener can easily, quickly pluck up a vine, and God did as easily pluck up Zedekiah, who was planted in Jerusalem, compassed about with mountains, assisted with the strength and power of Egypt; it is but sending of a wind, when the east wind toucheth it. I will but call for a wind, saith God, it shall be an east wind, and as soon as that toucheth this vine, it shall wither. A wind seems an unlikely thing to do any great matter, yet it is such as none can prevent, withstand; trees, ships, mountains, &c. have suffered greatly by it.

2 Chron. xxiv. 23, 24, the Syrians came with a small company of men, and the Lord delivered a very great army into their hand; because they had forsaken the Lord God of their fathers, they destroyed all the princes of the people.

Let the power, policy of princes be what it will, if they sin with a high hand against God, he can without a high hand punish them; he hath an east wind, or a north wind, &c.

Obs. 4. God magnifies his justice in punishing wicked men even in the place where they sin, and turning that to their ruin which they thought would have been their raising. "It shall wither in the furrows where it grew." It grew at Jerusalem; there it sinned in bending its roots towards Egypt, and fetching help from thence, and there it shall wither.

Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. iv. 30, 31, where he lifted up himself there it was said, "The kingdom is departed from thee." Those who built Babel, smitten,

Gen. xi.: Sodomites, Gen. xix.: two captains with their fifties, 2 Kings i. If you sin where God hath planted you, even there he can punish you, he can make you wither in the furrows of your plantation.

Ver. 11—15. Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Say now to the rebellious house, Know ye not what these things mean? tell them, Behold, the king of Babylon is come to Jerusalem, and hath taken the king thereof, and the princes thereof, and led them with him to Babylon; and hath taken of the king's seed, and made a covenant with him, and hath taken an oath of him: he hath also taken the mighty of the land: that the kingdom might be base, that it might not lift itself up, but that by keeping of his covenant it might stand. But he rebelled against him in sending his ambassadors into Egypt, that they might give him horses and much people. Shall he prosper? shall he escape that doeth such things? or shall he break the covenant, and be delivered?

Here begins the explication and application of the former parable concerning the eagle, the cedar, and vine, and it extends unto the 22nd verse.

I. You have a transition in the 11th verse, from the parable itself to the explication of it.

II. An introduction to the explication by way of query in the first part of the 12th verse.

III. The explication itself; "Tell them, Behold the king of Babylon is come," &c.

There is nothing in the transition and introduction needful to open, but these words.

"The rebellious house." Hebrew is, The house of rebellion or bitterness; Septuagint is, προς τὸν οἶκον ἰσραὴλ τὸν παρασκευαίοντα, to the house of Israel that is contentious. And so was this house, which was not the house of Israel strictly taken, but the tribe of Judah; but, in a large sense, it was called the house of Israel, ver. 3.

Obs. 1. The messengers of God must deliver the mind of God, be it pleasing or provoking, be it matter of comfort or terror. Ezekiel must go and tell this rebellious house sad things; that it should not prosper, that it should be rooted up and utterly ruined. They must denounce judgments to the wicked, as well as pardon to the penitent; threats to the stubborn, as well as promises to the fainting; they must not give out what pleases themselves, but what the Lord hints and commands them: "The word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Say now to the rebellious house," &c. It is grievous to the servants of God to be heralds, trumpeters of war, judgments, and death; but they must not decline the service; if they do, it may cost them dear. Jonah, when sent of God to proclaim war against Nineveh, "Yet forty days, and Nineveh," &c. he fled another way; but God pursued him with a tempest, and set the winds and waters in battle against him, and his life was almost gone.

The ambassadors of God and Christ must neither flatter the persons, nor fear the faces, of the greatest among the sons of men. Jeremiah dealt roundly with Jehoiakim and Jehoiachin, and thundered out God's judgments against them, though great kings, chap. xxiii. 17, 22, 24, &c. So Paul against Elymas, Acts xiii. 10, 11. Neither favour nor fear must strike a prophet dumb; when God hath given in commission, he must give out, let the event be what it will.

Obs. 2. Truths disaffecting find cold entertainment; judgments threatened are little minded. "Know ye not what these things mean? do you not understand what is pointed out in this parable and riddle? You may easily attain thereunto, but that you have no heart to it, the things delivered please you not, are cross to your wills, desires, humours, and therefore care not to know the meaning of them: Quæ noluntus facile et libenter ignoramus, Men shut their eyes against those things that dislike them, and care not for the knowledge of them. Jeremiah counselled Zedekiah to yield himself to the Babylonians, told him it would be the means to save his life, and the city from fire, Jer. xxxviii. 17, but it suited not with his spirit, and he minded it not. Micaiah prophesied truths distasteful unto Ahab: what followed upon it? he did not only disaffect those truths, but the person also for the truths' sake: 1 Kings xxii. 8, "I hate him," saith Ahab, "for he doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil." And when he told him that if he went up to Ramoth-gilead he should not prosper, but his men be scattered, and himself not return in peace, he believed it not, but commanded the prophet to prison, for declaring the mind of God. So Luke xvi. 13, 14.

Ver. 12. Tell them, Behold, the king of Babylon is come to Jerusalem." &c. Do you not know what the parable means? The meaning is this: The great eagle, with great and long wings, full of feathers, and of divers colours, is the king of Babylon; Lebanon is Jerusalem; the top of the cedar, and twigs thereof are Jehoiachin, his princes, and nobles; the land of traffic is Babylon; them hath he taken away, brought thither, and seated there; the seed of the land is Zedekiah, whom he set up to be king in Jerusalem, invested with power, that he might flourish and spread as a vine, &c.

Ver. 13. "And made a covenant with him." The Hebrew is, cut out, or struck, a covenant with him; Septuagint, he ordered, or disposed, a covenant to him. As for the word "covenant," I spake of it largely in chap. xvi. 8. The manner of making a covenant among the Jews you may read of in Jer. xxxiv. 18; but whether the Babylonian king made this covenant with Zedekiah in such a manner is not evident; a covenant he made with him, that he should be tributary to him, and bound it with an oath, as followeth:

"And hath taken an oath of him." Hebrew, hath brought him into an oath; Septuagint, into a curse. The Hebrew word שׁוּב signifies an oath with cursing, or execeration; a man ties himself with imprecation of mischief if he perform not his promise, or things agreed upon.

"He hath also taken the mighty of the land." Hebrew is, the rams of the land; Septuagint, the leaders; others, the potentates. Mighty and great men are called rams.

1. They are strong creatures, and have their name from a word which signifies, fortitude, strength, virtue. So great men are strong, they are strengthened with riches, honours, friends, counsel, strong holds, arms, and what the creature can afford, yea, with strong lusts: Dan. viii. 20, "The ram which thou sawest having two horns are the kings of Media and Persia."

2. Rams go before the flock, they have the precedence. Great men, they are the leaders, and go before the people; they carry multitudes after them, people follow the great men as flocks of sheep do the rams. Ezek. xxxi. 11, Nebuchadnezzar is called "the mighty one of the heathen;" the Hebrew is, the ram of the heathen, he went before them and led them.

3. Rams are pushing things. Dan. viii. 4, "I saw the ram pushing eastward, and westward, and southward; no beast could stand before him?" they oft do fiercely assault one another. So great men are pushing and butting with their power, and who of the people can stand before them? Eccles. iv. 1, on the oppressors' side was power. Ezek. xlvi. 18, princes and great men use to take of the people's inheritance by oppression, and to thrust them out of their possessions.

Many times great ones push and butt at one another till they break each in pieces.

Ver. 14. "That the kingdom might be base," or low. This was Nebuchadnezzar's design, to take away the mighty men, who were the strength of the kingdom, and held it up in greatness and glory, that so it might be base, low, weak; and so the Septuagint renders it, that it might be a weak kingdom, of low stature, as it is, ver. 6. Nebuchadnezzar left none but poor people; 2 Kings xxiv. 14, "None remained, save the poorest sort of the people of the land."

"That it might not lift itself up." Nebuchadnezzar conceived this people, having been free, would hardly submit to his yoke, and depend upon him; he dealt politely, as princes in such cases use to do when they fear rising and rebellion; they carry away the wise, skilful, strong, and honourable men, disarm them, break down their strong holds, and plant garrisons among them; so he took that course, which he thought should prevent this kingdom's lifting up itself any more. It is like, the great ones were of turbulent, stirring, and active spirits, and he ordered it so as might secure the kingdom to himself, and keep all quiet under Zedekiah.

"That by keeping of his covenant it might stand." Had it kept the covenant Nebuchadnezzar made with it, the kingdom might have continued; but breach of covenant was the breaking of the kingdom; they did lift up themselves, and God threw them down.

Ver. 15. "But he rebelled against him." Zedekiah growing impatient under the Babylonish yoke, shook it off. The Hebrew word for, to rebel, signifies, to cast away the authority of him who hath power over one; Septuagint saith, he receded from him: and so he did, and went, or sent, to Egypt.

"In sending his ambassadors into Egypt." Here was the bending of his roots toward the second eagle, ver. 7. He sent his angels, as the Septuagint hath it, into Egypt, and made a league with Pharaoh, which he had little cause to do, having no such hard conditions put upon him by Nebuchadnezzar as might have been; and besides, the Egyptians had oppressed the Jews of old with bitter and sore bondage, and not long before had put down Jehoahaz, carried him into Egypt, "condemned the land in an hundred talents of silver and a talent of gold," 2 Chron. xxxvi. 2—4.

"That they might give him horses." Egypt had plenty of horses; Solomon had horses from thence, 1 Kings x. 21; and when Shishak, king of Egypt, came up against Jerusalem, he came with twelve hundred chariots, and sixty thousand horsemen; which clearly evidences they abounded in horses, and were notable horsemen. The Jews were apt to look unto the Egyptians and their horse, and placed too much confidence in them, as being mighty and strong, Isa. xxxi. 1, which occasioned the Spirit of God to say, "The Egyptians are men, and not God; and their horses flesh, and not spirit;" you think they are strong, swift, servicable, as if they were all spirit, but I tell you they are all flesh.

"Shall he break the covenant?" Hebrew. shall he make void the covenant? transgress, violate the covenant? It was no unlawful oath or covenant that Zedekiah took or made: such oaths or covenants bind not. Herod sinned in performing his oath made to Herodias, Matt. xiv. 7, 8.

Quest. What if Zedekiah were forced to this? It may seem it was so; for the Hebrew is, he brought him to an oath, ver. 13. If so, was it binding? are extorted oaths and covenants to be observed?

Ans. If there be nothing simply evil in them, they do bind, and are to be performed. Men, when they make covenants, take oaths, though they do them not with full consent of will, yet they never do them against their wills; for there is something expressed or implied that begets a willingness, if not a complete will. As suppose a thief sets upon a man, robs him, and threatens to kill him if he will not vow, covenant, swear never to discover or pursue him; now rather than lose his life, let the thief spill his blood, add sin to sin, he doth it. So Zedekiah might fear captivity and his life, and upon those considerations enter into covenant; and had it been so, he had been bound in conscience to have made good his engagements. But there were other inducements to bring him into covenant; as advancement to kingly power, enjoyment of the kingdom upon conditions, preservation and protection by Nebuchadnezzar.

Object. It was to his great loss, the prejudice of him and his posterity, to become tributary to a foreign king.

Ans. It is a rule, that in injustice no right is or can be bottomed. If a man will take a kingdom upon such and such terms, it is no injury to him, though abridged of privileges and prerogatives his predecessors had; it is mercy he hath the kingdom, no injury he wants what others had: if he take the kingdom willingly, he takes the terms, conditions of it willingly. Conquerors may put their own terms upon those they do promote. This case of loss and prejudice is resolved by David, Psal. xv. 4: if a man have sworn "to his own hurt," he must not change, break covenant, falsify his oath, if he will be a child of God, or a citizen of heaven.

Obs. 1. God would have people understand his mind and meaning in Scripture, even riddles, parables, dark sayings. "Know ye not what these things mean? tell them, Behold, the king of Babylon is come to Jerusalem," &c. He will have Ezekiel to interpret the whole business unto them: what is given out darkly at one time in one place, at another time in some other place is cleared up, opened, and made more intelligible. The types and sacrifices were expounded and opened in Christ; he oft spake parables, and often opened them; see Matt. xiii. The service of the passover God would have made known to the children that should come after, Exod. xii. 26, 27: it would have been a dark business to them, God therefore provided they should understand it. So for the heaps of stones set in Jordan, and out of it God took care that they and their posterity might know the meaning thereof, Josh. iv. 8, 9, 21—23. The vision that Peter saw was afterwards opened unto him, and he knew the meaning of it, Acts x. Truths, scriptures that are difficult, God causes us to know the meaning of by some other scripture, or by his Spirit, revealing his mind to us in them. An angel was sent to Daniel to make him understand those dark visions he had, chap. viii. ix. x.

Obs. 2. No rank or sort of men are exempt from common and grievous calamities, not kings, not princes, not mighty men. The king of Babylon is come to Jerusalem, and hath taken the king, the princes, and the mighty men of the land, and led them with him into Babylon; they were conquered, plundered, taken, and carried into captivity. Such is the condition of human things, that even kings lose their kingdoms, their glory, greatness, and ex-cellences. Nebuchadnezzar, whose greatness did reach to heaven, and dominion to the ends of the earth, Dan. iv. 22, even "he was driven from men, and did eat grass as oxen," ver. 33.

Dionysius the king, or rather tyrant, was driven out from Syracuse, and glad to teach a school at Corinth. Great men do prey upon, and seek the ruin of one another. Caesar ruined Pompey; Cassius and Brutus ruined him. Berengarius the emperor, and Albertus his son, being overcome by Otho, were banished. Bajazet, king of the Turks, was brought to that misery as to be a stirrup for Tamerlane to get up upon his horse. Nimrod was a mighty hunter, he hunted men, and afterwards a kingdom, and by ruining of others he raised himself. No sort of men, especially if wicked, can promise any security to themselves long. Roderick, king of Spain, to assure himself against the children and friends of king Vitiza, whom he had deposed, dismantled all the strong holds in Spain, and disarmed the people; whereby, though he strengthened his state in regard of domestic dangers, yet he weakened it in respect of foreign attempts; for the Moors invading him shortly after, and overthrowing him, found so little resistance, that in seven or eight months they conquered almost all Spain. Look abroad, and you may see the kings and mighty men of the earth brought low, if not wholly broken: let China, Turkey, Muscovy, and nearer parts, speak what they feel and find.

Obs. 3. That covenants and oaths are securing and binding things. Nebuchadnezzar makes Zedekiah king, but he will not take his word for dependence on him, and being tributary to him; but he makes a covenant with him, takes an oath of him, and hereupon he thought all was safe.

Oaths are arguments of man's weakness; all human credit is so feeble, that it had need be strengthened with something more firm than itself. Psal. lxxii. 9, "Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie; there is no truth, fidelity in them, or their words. Men's hearts and tongues are so deceitful and false, even kings' and princes' as well as others, as that they deserve little or no trust to be given unto them, especially in matters of weight, as government and rule. Oaths therefore being by the great God, who knows the heart, and hears what the tongue utters, came in to strengthen human credit; for had not man sinned, there would have been no need or use of oaths; man's corruption made way for them. An oath therefore is to further man's credit, and it hath been of great authority and weight in all ages, and amongst all people; and Tully saith, antiquity knew no bond stronger than an oath to strengthen men's credit and fidelity. Juramentum, saith Aquinas, a jure dicitur. An oath was a law, and some used no other law to decide controversies but an oath; and it were well that, according to the apostle, an oath did end our strifes.

Obs. 4. God knows how to embase kingdoms and keep them under. He caused Nebuchadnezzar to take away the mighty men of the land, that the kingdom might be base, and not lift up itself. Men mighty in power, in wisdom, in justice, in wealth, they are the glory and strength of a land, they uphold it; but when a land becomes guilty by sinning grievously, God can bring it low, by foreign forces, as it is in the text, or by civil wars, as it is with us at this day; and not only doth God bring down kingdoms, but keep them so that they cannot get up.

Obs. 5. Faithfulness and justice uphold kingdoms. "That by keeping of his covenant it might stand." Had Zedekiah been faithful in the covenant, just in performing the oath made to Nebuchadnezzar, the kingdom had stood, himself continued reigning, his princes and mighty men abode in honour, and all things flourished.

Fidelity in observing and performing men's words, promises, covenants, oaths, is the foundation of justice, and justice is the strength of the republic. ^{1. ut. l. 1. de} ^{Offic.} If people be not faithful in their covenants and promises, how can a prince confide in them, that they will be loyal? and if a prince be false in his word, violate protestations, covenants, oaths, what protection, safety, or justice can they expect from him? where is no faithfulness, there can be no justice, and where that is wanting, can be no security to any state. It is justice establisheth a land, "but he who receiveth gifts overthroweth it," Prov. xxix. 4.

Should not a king receive gifts? no, not to pervert justice; if he be covetous, he will be unjust, false, and so overthrow all; but if righteous, he will preserve, uphold all, for "righteousness exalteth a nation," Prov. xiv. 34.

Obs. 6. Violating of covenants, oaths, and perfidious doings, falsifying of trust, is very ill in any, especially in princes, who resemble God; and so ill, that God will not suffer it to go unpunished. Zedekiah rebels, falls off from Nebuchadnezzar, breaks all bonds and engagements made unto him, and sues to Egypt for help. This was a sin of that nature, as made the Lord to say, "Shall he prosper? shall he escape that doeth such things? or shall he break the covenant, and be delivered?" No, he shall not prosper, nor escape, nor be delivered: I appeal to thee, Ezekiel, to all men, whether such a man should find any favour, whether such a man who doth such things, should not be made exemplary to all the world? Yes, he should, and God made him so. When men are perfidious, and violate oaths, they are in credit neither with God or good men, their very names stink, and they live under perpetual infamy. Men's credits are like glasses, which if broken, can never be mended again, especially if stained with perfidiousness, breach of oath and covenant. Other sins may be imputed to frailty and error, and so be more pardonable; but this sin argues a base, vile, and treacherous nature, and is not excusable in any, least of all in princes, who should be noble and ingenuous, and stand more upon their word, covenants, and oaths, than others, because they are public persons, and their actions have great influence into all sorts of persons: they greatly dishonour God, whom they represent, abuse his commission, and shamefully profane his name; God is therefore greatly set against such. Psal. lv. 23, "Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days." Usually men of treacherous spirits are bloody, and God by one judgment or other cuts them off, or their posterity, or both. It fell out so with Zedekiah; and with Saul, who was false and bloody towards David, and towards the priests whom he caused to be slain; he brake the covenant with the Gibeonites, himself fell by the Philistines and his own sword, and seven of his sons were hanged for it, 2 Sam. xxi.

The duke of Bourbon, being made governor of Milan by Charles the Fifth, did so exact of and oppress the people, that they rose up against him; he, to pacify them, bound himself by oath to certain conditions, wishing if he did not faithfully perform them, he might be killed with a bullet in the first occasion of war which should be offered. Notwithstanding his oath and his imprecation, he tyrannized over the people, and shortly after at the siege of Rome, by a soldier of his own negligently discharging a piece of artillery, he was slain.

Henry the Third, king of France, after great differences between him, the cardinal, and duke of Guise, was reconciled unto them, confirmed the reconciliation with many oaths, took the sacrament upon it, and gave himself to the devil, body and soul, in case he meant or should attempt any thing against them. Yet, saith the story, he caused the duke to be killed in his own presence, and the cardinal his brother the next day after. Here was breach of covenant: but did he prosper, escape, do such things, and have deliverance? No: within eight months after he was slain by a friar in the midst of his army.

The ancient Romans were very religious and conscientious in observing their leagues, covenants, and oaths made publicly; and if any violated them, they were held for cursed creatures, and counted unworthy to live in human society.

Ver. 16—21. As I live, saith the Lord God, surely in the place where the king dwelleth that made him king, whose oath he despised, and whose covenant he brake, even with him in the midst of Babylon he shall die. Neither shall Pharaoh with his mighty army and great company make for him in the war, by casting up mounds, and building forts, to cut off many persons: seeing he despised the oath by breaking the covenant, when, lo, he had given his hand, and hath done all these things, he shall not escape. Therefore thus saith the Lord God; As I live, surely mine oath that he hath despised, and my covenant that he hath broken, even it will I recompense upon his own head. And I will spread my net upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare, and I will bring him to Babylon, and will plead with him there for his trespass that he hath trespassed against me. And all his fugitives with all his bands shall fall by the sword, and they that remain shall be scattered toward all winds: and ye shall know that I the Lord have spoken it.

These verses comprehend Zedekiah's sin, with some aggravation thereof, and the punishments threatened for the same, and these ratify them.

His sin is, despising the oath, and breaking the covenant, of Nebuchadnezzar, ver. 16, 18, which God calls his "oath" and "covenant," ver. 19, and the trespass trespassed against him, ver. 20.

The aggravations are two:

I. Is from Nebuchadnezzar's kindness and bounty towards him; ver. 16, "That made him king, whose oath he despised."

II. Is from his own act; ver. 18, "When, lo, he had given his hand."

The punishments threatened are,

1. Death; ver. 16, "He shall die," and that in Babylon.

II. Disappointment by the Egyptian army; ver. 17, "Neither shall Pharaoh," &c.

III. Obstructing all ways of escaping; ver. 18, "He shall not escape." Ver. 19, "I will recompense it," viz. his perjury, "upon his own head." Ver. 20, "I will spread my net upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare."

IV. The execution of his fugitives; "They shall fall by the sword," ver. 21.

V. The dispersion of those who should be left: they "shall be scattered toward all winds," ver. 21.

The ratification of them is by an oath; ver. 16, 19, "As I live, saith the Lord."

For the words, they need not much opening.

Ver. 16. "As I live." As sure as I am God, and live, it shall so come to pass, he shall die in Babylon. Of this oath was spoken, chap. v. 11; xiv. 16; and xvi. 48.

"Whose oath he despised." The word in Hebrew for despised notes, despising out of pride and disdain. Zedekiah thought,

What should I, that am an Israelite, keep an oath made to a heathen? should I, that am of Zion, be subject to Babylon? No, no, I will be in bondage no longer. It is true, I have made an oath, but that is no great matter, it will be more advantage for me to break with that heathenish king, than to keep the oath: thus did he despise the oath.

"In the midst of Babylon he shall die." Zedekiah had his eyes put out, that he never saw Babylon, and yet he was carried captive thither, and kept in prison there till his death, Jer. lii. 11; Ezek. xii. 13, "He shall not see it, though he shall die there."

Ver. 17. "Neither shall Pharaoh," &c. The first Pharaoh the Scripture mentions was in Abraham's days, Gen. xii. 15: and the last was this here mentioned, who is called Pharaoh-hophra, king of Egypt, and was delivered into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, Jer. xlv. 30. From the last to the last was thirteen hundred and thirty-six years, all which time this name was common to all the kings of Egypt, but afterwards ceased. Some have thought this word, "Pharaoh," to be taken from an island so called. Others fetch it from the Hebrew word pharah, which signifies, to be free from bondage; whence A Lapidé derives the word baro, a baron. Kings, saith he, are called pharoues quasi barones, free princes. But it is most probable that Pharaoh was an Egyptian name or title, noting sovereignty; Gen. xli. 44, "Pharaoh said unto Joseph, I am Pharaoh, and without thee shall no man lift up his hand or foot in all the land of Egypt." Josephus saith, Pharaoh was a name of honour and principality.

"Make for him." Hebrew, with him. Let Pharaoh come with never so great an army, it will not make with him, he shall never accomplish what he intends thereby; Pharaoh, with all his power, shall not be able to free him from the king of Babylon, and make him great.

"Building forts." The word for "forts" signifies, a wooden tower. In those times they made great engines of wood, like towers, out of which they threw stones or darts into the towns or cities they warred against, and so weakened them. Whether the casting up mounds, and building of forts, were the work of the Babylonish or Egyptian king, is questioned among expositors; but to me it seems evident, by the words, that it was the Egyptian king.

Ver. 18. "When, lo, he had given his hand." To give the hand imports,

1. Society, equality; as Gal. ii. 9, Cephas and John gave Paul and Barnabas the right hand of fellowship.

2. Subjection; as 2 Chron. xxx. 8, "Be ye not stiff-necked, as your fathers were, but yield yourselves unto the Lord." The Hebrew is, give the hand unto the Lord, and serve him. So, 1 Chron. xxix. 24, they "submitted themselves unto Solomon the king." Hebrew is, they gave the hand under him, or to him.

3. Confirmation of a promise, covenant, or oath: Ezra x. 19, "They gave their hands that they would put away their wives;" they promised it, and they confirmed it, by giving their hands to Ezra. Lam. v. 6, "We have given the hand to the Egyptians, and to the Assyrians, to be satisfied with bread;"

we have covenanted to be theirs for bread, and have impaired our fidelity and honesty by giving our hands. So here, Zedekiah had made a covenant with Nebuchadnezzar, and confirmed it, not only with an oath, but also with his hand, that he would be subject unto him. If he forgot his oath, yet how could he look upon his own hand, and not remember how it was engaged.

Ver. 19. "It will I recompense upon his own head." The Lord would bring his perjury upon him. Of recompensing upon the head hath been spoken, chap. ix. 10; xi. 21; xvi. 43.

Ver. 20. "And I will spread my net upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare, and I will bring him to Babylon." These very words you have had opened in chap. xii. ver. 13. The net and snare were the Babylonish army; the Jews, the fishes, &c.

"And will plead with him there." Hebrew is, I will be judged with him; so Montanus reads it. That I may be judged with him; so Vatablus. And the sense is this: I will so clear my justice in punishing this perfidious king, that I will be judged even by heathens, whether he hath not deserved what I shall inflict, and whether I be not righteous in inflicting the same; I know they will justify me, and condemn him. But others render the word actively, I will judge, or plead with, as here: that is, I will punish him. After the city was taken, his sons, princes, and nobles slain, his eyes put out, he was carried into Babylon, where he was put into prison, and imprisoned till his death, Jer. li. 11.

Ver. 21. "All his fugitives." When Jerusalem was besieged, and began to be broken up, Zedekiah, and many with him, fled, who are threatened here all to fall by the sword; yet presently it is added, "they that remain shall be scattered." How are these words to be taken, so as to make truth out of them?

Anstc. Universal notes are not always to be taken universally. All, that is, the greatest part; so it is to be taken, Jer. xiii. 19; xlv. 12; Matt. ii. 3; iii. 5.

Obs. 1. Judgments threatened are not readily and easily believed: if so, there need no swearing to confirm the certainty of them. But man, as he is backward to believe what should do him good, so what is threatened, and tends unto his ruin; therefore God swears, As I live, Zedekiah shall die. Jeremiah had often told Zedekiah that he should be taken and carried to Babylon, chap. xxxii. 4, 5; xxxiv. 2, 3; but he believed it not. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 12. "He humbled not himself before Jeremiah the prophet speaking from the mouth of the Lord:" ver. 16, he and others "mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy." Much was given out by the prophets concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, but none would believe that the enemy should ever have entered into the gates of it, Lam. iv. 12. What! God destroy his own city, his own people? how can this be? Judgments are sour things to the spirits of men, very unwelcome, and therefore they shift them off with some pretence or other. God is a merciful God, and will not do such severe things; or if he do, it will not be in our days, as they in Ezek. xii. 22. "The days are prolonged;" or if not, "yet we shall escape."

Obs. 2. Ingratitude to those instruments God hath used to do us good by, he takes special notice of, and will punish. Nebuchadnezzar was the man whom God used to make Zedekiah king; and he, being exalted by him, and having tied himself by the strongest bonds to be grateful and serviceable to him, forgets his benefactor's kindness, and breaks with him; here was hellish ingratitude: hereupon the Lord saith, "In the place where he dwelleth that made him king, even in Babylon, he shall die." His ingratitude so provoked God, that he would punish him exemplarily in that place, where the king of Babylon, and all the Babylonians, might see how greatly the God of Israel abhorred ingratitude.

Jehoiada was the hand of God to set Joash in the throne, 2 Chron. xxii.; and after the death of Jehoiada, Joash slew his son, because he dealt faithfully with him and the princes, in reproving them for falling to idolatry. This the Lord took special notice of, for it is said, "Thus Joash the king remembered not the kindness which Jehoiada his father had done to him, but slew his son," who, dying, said, "The Lord look upon it, and require it." 2 Chron. xxiv. 20—22. And it was not long ere God did require it; for shortly after, an army of the Syrians spoiled him, and his own servants slew him for his ingratitude towards Jehoiada in slaying his sons, ver. 25.

Ahithophel was advanced by David to be his counsellor; he fell in with Absalom's conspiracy against David; the Lord was offended at this wretched ingratitude, and left him to lay hands upon himself, and become a monument and warning-piece to posterity to take heed of the like sin: so Judas. Gideon was a man God used to do Israel much good by; and though the people soon forgot it, yet God did not forget their ingratitude: Judg. viii. 35. "They showed not kindness to the house of Gideon, according to all the goodness which he had showed unto Israel." God expects men should be thankful unto those men he hath employed to do them good; if they be not thankful to men, whom they see, they will not be thankful unto God, whom they see not.

Obs. 3. God is so resolved upon the punishing of perfidiousness, that he swears unto it: As I live, saith the Lord, seeing he hath despised the oath, and broken the covenant, he shall die. And again, As I live, I will recompense it upon his own head. Himself, his princes, false prophets, may think, hope, nay, swear, it will be otherwise; but, as sure as I live, as I am God, he and they shall feel the weight of my displeasure for their perfidiousness and perjury. Kings on the earth take oaths, and little regard them, but the King of heaven doth not so. If the Lord once swear, he will perform, and there is no possibility of escaping. Perjury is a sin which violates the name of God exceedingly, and evidences that men have no fear of God in them, that they make an idol of him to serve their own turns; that such men are neither for God nor man to trust; not only religion, but even common honesty, suffers by them. No marvel, then, that the Lord swears, and swears again, that he will recompense such sins upon men's heads.

Obs. 4. Such is the condition of human affairs, that even kings and great men may fall into the hands, and die in the hands, of foreign enemies. Zedekiah fell into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, and "even with him in the midst of Babylon he shall die." He made no account of meeting with such a condition, and dying in that place, but his sins brought those evils upon him. Jehoiachin fell into the hands of Pharaoh-necho, and was carried to Egypt, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 4. Jehoiachin, with his princes, officers, and mighty men, was a captive in Babylon, 2 Kings xxiv. 15, 16. God had told them, by Moses, that if they did provoke him by their sins, they should be removed into their enemies' land, Lev. xxvi. 34, 41. And Solomon was jealous of it, 1 Kings viii. 46. As it is a merey to live and die in one's own land, so it is a judgment to be driven or carried out of it, and to die in a strange land.

On ver. 17, Obs. 1. Men look for help from an arm of flesh when in straits. Zedekiah expected that Pharaoh's mighty army, and great company, his chariots and horses, should make for him. It is very incident to us to look unto second causes and creature-help more than God's. Asa, being in distress, did so; "he relied," saith the text, "on the king of Syria, and not on the Lord his God," 2 Chron. xvi. 7; and "in his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians," ver. 12. Confidence in man is a common practice of the sons of men. Ahaz, he sent to the king of Assyria to help him, 2 Chron. xxviii. 16. So Ephraim, when he saw his sickness, he went to the Assyrian, and sent to Jereb, Hos. v. 13. Men's spirits look any way, turn any whither, for relief rather than unto God; the arm of flesh is more to them than the arm of God. Psal. xx. 7, "Some trust in chariots, and some in horses;" some in riches, Psal. lii. 7; some in falsehood, Jer. xxiii. 25; some in strong holds, Zech. ix. 3; some in men, Isa. ii. 22. But it argues atheism, ignorance, pride, unbelief, that men look not unto God at such times; yea, it proclaims the baseness of our spirits, that we fall upon what is visible, weak, unfaithful, at distance, and neglect God, who is strong, all-sufficient, near; and all because invisible, not seen of us.

Obs. 2. Divine Providence overrules and orders things so, that wicked men are frustrated and disappointed of their hopes and expectations. Zedekiah hoped and expected that Pharaoh, with his great forces, should make much for him; but "neither shall Pharaoh with his mighty army and great company make for him;" it is not kings, armies, counsellors, and counsels, will do it. Pharaoh's army came forth of Egypt, raised the siege when Nebuchadnezzar was before Jerusalem, Jer. xxxvii. 11; yet it did not make for him; the Chaldeans returned again, sat down before the city, took it, Zedekiah, the princes, and others. Ahaz expected help from the king of Assyria; Tilgath-pilneser comes, and what then? he distressed him, but strengthened him not, 2 Chron. xxviii. 20. Absalom expected much from the counsel and advice of Ahithophel, but God turned it into foolishness, 2 Sam. xvii. 14; and all the strength he had made not for him, Chap. xviii. Job v. 12, "He disappointeth the devices of the crafty, so that their hands cannot perform their enterprise." Haman could not perform his enterprise. Herod could not accomplish his design to murder Christ, when he slew the infants, Matt. ii. Kings and people imagine vain things, and the Lord laughs them to scorn, Psal. ii. 1, 4. The Lord sees what fools they are to project, plot, expect help from arms of flesh, and makes them to see, find, and feel it in time. He brings "the counsel of the heathen to nought: he maketh the devices of the people," princes, armies, "of none effect," and establisheth his own thoughts and counsels, Psal. xxxiii. 10, 11, and that to all generations. God served his own will upon Pharaoh, and his army. Zedekiah was frustrated, he looked for light, and met with darkness; he leaned upon Pharaoh, a broken reed, that ran into his hand, and pierced him, 2 Kings xviii. 21. The armies and forces raised in this land have not made for the king, nor had the Scots that assistance they looked for, when they so lately came in. God's providence works in all, by all, and overrules all, and he brings to pass his own sacred purposes by kings, armies, by men's wits, wills, policies, and powers.

On ver. 18, Obs. The Lord takes notice of the circumstances and aggravations which are in men's sins, especially kings'. "He despised the oath by breaking the covenant, when, lo, he had given his hand." I saw him, saith God, reach out his hand, give it as a pawn and pledge of his fidelity to Nebuchadnezzar; he engaged himself thereby to be subject and tributary unto him. This aggravated his sin much; it was against the light of nature, special mercy; for he had made it a royal hand, the strongest engagement, done upon deliberation. It was against his superior, Nebuchadnezzar, the greatest king then on earth; it was against the good of the whole Jewish state, for it brought war, famine, plague, captivity upon them all: yea, more than all these, it was a high offence against God and his attributes, and therefore the Lord saith, ver. 20, it was a trespass, "he trespassed against me." God minds with what circumstances men's sins are clothed. He noted not only Ahaz' sin, but the time when he sinned: in the time of his distress, when he should have considered his sins, and repented of them, even then did he sin more, 2 Chron. xxviii. 22. So Solomon's sin hath the aggravation nailed to it, 1 Kings xi. 9, "His heart was turned from the Lord God, which had appeared unto him twice."

On ver. 19, Obs. Oaths and covenants made with men are divine things, and not to be slighted. "Mine oath that he hath despised, and my covenant that he hath broken:" it was made with Nebuchadnezzar, a heathen king, an idolater, yet God owns it as made with himself, because his sacred and dreadful name was used therein, and judges the breach and violation thereof as bad as if it had been formally made with himself. If Zedekiah had sworn to God, and covenanted with him, and given him his hand that he would have been faithful to him, obedient to any thing propounded by his divine majesty, it had not been worse.

Oaths made between man and man are called in Scripture the "oath of God," Eccles. viii. 2; and the covenant made between Jonathan and David is called "the Lord's oath," 2 Sam. xxi. 7. Let not men, therefore, slight covenants and oaths they have made with men, but remember they have to do with God, who is faithful, performing what he swears, and keeping covenant for ever. It is good to be like unto God, as in other things, so in this. When Joshua had made a league with the Gibeonites, and the princes had sworn unto them, though they were fallaciously brought thereunto by the Gibeonites' craft, yet they durst not violate the league made and sworn, and so put them to the sword as they did others; but said, "We will even let them live, lest wrath be upon us, because of the oath." Josh. ix. 15, 20. You know what great wrath of God hath fallen upon those who invaded us, breaking the covenant and despising the oath.

On ver. 20, Obs. The Lord hath nets and snares to catch and take perfidious princes and people in. "I will spread my net upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare." There is no evasion when God seeks after sinners; if he throw the net, it shall encompass the greatest leviathan; if he set the snare, it shall take the stoutest lion.

God had a net for Pharaoh, and caught that great leviathan in the sea. An oak was the net he caught Absalom in, 2 Sam. xviii. 9. The earth was his net to take Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. A heap of stones was his net thrown upon Achan. A cave was the snare he took five kings in, Josh. x. 16—18. The kings of Sodom and Gomorrah were snared in slime pits, Gen. xiv. 10. Herod could not escape the worms, they were God's net and snare to catch him. The Babylonish armies were his nets and snares to take Hoshai, 2 Kings xvii; Manasseh, 2 Chron. xxxiii.; Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah, who were all kings, 2 Chron. xxxvi. Zedekiah had thoughts he should escape, but he did not escape besieging, taking, carrying into Babylon. When the city was taken, he fled by night, Jer. xxxix. 4; but God spread his net so, that it fell upon him, and all with him.

Let men take heed of offending the great God of heaven and earth, he hath nets and snares to take them with. If once he throw his net, and set his snare, he will take them; and being taken, you may struggle, but shall never get out. Nets and snares are hidden things, they catch suddenly, and hold certainly.

On ver. 22, Obs. Not only princes, but counsellors and co-partners in wickedness, shall be punished. "All his fugitives with all his bands shall fall by the sword." The king was not alone in this defection from Nebuchadnezzar; his princes, nobles, counsellors, joined with him in sending to Egypt, they and the militia in opposing Nebuchadnezzar, who had given them their lives and power, but they all fell by the sword, or were scattered.

Obs. 2. Events declare the truth of threatening, and cause men to see their follies. Zedekiah and others would not believe what was threatened against them and Jerusalem; but when things came to pass, they were convinced, and made to see their errors: they "shall know that I the Lord have spoken it."

Ver. 22—24. Thus saith the Lord God; I will also take of the highest branch of the high cedar, and will set it; I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and will plant it upon an high mountain and eminent: in the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it: and it shall bring forth boughs, and bear fruit, and be a goodly cedar: and under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing; in the shadow of the branches thereof shall they dwell. And all the trees of the field shall know that I the Lord have brought down the high tree, have exalted the low tree, have dried up the green tree, and have made the dry tree to flourish: I the Lord have spoken and have done it.

These verses contain a promise of mercy, which is the last general part of the chapter: and it is no mean promise, but an exceeding great and precious promise, namely, of Christ and his kingdom.

The Lord having resolved and sworn, in the former part of the chapter, the rooting up the Jewish vine, namely, the destruction of Zedekiah, his princes, nobles, city, people, and laying all waste, some among them might say, What will now become of his promise to Abraham, to David, and others, that out of their loins and seed should come a blessing to all nations, that the Messiah should spring out of their root? if all Judah be rooted up, and carried out into Babylon, what truth in the promise of God? how will this be made good which hath proceeded out of his sacred lips? What! will the God of truth be unfaithful, and fail now? No, saith the Lord, I am mindful of what I have promised: and though you see not how it shall be accomplished, I do: I have ways not thought of by you: "I will also take of the highest branch of the high cedar, I will set, and plant it," &c.

In the words you have these things considerable:

- I. The "high cedar," ver. 22.
- II. What God will do to it; "take of the highest branch," &c. ver. 22.
- III. What he will do with that branch; "set it, plant it," ver. 22, 23.

IV. Where; "upon an high mountain and eminent," ver. 22; which is specified to be "the mountain of the height of Israel," ver. 23.

V. The effects of this plantation.

1. Growth; "It shall bring forth boughs," ver. 23.
2. Fruitfulness; "and bear fruit," ver. 23.
3. Greatness, or goodness; "and be a goodly cedar," ver. 23.
4. Security to all fowls; "under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing."

VI. The product of the whole, ver. 24.

I shall open the words, and then give you the observations.

Ver. 22. "I will also take of." The pronoun, "I," seems to be mentioned in opposition to the great eagle, Nebuchadnezzar, who "took the highest branch of the cedar," ver. 3; which he did, to weaken, make tributary, and destroy the kingdom of Israel; though he planted it, yet it prospered not any considerable time. And seeing he did so, saith God, I will also, who am a greater eagle, and more mighty monarch, than he, "take of the highest branch of the high cedar, and plant it," so as it shall grow, prosper, and thereby the kingdom of Israel be raised to a greater height and glory than ever.

"The highest branch of the high cedar." The high cedar was the tribe of Judah, which had the pre-eminence above the rest, the head whereof was the family of David, out of which came the kingly race. The highest branch of it was Jehoiachin, who, though in Babylon, God locked at, and minded not Zedekiah, who was perfidious, his sons were slain, himself laid by, and God would take of Jehoiachin's seed, and from thence raise up the kingdom of Judah. Jehoiachin, who also was called Jechoniah, 1 Chron. iii. 16, in his captivity was said to beget Salathiel, and Salathiel, Zorobabel, Matt. i. 12, who was the tender one cropped off from the young twig, as the Jews expound the place, and make all spoken here to be meant of him and his successors, for he was the chief man that brought them out of Babylon unto Jerusalem again, and reared up the tabernacle of David and the Jewish polity.

Be it granted that he is included in this allegorical promise, yet it cannot be principally understood of him; for something is here spoken that was never verified in him or his successors according to the Jewish account. In ver. 23, it is said, "under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing;" this is of larger extent than the power of Zorobabel or the Jewish estate reached unto. It clearly points at the kingdom of Christ, and all sorts of people coming under his wing and protection; the evidence whereof hath caused some absolutely to interpret all of Christ. But we may look at Zorobabel in it as a type, out of whose root and stock Christ came, as appears, Matt. i.; and safely conclude it had its real fulfilling in him, whom our prophet chiefly aims at in this place, and upon him we shall fasten what is to be said.

"A tender one." The Hebrew word רך ryk signifies such a tenderness as is opposed to hardness. When a branch of a tree is grown up, it is hard, firm, but when it first shoots forth, it is soft and tender; such a one was Christ. The Septuagint is, καρδιά, or, the heart, which is the tenderest part in man; others, a little twig.

"I will plant it upon an high mountain and eminent." This tender one he would not plant in the wilderness, in some obscure place, but upon a mountain, and not any ordinary mountain, but a high and eminent one, which was mount Zion; Psal. ii. 6, "I have set my king upon my holy hill of Zion." Mount Zion was the place he loved, Psal. lxxviii. 68, and where he resolved to dwell, Psal. cxxxii. 14.

It is put off for the church and people of God, Isa. lx. 14; 1 Pet. ii. 6; Heb. xii. 22. And so the high and eminent mountain here is put for the church, in and over which Christ was to be planted King. God would raise up this "tender one," and make him King. Zion was a little hill in it; but because the law and glory of God was to go out from thence, therefore it was eminent.

Ver. 23. "In the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it." That is, in the church, which is the height of Israel: Micah iv. 1, "In the last days it shall come to pass that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills." Christ's kingdom shall be above all kingdoms: Luke i. 32, "He shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of David his father:" ver. 33, "He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

"It shall bring forth boughs, and bear fruit." Their tender ones, being planted in the mountain of God, did not wither, but rooted, grew, had boughs and fruit. The boughs you may call Christ's apostles, seventy disciples, his fruit was judgment and justice: Jer. xxiii. 5, "I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice." David long before prophesied what his fruit should be: Psal. lxxii. 12—14, "He shall deliver the needy when he crieth; and him that hath no helper. He shall spare the poor and needy, and shall save the souls of the needy. He shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence: and precious shall their blood be in his sight."

The fruit of this Plant is specified by Isaiah, chap. lxi. 1—3, "Preaching good tidings, binding up the broken-hearted, proclaiming liberty to captives, opening the prison to those who are bound, comforting mourners, and making trees of righteousness;" he went up and down "doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil," Acts x. 38. The gospel, with all the ordinances, promises, miracles, and benefits of it, are the fruit of this tree.

"And be a goodly cedar." A great cedar, saith the Septuagint. A stately one, say others. The cedar excels other trees in height, in sweetness, in duration; and hereby the excellency of Christ's kingdom is set out in the spiritualness, fragraney, and lastingness of it. His "kingdom is not of this world," John xviii. 36; he rules in righteousness, Isa. xi. 4; so that his "name is as ointment poured forth," Cant. i. 3; and of his kingdom there is no end, Isa. ix. 7. This cedar is the most excellent, goodly, odoriferous, and durable, that ever grew in Lebanon. The top of this cedar doth not only reach up to heaven, but is in heaven, Phil. ii. 6—11.

"Under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing." Hebrew, all fowl, all of wing. Septuagint, every beast, and every flying thing. That is, the tribes, and the gentiles, all the elect out of both, they should come flying like birds unto a tree for shelter: all nations should come unto the church for relief. Not all kings, nor angels, but all nations, should come under this cedar, as in Dan. iv. 12, the fowls of the heaven dwelt in the great tree there mentioned. So here, all fowl should come under this goodly cedar. In and under the trees the birds were safe sheltered from the violence of weather, heat of sun, and vermin on the earth; there they bred, there they sung, and there they quietly rested themselves. Such benefit should the faithful find by coming under Christ, the goodly cedar, in Zion. That which is called all "fowl of every wing" here, is called "all nations and tongues," Isa. lxvi. 18; and "all flesh," ver. 23.

Ver. 24. "All the trees of the field." By "trees of the field," some understand all the kings, princes, and potentates of the world; who are so called, because,

1. They are deeply rooted and fastened in the world, as trees are in the earth. You may easily pluck up a flower, a little plant, but not a tree; and so great ones are not easily moved, or plucked up.

2. They are eminent above others, as trees are above bushes, shrubs, little plants, underwood, whose growth they hinder by overshadowing and over-dripping them.

3. They are trees in respect of their spreading and extension. The arms, boughs, and branches of trees extend every way, and far; so great men, their power reaches far, and oft too far.

4. In that they succour and harbour others, many shelter themselves under their shadow, as trees do the birds. Oft great men shelter the beasts and vermin of the earth, not the birds of heaven.

5. Trees, in regard of fruitfulness. Great men are very fruitful one way or other, but mostly in wickedness. Zedekiah had his fruit, falseness and perjury. "Every tree that bears not good fruit," &c.

However great ones be trees, yet I conceive not only they, but the people of the nations, are here meant by trees, for he calls them "trees of the field." The Jews were the trees of the orchard and garden of God, but the gentiles were the trees of the field or world; and they should see and know what the Lord's ways were with this Jewish state and people.

"Have brought down the high tree." This high tree was Zedekiah, who would not hear Jeremiah, nor keep covenant with Nebuchadnezzar, but being stubborn and haughty of spirit, would go his own ways, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 12, 13. Some would have it understood of the kingdom of Zedekiah, but that is not congruous with what is in ver. 6, where that is likened to "a vine of low stature;" it is better, therefore, to expound it of the person of Zedekiah; for though the kingdom was low, yet he was haughty and high. Others make this high tree to be the kingdom of Babylon, which was overthrown by the hand of Cyrus, and so way made for the low tree, the Jews in captivity, to return by the hand of Zerubbabel. They, Christ and his kingdom in them, were very low during the captivity, but the Lord brought them forth, exalted them, Christ and his kingdom, in due time.

"Have dried up the green tree." Zedekiah and his kingdom were like a green vine with branches and sprigs, ver. 6; but the Lord rooted up this vine, threw it into Babylon, where it died. "Green" with apprehension they only were the people of God; "green" with conceits of their own righteousness; "green" with hopes of liveliness.

"Have made the dry tree to flourish." By the dry tree Lavater understands the gentiles, who were without promises, covenant. Others, Jecmiah, who was a captive in Babylon, and, after thirty-seven years' imprisonment, exalted by Evil-merodach, and his throne set above the throne of other kings with him; and so the kingdom of David, that had been long a dry tree, began in him, Salathiel, Zerubbabel, and afterward in Christ, to flourish.

Obs. I. After grievous judgments threatened to come upon a state or church, God propounds matter of comfort to his elect and faithful therein, that so when the execution is, their hearts may be supported and comforted. When God should root out Zedekiah and his people, the kingdom would be laid waste, the faithful should suffer much, lose estates, friends, liberty, country, temple, ordinances, and worship of God. Now for comfort against all these evils, he tells them of the Messiah, whom he would take care should come into the world: "I will take of the highest branch of the high cedar, and will set it." However things went, God would take care that the line of which Christ was to come should be preserved, and that his promise should be made good. So Isa. xi. 1, "There shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots." Now the stem of Jesse seemed to be cut down, and the root of Jesse to be pulled up; but the Lord preserved the root and stem, out of which he brought a rod and a branch for the comfort of the faithful suffering Jews. This promise of the Branch is oft mentioned in holy writ for the comfort of the Jews, Jer. xxiii. 5, 6; xxxiii. 15. 16; Zech. iii. 8; vi. 12, 13.

Obs. 2. The Lord Christ descended from the highest. "I will take of the highest branch of the high cedar." He came from the loins of Jeconiah, who was king of Judah, and from fourteen kings before him, as appears Matt. i.: he was the son of nobles, and born a King; therefore when the wise men came from the east to Jerusalem, they said, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews," Matt. ii. 2. He was the first-born of the Kings of Judah, the right heir to, and should have succeeded them in, the kingdom, which Herod at that time usurped. Such a hint being given out by the wise men, it is strange that neither the sanhedrim, the high priests, scribes, nor Pharisees, should search out the truth of it. They were wise and learned in their generation, but blind in all the things of Christ. However they failed, let us take notice of it, that Jesus Christ was the son of nobles, and came of royal blood.

Obs. 3. The beginnings of Christ were mean and low. "I will crop off from the top of this young twigs a tender one." Christ at first was as a little tender shoot of a tree set in the earth; and how weak, mean, low, and inconsiderable is such a thing! If one should take a little twig of a cedar, or an oak, and prick it in the earth in some obscure place, men would not regard it. Christ's beginnings were such: he took flesh of a poor mean virgin, the wife of a carpenter, Matt. i. He was born in a poor village, Mic. v. 2; in a stable, laid in a manger, Luke ii. 7. He was subject to his parents, being poor and low, ver. 51. He lay in the dark till thirty years of age, Luke iii. 23; and then he began with two or three poor fishermen, Matt. iii. 18—22; then some others to the number of twelve; and even now when he seemed to be somebody, he had not a house or bed for himself or them: Luke ix. 58, "Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." And for his maintenance, it was at the good will of others: Luke viii. 3, "Joanna, Susanna, and many others, ministered unto him of their substance."

Obs. 4. The Lord Christ is planted in the church, and become a fruitful and goodly cedar therein. "I will plant it upon an high mountain and eminent, the mountain of the height of Israel; and it shall bring forth boughs, bear fruit, and be a goodly cedar." Christ was planted in Zion, there he grew, there he brought forth fruit; with the timber of this cedar was the church built, with the fruit of this cedar it is maintained, Isa. iv. 2, "In that day shall the branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth be excellent." The branch was Christ, and he should be for beauty and glory to the church, and the fruit that should come from him should be excellent: never tree bare such fruit: the church saith, "His fruit was sweet to my taste." "Wisdom, righteousness, redemption, and sanctification," are the fruits of this cedar, 1 Cor. i. 30; the life of the world, John vi. 33; the ordinances of the gospel, Matt. xxviii. 19; 1 Cor. i. 23; "exceeding great and precious promises," 2 Pet. i. 4; reconciliation, Col. i. 20; the gift of the Spirit or Comforter, John xvi. 7; revelation of the counsels of God, John xv. 15; fellowship with the Father and the Son, John xiv. 9; 1 John i. 3; "eternal life," John x. 28. Such was the fruit this cedar bore. In the midst of the church he was planted, fruitful, and sang praise to God, Heb. ii. 12. And so high is this cedar grown, that it is now in heaven at the right hand of God, "far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come," Eph. i. 20, 21. So that the mountain of the Lord is on the top of all mountains, and this cedar on the top of that mountain.

Obs. 5. Unto Christ and his kingdom shall come in all that are elect, both Jews and gentiles. "Under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing;" they shall come, and come flying; let them be in what kingdom they will, in what condition soever, learned, ignorant, rich, poor, weak, strong, sound, sick, young, or old, they shall come to Christ. Isa. lx. 3, "The gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising." Ver. 4, "Thy sons shall come from far, and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side." He speaks of the church under Christ: ver. 8, they should come flying "as doves to their windows." Chap. lxxvi. 23, "It shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord;" both Jews and gentiles, nothing shall let or hinder, he will bring them, Isa. lvi. 7. And Christ saith, John vi. 37, "All that the Father giveth me shall come unto me;" nothing in Satan, in themselves, in the world, shall keep or let them from coming under this cedar.

Obs. 6. There is safety under Christ, he will protect and defend his people from all harms. "Under it shall they dwell." Men will not dwell where is no safety. Fowls and birds when they get into a great tree, they are secure from any who pursue them, from all harms from above or from beneath; so those who come under Christ's shadow, Christ's power and government, they shall dwell there safely. Ezek. xxxiv. 24, 25, God will set up his servant David a Prince among them, that is, Christ; and what then? "I will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land;" that is, by the power of Christ: Isa. xi. 4, and they shall dwell safely, there shall be no hurting nor destroying in the mountain of God, ver. 9. And chap. xxv. 10, "In this mountain shall the hand of the Lord rest, and Moab shall be trodden down under him, even as straw is trodden down for the dunghill." Christ will protect his church, and tread down the enemies thereof, whatever their power, policies, and pretences are. He is a cedar in wisdom, Col. ii. 3; a cedar in power, Matt. xxviii. 18; a cedar in his providence and vigilance, Isa. xxvii. 3; hence saith the church, "I sat down under his shadow with great delight," Cant. ii. 3. It is Christ secures from sin, from the wisdom of the flesh, the storms of the world, temptations of hell, and whatever is dangerous: Isa. xxv. 4, "Thou hast been a strength to the poor, a strength to the needy in his distress, a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall." If you be under the shadow of this cedar, though the winds blow hard, the floods beat sore, and rain fall with strength, yet you shall be as safe as the house built upon the rock, Matt. vii. 24, 25.

Under other cedars there is no safety. Kings of the earth are cedars, but they prey upon their subjects rather than protect them; they think that all men are made to serve their lusts, and therefore mind themselves, and care not what becomes of the people, so they may grow great and fat on earth: it is otherwise with Christ, he seeks the good, the comfort, the safety, the greatness, and glory of his subjects.

Obs. 7. Princes that are haughty and proud, God will bring them down, though they be in flourishing conditions. "I have brought down the high tree, and dried up the green tree." Zedekiah was a high tree; the king of Judah and his spirit was high, he would not stoop to God or man, he hearkened not to the God of Israel, nor to his prophets; he would not keep covenant and promise with the king of Babylon, but his will was his law; but God laid the axe to the root of this tree, and hewed it down, and great was the fall thereof. No trees are so high, but the Lord, who is higher than they, can lay them low; let them be green with boughs, branches, leaves, let them have many children, many nobles, many soldiers, many counsellors, many kingdoms, all cannot preserve them from ruin. Nebuchadnezzar was a high tree, his top reached to heaven, Dan. iv. 11, he was proud and bloody; and what fell out? "A watcher and an holy one came down from heaven, cried aloud, and said, Hew down the tree, cut off his branches, shake off his leaves, scatter his fruit; let the beasts get away from under it, and the fowls from his branches," ver. 13, 14. There is a watcher observes the spirits, plots, practices of kings, and hews them down at his pleasure; and when they fall, let the beasts and fowls which have harboured under them, and been instruments to accomplish their wicked wills, take heed lest they be crushed in their fall.

Pharaoh was a high tree, the highest in all Egypt; he said, "I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil; my lust shall be satisfied upon them; I will draw my sword, my hand shall destroy them:" here was pride and cruelty, which usually go together; and what followed hereupon? "Thou didst blow with thy wind, the sea covered them; they sank as lead in the mighty waters," Exod. xv. 9, 10. Amaziah king of Judah grew proud upon a victory, and provoked Joash to battle; by him God broke him in pieces, brought him low, and afterwards he was slain by his own subjects, 2 Chron. xxv. Saul was a goodly man, a high tree in Israel, he was proud, cruel, false, disobedient to God; and he rejected him, and cut him down by the Philistines and his own sword, 1 Sam. xxxi. So Ahab, 1 Kings xxii.; Herod, Acts xii. 23. Belshazzar lifted up himself against the Lord of heaven, and would not see the hand of God upon his father Nebuchadnezzar, and humble himself; and presently a hand was seen writing his doom, and that night was he slain, Dan. v. 5, 22, 23, 30. Haughty spirits, whoever they are, God will humble and lay low; he beholds them afar off, he resists them, and will scatter them. Isa. x. 33, 34, "Behold, the Lord, the Lord of hosts, shall lop the bough with terror: and the high ones of stature shall be hewn down, and the haughty shall be humbled. He shall cut down the thickets of the forests with iron, and Lebanon shall fall by a mighty one." It is spoken of Sennacherib and his army; this God hewed down by a mighty angel, and himself by his own sons, Isa. xxxvii. 36, 38. The Lord hath days and times to reckon with the high and haughty ones: Isa. ii. 12—17, "The day of the Lord of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up; and he shall be brought low: upon all the cedars of Lebanon, upon all the oaks of Bashan, upon all the high mountains, and upon all the hills that are lifted up, &c. And the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low: and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day." And then men shall run "into holes and caves for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth," ver. 19.

Obs. 8. How low soever the conditions of kingdoms, families, or persons are, God can, and it is his way to raise them. "I have exalted the low tree, and made the dry tree to flourish." The kingdom of Judah, the house of David, the person of Jeconiah, were very low in Babylon, like low shrubs, dry trees; but God's eye was upon them, he wrought for them, he exalted them, and brought a glorious kingdom and church out of those low beginnings. Was not Christ like a low and dry tree, when he lay in the loins of Jeconiah, a prisoner, a captive; when he lay in the womb of the virgin; hewed timber, made houses for his living; especially when he was cut down and laid in the heart of the earth; was he not as a dry tree then? but God exalted him, set him at his right hand, Acts ii. 33, and Peter proclaimed it; "Let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye crucified, both Lord and Christ," ver. 36. Thus did he "grow up before the Lord as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground," Isa. liii. 2. Luke i. 52. "He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree."

Obs. 9. God will do these things so eminently, that the world shall take notice, and be filled with the glory thereof. "And all the trees of the field shall know, that I the Lord," &c.: not only the orchard trees, but the field trees, not domestic alone, but wild ones. Isa. ii. 19, men shall fear and hide themselves "for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth."

CHAPTER XVIII.

Ver. 1—4. The word of the Lord came unto me again, saying, What mean ye, that ye use this proverb concerning the land of Israel, saying, The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge? As I live, saith the Lord God, ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel. Behold, all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine: the soul that sinneth, it shall die.

THE Jews in Babylon meeting with much hardship in their captivity, instead of being humbled for their sins, which brought sad miseries upon them, took up an unjust complaint against God, and charged him to deal unjustly by them; viz. That their fathers had sinned, and they who were their children suffered for their sins; we being innocent, are grievously afflicted for their iniquities. This false charge God clears himself of in this chapter, and shows them that he is most just in punishing and rewarding, that every one shall bear his own sins, and not another's, be rewarded according to what he is, and hath done, be he just or unjust. If the unjust repent of his evil ways, he shall have mercy; if the just turn from his righteousness he shall have judgment. And this is the sum and main argument of this chapter.

In the chapter you have two general parts:

I. God's expostulation with the Jews by the prophet, ver. 1—50.

11. An exhortation to repentance and newness of life, ver. 30 to the end.

Concerning the expostulation, you have,

1. The ground of it, ver. 2, "What mean ye, that," &c.

2. A threatening to take away that evil proverb, ver. 3.

3. God's vindication of himself,

(1.) In general, in ver. 4, "Behold, all souls are mine," &c.

(2.) More particularly, from the beginning of ver. 5 to ver. 19.

4. The Jews' replication in ver. 9, and God's further vindication of himself against their unjust accusation, from the middle of ver. 19 to ver. 25, where,

5. They treble their charge upon God, and tell him his ways are not equal; from which God retorting the accusation upon themselves, doth, as formerly, vindicate himself, to ver. 30.

Ver. 1. "The word of the Lord came unto me, saying." Thus began chap. vi. vii. xii. xiii. xv. xvi. xvii. The Holy Spirit inspired him; as that moved him he spake, and not of his own head, as the false prophets did. Though he were in Babylon, he wanted not divine inspiration, which he often tells them of, that his prophecy might be weighty and authoritative.

Ver. 2. "What mean ye, that," &c. Here is the matter of the expostulation, propounded by way of reprehension: You do use a strange proverb, that tends to my dishonour, and represents me to the world to be an unjust God; but what cause have I given you to speak in this manner? surely I know no cause given you why you should utter such a proverb; if there be, bring it forth, and let me hear it.

"That ye use this proverb." Hebrew is, proverbizing a proverb, as chap. xvii. 2; and it notes the frequent use they made of it, tossing that proverb up and down amongst them: they did not now and then speak it, but it was frequently and constantly in their mouths. Of the nature of a proverb was spoken chap. xii. 22, and xvii. 2.

"Of the land of Israel." That is, of the people of Israel; not the ten tribes, for they were gone into captivity long before, but those of Judea.

"The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge." The word for "sour grapes" is בָּטָר which signifies an unripe or wild grape.

"Are set on edge." Hebrew is from קָרָה which signifies to make blunt and dull, as iron without an edge. Whether the English words, "are set on edge," are so proper, and hold out the sense, I leave to the judgment of the learned; they seem to me to hint a sharpening rather than a dulling. All expositors I meet with make the word to signify obstuscescency and hebetation.

Sour grapes, and many other sour things, do disaffect the teeth; sometimes they cause the toothache, sometimes they dull and stupify the teeth, so that those which stand by and see the parties eating them, have their teeth ill affected also; as Aristotle observes in his Problems, and experience teacheth us. Two things are to be considered concerning this proverb: 1. The meaning of it. 2. The occasion.

1. For the meaning. By "sour grapes," the Jews understand sin, not sin simply, but such sins as do bring heavy judgments of God upon a land or people, as idolatry, murder, oppression, trusting in an arm of flesh, unnatural pollutions, illegal mixtures, drunkenness, profaneness, &c. The prophet Isaiah warrants this sense of sour grapes, chap. v. 2, 4, where he calls the sins of Judah, "wild grapes:" God looked that his vineyard should bring forth grapes, good fruit, justice, righteousness, truth, and it brought forth wild grapes, oppression, a cry, covetousness, lasciviousness, drunkenness, pride, of which he speaks in the chapter.

Such sins are called sour or wild grapes, because they wound conscience, are burdensome unto others, are as distasteful unto God as such grapes are to us; they grieve his Spirit, and exasperate him to lay waste the vine that bears such fruit.

By this proverb thus much is signified, that the fathers had sinned, and the children suffered for their sin; the fathers did that which was very offensive unto God, and the children were punished for it; they did eat the sour grapes, brought forth the bitter fruit, and these smarted for it, the children's teeth were set on edge, or stupified, that is, they were punished for what their fathers had done; they thought and said that their fathers were the cause of all the evils which befell them. Like unto this proverb are these: "Kings sin, and the people suffer;" "The child offends, and the servant is beaten."

2. The occasion. The princes and people going on in the idolatrous, oppressing, profane, bloody, and wicked ways of their fathers, the prophets did threaten them with destruction of their temple, city, and estate; hereupon they said, Our fathers did as we do, and they were spared, why should we suffer? And when the prophets pressed the sins of Manasseh, as Jer. xv. 3, 4, "I will appoint over them four kinds, saith the Lord; the sword to slay, the dogs to tear, the fowls of heaven, the beasts of the earth, to devour and destroy: and I will cause them to be removed into all kingdoms of the earth, because of Manasseh the son of Hezekiah king of Judah, for that which he did in Jerusalem." Manasseh's sin struck much upon the heart of God: he made them do more evil than the nations which God destroyed; he filled Jerusalem with innocent blood, 2 Kings xxi. 9, 16; he "made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to err and do worse than heathen," 2 Chron. xxxiii. 9. When God stirred the prophets to tell them that for his sins he would lay Jerusalem waste, as he had the ten tribes for Jeroboam's sins, they then took up this proverb, and said, "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge;" Ahaz, Manasseh, Amon, and others of our forefathers, have sinned, and we must suffer. Or thus; Zedekiah and his counsellors had perfidiously broken covenant with Nebuchadnezzar, for which the prophets threatened utter ruin to all; hereupon the people said, "Our fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge;" the kings and nobles have transgressed, and we shall be ruined for it. But the former occasion is the better, because Zedekiah and the nobles did suffer with them, and were punished for their own sins.

This proverb was grown common amongst them, both in Babylon and in Zion, it was tossed up and down and spread. Ezekiel tells them of it in Babylon, and Jeremiah in Zion; chap. xxxi. 29, "They shall say no more, The fathers have eaten a sour grape," &c. The evil of this proverb was great, for besides their charging of God with injustice and partiality, hereby, (1.) they discovered their fathers' sins and nakedness, and that without sorrow or repentance for them. (2.) Made light of any thing the prophets threatened against them. (3.) Obstructed the way against future repentance, or profiting by the judgments of God which should come upon them; for being persuaded and possessed with this opinion, that they suffered unjustly for their fathers' sins, not their own, they would never submit, mourn, condemn, but justify themselves.

Ver. 3. "As I live, saith the Lord God." This oath of the Lord hath several times been spoken of, and therefore I shall now say nothing of it.

"Ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb." Hebrew is, If there shall be to you any more to proverbize this proverb. Septuagint, If this parable shall be said any more in Israel; I will take a course that this wicked proverb shall cease. The words may be taken either as a commination, thus: If any of you shall use this proverb any more, as I live, I will punish you; let me be as a dead, dumb, idol god, and not as the living God, if I do it not. Or they may be taken by way of asseveration; I swear that this proverb shall be no more used, I will clear my proceedings with them, so that themselves shall acknowledge, and all the world see and say, they suffer justly; or, I will destroy them for this blasphemous proverb of theirs, and so it shall be heard no more in the land of Israel.

Ver. 4. "Behold, all souls are mine." Here the Lord doth vindicate himself from that unjust crime they laid to his charge, viz. that he punished one for another, the child for the sin of the parent. You mistake, saith God, all souls are mine, I am the common Father of all, I observe the ways of all, and render unto them all according to their works; I do not accept the persons of any in judgment, I neither pronounce nor execute any unjust judgment, but being essentially just, am righteous in all my ways, and holy in all my works, Psal. cxlv. 17. None in heaven or earth hath any sufficient warrant to accuse me, and if I should punish the son for the father's sin, I could give you satisfactory grounds for it.

By "souls," we are to understand persons, a part being put for the whole; and the Scripture doth frequently put the soul for that which is ended with the soul. Lev. vii. 18, 20, 21, "The soul that catcheth, the soul that toucheth, any unclean thing, that soul shall be cut off." Josh. xx. 3, "The slayer that killeth any person;" the Hebrew is, any soul. And so here soul is put for the person. Some think that where it is said, the soul of the father, and the soul of the son, it is to be taken properly; but without prejudice to others, I conceive in those expressions the person is meant; the soul of the father is mine, that is, the father is mine; and the soul of the son is mine, that is, the son is mine; the principal part being put for the whole by a synecdoche. Soul, father, son, man, are synonymes here. Ver. 20, it is said, "The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father;" there it is expressed in the person: and Jer. xxxi. 30, "Every one shall die for his own iniquity; every man that catcheth the sour grape." &c.; he speaks of the same thing our prophet doth, and puts it upon the person. Hence is no warrant for the death of the soul, though it be said, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die;" that is, the person, whatsoever he be that sins, he shall die for it, he shall be punished for his sins.

There is an opinion among some, that the soul sleeps and dies with the body, and so is mortal for the present, though afterwards both body and it put on immortality; but this opinion is repugnant to divine truth. Eccles. xii. 7, speaking of man's death, saith Solomon, "Then shall the dust return unto the earth, and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it;" the body goes one way, the spirit another; if the spirit or soul were mortal, it should have gone with the body. Matt. x. 28, "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul." That is such a transcendent and precious thing, as that it is beyond the reach of all mortal power; death, the king of fears, cannot approach it; but if it were of the same constitution or condition the body is, it might fall by the same hand and stroke the body doth. John viii. 51; xi. 26, Christ saith, he that keeps his sayings, and believes in him, he shall never see death, he shall never die. The Greek is, εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, to eternity, not as if he should see death for a time or times, but he shall ever live; this must be verified of the soul, which sees not the second death, as the souls of the wicked do, nor the first death, as the bodies of all do. 1 Thess. iv. 14, if the soul sleep, it is in Jesus, not in the dust, it is with Christ, not the body; how else will he bring it with him?

"The soul that sinneth, it shall die." These words seem easy, but they are very difficult, and have greatly perplexed interpreters and others. The words import only thus much, that the man which sinneth, whatever he be, he shall suffer, and be cut off for his sin; himself, not any other, shall bear the burden thereof.

The difficulties concerning these words are three.

1. That many sin, and that notoriously, who die not for their sins, but live, adding drunkenness to thirst, and at last go off the stage of the world with as much ease and quiet as other men.

Answer. 1. It is granted that many do not suffer for their sins, though such as deserve suffering; and that,

(1.) To convince men there is a judgment to come. Some suffer here, to show there is a Providence that takes notice of men's ways in the world; and some pass away without any observable judgment upon them, to assure men there is a day of reckoning to come, 2 Pet. ii. 9.

(2.) That the world might not be unpeopled; for if all should be cut off who deserve death, if every soul who sins should die, how few would be left! In the destruction of the old world you know how few were spared.

(3.) That God's long-suffering towards sinners might appear, according to that you have, 2 Pet. iii. 9, "The Lord is long-suffering to us-ward."

2. Sometimes, yea often, it is so, those who are notoriously wicked, they die for it. Prov. x. 27, "The years of the wicked shall be shortened." And Psal. lv. 23, "Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days;" not that all bloody and deceitful men do fall by the stroke of justice, but it is so many times, that by the judge, by their enemies, by themselves, or some hand of God, they perish: therefore the words in the psalmist are not to be taken, mathematically, too subtly, but note out abbreviation of sinners' lives, which is frequently made good; as in Shimei, Joab, Amnon, Abiah, Jezebel, Judas, &c.

3. They die before they can bring to pass fully what they aim at: they break bounds, pervert justice, change times and seasons, think to subject all to their wills, and now while they are in the pursuit of such things, they die, which is a just and heavy judgment of God upon them.

4. By death we may understand a metaphorical death, viz. afflictions, judgments, war, plague, famine, captivity, loss of comforts formerly enjoyed; so it is taken, Exod. x. 17; 2 Cor. xi. 23. And in this sense there is scarce any man who sins beyond the ordinary rule of men's common infirmities, but dies for it, that is, suffers sad afflictions. When David sinned his great sins, the sword was drawn against him, and never departed from his house, 2 Sam. xii. 10. Much more is it so with wicked men; some hand of God or other is upon them.

5. They may humble themselves for their sins, and so they may be spared: Ahab humbled himself,

1 Kings xxi. 29. If they do not suffer themselves for their sins, the judgment follows and falls upon their posterity for their sins, which makes the next difficulty.

2nd difficulty. If the soul that sins shall die, how is it then that the children suffer for their fathers' sins? Where it is said, 1 Kings xxi. 29, "I will not bring the evil in his days," that was Ahab's, "but in his son's days I will bring the evil upon his house." And 2 Kings xxiv. 2, 3, for the sins of Manasseh after he was dead, came sad things upon Judah. 2 Sam. xii. 14, for David's sin the child was stricken with death. Saul's sons were punished for his bloody dealings with the Gibeonites, 2 Sam. xxi.

Answer. 1. We must make an exception here in the point of original sin; for that sin of our first parents, death comes upon all their posterity, Rom. v. 12.

2. For the sin of the father, the child suffers not eternal death, no man is eternally damned for another's sin simply considered; it is a man's own sin which is his everlasting ruin.

3. Temporal and bodily punishments do oft befall the children for their fathers' iniquities, and that justly; for they are parts of them, they come out of their loins, too often inherit their corruptions, imitate and live in their sins; they are part of the family, they make the house; therefore God said he would bring the evil upon Ahab's house, and so he suffered in the suffering of his family. When subjects rebel, fall into treasurable practices, princes deal so with them, that not only they, but their posterity, to divers generations, do suffer; yea, princes themselves have done such acts, as have excluded their posterity from sitting in that throne; and that without imputation of injustice. Besides what is said, children are under the same covenant with their parents; and when magistrates, who are metaphorical parents, or those who are natural parents, do transgress, God may strike the children upon that account, and that to prevent the like evil in them. When fathers are troubled with the gout or stone, physicians prescribe their children to forbear such meats as are dispositive that way.

Whether may the sins of parents being under one covenant, be visited upon the children being under another? as, suppose the parent under the covenant of works, and his children under the covenant of grace, doth it fall out ever that such children suffer for their parents' sins? Yes, they do, as in the case here; Manasseh sinned, and for his sins not only the wicked ones, but Ezekiel and other precious ones, suffered in Babylon: Zedekiah sinned, and those that did mourn and sigh, Ezek. ix. 4, for his and others' abominations, suffered greatly. So on the contrary, for the sins of godly parents, who are in one covenant, may their children suffer, that are under another, as in David and Absalom, 2 Sam. xii. 11, "I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house;" Absalom's rebellion and death, David's sin had the greatest influence into. So Solomon's sin fell heavy upon Rehoboam, 1 Kings xi. 11, 12, and xii. 15, 16, 20. But there is an observable difference in the suffering of the children for the sins of the parents. When the children are gracious, their sufferings upon the account of their parents' sins are chastisements, mercies, and from love; but where they are ungodly, their sufferings are real and true punishments, coming from divine justice and wrath.

3rd difficulty is, The Lord tells them here that for the time to come it should not be so; If the children have suffered for their fathers' sins heretofore, and you have had cause to complain, yet henceforward you shall have no occasion, "the soul that sinneth, it shall die," and no other. Yet shortly after those at Jerusalem suffered; and, Lam. v. 7, took up the complaint here spoken of, "Our fathers have sinned," say they, "and are not; and we have borne their iniquities." Moreover, it is evident to the whole world, that the Jews now do suffer for their fathers' sins: they put the Lord Christ to death, wished his blood to be upon them and their children, and it is upon them in a dreadful manner to this day.

Answer. This is a riddle which I believe will not be fully expounded till the great day of the Lord; only thus much may be said beforehand: Men have extended the sense of those words further than God intended; if we exceed not our limits, but keep to the persons, time, and matter in hand, we may make out the difficulty; as thus, the prophet speaks of the Jews that were already in Babylon, and the others that should suddenly be brought from Jerusalem into the same captivity with them, and principally he hath reference to the sin of Manasseh, as may appear by 2 Kings xxi. 11—14; xxiii. 26, 27; xxiv. 3, 4; Jer. xv. 4, for which they suffered, and made them to complain. Now the Lord intimates, yea assures them, that after their suffering in the Babylonish captivity, he would be satisfied, and they should never suffer more for the sins of Manasseh, but should return again; and if they suffered afterward, it should be for their own sins, not his. In this sense you see the difficulty cleared, but if you enlarge the words to all times and persons, it is beyond the reach of men to answer the difficulty; for we see it daily, that one sins, and others suffer for it; parents sin, and their children suffer; magistrates sin, and cities suffer; princes sin, and people suffer. The Lord did not divest himself here of that power and privilege of visiting the iniquities of parents upon the heads of their children, but takes away that accusation they laid against him for suffering so long and grievous a captivity for the sins of Manasseh. That this is the meaning of the words, and their not using the proverb any more, I am confirmed out of Jeremiah, chap. xxxi. 27—30, "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will sow the house of Israel and the house of Judah with the seed of man, and with the seed of beast. And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, and to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict; so will I watch over them, to build, and to plant, saith the Lord." This is meant of their return from Babylon; and what then? "In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge; but every one shall die for his own iniquity." So then after the return this proverb ceased, and to those Jews that suffered upon the account of Manasseh's sins; but it is still of force to other Jews, and among us gentiles.

"The soul that sinneth, it shall die."

Quest. May not God spare a soul that sins? he saith peremptorily here, "The soul that sins shall die;" and if so, it obstructs, bars up mercy, and leaves us all without hope, and ties God's hand, &c.

Answer. 1. I will answer this question by clearing another scripture like unto it: Gen. ii. 17, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." This threatening or law was not purely or simply legal, nor from absolute justice, because if we look at the elect, it included the good pleasure of God in the death of Christ for them, and so it had somewhat evangelical in it; but in respect of the reprobate it was merely legal, and from pure justice, whereby God determined to punish sinners: so here, this threatening hath mercy in it, the soul that sins must either die itself, or in Christ; so that in some it is fulfilled evangelically, in others legally.

2. Sin is not against the essence and nature of God, for sin is transgression of a law; had not God made such a law, there had been no sin; "where no law is, there is no transgression," Rom. iv. 15. Therefore sin not being against the nature of God, he might have left all free to man, as well as to beasts, fowls, and fishes: had sin been against his nature, he had been necessitated to punish it, but being against his will, he doth freely punish it, and therefore may not punish it, but spare the sinner. Those rules and laws of justice in the word, are to tie us, and not God; he hath his prerogative above all those laws, and saith, "I will have mercy on whom I will," Rom. ix. 15. And if this do not satisfy, cast your thoughts upon the death of Christ. That Christ died is justice, and so respects the covenant of works; that he died for us is mercy, and so respects the covenant of grace.

Obs. 1. Men are apt to quarrel against God's word, ministrations, and proceedings in the world; they think and say, he deals hardly, if not tyrannically, with them. If he cause wars, send famines, plagues, cast into captivity, and lay his hand heavy upon a nation or family, how apt are the sons of men to murmur and charge God foolishly! But what is flesh and blood unto God? Shall clay dispute with the potter, dust with the balance, the drop with the bucket? He is the Maker of the whole world; let us be silent before him.

Obs. 2. God is just and righteous in his government of the world, and in all his dispensations therein, however things appear, and are accounted of by men. Sometimes the ways of God with the world, kingdoms, families, persons, seem strange, crooked, dark, unequal, not because they are so, but because men are weak, purblind, and cannot penetrate into the depths of them. God's drowning the whole world, shutting up the knowledge of himself so many hundred years in Judea from the rest of the world; his consuming Sodom and Gomorrah with fire and brimstone, slaying so many thousands for looking into the ark; his casting off the Jews from being his people, and letting them go under the curse now sixteen hundred years; his blessing of the wicked, and afflicting of the godly, Jer. xii. 1, 2; his casting off Saul for lesser sins, and sparing David, Solomon, who were guilty of greater; his sending unseasonable weather, to blast, corrupt, and make both corn and cattle unwholesome, unuseful, or less serviceable; his setting tyrants over his people, to impoverish, persecute, and destroy them, without any mercy; his ordering it so, that the young of all brute creatures can shift for themselves presently, and infants, the births of more noble creatures, should be shiftless so long; that so many thousand innocent creatures are cut off, even infants, in public calamities; that the Baptist's head must off, when a Barabbas goes free; "that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, nor bread to the wise, nor riches to men of understanding, nor favour to men of skill," &c. Eccles. ix. 11: these and such emergents in the world, prompt occasions unto shallow, silly man, to think that there is no Providence, or that the government of the world is not righteous and just. But as there is a God, so in his wise providence he orders and rules all things, and that righteously: Psal. cxlv. 17, "The Lord is righteous in all his ways;" no ways of his general or special providence have any crookedness in them; whenever thoughts rise in any to that purpose, let them remember what Jeremiah said when his heart was troubled in the same case, "Righteous art thou, O Lord, when I plead with thee;" though I cannot see the ground, cause, reason of thy ways, yet thou art righteous, and that shall suffice me. God is most righteous, he will punish none unjustly, nor neglect to reward any who have done well; see Rom. ii. 6—11.

Obs. 3. God may give and impose what laws he pleases. Isa. xxxiii. 22, "The Lord is our law-giver;" Hebrew is, our statute-maker; all legislative power is fundamentally in God: James iv. 12, "There is one lawgiver;" he hath given all creatures, as limits for their essence, so laws for their operation: Psal. cxix. 91, "They continue this day according to thine ordinances; for all are thy servants;" they all do the work God appoints, and observe the laws he prescribes. He may command what he pleases; he licensed Adam to eat of some trees, and not of others; he bade Abraham go out of his country, sacrifice his son; the Israelites to rob the Egyptians; he forbade the Jews to eat of several fowls and beasts; he appointed Ezekiel to eat his bread baked in dung, chap. iv.; Saul to slay Amalek, and not to spare man, woman, or child, 1 Sam. xv.; he bade Hosea take a wife of whoredoms, chap. i. 2; he laid circumcision, sacrifices, and all the ceremonials upon the Jews, easier things upon the gentiles: all souls are his, and what laws, statutes, ordinances seem good to him, he may put upon them. The gospel, not the law, faith, not works, he hath made the way to glory. He may prescribe what he list, his will is law unto the creature: he may give us easy or harsh laws, such as tend to our ruin as well as our good; Ezek. xx. 25, "I gave them statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live." Men may not do so, their laws must be for good, else they are sinful, and not binding.

Obs. 4. Then may the Lord choose whom he will. Rom. ix. 13, 15, 18, "Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated. I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy: and whom he will he hardens." May kings choose from among their subjects whom they please to serve them in their courts, and shall not the Lord, whose are all souls, take whom he pleases to serve him in his court of glory? hath every potter power over the clay, to make one vessel to honour, another to dishonour, ver. 21, and shall not the Lord, who is the greatest potter of all, have that prerogative? shall the servant have more than the Master? In this great house of the world, there are vessels to honour and dishonour, 2 Tim. ii. 20; there are some appointed unto disobedience and stumbling, 1 Pet. ii. 8, yea, unto wrath, 1 Thess. v. 9; and who shall question God for so doing? He is not to give account to any man of his actions; he may absolutely do with his own what he list; he made of the same earth man and beast, and shall the beast say to God, Why madest thou me a beast, and not a man? it may as well as man dispute it with God, and say, Why didst thou make me a vessel of dishonour, and not of honour? Should Adam have reasoned it with God, and said, Why didst thou make me the first Adam a natural man, and Christ the second Adam a spiritual man? There is no reasoning with God. Psal. cxxxv. 6, " whatsoever the Lord pleased, that did he in heaven and in earth;" and whatsoever pleaseth the Lord, that doth he now in heaven and in earth.

Obs. 5. Then may the Lord bestow what gifts he will upon the children of men, excellent or mean, greater or less; he may give one five talents, another two, a third one. A father gives to his children several portions, to one more, to another less, he is not bound to give all alike, but as seems good to himself: men furnish some rooms with richer hangings and materials than others, and that without blame; they plant and beautify some grounds with choice plants and flowers: so deals the Lord with men, some have admirable gifts, others very mean, if you observe God's distributions that way in the world. God hath given the earth to the children of men, Psal. cxv. 16; yet one hath more, another less, one a fat, another a lean portion: so for reason, wisdom, judgment, understanding, memory, utterance, &c. God hath given these to the sons of men; but some have them in a lower, some in a higher degree. David, Solomon, Daniel, were very wise, Samson very strong, Absalom very beautiful; the Corinthians were "enriched with all utterance, and all knowledge," 1 Cor. i. 5; Bezaleel and Aholiab excelled others in skill, Exod. xxxi. And as it is in gifts, so in graces, one hath a little, another a greater portion, one a single, another a double portion; Jonah but little patience, Job much; the disciples of Christ had little faith, the woman of Canaan a great faith: God doth of his own give to his own, what and how much he pleases. By variety of gifts and graces, his manifold wisdom, bounty, and goodness are seen, the world and church are beautified, and each made useful unto the other.

Obs. 6. All being the Lord's, he will take care and provide for them. Nature dictates, yea provokes, every creature to provide for its own: there is no good or wise man who will not do it, much more the Lord. If husbands must provide for their families, 1 Tim. v. 8, God will provide for his. The whole world is God's family, all the living wait upon him, and he feeds them, Psal. civ. 27. Especially man is his, and for him he takes care: 1 Tim. iv. 10, he "is the saviour of all men, specially of those that believe;" it is not meant of eternal salvation; σωτηρ imports a temporal saviour. Matt. viii. 25, κίνου σώσον ἡμᾶς, ἀπολλύμεθα, they were in danger of drowning. Psal. xxxvi. 6, "Thou preservest man and beast;" the word for preserving is γρηῃ whence the name Joshua and Jesus comes; it notes a common, external, temporal salvation. God is good to all souls, his sun shines and rain falls upon good and bad, Matt. v. 45; Acts xiv. 17: chap. xvii. 28, "In him we live," in his providence, power, goodness, blessing, as worms in the earth, fishes in the sea, and birds in the air. And this should be a foundation of comfort, as unto all, so especially unto those who are poor, and man, and cast upon hard times; and why? because he you never so poor, weak, sickly, destitute, all souls are the Lord's, and he looks after them. Matt. vi. 31, &c. Christ assures you of it; "Take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewith shall we be clothed? for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you;" not some, but all shall be given unto you.

Obs. 7. He may set up or throw down whom he will. Isa. iii. 4, "I will give children to be their princes, and babes shall rule over them;" children in years, and children in understanding, God sets over people. God set up Solomon, and set by Adonijah, though the elder, 1 Kings i. He took David, the least and milkiest of all the sons of Jesse, even from the sheep-fold, and set him upon the throne, 1 Sam. xvi. Gideon was of a poor family, and the least in his father's house, as himself confesses, Judg. vi. 15; yet him did God exalt: so that it is true which Hannah said; "He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory," 1 Sam. ii. 8. And contrary, as God sets up, so he pulls down whom he pleases. Isa. xlii. 15, "I will make waste mountains and hills, and dry up all their herbs;" be the mountains never so great, the hills never so high, God will lay them waste, and level them with the earth, and whatever their issue, wealth, power, wisdom, relations be, God will dry them all up, and they shall be herbless. Dan. ii. 20, 21, "Wisdom and might are his: he changeth the times and the seasons; he removeth kings, and setteth up kings." Did not the Lord lay by Saul and his family? did he not drown Pharaoh in the bottom of the sea like lead? Herod, Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, and others, did not the Lord lay them low? they were high and green trees, yet the Lord cut them down, and dried them up. You may remember what the Lord said to Ahab; "Hast thou killed? In the place where the dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine," 1 Kings xxi. 19; and likewise what he saith in Jer. xxii. 24, "As I live, though Coniah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah were the signet upon my right hand, yet would I pluck him thence;" and Ezek. xvii. 15, of Zedekiah it is said, "Shall he prosper?" no, by the roots shall he be pulled up, God plants and pulls up whom he pleases.

Obs. 8. Then are they in safe custody, and no evil can befall them without the Lord's good pleasure. Men stand for those who are theirs against all opposition, but cannot hinder evil from coming: God stands for his servants, and he can hinder any mischief: none can have any power over or against his people without leave; if God give not commission, nothing can be done by men or devils. John xix. 11, Christ told Pilate he could have no power against him, unless it were given him from above; I am in the hand of my Father, he can defend, deliver me from thine and all adversaries' power; and if he do not, it is by his hand and determinate counsel that thou doest aught against me, and I am content with it. So Luke xxii. 53, "This is your hour, and the power of darkness;" before you could do nothing, now, through divine dispensation, you have leave to seize upon me, to judge me, and take away my life, and I submit thereunto. The devil could do nothing against Job, his sons, camels, sheep, or asses, till he had leave from the Lord, Job i. He is the god of the world, prince of the air, and hath bitter envy, great enmity, against man, but is not able by all his power or policy to take a hair from the head of any man, till the Lord say, Do it, Matt. x. 30. All souls are the Lord's, they are in his hands. It was comfort to David to think his times were in God's hand; Psal. xxxi. 15, "My times are in thy hand;" and so nothing could befall him unseasonably; yea, his person also was in God's hand, and who could touch or harm it without the Lord: Isa. xlv. 7, the good or evil that befalls us is from the Lord.

Obs. 9. Then it belongs to God to hear the pleadings, determine the controversies, that are between those who are his, and to right their wrongs. If all souls be his, he is Judge, and so to hear their suits, decide their differences, and see that one wrong not another. The people Moses was over, are called his people, Exod. xxxii. 7; and he heard their pleadings, ended their controversies, and righted their wrongs, Exod. xviii. 13. All souls being the Lord's, he hath an ear open to hear their suits, and he sits in judgment to do them right that suffer, Psal. cxv. Hence is it that David appeals to God, Psal. xliii. 1, "Judge me, O God, and plead my cause against an ungodly nation." Others judge unrighteously, but I come to thee, do thou judge me, that art the great Judge; all souls are thine, do thou plead my cause, it belongs to thee to do it, and I wait upon thee for it. So the church in Micah vii. 9, "I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him, until he plead my cause." The Babylonians oppressed the Jews, Jer. i. 33, 34, and the prophet saith, "The Lord of hosts shall thoroughly plead their cause, that he may give rest to the land, and disquiet the inhabitants of Babylon." Let Babylonians, others, any molest, oppress, God hears, sees, knows what is done, he will plead and maintain the cause of his people: Psal. ix. 4, "Thou hast maintained my right and my cause; thou satest in the throne judging right." If the cause be a cause of blood, as it was Rev. vi. 10, where the souls cried, "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" the Lord will not neglect it, for the answer was, ver. 11, that they should rest yet for a little season, and then God would avenge their blood. God hath his times to make inquisition for blood, Psal. ix. 12; and "the earth shall disclose her blood," Isa. xxvi. 20.

Obs. 10. God may employ whom he will, and in what ways and works he thinks good; he is neither tied to any sort of men, nor to the laws or customs of any kingdoms. Nathan thinks David must build the temple, but God employs Solomon, not David, in that work, 2 Sam. vii. He took Amos, who was no prophet, nor son of a prophet, but a herdman, a poor mean man, and would have him to prophesy unto Israel, Amos vii. 14, 15. He took Cyrus, a heathen king, to perform all his pleasure about Jerusalem's rebuilding; he held up and used his right hand to subdue nations, to loose the loins of kings, to break in pieces the gates of brass, and cut in sunder the bars of iron, Isa. xlv. 28; xlv. 1, 2. God employed David, a stripling, despised by his brethren and others, to slay Goliath, and free Israel from the Philistines, 1 Sam. xvii. He took a woman to kill a great prince, even Jael to slay Sisera, Judg. iv. 21. As the Lord may take whom he will, so he may lead them in what ways, and put them upon what designs, himself judges fit and meet, however they seem unwarrantable to us. Isa. xlii. 16, "I will bring the blind by a way that they know not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known; I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight;" the blind, that is, men perplexed, in straits and difficulties, not seeing what to do, which way to turn them. Now God, as he is not tied to go in one and the same way, to proceed by the laws, statutes, privileges, customs, usances of kingdoms, cities, or corporations, but hath unknown ways and unwonted paths to tread in himself; so he hath unknown and unwonted paths to lead his servants in upon any occasion. It was no trodden path that Phinehas went in, when he, a priest or a priest's son, no magistrate, thrust a prince and a princess through their bellies with a javelin, and that in the presence of Moses the chief magistrate, Numb. xxv. So Esther's going in to the king was not according to law, chap. iv. 16; she ventured her life upon it; and David's eating the shewbread was an unlawful act, if judged by Exod. xxix. 32, 33; Lev. viii. 31; xxiv. 5; yet justified by Christ, Matt. xii. 3. Samson takes a wife of the daughters of the Philistines, and that against the will of his father and mother, and it was against law for him to marry among the uncircumcised, but he seeth a woman at Timnah, falls in love with her, and must have her, Judg. xiv. 4; this was of the Lord. His burning the Philistines' corn, his slaying a thousand of them with the jaw-bone of an ass, pulling down the house upon his own and others' heads, were irregular ways, yet such ways as God led him in, and he is in the catalogue of believers, Heb. xi. The eunuchs throw Jezebel out at the window upon the command of Jehu, and he trod her to death with his horses, 2 Kings ix. 33. Jehoiada the priest calls forth the soldiers, sets them in ranges, and makes a martial law, that whosoever enters those ranges should be put to death; Athaliah the queen (who had reigned six years) enters, and at his appointment she is put to death, 2 Kings xi. These, and many other, (as Solomon's sacrificing in Gibeon, 1 Kings iii. 4, Paul's shaving of himself, circumcising Timothy,) were irregular and unwonted ways, yet were approved of God, and brought forth unwonted mercies. Let us not be too hasty to condemn persons doing extraordinary things, lest we justle against God, and intrench upon his providence and prerogative; if Peter walk upon the waters, there is somewhat of Christ and God in it, Matt. xiv. 28, 29.

Obs. 11. Let all be faithful in their places. All souls are his, he hath his eye upon all, and upon every one, and there is none but must give account unto him. Whatever talents we have, he will reckon with us for the use or abuse of them: Matt. xxv. 19, the Lord called and reckoned with his servants he had given the talents unto; those who had talents of grace, and used them well, were advanced to heaven to their Master's joy; he who had a talent of nature, for the abuse was thrown into hell. Oh let us be faithful in our places, and use our talents to the honour of that God whose we and our talents are! Belshazzar was set on high, had a talent in his hand, but the charge was heavy upon him, when he that is Lord of all souls called him to an account; Dan. v. 23, "The God in whose hand thy breath is, and whose are all thy ways, hast thou not glorified;" and thereupon he was doomed to death; he did not lay out his power and greatness for the honour of God and good of his people, and better he had been a poor beggar than so great a king. Paul had this consideration in him when he said, "Woe to me if I preach not the gospel!" 1 Cor. ix. 16, 17; and, "if I yet please men, I should not be the servant of Christ," Gal. i. 10. And when he wrote to the Corinthians, "We labour that we may be accepted of him: for we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether good or bad," 2 Cor. v. 9, 10. Men must give account of all they have received, and if they be found false and unfaithful, they shall smart for it. Seeing then "every one of us shall give account of himself to God," Rom. xiv. 12, let us all be faithful in the least, in the greatest things committed to us, and so shall we have peace within, praise of God, if not of men, and a sure reward.

Obs. 12. He may take away or continue men here as long or little while as he will; all souls are his, and he may cut off the thread of life, or lengthen it out, at his pleasure. Moses speaking to the Jews as one man saith, "He is thy life, and the length of thy days," Deut. xxx. 20; that is, the shortening or prolonging of thy life and days are in his hand. God therefore told Solomon, that if he would keep his commands, he would lengthen his days, 1 Kings iii. 14. The keys of life and death are in the hand of the Lord, and in a moment he can let out our souls, bring down to and back from the gates of death. Hence is it that some are taken away at the first hour, some at the third, some the sixth, some the ninth, and some lengthened out unto the twelfth, and live more years than others do days or hours: Methuselah lived nine hundred and sixty-nine years, and many children attain not to so many days or hours; from the birth, the womb, and conception,

God takes them away, Hos. ix. 11. He cut off all flesh by the flood, young and old; and long since that he hath threatened to cut off "evil-doers," Psal. xxxvii. 9, and "man from off the land," Zeph. i. 3, and when he pleases he doth it.

"The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Hence

Obs. 1. God may lay what punishment he pleases upon the soul that sins. "All souls are mine;" and "the soul that sinneth shall die," it shall suffer whatever I see good, according to the nature of its sin. However the words seem to import an equal punishment for all sins, yet it is otherwise; according to the intrinsecal nature, circumstances, and demerit of the sin, shall be the death; God will proportion the one unto the other; as he rewards men according to their works, so he will punish them according to their sins. God hath variety of deaths, and various degrees of those deaths, variety of afflictions, and various degrees of the same; he lays on which, and in what measure, he pleases: how are sinners tortured with colics, stranguries, gouts, stone, plague, and other diseases! If states think good to inflict upon delinquents several punishments, and in a high degree as they find men guilty, how much more may God! He smote Jehoram with incurable and sore diseases, so that his bowels fell out, 2 Chron. xxi. 18, 19. He sent fire and brimstone upon Sodom and Gomorrah, Gen. xix. He did it in Jerusalem which he never did before, nor ever would do the like, he punished them so with famine, that fathers did eat their sons, and sons their fathers, Ezek. v. 9, 10. Neither these nor any that suffer in what kind soever, do suffer unjustly; men may pretend innocency, but if they suffer, and that severely, God is not cruel, they are not guiltless; for "the soul that sinneth shall die."

Obs. 2. Sin is a deadly thing. "The soul that sinneth shall die;" sin is the great murderer, it let death into the world, and keeps death alive; if there were no sin, there would be no death, no punishment, but if men sin, they must suffer. The old world sinned, and died for it; Sodomites sinned, and died for it; the Bethshenites sinned by looking into the ark, and fifty thousand of them died for it; Jerusalem sinned, and is burnt for it, and her children buried in a Babylonish grave; Ananias and Sapphira die for their dissimulation: "the wages of sin is death," Rom. vi. 23. Let us then take heed of sin, whereby we offend that God who hath said, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die;" he is a dreadful Majesty, and ought greatly to be feared. Jer. x. 7. "Who would not fear thee, O King of nations? for to thee doth it appertain;" fear is God's due, and your duty; "stand in awe," then, "and sin not," Psal. iv. 4. If you sin, you must die; death is the king of fears, and God is the King of death, he can command it to seize upon you in a moment.

Ver. 5, 6. But if a man be just, and do that which is lawful and right, and hath not eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lifted up his eyes to the idols of the house of Israel, neither hath defiled his neighbour's wife, neither hath come near to a menstruous woman.

The Lord having vindicated himself in general, ver. 4. from that unjust accusation, that their fathers sinned and they who were the children suffered, he comes here in a more particular manner to quit himself from that false imputation. I have told you that the soul which sins shall die, but

I. If a man be just, he shall not die, but live, as appears from ver. 5, to the end of ver. 9.

II. If his son be unjust and wicked, he shall not live, but die, as appears from ver. 10, to the end of ver. 13.

III. If this unjust man beget a son, who lives not in his father's sins, but is just and deals justly, notwithstanding all his father's sins, he shall live, he shall not die, as is evident from the beginning of ver. 14, to the end of ver. 17.

The words in ver. 5—9, contain and specify,

1. A subject, which is, a man just, or a just man.

2. The description of this subject, which is set out, (1.) In general; ver. 5, "and do that which is lawful and right."

(2.) In particular; and that,

[1.] In duties respecting God, ver. 6, which are set down negatively, and they are two:

First, not eating upon the mountains.

Second, not lifting up the eyes to the idols of the house of Israel.

[2.] In duties respecting man, and they are divers:

First, continency; "neither hath defiled his neighbour's wife."

Second, chastity; "neither hath come near to a menstruous woman." These two are in ver. 6.

Third, innocency; in four things: 1. Not oppressing any. 2. Restoring the pledge. 3. Not spoiling by violence. 4. Withdrawing his hand from iniquity.

Fourth, charity; which is held out in, 1. His feeding the hungry, ver. 7. 2. Clothing the naked, ver. 7. 3. In lending freely, ver. 8, "he that hath not given forth upon usury, nor taken any increase."

Fifth, in righteous judgment between man and man, ver. 8.

Lastly, a general comprehending of these and all other duties, ver. 9, "hath walked in my statutes, and hath kept my judgments, to deal truly."

3. The thing predicated on this subject so described, "he shall live."

I shall open the words, and after come to the observations.

Ver. 5. "If a man be just." Hebrew word, צדיק is a man free from fault, doing things approveable; such a one was Noah, who is called, Gen. vi. 9, צדיק אדם such a one was Zacharias, Luke i. 6, δικαιος, as the Septuagint renders it in this place; and the word for "just" is opposed to רשע a wicked man: Psal. xxxvii. 16, "A little that a righteous man hath, is better than the riches of many wicked." So Psal. i. 6, there is an opposition between the righteous and ungodly, the just and wicked.

"Do that which is lawful and right." Hebrew for lawful and right, is judgment and justice. To do judgment, is not only to do things judiciously and rationally, but here it notes one part of the office of a judge, which is to sentence and condemn the guilty; and so to do justice, is not only to judge without respect of persons, but to absolve and vindicate the innocent. Thus Prædus interprets the words, who thinks these words coming together, not to be exegetical, but signifying distinct things, in a more narrowed sense, than when they are taken absolutely and in their latitude. So Isa. v. 7, "He looked for judgment," that the guilty should be condemned, "but behold oppression," iniquity, a scab, as the word signifies; the delinquents being spared, there was iniquity in the judges, a scab upon the state. I looked "for righteousness" or justice, that the innocent should be vindicated and freed from the accusations, aspersions, oppressions of the wicked, "but behold a cry;" they suffered, were condemned, and this was a crying sin. When men in place do act according to the laws of God, suppressing the wicked, defending and countenancing the good, then they do judgment and justice. Some by these words understand the fulfilling of the law; when a man gives to God and man what is required, then he is a just man, he doth judgment and justice.

Ver. 6. "And hath not eaten upon the mountains." Upon mountains and hills both the Jews and nations used to build high places, images, and altars, 1 Kings xi. 7; 2 Kings xvii. 10; Jer. xvii. 2; Ezek. vi. 13; and there they did sacrifice to their idol-gods; Hos. iv. 13, "They sacrifice upon the tops of the mountains, and burn incense upon the hills;" see Ezek. xx. 28; 2 Chron. xxviii. 4; Isa. lvii. 7. And of those things that were sacrificed to the idols they were wont to eat; Psal. cvi. 28, "They ate the sacrifices of the dead," of those beasts, fowls, or whatsoever things they sacrificed to the dead idols, of those they did eat. Such was the eating, Exod. xxxii. 6; Judg. ix. 27; xvi. 23, 25. This eating of idolothites noted their communion with idols, that they were in near relation, even as near as those that live, sit, feed, and feast together: 1 Cor. x. 20, 21, by their eating and drinking those things which were offered to idols, they had communion with idols and devils.

This eating of such things was a grievous sin; they left God, the Holy One of Israel, and joined themselves to dumb and dead idols, which could do nothing for them but procure the wrath of the true and living God against them.

Not to "eat upon the mountains," then, is to keep oneself free from false worship. They "eat upon the mountains," who worship God any other way than he hath prescribed in his word.

"Neither hath lifted up his eyes to the idols." The lifting up the eye in sacred writ notes,

1. A serious and affective consideration of a thing, as, Isa. xl. 26, "Lift up your eyes on high, and behold who hath created these things;" that is, seriously and affectively consider, contemplate the heavens, and host of them: so here, to lift up the eyes to idols, signifies to affect, mind much, to think upon them, as if they had some special beauty, excellency, or deity in them.

2. To countenance; Psal. iv. 6, "Lift thou up the light of thy face upon us;" the eye is the light of the face, when that is let down, it notes disfavour, discountenancing; but when that is lift up, it imports the contrary; so here, lifting up the eyes to idols, imports a favouring, gracing, countenancing of them.

3. Adoration. Lifting up the eyes is an adoring gesture; Ezek. viii. 16, the five and twenty men there stood with their faces towards the east, their eyes were lift up to the sun, and the sun they worshipped. Job xxxi. 26, "If I beheld the sun when it shined?" did not he see the sun when it shined? yes; but he did not lift up his eyes to adore it, though it were a beautiful and glorious creature, a great benefactor unto the whole world.

4. Invocation and expectation of something the party would have. John xvii. 1, Christ "lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, Father, glorify thy Son;" he looked up to heaven, prayed, and expected glory. Psal. cxxxiii. 1, "Unto thee lift I up mine eyes, O thou that dwellest in the heavens;" here was invocation and expectation of mercy, ver. 2. So lifting up the eyes to idols, argues invoking of and expecting help from them, and the not lifting up the eyes unto them, implies a disaffecting, discountenancing, and detesting them, as lies, vanity, abomination.

"Idols." Hebrew word is,  from  dung which is trodden down in the streets. They are stinking, loathsome, defiling things: a man cannot be more annoyed with the dung of man, or any other creature, than he is with idols; they defile the whole man; James iii. 6, an ill tongue defiles the whole body, and an idol defiles the whole soul and body. Septuagint renders the word for idols, εἰδωλίσματα, thoughts, devices; because they are the mere inventions of men's brains, the imaginations of their hearts. God said, "Thou shalt not make to thyself any graven image, or any likeness of any thing," Exod. xx. 4; yet vain, silly, weak, wretched man, will be making to himself likenesses of every thing, and fancy a deity in that which is most unlike, yea, most opposite, to the true Deity.

"Of the house of Israel." These words are added, 1. To prevent an evasion and excuse of theirs. Had the prophet said, "Neither hath lifted up his eyes to idols," and no more, they would have said, We hate the idols of the nations, and have nothing to do with them, we know such idols are forbidden; to cut off this plea therefore, the words run thus, "Idols of the house of Israel."

2. To remind them of God's dealing with the ten tribes for their idolatry, who properly are called the house of Israel, and were carried into captivity, 2 Kings xvii.

3. If by house of Israel be meant those of Judah and Benjamin, which I conceive to be the prophet's mind, it is to take away a false conceit they had of their gods above others: Be it that others have worshipped their idols, given more honour to them than was due, yet we worship the true God, use these idols and images in worship to further our honouring and worshipping God by them; we do not terminate our worship in them, but transmit it by them unto God. Whatever conceits you have of your idols, they are idols, no better than those of the ten tribes and nations, by which they provoked God against them; so do you by these.

"Neither hath defiled his neighbour's wife." From duties respecting God, he comes to duties respecting man, and begins with that which concerns the married estate.

By "neighbour," understand not only him that dwells next you, but any man whatsoever; so "neighbour" is taken, Luke x. 36. The meaning of the words is not that a man may lie with a stranger's, foreigner's, or an enemy's wife, but not with his neighbour's; no, the meaning is, a man must not lie with any man's wife whatsoever; be he single or married, he may not defile the wife of another man, he may not commit adultery with her, which is meant by the word defiling.

 which the Septuagint renders, hath not contaminated; others, hath not defiled. I shall insist a little upon the evil of this sin.

1. It breaks the order which God in his great wisdom hath set. He hath appointed that two should be one flesh, not three, or more, Gen. ii. 24; and it is oft set down by the Spirit of God, as Matt. xix. 5, 6; Mark x. 7, 8; 1 Cor. vi. 16; Eph. v. 31; that this divine institution may take the deeper impression upon men, and so be kept inviolable; but when adultery is committed, it is against the institution of an infinitely wise God, and dreadful breach of his order, and however it be done in secret, yet the Lord seeth it, Prov. v. 21.

2. It stains the ordinance of God. Marriage is honourable, both in itself, and as it is a resemblance of Christ and his church, Heb. xiii. 4; Eph. v. 31, 32. Now if adultery be committed, the bed is defiled, the honour of the married estate laid in the dust, and the members of Christ made the members of a harlot, 1 Cor. vi. 15. Adulterers therefore sin against Christ, they take away that resemblance which is in marriage between Christ and his church, and prostitute their bodies, what lies in them, to dishonourable acts.

3. It brutifies a man, besots, and makes him who is a rational creature, the chief of God's works here in the world, to be like unto the brute creatures, and to do irrational things. Hos. iv. 11, whoredom is one of the things which take away the heart, that is, a right understanding. Jer. v. 7, 8, like horses, they neighed after their neighbours' wives: they were more like horses than men, and acted like those brutish, unruly creatures; whereupon the Lord saith, chap. xiii. 27, "I have seen thine adulteries, and thy neighings." Adultery makes men so sensual, that they forget reason, it blinds and infatuates them exceedingly. Solomon, who had the greatest portion of wisdom, by his pleasing himself with women, doted and did strange things, he became as blockish as the idols he set up. Men that live in such pollutions of the world, as adultery and other uncleannesses are, the apostle likens them to dogs and swine, 2 Pet. ii. 22.

4. In this sin, man sins against,

(1.) His own body, 1 Cor. vi. 18. Fornication and adultery are sins in a special manner against a man's own body,

[1.] In that he subjects it to another. It is called a bowing down, Job xxxi. 10. To bow down to an adulteress, to bow down to an adulterer, is a subjecting themselves to be one with each other: the thief is not one with the thing he steals, nor the murderer one with him he murders, but the adulterer is one with the adulteress.

[2.] Weakens it, brings diseases, and hastens death: the more prodigal men are in pouring out themselves in filthy practices, the faster they wear out.

[3.] He defiles it; Matt. xv. 19, 20, adulteries, fornications, are among the things that do defile a man; they are unclean persons who fall into those sins. Ceremonial defilements, as touching a leprous person, a dead body, were evil, but this is a moral defilement.

(2.) It is a sin against their names and credit: Prov. vi. 33, "Dishonour shall he get, and his reproach shall not be wiped away;" it sticks fast like the leopard's spots, nothing makes more infamous. Eccles. xxiii. 26, A shameful report shall she leave, and her reproach shall not be put out; speaking of the whorish woman.

(3.) It is against the peace and comfort of a man, it wounds him sorely: Prov. vi. 33, "A wound shall he get," a wound in his conscience, which is the worst of all wounds. There are some sins that do destroy the conscience, and adultery is one of the chief of them; it devours all the peace, quiet, content, comfort, the soul had, and wounds it so greatly, that sundry times it proves incurable; yea, so fiery, stinging, and tormenting it is, that men make away themselves: Prov. vii. 26, "She hath cast down many wounded."

(4.) It is against a man's own soul: Prov. vi. 32, "He that commits adultery, destroyeth his own soul." The soul is a precious thing, yea most precious, it is better than all the world; what an evil is it then to destroy that which is so excellent! Adultery is the destruction of a soul, therefore it is said, Prov. vii. 27, "Her house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death;" Prov. xxiii. 27, "A whore is a deep ditch."

(5.) It is a great offence to the innocent parties; to the wife of the man who commits it, to the husband of the woman who falls into it. Mal. ii. 14, if a man leave his wife, who is his companion, and the wife of his covenant, he deals treacherously and perfidiously with her; he promised, before the Lord, to be for her and none else: so the woman, when she doth so, forsakes the guide of her youth, and forgets the covenant of her God. What greater wrong can a man do to his wife, or a wife to a husband, than to be treacherous the one to the other; they read themselves each from other, and bestow themselves upon strangers: strangers have their hearts, affections, and company; strangers have power over them, and not their wives or husbands, which they ought to have, 1 Cor. vii. 4.

(6.) It is a sin that prejudiceth the family, and may bring ruin upon it. Bastards, those who are misbegotten, are brought into the family; bitter jarrings, contentions, and jealousies raised therein: Prov. vi. 34, "Jealousy is the rage of a man," and so of a woman. And Job tells you, that this sin is "a fire that consumeth to destruction," it consumes the body, the estate, the family, chap. xxxi. 12, and if I were guilty of it, it "would root out all my increase;" not one or two, but all his increase. This is a sin that hath ruined many families, and is against not only the good of families, but of mankind. Hos. iv. 10, "They shall commit whoredom, and shall not increase;" and what if an adulteress should bring forth, Eccles. xxiii. 25, "Her children shall not take root, and her branches shall bring forth no fruit."

(7.) It occasioneth, if not causeth, many other sins. Sometimes the adulteress pilfereth from her husband, and wastes his estate, neglects him and her family: sometimes it hath idolatry following it; Solomon's wives, concubines, and whores brought him to idolatry. Jer. xiii. 27, "I have seen thine adulteries, and thy neighings, the lewdness of thy whoredom, and thine abominations on the hills." Corporal and spiritual adultery go together very often: and not only these, but it hath been the cause of untimely deaths and murders: David defiles the wife of Uriah, and he must first be made drunk, and after be murdered, that the fact might be concealed, 2 Sam. xi. Edgar, once king of this nation, falling into adulterous practices with Alfreda, a nobleman's wife, one Edhelwolf, they got him despatched out of the way, that so they might marry. Chrysost. in Ps. li. Hom. 1. The father saith, that the fruit of adultery is murder and witchery, and that adulteresses do frequently practise murders: Prov. vi. 26, "The adulteress will hunt for the precious life." It is also accompanied with much lying and perjury.

Lastly, the evil of this sin is seen, in that it sets Christ and God against a man, and shuts him out of heaven. Mal. iii. 5, "I will be a swift witness against adulterers;" men are backward to meddle in that case, but Christ will be forward to witness against them. It is spoken of him, Heb. xiii. 4, "Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge;" he reserves such to be punished at the day of judgment, 2 Pet. ii. 9, 10; and then he will shut them out of heaven, 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10; Rev. xxii. 15; and they shall have their portion "in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone," Rev. xxi. 8; and so "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power," 2 Thess. i. 9.

The punishment appointed by God for this sin here in this world, was no less than death, as you may see, Lev. xx. 10; Deut. xxii. 22; both the adulterer and the adulteress were to be put to death. Job intimates so much, who lived before the law was given, chap. xxxi. 11, "This is an heinous crime; yea, it is an iniquity to be punished by the judges;" he means, it is capital, and deserves death. Boniface, bishop of Mentz, in a letter of his to Theobald king of the Mercians here in England, dissuading him from unclean practices, tells him of the pagans in old Saxony, who knew not the true God, lived chastely with their wives, and if maid or wife were taken in fornication or adultery, they first strangled them and then burnt them. And if the gentiles, who knew not God, had such a zeal and love to chastity, what should you do that are a christian king? If pagans did so hate this sin, how should we christians much more do it! Some would have it punished with death, because the sin is the same it was then, and God the same, hating it as much as ever: be it so, yet the change of punishment maketh the sin neither less hateful or grievous, nor God changeable. Under the law, he that gathered sticks on the sabbath was stoned to death, Numb. xxx.; but Christ excused his disciples when they pulled and rubbed the ears of corn on that day, Matt. xiii. The thief was then to restore fourfold; but under the gospel, "Let him that stole, steal no more," only make restitution of the thing stolen, or recompence for it. Neither doth it argue change in God, to change or mitigate the punishment; for then he should be charged with change for changing the ceremonial law, and judicials belonging to it. The law came by Moses, but grace and mercy by Christ; and the times of the gospel abate the rigorous punishments of the law, rather than increase them. Neither do I conceive there should be no punishment for this sin, as some gather from John viii. where Christ did not condemn the woman taken in adultery; he did not thereby abrogate that law, but by his silence showed, that it is not always necessary for states to punish that sin with death, but with punishments of a lower nature. And some of note observe, that it was not single but double adultery when they were put to death for it under Moses' law. "Let every one know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour; and not in the lust of concupiscence," 1 Thess. iv. 4, 5.

"Neither hath come near to a menstruous woman." Hebrew is, נדה אשה נדה a woman separate, or put apart, for her monthly courses or terms; for נדה is from נדה or נדה to remove, separate, put away. They were by the law of God, during that time, accounted unclean, that is, unfit for matrimonial acts and use, Lev. xii. 2, and so separate a loco et sanctuario, from accompanying with their husbands, and coming to the sanctuary, Lev. xv. 31.

This practice also was among the heathens, which it is probable they learned from Moses. The Zabians had a law, that such women should dwell apart for a time, and they purged with fire the places where they were. Orpheus gave charge, that women in that condition should not come to the sacred rites of Bacchus; and Diana suffered not a man that had touched a slain person, or a woman in child-bed, or a dead corpse, to come unto her altars, but counted him as unclean.

"Come near." That is, hath not only not lien with her, but not had any thing to do with her: Lev. xv. 19, "Whosoever toucheth her shall be unclean until the even." If a husband, or any other man, touched the woman in time of her separation, they were unclean for it.

It is that which the wisdom of God hath forbidden, and if there were nothing else in it, that is sufficient. Lev. xviii. 19, "Thou shalt not approach unto a woman to uncover her nakedness, as long as she is put apart for her uncleanness." In this chapter, unlawful marriages and unlawful lusts are forbidden, and it is as unlawful for men to meddle in that case, as to marry their mothers, sisters, aunts, or daughters-in-law; the same authority that hath forbidden one, hath also forbidden the other.

The punishment of this sin is great. Lev. xx. 18, the man and woman are both to be cut off from among their people; the meaning is not, to be separated from the congregation as defiled, but they were to die for their unseasonable lusts, and approaching near to each other. This may seem very severe; but know, if the man did it ignorantly, he was judged unclean seven days, and was to wash and cleanse himself, Lev. xv. 24, 27; but if wittingly and knowingly it were done, they were both to die for it. Answerable to this is what our prophet saith here, If he have not come near to a menstruous woman, he shall live. Solomon understood this, when he said, Eccles. iii. 5, "There is a time to embrace, and a time to refrain from embracing;" or, as the Hebrew hath it, to be far from embracing: and no time hath the Lord so punctually and severely forbidden it as at that time. Though there be not the same punishment in practice amongst us, yet God hates this sin nevertheless, and questionless visits with sharp sickness, yea strange and sudden death, for it.

Let men and women moderate their affections, mortify their lusts, live soberly, and take heed of provoking God by unseasonable embracings, who would have his people to be chaste both in body and soul.

Ver. 7. And hath not oppressed any, but hath restored to the debtor his pledge, hath spoiled none by violence, hath given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a garment.

"And hath not oppressed any." Hebrew, לא יגרה hath not afflicted, molested, oppressed; for so the word יגרה signifies, and it is mostly applied to rich and great men, who usually molest and oppress the poor, the fatherless, widows, and strangers: Lev. xix. 33, "If a stranger sojourn with thee in the land, ye shall not vex him," or oppress him; Jer. xxii. 3, "Do no violence to the stranger, the fatherless, nor the widow," do not afflict, molest, oppress either of them; Ezek. xxii. 29, "They have vexed the poor and needy." You have all these together, Zech. vii. 10, "Oppress not the widow, nor the fatherless, the stranger, nor the poor."

Besides these, there were servants also whom they might not oppress: Deut. xxiv. 14, "Thou shalt not oppress an hired servant." These chiefly are subject to oppression; but great and small may vex and oppress one the other: Lev. xxv. 17, "They shall not oppress one another." Sometimes it falls out so, but more frequently the great, rich men in place and power, do oppress those who are inferior to them, and under them.

1. Wherein this oppression consists.

1. In outreaching men in buying or selling: Lev. xxv. 14, "If thou sell aught unto thy neighbour, or buyest aught of thy neighbour's hand, ye shall not oppress one another." Men must neither sell too dear, nor buy too cheap; which is contrary to the practice of the world, for most men, if not all men, will buy as cheap, and sell as dear, as they can.

(1.) It is oppression, when the buyer will wring a commodity out of his neighbour's or brother's hand, which he is unwilling to part withal. Ahab will have Naboth's vineyard, 1 Kings xxi.

(2.) When he makes advantage of the seller's necessity. And so many monied men will furnish sellers and needy men with money, upon condition they may have such wares, such a house, such land, at an easier and under rate: such advantage they made of them, Neh. v. 3, who were necessitated to mortgage their lands, vineyards, and houses, for money to buy corn. So those who sell to the shops, you will have their commodities at, &c.

(3.) When he disparageth the commodities of the seller, who being not so well insighted into the thing to be sold as the subtle buyer, is overreached and defrauded: Prov. xx. 14, "It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer;" he brings up an ill report upon it, casts a mist before the seller's eyes, that so he may get it at a cheap rate. So in the seller,

[1.] When you sell that for good which is not so: Amos viii. 6, they sold the refuse of the wheat for good wheat. And so for meats, wares, fruits, wines; many help off ill commodities with lies, oaths, false glosses, lights, and pretences that it cost so much, that such would have given them so much, &c.

[2.] When you deceive them in weight and measure: Prov. xx. 10, "Divers weights, and divers measures, are both of them alike abomination to the Lord."

[3.] When you take advantage of the buyer's weakness or necessities. Some, when an ignorant party comes to their shops, they set the dice upon him, and make him pay double, or more than a knowing man should; but this is against the rule; 1 Thess. iv. 6, "Let no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter." So for his necessity; many sellers seeing men in straits, and that they must have their commodities, they set them such prices as undoeth them, dealing with them: so that according to Amos viii. 4, "They swallow up the needy, and make the poor of the land to fail."

2. In withholding that which is right and due to others; James v. 4, "Behold, the hire of the labourers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth." "The labourer is worthy of his hire," saith Christ, Luke x. 7; and it was quickly to be paid, Lev. xix. 13. Now to deny it, withhold it, to detract from it, or to pay it in money not current, is oppression: Mal. iii. 5, "I will be a swift witness against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow and the fatherless, and turn aside the portion of orphans, legacies given to the poor, the estates and rights of widows, they will lie under the censure of being oppressors."

3. In laying too heavy burdens and tasks upon others. The Egyptians oppressed the Israelites, Exod. iii. 7; they must make their tale of brick, and gather straw too, which made them cry more than they did before, Exod. v. And so many lay more upon their servants and apprentices than they can well perform; they must be up early, down late, fare hard, lie hard, work hard, and be worn out before their time, if they had not been under such rigid masters and task-masters; and if not so, to break away and run into dissolute and desperate courses; and what is this but oppression in a high degree? whereas the rule is, Col. iv. 1, "Masters, give unto your servants that which is just and equal; knowing that ye also have a Master in heaven."

Likewise the taxing and rating the poorer sort of people beyond their proportion, for the easing of the richer sort, is great oppression: Isa. x. 4, "Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievousness which they have prescribed; to turn aside the needy from judgment." Great and rich men usually make the rates and taxes, and what they decree, prescribe, though never so grievous to the poorer sort, must stand; but let them look to it, there is a dreadful woe pronounced against them; and, Amos iv. 1, 2, "Hear this word, ye kine of Bashan, which oppress the poor, which crush the needy. The Lord God hath sworn by his holiness, that the days shall come upon you, that he will take you away with hooks, and your posterity with fish hooks."

4. In perverting and delaying of justice and judgment, so that the petitions and causes of widows, orphans, and poor people cannot be heard: Isa. i.

23, "Every one loveth gifts, and followeth after rewards; they judge not the fatherless, neither doth the cause of the widow come unto them." The fatherless and widows had no gifts, no bribes, to give them, the rich had, and by that means justice was perverted, and judgment delayed; "yea, judgment was turned into gall, and the fruit of righteousness into hemlock." Amos vi. 12. And this sin is reckoned amongst the mighty ones: Amos v. 12, "I know the mighty sins; they afflict the just, they take a bribe, and they turn aside the poor in the gate from their right." Let the poor man and his cause be never so good and just, rich and great men, by their purses and their friends, have, in all ages, and still do, oppress them in judgment, Jam. ii. 6. When the wolf and sheep were in contention together, the wolf confessed the sheep had a better cause than he, but he had stronger teeth than they; so poor men, widows, orphans, may have a better cause than rich and great men, but they have stronger teeth than they, and therefore Zephaniah is not afraid to call such, evening, yea ravening, wolves, Zeph. iii. 3.

5. In imposing upon men's consciences those things which are doubtful and disputable, whether warrantable or no, yea of unlawful things; this is the greatest oppression of all. When doctrines, worship, disciplines, are imposed upon men's consciences, which cannot clearly be made out to them, it is height of oppression, and the ground-work of persecution. The scribes and Pharisees taught for doctrines the commandments of men, Matt. xv. 9; they laid grievous burdens on men's shoulders and hearts, Matt. xxiii. 4. So did prelay of late, and oppressed men in their courts for not observing their ceremonies and will-worship; and not only so, but persecuted men, and drove them out of the land. And this is an evil in many families, where husbands, parents, masters, put and press those things upon their wives, children, and servants, which in conscience they cannot yield unto; or, if they do, it is with doubting and scrupulosity; and "whatsoever is not of faith is sin," Rom. xiv. 23; and the rule is, 1 Cor. vii. 23, "Ye are bought with a price; be not ye the servants of men."

11. The evil of oppressing.

1. It is an unnatural evil. No creatures do oppress those of their own kind; take birds of prey, eagles, vultures, hawks, do not prey upon those of their own, but another kind. So lions, tigers, wolves, bears, are favourable to those of their own kind, and prey upon foreigners, those of another kind; but men most unaturally prey upon one another; one man is a wolf to another: Ezek. xxii. 27, "Her princes are like wolves ravening the prey." And who were the prey? widows and fatherless ones, Isa. x. 2. Lions have spared men, Dan. vi.; ravens fed men, 1 Kings xvii; and yet one man seeks to eat up and devour another.

2. It is argument there is little or no fear of God in their hearts that do oppress others. Lev. xxv. 17, "Ye shall not oppress one another; but thou shalt fear thy God;" whereby is fully intimated, that if they oppress, they do not fear God; if they fear God, they will not oppress; for "by the fear of the Lord men depart from evil," Prov. xvi. 6. When Amalek fell upon the Jews, and smote some of them passing through his country, it is said, "he feared not God," Deut. xxv. 18. The Jews' oppressing one another is attributed to their not fearing of God, Neh. v. 9; Job's eschewing of evil was because he "feared God," Job i. 1.

3. It is against that great and common rule of equity, Matt. vii. 12, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

The like is in Luke vi. 31. Now, no man that is in his right mind, that hath use of reason, would have another to wrong and oppress himself in estate, name, conscience; he should not do it unto others. Lactantius saith, That is the root and whole foundation of equity, not to do to any what he would not suffer himself; and measure another's spirit or mind by thine own. Hierom calls this sentence of Christ's, "All things whatsoever ye would," &c. the summary of justice, and should always be written upon men's hearts. Ad Celantiam.

4. It is a sin which greatly provokes God, hath dreadful woes denounced against it, and brings dreadful judgments upon those who are guilty of it; see Micah ii. 12; Hab. ii. 12; Zeph. iii. 1; Jer. xxii. 13; Isa. x. 1—3. In those places such woes are thundered out against oppressors, as would make even stony hearts to tremble: What will ye do in the day of visitation? to whom will ye flee for help? God will visit for this sin: Prov. xxii. 22, 23, "Rob not the poor, because he is poor; neither oppress the afflicted in the gate: for the Lord will plead their cause, and spoil the soul of those that spoiled them." The Egyptians oppressed the Israelites, and did not God spoil the Egyptians? Exod. xii. 36. Rehoboam would oppress his subjects by laying heavy burdens upon them, and God spoiled him of ten tribes, 1 Kings xii. And he threatens to be a "swift witness against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right," Mal. iii. 5; and the meaning is, God will punish them severely. And you may see what God will do, Exod. xxii. 21—24, "If thou afflict, vex, oppress the stranger, the widow, the fatherless in any wise, and they cry at all unto me, I will surely hear their cry; and my wrath shall wax hot, and I will kill you with the sword; and your wives shall be widows, and your children fatherless." Of all people, strangers, widows, fatherless ones, should be pitied, countenanced, counselled, comforted, relieved; for therein lies the fruit and power of true religion, Jam. i. 27. If those, therefore, be afflicted in any wise, and do cry at all, God will hear; his wrath will wax hot, consume you, and bring your wives and children into their condition: therefore, 1 Thess. iv. 6.

"But hath restored to the debtor his pledge," &c. Poor men being in straits, were wont to pawn their garments, their tools, and household stuff, unto their creditors for what they borrowed of them. Men that had money and means were hard-hearted, and would not lend freely; and when they had the poor and needy's pledges, they would keep them. The Lord therefore gave them laws thereabout; as Exod. xxii. 26, "If thou at all take thy neighbour's raiment to pledge, thou shall deliver it unto him by that the sun goeth down;" so Deut. xxiv. 6, 10—13, 17, they might not take the upper millstone, nor a widow's garment, for pledges; and what they did take, they were faithfully and speedily to return. Job complains of the wicked, that they took the widow's ox for a pledge, and the garments of the poor, Job xxiv. 3, 9. It is not unlawful to take a pledge, so it be not of present and necessary use; but to make advantage of the poor, to have pledges double or treble the worth of that men lend, and then to take forfeitures, or withhold the pledges, is cruelty towards man, and iniquity before God, who would have men to be merciful as himself is merciful, to be helps, and not hinderers, to those who are in affliction.

"Hath spoiled none by violence." Hebrew. נִלְוָה לֹא יִנְיָה hath not taken away by force that which hath been so gotten by others. The word נִלְוָה noteth, a violent taking away, and so it is expressed, Prov. xxii. 22. "Rob not the poor." Robbing is a violent taking from any; and so, Lev. xix. 13, and Amos iii. 10, violence and robbery are joined together. Wicked men are said to "drink the wine of violence," Prov. iv. 17; that is, they spoil others; as ver. 16, "They sleep not, except they cause some to fall;" and what they get that way, they live upon, they make merry therewith, "drink wine in bowls," and that is the wine of violence. So those phrases of, eating violence, Prov. xiii. 2, storing up violence, Amos iii. 10, are to be understood: they feed upon, and furnish themselves with, what they get by violence.

I spake of violence in chap. vii. 11; viii. 17, and therefore shall not insist much on it, but tell you what David saith, Psal. cxl. 11, "Evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him." Certain ruin abides the violent man, one judgment of God or other will hunt him like a wild beast, till he be overthrown; yea, his own violent dealings shall come upon him and overwhelm him, Psal. vii. 16.

Samuel could say, "Whose ox have I taken? or whose ass have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed?" 1 Sam. xii. 3. It were well such innocency could be found in men; but we have been full of plundering and spoiling one another, yea, many precious ones have been spoiled of all they had, but the Lord will spoil the spoilers, Prov. xxii. 23.

"Hath given his bread to the hungry." The word for "hungry" is from רָעַב to consume with hunger, and notes such as are pinched with hunger, and have real need of relief; and by "bread" is here meant, not only what in a strict sense we call bread, but whatever is fit for man to eat, as in chap. xvi. 49. Giving bread to the hungry imports not one or two acts, but a constant and free relieving of them, as thou art able, and there is occasion. Isa. lviii. 7, it is to deal the bread to the hungry, to bring the poor who are cast out to thine house, and when thou seest the naked, to cover him.

"Hath covered the naked with a garment." That is, those who have ragged, thin, poor clothing, so that their nakedness is not hid. A man is to mind such, cover their nakedness; as Job saith, chap. xxxi. 19, "If I have seen any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering: if his loins have not blessed me, and if he were not warmed with the fleece of my sheep." It is not enough to give food, but there must be clothing too, if need be, James ii. 15, 16. We should be charitable, feed the hungry, and clothe the naked; they are our own flesh: Isa. lviii. 7, "Hide not thyself from thine own flesh." It was the sin of Sodom, not to "strengthen the hand of the poor and needy." It was a damned Dives that would not relieve a poor Lazarus.

God feeds you with the finest of the wheat-flour, clothes you with the choicest clothes, silks, &c. yea, feeds you with manna, flesh of his Son, clothes you with garments of salvation, with the righteousness of Christ.

It is the exercise of faith; Eccles. xi. 1, "Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days."

It makes a man to be of good report; Psal. cxii. 9, "He hath given to the poor; his righteousness endureth for ever." Mark xii. 42 "And there came a certain poor widow, and she threw in two mites," which were remembered and recorded.

It is argument of a good man; Psal. cxii. l. 9, "Blessed is the man who fears God; he hath dispersed," &c.

It is feeding of Christ; Matt. xxv. 35, 40, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

It is an honour to religion; James i. 27, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

It procures many a prayer and blessing; 2 Cor. ix. 10, "Now he that ministereth seed to the sower both minister bread for your food, and multiply your seed sown, and increase the fruits of your righteousness;" Job xxix. 13, "The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me: and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy:" 2 Tim. i. 16, "The Lord give mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus; for he oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain."

It is maintaining and saving of life; Job xxix. 13. It makes like unto God; Luke vi. 36, "Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful:" Psalm cxlvi. 7, he "giveth food to the hungry." It makes like Christ, he fed the multitude, Matt. xiv.

It is lending to the Lord; Prov. xix. 17, "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again."

It is pleasing and acceptable to God; Acts x. Heb. xiii. 16, "To do good and to communicate forget not; for with such sacrifices God is well pleased."

Ver. 8. He that hath not given forth upon usury, neither hath taken any increase, that hath withdrawn his hand from iniquity, hath executed true judgment between man and man.

Our prophet is upon declaring who is a righteous man. Sundry characters of such a one he hath laid down before, and here proceeds to add more; and the first is, he meddles not with usury, he increases not his estate that way. It is much in practice among the sons of men, as if Scripture did rather authorize than prohibit it.

"Upon usury." בנישך, from נשך to bite; yea, to bite like a serpent. It is akin to נשא a serpent, saith Avenar. A serpent's biting is little felt at first, but after it inflames and ruins the man; so usury is not much felt at the beginning, but in time eats up and devours a man's whole substance: or, for that it makes a man restless, sleepless, who is bitten with it, as the biting of a serpent doth; or biting, in that, like a hungry dog or wolf, by biting and devouring others, it feeds itself. Chrysostom, super illud, Matt. v. volenti mutare, saith, The usurer's money is like the biting of the asp. A man bitten by the asp hath a delightful sleepiness upon him, and dies sleeping, because poison sweetly diffuseth itself through his whole body; so the man that takes money of the usurer, pleases himself, thinking it a kindness and benefit unto him, but it quickly eats up a great part, if not his whole estate. This kind of usury many are against, but other sorts of usury they allow and practise. I shall therefore consider what usury is, and then show you whether the Scripture will warrant any usury.

What usury is.

It is the taking of any thing above the principal, saith Tostat. A receiving more than was lent. Cajet. These are too strict, excluding whatever any return freely by way of thankfulness.

In usury, three things are considerable: lending, gaining, covenanting.

To lend money for gain, interposita pactio, that is "usury." When men put out their money to receive more than the principal by virtue of a covenant, contract, or compact, that makes them usurers. It is gain taken merely for the lending of a thing. Herein, it is conceived, lies the formality of it, viz.

the covenanting, agreeing, and contracting to have so much for what is lent. This the word points at, Exod. xxii. 25, thou shalt not put usury upon him.

Amesius saith, it is gain sought after, aimed at, from what is lent, because it is lent; and he includes in the word quæsitum, not only real usury, which is contracted for, but mental usury, which is intended.

Usury thus described I find no warrant for from the word of God, but much against it: look into these places, Exod. xxii. 25; Lev. xxv. 35—37; Deut. xxiii. 19, 20. The great God of heaven and earth commands them not to be usurers, not to lend upon, or take, usury.

The answer and evasion that some have and make here, is this: True, we must not lend upon usury to the poor, who are mentioned in the two first places, and implied in the third, but to the rich we may.

To take away this evasion,

1. Consider, there are other places where no mention of the poor is made. Psal. xv. 5, "He that putteth not out his money to usury." It is spoken indefinitely; they might not put it out to the poor; and who, then, were there to put it out to, but the rich? So in Jer. xv. 10: Ezek. xxii. 12, usury is censured, and yet there is no mention of the poor. Usury seemed a cursed thing.

2. Rich men were their brethren as well as the poor; and, Deut. xxiii. 20, "Unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury." He might not lend to a rich foe, only to a stranger.

3. What countenance, warrant, or encouragement do you find in holy writ for lending moneys to rich and wealthy men, especially with expectation of gain. Luke vi. 34, "If ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again." Wicked men, the worst of all, who have no fear of God in them, will do that; therefore, saith Christ, "Lend, hoping for nothing again." Here is shown who should lend, and to whom. Rich men are to lend, not to borrow; and to those the lending should be who are not able to maintain their charge, drive on their callings, without help; to these rich men should lend freely: and to others that are beggars, truly poor, they should give; Matt. v. 42, "Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away." It is a duty for rich men to lend, not to borrow; and because they let many families sink these hard times, which would do well enough had they a little support from the rich, it will stand upon their account one day. This is the evil of rich men, because they see such a man decaying, therefore they will not lend him; but because he is upon decaying, therefore they should lend him that he may not utterly decay, Deut. xv. 7, 8.

The second evasion men have is this: Usury, when it is biting, hath the serpent's sting and teeth in it; prejudiceth, and doth not profit, advantage a man, then it is unlawful; but if a man be a gainer by it, it is not unwarrantable; and so they distinguish between biting usury and profiting usury.

Answe. Distinctions and arguments from etymologies are insufficient and weak. Absalom signifies a father of peace, or, the father's peace; but he was a father of war, and his father's trouble. As for "usury," the Scripture knows no such distinction as biting, and profiting, usury; it is a human invention, to make way for the satisfaction of men's covetous and greedy desires. Men think they are safe if they take usury of the rich, not of the poor: but see how the Lord strangles and cuts off this distinction by the next words in the verse.

"Neither hath taken any increase." He must not be a biting usurer, which they grant; neither must he be an increasing usurer; this is forbidden by the same authority that the other is. The word is, תרביט from רבה to multiply and increase, and is rendered by Montanus, amplius; so Natablus and Jerom, He is a just man that takes no more than he lends. Some would have this word to be exegetical, and so think to avoid the force of it: but though the wisdom of man be inventive to promote its own interests, yet it must not null the wisdom of God. Let us grant it exegetical, it is of more force against them; for the latter word must expound the former, and so any increase is the meaning of usury. Upon this account, then, he is a usurer who takes any increase. But this likes not those who plead for it. By increase they would have such increase as burdens, bites, oppresses, and consumes him that gives it.

This is forcing of the word tarbith, which notes simply any increase or multiplication; not biting, oppressing, undoing increase. As they therefore stick to the word nesheck, to make one sort of usury unlawful, so may we stick to the word tarbith, to make that other sort of usury unlawful, because it is said, "he that hath not given forth upon usury, neither hath taken any increase." The word notes increase of victuals, as well as of money: Lev. xxv. 37, "Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor lend him thy victuals for increase." There must not be increase of money or victuals; it is not meant a burdensome increase of victuals, but no increase at all.

Some plead the lawfulness of it from Deut. xxiii. 20, "Unto a stranger thou mayest lend upon usury: but unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury:" hence they conclude, that usury is not simply unlawful but to a brother.

Ans. God is above the law, and may authorize men to do such things as the letter of the law is against: he bade Abraham sacrifice his son, the Jews to rob the Egyptians. The law, in Lev. xx. 21, is against a man marrying his brother's wife; yet in Deut. xxv. 5, the brother must raise up seed to the brother; and seven brethren had one woman, Matt. xxiii. 24—26. And so here, the Lord might give way to the Jews to take usury, he is above the law.

2. Some answer it thus, and say, God permitted it unto them for the hardness of their hearts, who would have taken of their brethren, if they had not had liberty thus to have done. As they were permitted to give a bill of divorce to their wives, and send them away, so it was here. It was a permission, "thou mayest," &c. and permission is of evil, not of good.

3. It was to strangers they might do it; and not to all strangers, but Canaanites only, who were designed of God to destruction; so that those they might destroy with the sword, they might devour with usury. So then, where men are not appointed to death, and to be cut off by war, they may not exercise usury.

4. The distinction of strangers is now taken away: the partition-wall is broken down, and we are all brethren. A stranger that was become a proselyte, and embraced the Jewish religion, they might not take usury of, he was a brother, Lev. xxv. 35, 36; they had all one father, Mal. ii. 10, and so have we, and are brethren. This made Jerom, upon this place, say, In the law, usury was taken off from brethren; in the prophets it is forbid to all; in the gospel is yet more virtue and favour; the Lord saith, "Lend to them from whom ye may expect nothing."

It is the blindness of the Jews, to think they may take usury of christians, when Christ hath made of both one, Eph. ii. 14; and it is our sinful covetousness to take usury one of another when we are brethren. And therefore some affirm that in this place of Deuteronomy, that usury towards strangers is neither commanded nor permitted; but the Scripture would have us acknowledge all our neighbours and brethren; and that if we do exercise usury towards any, we treat them not as brethren or neighbours, but as enemies.

Some ground the lawfulness, and so their practice, of it upon Matt. xxv. the parable of the talents; ver. 27, "Oughtest thou not to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury." Hence they conclude, that Christ doth not only allow, but justify, usury.

Ans. 1. This is a parable, and solid arguments are seldom drawn from parables.

2. Christ here speaks, not concerning the justice of the matter, as if he approved usurious practices, whereby men of covetous minds do increase their estates; but concerning its mode, the increase that came by such practices, which he propounds to be imitated in spiritual things. You see men of this world improve their moneys, and so should you improve those gifts and graces which are concredited and committed unto you. Christ here justifies usury no more than he justifies the unjust steward, Luke xvi. 8, where it is said, he "commended the unjust steward, because he had done wisely." Why, what had he done? In one account he had defrauded his master of fifty measures of oil; in another account, he cut him short of twenty measures of wheat; yet Christ saith, "he hath done wisely;" that is, wisely for himself, though wickedly for his master. Christ's commendation of him did not legitimate the action. If men's stewards or servants should do so now, and allege his instance, they would not hold them excusable, but have the law against them. Christ saith, that he will come as a thief, Rev. xvi. 15; and that "the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night," 1 Thess. v. 2. Doth this, therefore, countenance or justify theft?

You see, then, no footing for usury in the word of God. It seems to me to make void three great rules which our Lord and Saviour hath given us in the gospel.

The first is that, Matt. vii. 12. "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets." Now, is there any man in straits, in necessities, that would not borrow freely, rather than be tied to pay so much, not knowing whether he shall gain any thing, or preserve the principal: and if any should deny it, I fear their own consciences would condemn them for it. It is true, through the custom and practice of the times, men are willing to borrow upon such rates and terms, because they cannot have moneys otherwise; but if men will lay aside all respects of that kind, and look at the simple nature of the thing, they cannot but confess they had rather have money freely than upon terms; and if so, then they ought to do so to others, and not lay the burden of usury upon them.

2. It is against that great rule and command, Luke vi. 35. "Lend, hoping for nothing again." The Greek is, δανείζετε μηδὲν ἀπελπίζοντες, men should so lend as not to hope for, much less covenant for, any thing again. Any thing for the lending their principal they may; for it is not said, give, but, lend, not δώτε, but δανείζετε; and if you should not have the principal again, it were not δανισμα, but δώρημα, not a lending, but a giving: hence, hoping for the principal, but nothing for the loan of it. Such lending is attributed to righteous and good men: Psal. xxxvii. 26, "He is ever merciful, and lendeth;" and, Psal. cxii. 5, "A good man sheweth favour, and lendeth."

3. It is against that great rule and command, Heb. xiii. 5. "Let your conversation be without covetousness." Should poor men be without covetousness who have little, and should not rich men who have much? they usually are the usurers, and so most covetous. Usury is the invention and practice of covetousness, and serves only to feed the appetite thereof. Covetousness is a grievous sin; it is idolatry, as you may see, Col. iii. 5; it makes the times perilous, 2 Tim. iii. 1, 2; it is the root of all evil, 1 Tim. vi. 10; it makes a man unworthy of christian society, 1 Cor. v. 11; to be abhorred of God, Psal. x. 3; and so to be shut out of the kingdom of heaven, 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10; Eph. v. 5; and surely such as the mother is, such is the daughter. Psal. xv. 1, "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill?" Ver. 5, "He that putteth not out his money to usury." Of which words Luther, in his Commentary upon that psalm, saith, that place does not need explanation, but obedience. Many councils have condemned it as unlawful. In the first Nicene it was condemned for a mortal sin, can. 17; the first Carthaginian determined it to be base gain, cap. 13; the Lateran saith, Usury is not allowed to redeem captives; Concil. Viennense decrees him to be punished as a heretic who says usury is no sin; the Eliberine council degraded clergymen, and cast the people out of the church, who were usurers, cap. 20. Not only councils, but fathers, have been against it. Augustine upon the 36th Psalm says, Si plus quam dedisti expectas accipere, feneratoris; and Bernard calls it, Venenum patrimonii: inter precepta famul. The very heathen have censured and condemned it. Aristotle, in 1 Polit. c. 7, saith, Usuraria acquisitio est maxime contra naturam. Because it is barren and not apt to bring forth; and Cato makes usury equal to murder; Illi feneratori idem fuit quod hominem occidere, Tul. 2. Offic. cited by Aret. in Problem.; Lycurgus e tota Sparta usurarios expulit. Agis burnt all the usurers' tables at Athens; which made Agesilaus to say he never saw a better or brighter light than that fire made. Alexan. ab Alexand. lib. 1. Gen. Dier. c. 7. Plato would have usurers banished out of the commonwealth, l. 5. de Legib.

Let, men, therefore, take heed how they meddle with usury, seeing there is such a cloud of witnesses against it, and not trust to a distinction of man's brain, making biting usury unlawful, and other usury lawful, lest by this distinction they get money in their coffers, and lose their souls at last; for, as Alphonsus saith, such gain is the sepulchre of the soul; and he must not sojourn in the tabernacle of the Lord, that puts his money to usury; and surely it is an ill trade that excludes a man from heaven.

Money at first was invented for exchange of things uneasy to be transported, not, to beget money, or a trade, without labour; for the usurer's trade is most easy and gainful. The ancient Grecians and Romans forbade all usury above one penny for a hundred in the year; and if any took above that rate, he was condemned to restore fourfold, and judged more vile than a thief, who was condemned but in double as much. Afterwards it was brought to a half-penny a year among the Romans, and not long after wholly taken away by the Gemutulan law. And if it were brought to lower rates amongst us, or rather wholly taken away, it were an honour to the gospel, and to our nation.

"That hath withdrawn his hand from iniquity." Hebrew is, hath turned away his hand. The sense of the phrase is, that hath abstained from doing evil, from unjust and sinful acts; not only that keeps his hand from taking bribes, as Polanus; but from wronging any when it is in his power, and occasions are presented. If men be so minded, they shall have variety of occasions to revenge themselves upon their enemies, to crush the poor, to get the wealth and honour of the world, yea, strong temptations to things that are evil; but now when a man will not give way to such temptations and occasions, he is said to withdraw, or turn his hand from iniquity. When Judah said of Joseph, "What profit is it if we slay our brother, and conceal his blood? let not our hand be upon him;" here he kept his own and his brothers' hand from iniquity, Gen. xxxvii. 26, 27. Saul commands his footmen to kill the priests, 1 Sam. xxii. 17, but they would not put forth their hand to fall upon the priests of the Lord: they withdrew their hands from iniquity. Job professes his innocency in this kind; chap. xxxi. 21, "If I have lifted up my hand against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate: then let mine arm fall from my shoulder;" he had opportunities and encouragement from others in place, to have wronged the fatherless, but he would not do it; he withdrew his hand from iniquity. Joseph would not hearken unto his mistress: Daniel would not defile himself with the king's portion, chap. i. 8; the three children would not bow to the image, chap. iii.; they withdrew their hands and hearts from iniquity; and so David, he kept himself from his iniquity, Psal. xviii. 23, from that which was most stirring in him. Wicked men withdraw not their hands from iniquity, but, as Mic. vii. 3, they do evil with both hands, and that earnestly: evil is their element, and doing evil is their trade. But a righteous man withdraws his hand from iniquity, yea all iniquity; from all unwarantable actions, prescriptions, subscriptions.

"Hath executed true judgment between man and man." Hebrew is, the judgment of truth. Whether these words be referred to public magistrates, or private men chosen to end controversies between men at variance, it matters not, both may be included; for whosoever do judge or execute judgment between man and man, they are to judge truly, and execute the judgment of truth: Zech. viii. 16, it is written thus, "Execute the judgment of peace and truth in your gates;" there is a judgment of truth, or, as the Hebrew is, judge truth; see your judgment have nothing in it but truth; see it be according to the word of truth, approved by the God of truth, and then it will be a judgment of peace, else it will breed more contention and heart-burnings. The Scripture speaks of perverting judgment, Prov. xvii. 23; of turning aside judgment, Isa. x. 2; but those who are called to that work should, neither for fear or favour, hatred or love, warp from the rule set of God. No greatness, no relation, no gifts, no respects whatsoever, should draw a man to wrest, pervert, or turn aside judgment of truth, or true judgment. Deut. xvi. 18, 19, "They shall judge the people with just judgment. Thou shalt not wrest judgment; thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift: for it blinds the eyes of the wise, and perverts the words of the righteous. That which is altogether just shalt thou follow." God loves true, righteous, and just judgment, and hates what is thereunto contrary. Deut. xxvii. 19, "Cursed be he that perverteth the judgment of the stranger, fatherless, and widow;" his hatred is so great, that he hath laid a curse upon the perverters thereof.

Ver. 9. Hath walked in my statutes, and hath kept my judgments, to deal truly; he is just, he shall surely live, saith the Lord God.

We are coming towards an end of the description of a righteous man; one thing or two remains.

"Hath walked in my statutes." There are several expressions in the good word of God consonant unto this: as, walking with God, Gen. vi. 9; walking before God, Gen. xvii. 1; walking after the Lord, 2 Kings xxiii. 3; walking in the Spirit, Gal. v. 25; after the Spirit, Rom. viii. 1; walking in the fear of the Lord, Acts ix. 31; Neh. v. 9.

Several equivalent unto it: as, walking in the truth, Psal. lxxxvi. 11; walking in his ways, Deut. xxviii. 9; walking in the light of the Lord, Isa. ii. 5; walking honestly as in the day, Rom. xiii. 13; walking worthy of the Lord, 1 Thess. ii. 12; walking after his commandments, 2 John v. 6; in the good way, Jer. vi. 16; respecting all his commandments, Psal. cxix. 6; sticking to his testimonies, ver. 2.

It is opposed to other walkings and ways: as, walking in the statutes of the heathen, 2 Kings xvii. 8; in the statutes of Israel, ver. 19; keeping the statutes of Omri, Mic. vi. 16; walking in the ways of the kings of Israel, 2 Kings viii. 18; in the statutes of their father, Ezek. xx. 18; in their own counsels, Psal. lxxxii. 12; the counsels of their evil hearts, Jer. vii. 24; walking after Baalim, Jer. ix. 14; after other gods, chap. xvi. 11; walking according to the flesh, 2 Cor. x. 2; according to the course of this world, Eph. ii. 2; walking after their own lusts, 2 Pet. iii. 3; in the imaginations of their own hearts, Jer. xiii. 10; after our own devices, chap. xviii. 12; walking in pride, Dan. iv. 37; walking in lies, Jer. xxiii. 14; walking in the ways of darkness, Prov. ii. 13; John xi. 10; walking in the vanity of the mind, Eph. iv. 17; in the ways of a man's heart, Eccles. xi. 9; walking after vanity, Jer. ii. 5; after things which do not profit, ver. 8; walking with slander, Jer. vi. 28; walking after customs, Acts xxi. 21; walking with vanity, Job xxxi. 5.

Walking in God's statutes implies several things.

1. Life.
2. Light.
3. Action, motion.
4. Progress.
5. Perseverance.

1. Life. A dead man cannot walk, he lies immovable. Walking is from life; Rom. vi. 4, spiritual walking is from spiritual life, as natural walking is from natural life. Hos. xiv. 9, "The ways of the Lord are right, and the just shall walk in them; but the transgressors shall fall therein." Men justified by faith, they live, and they walk in God's ways, not others; transgressors fall in them, they cannot stand, much less walk in them. If men be not good themselves, they cannot do good.

2. Light. Men must know God's statutes, else how can they walk in them; unknown things are neither desired nor practised. Matt. xxii. 29, "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures;" they wandered from God's ways through ignorance; being in the dark, they stumbled. Jer. iv. 22, "To do good they have no knowledge;" an ignorant man cannot walk in God's ways; a servant can never do the will of his master, if he knows it not, nor a son the will of his father, if he understands it not. Prov. xiv. 8, "The wisdom of the prudent is to understand his way;" a prudent man will examine his way, whether it be the way of God he walks in, or the way of the world, flesh, corruption; if it be this last, he will not walk in it, but walk out of it: he will walk into God's way, and walk in his statutes: when he discerns them once to be his, he dares not keep out of them.

3. Action, motion. A man that walks, neither stands nor sits still; he stands not in contemplation, nor sits still in meditation; contents not himself with reading or hearing, but is doing the will of God. Walking and doing are the same: 1 Kings xi. 38, "If thou wilt walk in my ways, and do that is right in my sight, to keep my statutes and commandments:" those that do and keep them, they walk in them. This walking is observing his commandments, Neh. i. 5; obeying the voice of the Lord, Deut. xiii. 4; it is hearkening unto God, Psal. lxxxii. 13; fulfilling the statutes and judgments of the Lord, 1 Chron. xxii. 13; performing his statutes, Psal. cxix. 112.

4. Progress. A man that walks, goes on step by step, and presses on towards that which is before him; he walks in the statutes of the Lord, goes forward, his obedience is more and more. It is said of wicked men, "They proceed from evil to evil," Jer. ix. 3; they walk on in their evil ways. And so do good and just men; they go on from statute to statute, from truth to truth, from grace to grace; Psal. lxxxiv. 7, "They go from strength to strength," and from light to light. Phil. iii. 13, Paul forgot those things which were behind, and reached forth towards those things which were before him; he took long strides towards heaven, and walked fast that way; he forgot how much ground he had walked over, and hastened to his journey's end. In Rom. iv. 12, they are said to walk in the steps of Abraham's faith; Abraham walked in faith, and all believers since have trodden in his steps.

5. Perseverance. That is implied here by walking, as appears by ver. 24, "When the righteous turneth away from his righteousness," &c. Psal. cxix. 112, "I have inclined mine heart to perform thy statutes always, even unto the end:" a man that walks in God's statutes must never stand still, nor turn back; God hath no pleasure in such, Heb. x. 38. However times prove, whatever troubles arise, however men or Divine Providence acts, those who are in God's ways should proceed and persevere: Psal. xlv. 18, 19, "Our heart is not turned back, neither have our steps declined from thy way. Though thou hast sore broken us in the place of dragons, and covered us with the shadow of death." The word for dragon is תנינ and signifies both sea and land dragons, and refers to the gentiles, saith Kimchi, who were as cruel to them as dragons. Now, notwithstanding they met with dragons, were stung with them, and brought unto the point of death, yet they held on in God's ways, neither hand nor foot declined or withdrew at all: they knew it is the end crowns all antecedent acts: Matt. xxiv. 13, "He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." It is continuance in well doing which arrives at eternal life, Rom. ii. 7.

"Hath kept my judgments." These words express the meaning of the former. Walking in God's statutes, is keeping of his judgments, Judg. ii. 22. Of these words, "statutes" and "judgments," was spoken, chap. v. 6. A word or two of keeping.

To keep, here, is not meant of keeping God's judgments, or laws, from perverting, having corrupt glosses and senses put upon them, as you would keep clothes from moths, which do mar them; neither is it meant of keeping them in memory, as the word is used, Luke ii. 51; but to keep them, is to do and perform them thoroughly, Psal. cxix. 48, 69; Deut. xxxii. 23. Keeping and performing is the same, so observing and keeping, Psal. cv. 45. The Hebrew word שָׁמַר signifies to keep, as Pagnine saith, with care and diligence; and, Prov. iv. 23, it is rendered so, "Keep thy heart with all diligence;" שָׁמַר with all care and diligence; and so must the judgments, commands, and ways of God be kept: Deut. vi. 17, "Ye shall diligently keep the commandments of the Lord your God." שָׁמַר תְּשָׁמְרוּ

“To deal truly.” Hebrew is, to do truth. There are lies in men’s actions as well as in their words. This expression of our prophet, “to deal truly,” is consonant to that of Christ, John iii. 21, “He that doeth truth.” Men do truth, when their actions are adequate or conformable to the word of God. The Septuagint has it, to do the same things, referring to judgments and statutes. The doing of them is doing of truth: Psal. cxix. 142, “Thy law is the truth.” All things in the law of God, all his statutes, judgments, commands, ways, are truth, and the doing of them is doing truth; and when a man deals truly, without fraud, guile, deceit, hypocrisy, which is the thing here intended, he doth truth. You read in holy writ of dealing treacherously, Lam. i. 2; subtly, Acts vii. 19; perversely, Psal. cxix. 78; unfaithfully, Psal. lxxviii. 57; corruptly, Neh. i. 7; deceitfully, Job vi. 15; falsely, Jer. vi. 13. And unto all these is dealing truly opposite; he who doth so, deals neither treacherously, subtly, perversely, nor unfaithfully, corruptly, deceitfully, or falsely.

Dealing truly is hard to find among the sons of men, great or small, prophet or priest, Jer. viii. 10; but where it is to be found, it is a jewel: I say a jewel, enriching the man with peace invaluable, and making him delightful unto God: Prov. xii. 22, “They that deal truly are his delight.” Hebrew is, those that do truth; not those that speak truth only, but those whose lives and actions hold out the truth, they are his delight. Men have their delights; one delights in a witty man, another in a learned man, a third in a beautiful man, a fourth in a bountiful man; but God delights in a man that doth truth, or deals truly.

“He is just.” Hebrew is צדיק הוא. Something I spake of a just man in ver. 5; I shall add something here.

There is a just man in appearance: Matt. xxiii. 28, the Pharisees did outwardly appear righteous. There is a just man in opinion and conceit; Luke xviii. 9, there were those who trusted in themselves that they were righteous. There is a just man in truth, and that either evangelically or legally.

1. Evangelically just. Heb. xii. 23; Luke xiv. 14; Heb. x. 38, they are such as are justified by faith in Christ.

2. Legally just. And such are they who do that which is lawful and right, who live honestly and harmlessly, walking in the ways of God, dealing justly with all men. Such a one was Paul before his conversion, Phil. iii. 6, “Touching the righteousness in the law blameless.” Such were Abner and Amasa, 1 Kings ii. 32, who are said to be just or righteous. Of such Solomon speaks, Eccles. vii. 15, “There is a just man that perisheth in his” justice or “righteousness, and there is a wicked man that prolongeth his life in his wickedness.” Some are loose, and they are spared in states; others are too strict, and are crushed by states.

Now here is meant by a just man, not one in appearance or opinion, but one in truth; yet not evangelically, but legally; for,

(1.) Here is no mention of Christ, or any reference unto him by faith, both which are requisite unto evangelical justice and righteousness.

(2.) A just man here is put in opposition to the soul that sinneth: ver. 4, “The soul that sinneth, it shall die;” that is, the soul that sinneth, and doth contrary to the duties here mentioned, as appears from the beginning of ver. 10, to the end of ver. 13. He who sinneth such sins shall die, either a metaphorical or violent death, be cast into captivity, or cut off by the sword or some stroke of God; but he who is free from those sins, he is just, he shall not die, but live.

(3.) It is meant of such a just man as may cease to be just: ver. 24, “When the righteous turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and doeth according to all the abominations that the wicked man doeth, shall he live?” &c. This must be the man who is legally just, not evangelically; for the man evangelically just cannot cease to be just; see Ezek. xxxvi. 27; 1 John iii. 9; Heb. x. 14; viii. 12.

“He shall surely live.” Hebrew is, he shall live by living. This phrase, he shall live by living, saith Pradus, is to live pleasantly and prosperously, his fathers’ and predecessors’ sins shall bring no woe, no evils, upon him, he shall reap the fruit of his righteousness. David giveth us some light unto this life, Psal. xxxiv. 12–14, “What man is he that desireth life, and loveth many days, that he may see good?” By “life,” and “days,” he means such a life and days as have good in them, prosperity, peace, pleasure, comfort; and he shows how to obtain them: “Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile. Depart from evil, and do good.” This falls in with our prophet; He who doth so shall live a desirable life, and see good days. But if men sin, and their sins be upon them, they pine away in them, they do not live, Ezek. xxxiii. 10: they live not a comfortable life, they see no good days.

Obs. 1. The Lord doth not only, in general, approve of doing good and avoiding evil, but particularly shows them what evils they should not do, and what good things they should do. “If a man be just, and do that which is lawful and right.” Here is the general, and then he descends to particulars: “And hath not eaten upon the mountains, lift up his eyes to idols; neither defiled his neighbour’s wife, nor oppressed or spoiled any by violence, nor given forth upon usury, nor taken any increase; but hath restored the pledge, given his bread to the hungry, covered the naked with a garment, executed true judgment, and dealt truly.”

Here are negative and affirmative particulars. God would have his mind so fully known, all pleas and objections so taken away, that none may have excuse, or say, Had we known what was acceptable to God, we would have done it. Generals we have, but for particulars we are at a loss. God takes away this plea both here and elsewhere, and shows men in special what he approves, and what they should do. See Deut. xxvii. 15–26; there are eleven particulars reckoned up together; and likewise as many in Psal. xv. In Mic. vi. 8; Zech. vii. 9, 10; Rom. xii. 9–12, &c. you have sundry particulars enumerated, and above twenty in the last place. The duties of magistrates, subjects, ministers, people, husbands, wives, parents, children, masters, servants, of all relations, ages, sexes, conditions, are particularly laid down in the word; and all are inexcusable, if they be ignorant or disobedient.

Obs. 2. See here the way to have a good name, esteem with God, and a good report from him. The man who doth the particulars mentioned, “he is just,” saith God.

If a man do the duties of the first table, which are implied in not eating upon the mountains, nor lifting up eyes to idols, he is approved of God; and if he do the duties of the second table, which are implied in the other particulars, he is approved of man; and so hath a good report from heaven and earth; God pronounces him just, and man must subscribe unto it. A good name is a great mercy; Solomon tells you it is “better than precious ointment,” Eccles. vii. 1, which pleases the senses, and profits the limbs; yea, that it is “to be chosen rather than great riches,” Prov. xxii. 1. Make a mountain of silver and gold, a good name is more eligible than that; it is better to fill the world with a good name, than to fill coffers and chambers with rich treasure. The Grecians say it is better to hear well, than to heap up wealth. Many, by caring to grow rich, have wasted their bodies, and drowned their souls in perdition; whereas "a good report maketh the bones fat," Prov. xv. 30.

Take, then, the right way to get a good name; do what is here required, and so shall you be counted just, and have a good report.

Agesilaus, being asked how a man should come to have a good name, his answer was, To speak the best things, and do the most honest. Aristides, by the light of nature, did those things which caused him to be called Aristides the just, an honourable and good name. And shall not we christians, who have, beside the light of nature, divine light, do those things that may cause God to honour us with this title, "he is just?" If we do not this, heathens and others will be witnesses against us at the last day. While we are here, an ill savour will be round about us, and when we are gone, our names will rot; "but the memory of the just shall be blessed."

Obs. 3. Hence note how to come unto it, as to live comfortably. "He shall live," that is, comfortably, sweetly; but who shall do so? the just man, he that doth that which is lawful and right, that walks in God's statutes, that keeps his judgments, and deals truly, he shall surely live; that is, prosperously and pleasantly. So the word life signifieth, Prov. xvi. 15, "In the light of the king's countenance is life;" what life? felicity and prosperity. A man that is morally just shall have much comfort, content, and sweetness in his life; Prov. xii. 21, "There shall no evil happen to the just; but the wicked shall be filled with mischief;" no evil with a sting in it, no evil as shall suck or pluck away the sweet of his life; but a wicked man shall have evils enough, he shall be filled with fears, cares, sorrows, impatience, discontent, and with the guilt of his sins, so as his life will be no life unto him: Deut. xxviii. 66, "Thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life."

This is spoken of those who do not walk in God's statutes, keep his judgments, and do that which is lawful and right; their lives are continual deaths, they have no assurance of life, which is the most desirable thing, and what comfort or peace can they have in life? But as for the just, who walk in his ways, they live, and live comfortably, no evil befalls them. And no marvel; they are compassed about with favour as with a shield, Psal. v. 12; the Lord upholds them, Psal. xxxvii. 17; they shall not be moved, Psal. lv. 22; they shall flourish as a branch, Prov. xi. 28; their desire shall be granted, chap. x. 24; the wicked shall bow before them, chap. xiv. 19; and the righteous shall see their fall, chap. xxix. 16, enjoy their wealth, chap. xiii. 22, "The wealth of the sinner is laid up for the just;" if the just man fall into trouble, he shall come out of it, chap. xii. 13; blessings are upon his head, chap. x. 6, in his habitation, chap. iii. 33; his house shall stand, chap. xii. 7; thus is he blessed in his life, and "hath hope in his death," chap. xiv. 32. If these blessings be to the just, labour not only to be morally just, but evangelically also, for to such they do especially belong.

Ver. 10—13. If he beget a son that is a robber, a shedder of blood, and that doeth the like to any one of these things, and that doeth not any of those duties, but even hath eaten upon the mountains, and defiled his neighbour's wife, hath op- pressed the poor and needy, hath spoiled by violence, hath not restored the pledge, and hath lifted up his eyes to the idols, hath committed abomination, hath given forth upon usury, and hath taken increase: shall he then live? he shall not live: he hath done all these abominations; he shall surely die; his blood shall be upon him.

The prophet, having freed the Lord from that aspersion laid upon him, that the fathers did eat sour grapes, and the children's teeth were set on edge; they sinned, and the children suffered for it; and that both in general, ver. 4, and by particular instance of his dealing with a just man, ver. 9; he comes in these verses to another instance, which is the son of this just man. What if he should have a lewd son? will the son's lewdness prejudice the father's righteousness, or the father's righteousness advantage the son's lewdness? Neither the one nor the other; the father shall not be damified by the son, nor the son benefited by the father, but the one shall live in his righteousness, and the other shall die in his wickedness, and my justice shall appear to all men.

Of the father's righteousness, and his living in it, hath been spoken in the former verses; now we are to come unto his son's wickedness.

Ver. 10. "If he beget a son that is a robber." The Hebrew word for robber is פֶּרֶץ from פָּרַץ to break, and, to break by violence; to break through, or over, as water doth in a flood, through and over the banks. Montanus renders the word "robber" effractorem, a breaker; robbers do break walls, windows, doors, laws, and all bounds of justice, to accomplish their sinful desires. The word is translated "robber," Ezek. vii. 22; (where something was spoken of it;) Dan. xi. 14; Jer. vii. 11. But, in Psal. xvii. 4, it is rendered "destroyer;" "I have kept me from the paths of the destroyer," or robber; because, where robberies are committed, there is great destroying, yea, even of men's lives sometimes. The Septuagint is, υἱὸν λαοῦν, a pestilent son, one that is a plague to his parents and country.

"A shedder of blood." Hebrew is, שֹׁפֵךְ דָּם a man that spills the blood of another; not that only draws blood, but draws and sheds blood, that death follows upon it. So the phrase imports, Deut. xxi. 7; when a man was found slain, the elders of the city next to him must wash their hands, and say, "Our hands have not shed this blood." we have not murdered this man: so it signifies in Gen. ix. 6; Psal. lxxxix. 10; 1 Sam. xxv. 31; Prov. i. 16; Gen. xxxvii. 22. This shedder of blood is a murderer, Numb. xxxv. 16, 17; and murder is a crying sin, Gen. iv. 10; it defaces God's image, Gen. ix. 6; it makes a land mourn, Hos. iv. 2, 3; it takes away the life of a man, for which no recompence can be made, Job ii. 4. A man's life is better than all that ever the blood-shedder or all his friends can return, it is a sin for which he must die: Numb. xxxv. 31, they "shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, which is guilty of death, but he shall be surely put to death."

The Jewish doctors say, Though the murderer could give all the riches in the world, and though the avenger of blood were willing to free him, yet he must be put to death, because the Vide Answ. Gen. vi. 9. soul or life of the party murdered is not the possession of the avenger of blood, but the possession of the most holy God. It is a sin that excludes from the kingdom of heaven, Gal. v. 21; Rev. xxii. 15: such God abhors, Psal. v. 6; if men be bloody, God, who is love, abhors them, and will cut short their days; Psal. lv. 23, "They shall not live out half their days."

Of the 11th, 12th, and former part of the 13th verse, was spoken in the 6th, 7th, and 8th verses; the words "poor" and "needy" were opened in chap. xvi. 49; so that there remains nothing to open but a little in ver. 13.

Ver. 13. "Shall he then live? he shall not live." He thinks to live, thrive, prosper in the world; but "shall he live?" what! such a man live? no, "he shall not live." The words are a question and an answer, and discover a vehemency of spirit in the speaker. The son may flatter himself, because his father is just, doth that which is lawful and right, that it shall be well with him notwithstanding all his lewd and villainous practises, that he shall live as happily as ever he did; What! live? saith the Lord; "shall he then live? he shall not live."

This interrogation and answer is like that in chap. xvii. 10, "Shall it prosper? shall it not utterly wither, when the east wind toucheth it? it shall wither."

"He shall surely die." Hebrew is, he shall die in or by dying. This manner of speaking is frequent in the book of God: Gen. xx. 7; xxvi. 11; Exod. xxi. 12, 15, 16, 17, four times in that chapter, and as many in Numb. xxxv. 16, 17, 18, 21. Septuagint is, θανάτω θανατωθήσεται, he shall die by death. He shall not escape the jaws, teeth, and sting of death; the famine, plague, sword, or some special hand of God, shall be upon him, cut him off. It is opposed to what we had in the 9th verse, "he is just, he shall surely live;" and this man is unjust, and "he shall surely die;" his comforts, hopes shall cease, his ruin and destruction hastens.

"His blood shall be upon him." Hebrew is, his bloods shall be in him; a substantive plural with a verb singular: דמי בני ידיו the cause of his death shall be in himself, he shall answer for all the blood he hath shed with his own blood; he hath shed the blood of others, and his blood shall be shed for it. The Chaldee is, he shall be found guilty of his own death, just matter and ground for his death shall be found in himself. Or thus, his blood shall be against him, his bloody and cruel dealings shall come against him. The Hebrew preposition ב or בֵּת, signifies, against, and, upon; against, Gen. xvi. 12, ידו בכל יד בני, "his hand will be against every man, and every man's hand against him;" here בֵּת is "against," and so it may be rendered here, His blood shall be against him. It signifies also, upon, Ezek. xxxiii. 4, "His blood shall be" בראשי "upon his own head;" and so it is in this place, "his blood shall be upon him;" he is the cause of his own death, his sinful acts have brought death upon himself.

Obs. 1. That a just man may have a wicked son. "If he beget a son that is a robber, a shedder of blood," &c.: he speaks of the just man who may have such a son. If we search into the bowels of the word, we shall find frequent examples hereof: Jacob had Simeon and Levi, who slew the Shechemites, troubled him, and made him to stink among the inhabitants of the land, Gen. xxxiv. 25, 26, 30; and therefore he called them instruments of cruelty, and laid a curse upon them at his death, Gen. xlix. 5, 7; Abraham had a scolding Ishmael, Gen. xxi. 9; Isaac a profane Esau, Gen. xxv. 32, 34; old Eli had sons who were sons of Belial, 1 Sam. ii. 12; David had his Absalom, who shed the blood of his brother Amnon, 2 Sam. xiii. 28; Solomon had his Rehoboam, who proved tyrannical, 1 Kings xii.; Hezekiah Manasseh, who filled Jerusalem with innocent blood, 2 Kings xx. 21; xxi. 16; Josiah his Jehoiakim, who did evil in the sight of the Lord, 2 Kings xxiii. 39, 32. It is a great affliction when a good man hath a wicked son: Prov. xvii. 25, "A foolish son is a grief to his father, and bitterness to her that bare him." If a foolish son be so, what is that son that is a robber, a blood-shedder, an idolater, an oppressor? Just men have had such sons, and you must not think it strange if any of yours be such.

Obs. 2. The righteousness of the father neither priviledgeth, patronizeth, nor protects a wicked child from the stroke of justice. "If he," viz. the just man, "beget a son that is a robber, a shedder of blood," &c. "shall he live? he shall not live." Though his father be just, his righteousness great, yet it doth not reach to his son, being guilty of such things. The Lord had said, ver. 4, "The son that sinneth, it shall die," the father's righteousness cannot expiate the son's sin. As the life of the child cannot answer for the sins of the father, nor profit him at all upon that account, Mic. vi. 7, so neither can the righteousness of the father answer for the sin of the child, or advantage it at all in that respect. What Solomon saith of a wise man, Prov. ix. 12, "If thou be wise, thou shalt be wise for thyself," that I may say of a righteous man, If thou be righteous, thou art righteous for thyself, and not for another, no, not for thy own child. David's righteousness did not privilege Absalom; he sinned, and he suffered.

Quest. Is it not said, Prov. xi. 21, "The seed of the righteous shall be delivered?"

Answer. 1. Not for the righteousness of the father, that deserves nothing at God's hands; Job xxii. 3, "Is it any pleasure to the Almighty, that thou art righteous? or is it gain to him, that thou makest thy ways perfect?"

2. It is for the promise and covenant-sake which God hath made: see Gen. xvii. 7; Psal. cxii. 1, 2; lxxxix. 28—34.

3. It supposes continuance in the steps of their fathers, else not; for mark the whole verse, "Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished;" let them plot, act, use all means and ways themselves, their friends, or parties, can make, yet they shall be punished, the just God will bring it about one way or other. Now, if the seed of the righteous prove wicked, they must be punished.

4. Outward calamities and affliction fall alike unto all, but God will deliver the righteous and their seed out of the evil of them, Psal. xxxiv. 19; but wicked men are left to sink in them. Let not children, then, presume upon the righteousness of their parents, and live loosely; if they fall into vicious and lewd courses, they may perish, notwithstanding their righteousness.

Obs. 3. The sins here specified, howsoever they may seem to men, they are abomination unto God, Robbery, blood-shedding, idolatry, adultery, oppression, violence, withholding the pledge, going in to a menstruous woman, which is meant by committing abomination in ver. 12, usury, and taking increase; he hath done all these abominations. The Lord calls them all "abominations," things to be abhorred, loathed, rejected, offensive to all the senses. One sin here among the rest I desire may be taken notice of, and that is, usury and increase; he distinguisheth them here from oppressing the needy and the poor in ver. 12. If it were, therefore, meant of biting usury, as many would have it, that is comprehended in those words, of oppressing the poor and needy, which is abomination. Now, besides that, he adds, giving forth upon usury, and taking increase; and this he calls an "abomination."

Let men take heed how they meddle and please themselves with that which so far displeases, yea provokes, the Lord, that he brands it with the title of an "abomination." If in the judgment of the infinite and only wise God, it be abominable, let not the groundless distinctions and vain pretences of men prevail with thee to judge it warrantable or lawful.

Obs. 4. Great and notorious sinners bring, hasten woes, judgments, deaths upon themselves. "Shall he then live? he shall not live; he hath done all these abominations, he shall surely die:" either metaphorically, or some violent death. God will turn such sinners' prosperity into adversity, their light into darkness, their comforts into crosses and curses. Jer. ix. 13—16, "They have forsaken my law, walked after the imagination of their own heart: therefore saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will feed them, even this people, with wormwood, and give them water of gall to drink." They should have sad and bitter afflictions: and what then? "I will scatter them also among the heathen, whom neither they nor their fathers have known: and I will send a sword after them, till I have consumed them." To be fed with wormwood, and drink gall, is a death; to be scattered among strangers is a death; to have a sword pursuing is a death. Wicked ones have many deaths, they are dying and pining away under threats, fears, strokes, or guilt continually; they may say, as it is Ezek. xxxiii. 10, "Our transgressions and our sins be upon us, and we pine away in them, how should we then live;" the thought of their sins and ways banished all sound comfort from their lives. And oft such sinners are snatched away, cut off by some sudden hand of God; and when it is so, it is most just, their blood is upon their heads, nothing befalls them but what is due and deserved; their sins call for death, and bring the evil upon them. See Lev. xx. 9, 11, 12, 13, 16, 27; 2 Sam. i. 16; where you may find that it was their own sin which brought death upon them.

Ver. 14—18. Now, lo, if he beget a son, that seeth all his father's sins which he hath done, and considereth, and doeth not such like, that hath not eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lifted up his eyes to the idols of the house of Israel, hath not defiled his neighbour's wife, neither hath oppressed any, hath not withholden the pledge, neither hath spoiled by violence, but hath given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a garment, that hath taken off his hand from the poor, that hath not received usury nor increase, hath executed my judgments, hath walked in my statutes; he shall not die for the iniquity of his father, he shall surely live. As for his father, because he cruelly oppressed, spoiled his brother by violence, and did that which is not good among his people, lo, even he shall die in his iniquity.

The prophet, in these words, presents a third instance to free the Lord from imputation of injustice. You stick not to affirm that he punisheth the children for the sins of the fathers; but behold here the error and wickedness of your assertion. If a wicked father, a robber, a blood-shedder, beget a son that doth not as he hath done, God is so far from punishing him for those sins of his father, that he shall be spared and blessed, he shall not die but live.

Three things are here commended unto us concerning this son of a wicked father.

I. His full observation of his father's evil ways, in these words, "that seeth all his father's sins which he hath done."

II. His effectual consideration of them; "and considereth, and doeth not such like."

III. His doing of the contrary, which is implied in the several particulars mentioned in ver. 15—17.

"That seeth all his father's sins." Sin is not properly visible, it is not the object of the eye; we may see sinful actions, but not the sin of those actions, with the eye of the body; the sight of the sinfulness refers to the eye of the mind. Junius therefore renders the words thus, qui omnimodertat, he who marks, observes the sins of his father. 1 Sam. xii. 17, "That ye may see that your wickedness is great;" that you may take notice, observe it is so. In this sense it is used, Eccles. v. 8, 13, 18; vi. 1; x. 5; Jer. xlii. 27; xxiii. 13; Job xi. 11. Many children do as their fathers do, and never observe of what nature it is they do, whether good or evil; yea, oft parents possess their children with arguments to justify their ways, which are altogether unlawful.

"All his father's sins." It is impossible any son should see or observe all the sins of his father, many are acted in secret, many abroad; our prophet intends not that every particular sin should be observed by him, but those which are more obvious, and expose to judgments and death, such as he had mentioned before.

"And considereth." The Hebrew word is, יירא from ירא which signifies not simply to see, but enviously to look into, to consider and intend a thing. The Septuagint, Vulgate, and some others read it, and feareth, and so derive it from ירא to fear; but Montanus saith, it is from ירא and so our translation hath it. I shall speak to it therefore as it imports consideration, not fearing.

I. Consideration is a serious exercise of the understanding about things to be done, or not to be done, furthering or impeding the execution of them as it sees cause.

(1.) It is an exercise of the understanding, mind, heart; these are at work in consideration: Psal. exix. 59, "I thought on my ways," or considered them; I turned them over and over, as sempsters do their needle-work; I looked upon all the circumstances and aggravations of them. It is called a speaking or saying, Hos. vii. 2, "They consider not in their hearts;" Hebrew is, they say not to their hearts. It is called a communing with a man's own heart, Psal. lxxvii. 6.

(2.) Serious: it is not a slight general thinking of a thing, but a serious, settled minding of a thing; Heb. x. 24, "Let us consider one another:" it notes the sinking down of a thing into our minds. It is the intention of the mind upon a thing, with great earnestness; Eccles. ix. 1, "I considered in my heart;" Hebrew is, I set to my heart: consideration is a setting the heart to a thing, or upon a thing, as a bee sits upon a flower, and sets her strength to it to draw out the sweet in it.

(3.) It is about things to be done, or not to be done. Contemplation looks upon things as the eye upon the object. Judgment discerneth things whether good or bad, right or wrong, and there leaves them, having pronounced them so. Meditation is a further inquisition into truth, or minding of truth, and comes up nearest to consideration, which is in order to doing or not doing. Men intend this and that, and oft fall upon things rashly to their prejudice, because they consider not: now consideration reflects upon things intended. The two sons in the gospel, one said, I will go, and went not; the other said, I will not go, and went. The one's purpose was to go, the other's not to go; but this last considering of his sinful purpose, intention, and resolution, repented, and went, Matt. xxi. It is taken up about doing, or not doing, as you may see, Prov. xxiii. 1, 2; 1 Sam. xxv. 17; Judg. xviii. 14.

(4.) Furthering or impeding the execution of them, as it sees cause. Psal. exix. 59, "I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies." David considered his ways, and not finding them good, he ceased from walking any longer in them; and seeing God's ways the only good ways, he turned about, stepped into, and walked in them. If upon consideration things be found good, the heart affects them, and so proceeds to the doing of them: the virtuous wife considered a field and bought it, Prov. xxxi. 16. But if things upon consideration be found sinful, the heart disaffects them, and so keeps off: see ver. 28 of this chapter, "He considereth, and turneth away from all his transgressions."

2. Wherein the strength of it lieth.

(1.) In searching out the causes, effects, rising, progress, continuance, and issue of a thing. Judg. xix. 30, the Levite's concubine being cut in twelve pieces, and sent into all the coasts of Israel, they saw it, and said, "Consider of it, take advice, and speak;" let us search out the cause and original of this evil, what damage it hath brought to the Jewish religion, and may bring; what the Levite can say; what will be the issue of this horrible fact.

(2.) In comparing things together, and so drawing up and out that which may be most useful. When all things are laid together, weighed, scanned over again and again, a man takes that which is most necessary, seasonable, suitable, and useful. Eccles. xii. 10, "The preacher sought to find out acceptable words;" he compared one word with another, one truth with another; and then, in ver. 13, "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter, Fear God," &c. He had tried books, creatures, all things; and then considering them, sums up, and draws out what was most material.

(3.) In pressing to and assisting the soul in acting. When consideration hath drawn up what is to be done, or not to be done, then it puts it upon the conscience as sinful, if not followed, and directs in the execution. Many things well contrived have miscarried through want of consideration, which looks to the congruency of particulars to the whole: Psal. lxxiv. 9, "All men shall fear, and declare the work of God; for they shall wisely consider of his doing." Consideration lays an injunction upon men's wills and consciences to be doing. Did men in these days wisely consider the Lord's doings, they would fear, and declare the work of God.

3. The excellency of it.

(1.) It is that which God himself doth: Prov. xxiv. 12, "Doth not he that pondereth the heart consider?" When God intended to make man, he called a council, Come, let us make man after our image, Gen. i. 26. The Lord considers, ponders, and weighs things, according to the language of Scripture, Exod. xxxiii. 13; Prov. v. 21; Deut. xxxii. 26, 27; Hos. xi. 8, 9.

(2.) It differenceth a man from brutes; they are led by sense, and cannot distinguish whether an action ought to be done or not, this is man's privilege and power. Reason doth distinguish men from beasts, but the generality of men do not use reason; they have souls for salt, their eyes, ears, tastes, their senses are their guides: Jer. x. 14, "Every man is brutish in his knowledge." Men do not reflect upon their actions, and consider them; if they did, they would not be so sensual, so sinful. Isa. i. 3, "The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib: but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider."

(3.) It enables the understanding, completes a man, makes him wise and prudential. Prov. xvii. 27, "He that hath knowledge spareth his words; and a man of understanding is of an excellent spirit."

He who considers what advantage may be made of words, and therefore is sparing in speaking, shows the more understanding and excellency of spirit. Prov. vi. 6, "Consider her ways, and be wise." If the considering of an ant's ways will make us wise, much more the consideration of our own ways. Direct acts may enable and perfect others, but reflex acts do enable and perfect a man's self. Consideration looks inward, looks over the same thing again and again, it defecates the understanding of man from those raw and imperfect notions and conceptions which arise at first, and those impertinent ones which interpose afterwards. We say, second thoughts are best, which implies that consideration ripens and perfects the man and his actions; as meat in the pot, if suddenly pulled out, is raw, but if well boiled, is freed from crude humours, and so more wholesome.

(4.) It puts life into those principles and talents God hath given a man; like a drum in an army, when that beats all stir and march; like a spring in a watch, when that goes all the wheels go. Did men consider what graces and gifts God hath given them, they would not let them lie still and fallow, but improve them. Isa. lxiv. 7, "None stirreth up himself to take hold on thee?" they had talents, but did not employ them. Heb. x. 24, "Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works;" consideration will set others' graces on work, and much more a man's own.

A third thing here commended about this son of a wicked father, is his doing the contrary: he worships God in his own way, he eats not upon the mountains, he lifts not up his eyes to idols; but he comes to mount Zion, and lifts up his eyes to the God of heaven whom he serves; he is chaste and charitable, he wrongs none, but doth good to all according to his ability; he executes judgment, and walks in God's ways; and whatever his father's sins have been, though crimson and scarlet abominations, he shall not die for them, but he shall surely live.

Ver. 16. "Hath not withholden the pledge." Hebrew is, hath not pledged the pledge. Hath not taken a pledge, saith Calvin, Lavater, Junius, Montanus; but Piscator saith, the word for pledging doth not signify here to take or receive a pledge, but to detain it being pledged, as appears from ver. 7, where the words are, "hath restored to the debtor his pledge;" and here it must be, not who hath taken, but who hath not withholden being taken: so Vatablus, doth not retain the pledge; and Weems, the repetition of the same word signifies to take away the pledge, and to keep it. Now he who doth not take away, or withhold, but restore the pledge, is just.

Obs. 1. A good son may descend from a wicked parent. A father that is a robber, a blood-shedder, a son of Belial, a plague to city and country, may have a son that is free from his vices, a son that is just; as good parents may have ill children, so ill parents may have good children. God may and doth honour his free grace, when, where, and upon whom he pleases. Manasseh was transcendently wicked, and his son Amon; so 2 Chron. xxxiii. 9, 22, 23; yet out of their loins came Josiah, ver. 25, who hath this testimony; that "he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the ways of David his father, and declined neither to the right hand, nor to the left," chap. xxxiv. 2. Hezekiah was very godly, did much in reformation, restored the passover, walked in the steps of David, and did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, yet he came from as wicked a parent as the world then had, even from Ahaz, 2 Chron. xxviii. 27. Ahaz came from Abijam, who walked in the sins of his father, 1 Kings xv. 3. Abraham descended from idolatrous parents, Josh. xxiv. 2. "Some good thing toward the God of Israel" was found in a son of Jeroboam's, who made Israel to sin, 1 Kings xiv. 13.

Some unward parents in our days have had good children, and such as have much honoured God. Now this is not from nature, or because they are born under such and such planets, but because they are born of God, and made partakers of the divine nature. If parents have gracious children, let them give the glory thereof to God, whose grace hath made them such. If they have ungracious ones, let them beg hard of God for mercy and grace for them, who hath abundance of the Spirit to bestow on whom he please, and hath promised to those in covenant with him, to pour out his Spirit upon their seed, and his blessing upon their offspring, Isa. xlv. 3.

Obs. 2. It is not always safe, warrantable, to imitate parents, ancestors, predecessors, and to tread in their steps; it may be dangerous, deadly, yea damnable. If the son of the unjust man should follow his father in his ways, he must die for it; but if he see his ways, and doth not such like, he shall live. When the ways of parents are idolatrous, superstitious, profane, oppressive, contrary to, or not grounded upon the word of God, children are not to conform unto them. There is one greater than they, and wiser than they, who is the Father of spirits, and hath more authority over them than their parents after the flesh; him must they hearken unto, his counsels must they embrace, his commands must they obey, his will must they do. The Lord commends the son here that doth contrary to his wicked father. 1 Pet. i. 18, men are redeemed from the vain conversation by tradition from their fathers. Fathers who are vain, have vain conversations, deliver those to their children, but children should not receive their traditions, nor imitate their conversations, they are redeemed from them; but they are apt to do it, Jer. ix. 14; xlv. 17; and it is oft complained of and spoken against in Scripture, 2 Kings xv. 9; xxiii. 32; Neh. xiii. 18; Psal. lxxviii. 57; Ezek. xx. 24, and in other places. There is a full prohibition against it, 2 Chron. xxx. 7. "Be not ye like your fathers, and like your brethren, which trespassed against the Lord God of their fathers, who therefore gave them up to desolation."

Obs. 3. Consideration is a special means to keep men from sinning. If a son see his father's sins, and considereth, and doth not such like. There is a strong inclination in men to sin; example is powerful to draw out that inclination, and especially the example of a father; yet consideration hath virtue in it to stop that inclination, to take off from evil example, and to carry another way. The prodigal, "when he came to himself," that is, considered what he had done, in what case he was, what might be had in his father's house, he comes off from his wicked ways, and returns to his father, Luke xv. 17. It is want of consideration that men sin so as they do; had Noah, Lot, David, Peter, others, well considered, they would not have fallen into such sins as they did; it is rashness, inconsiderateness, that occasions and causeth many sins. Matt. vii. 3, "Why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?" Want of consideration makes men censorious and hypocritical, it leads men into a multitude of sinful ways, and keeps them there, Isa. xlv. 19; Hos. vii. 1, 2; Eccles. v. 1; whereas if men would seriously consider, they would neither sin so frequently, nor continue in sin, if overtaken with it. Ezek. xii. 3, "It may be they will consider, though they be a rebellious house." Here the Lord intimates, that if they would consider, they would give over their sinful practices, and not persist in ways to provoke God; they would see so much evil in their own ways, so much equity in God's ways, that they would leave the one and embrace the other.

In ver. 28, of this chapter, you may see the virtue and efficacy of consideration: "Because he considereth, and turneth away from all his transgressions." Nothing more advantages Satan's kingdom than in-cogitancy and inconsiderateness; and nothing doth prejudice it more than the contrary. Consideration puts a stop to men's sinful ways, and causeth them to turn to God, Psal. cxix. 59. Therefore the Lord calls earnestly for it, Psal. l. 22, "Now consider this, ye that forget God;" and Deut. xxxii. 29, "O that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end!"

Obs. 4. Good children descending from wicked parents, are not to be branded with their vices. If he beget a son who doth not such like; if the son do not tread in the steps of his father, he is just, he shall not suffer for his father's sins; I will not charge the guilt or shame of them upon him, he shall live comfortably, and without infamy. Children choose not their parents, neither could prevent their sin; if they cleave not to their ways, they shall not be spotted with their vices.

The world deals otherwise, it is forward to pick up any thing, yea to seek out matter from parents and predecessors to disgrace their posterity, though they walk not in their sinful paths; this is not to be like unto God, but unto the world, to lay the burden of the guilt upon the innocent.

From ver. 18, observe, that covetous men are oppressors, yea oppressors of those who are near unto them. "Because he cruelly oppressed, spoiled his brother by violence;" the Hebrew is, he oppressed by oppression, and spoiled by spoiling, and that his brother. The word אח notes a brother of the same womb, a kinsman, a brother in friend-ship, one near and dear to a man. He that is covetous will contend fraudulently, oppress, as אָפַר signifies, yea spoil, and wrest out of his hand by violence what he hath, as אָרַב imports. Covetousness is cunning and cruel: Neh. v. 7, "Ye exact usury, every one of his brother." Micah vii. 2, "They hunt every man his brother with a net." Amos v. 11, they take burdens of wheat from the poor; they oppress and crush them, chap. iv. 1. They robbed the fatherless, and made widows their prey, Isa. x. 2. If you would see the cunning and cruelty of covetous men, consult with these texts, Jer. vi. 13; Jam. v. 4; Luke xix. 8; Isa. iii. 14, 15; Micah iii. 2, 3; Ezek. xxii. 7; 1 Kings xxi. 15.

Covetous men little care from whom they pull, so they may get and feed their covetous desires; many have undone their brethren, kindred, friends, fathers, sons, by their cunning, cruel, covetous practices.

Ver. 19, 20. Yet say ye, Why? doth not the son bear the iniquity of the father? When the son hath done that which is lawful and right, and hath kept all my statutes, and hath done them, he shall surely live. The soul that sinneth, it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father; neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son; the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him.

Here begins the Jews' replication, and God's further vindication of himself from what they accused him of, which extends to the end of the 24th verse.

The replication is in these words, "Why? doth not the son bear the iniquity of the father?" Why dost thou deny it, bring arguments against it, attempt to persuade us otherwise? have we not experience of it in ourselves? do not we bear the iniquity of our fathers? The Hebrew word for "why" is מַה which is used when we desire to know the reason or cause of a thing, as Gen. xxvi. 27, "Wherefore," or why, "come ye to me, seeing ye hate me," said Isaac to Abimelech and his men, let me know the cause of your coming: so here, they would have a reason, know the cause why the Lord spake so, and justified his proceedings with men and government in the world, that he wronged none, but rendered to all according to their ways and works. It is otherwise, we find and feel the contrary, the iniquity of our forefathers is upon us their children; and therefore we wonder how either thyself, or Ezekiel, who pretends to be thy prophet, can assert such things: either that is not true which is said, or our condition is worse than others: if thou dealest justly with others, yet unjustly with us, we suffer for the sins of our parents.

"Bear the iniquity." Iniquity here is put for the punishment due unto it, and so it is frequently used in Scripture: Gen. xix. 15, "Lest thou be consumed in the iniquity of the city;" that is, in the punishment which iniquity hath brought upon it. So Psal. xl. 12; xxxi. 10; Exod. xxviii. 43; Numb. xiv. 34; xviii. 23; Isa. liii. 11; Ezek. xlv. 10: bearing of iniquity in these places is put for bearing of punishment by a metonymy of the efficient.

To this reply and charge God answers,

1. In general, in the rest of this 19th verse, and in the 20th. If a son do that which is lawful and right, if he keep my statutes, he shall live, he shall not suffer (as you reproachfully and blasphemously object against me) for the sins of his father; no, the soul that sins shall die. If the father sin he shall die, if the son sin he shall die, if neither of them sin neither shall die. He who is righteous, his righteousness shall be upon him; he who is wicked, his wickedness shall be upon him.

2. More particularly, in ver. 21—24.

There is nothing more to be opened in the 19th verse. Of doing that which is lawful and right, of keeping statutes, and living, hath been spoken.

Ver. 20. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Of these words you heard largely out of the 4th verse. By "soul" is meant person; by dying, suffering of punishment, putting to death: so the words to die do signify, Deut. xvii. 12; xxviii. 20; xxiv. 7; 2 Sam. xii. 5; 1 Sam. xiv. 39. The sense of the words then is this: that person who commits sins worthy of death shall die for them, and not another.

"The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father." If he persist not in his father's steps he shall not suffer for his father's sins, that were against the law, Deut. xxiv. 16. "The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, neither shall the children be put to death for the fathers; every man shall be put to death for his own sin." Amaziah remembered this law, and kept it, 2 Chron. xxv. 4; when he slew the fathers, he slew not the children for the fathers' sin. It was otherwise when Joshua put Achan's sons to death for Achan's sins, Josh. vii. 24; and when David delivered Saul's sons to be put to death by the Gibeonites for the sin of their father, 2 Sam. xxi. 9. The law then ties not God, he hath a prerogative above his own laws given out to us: they do and must tie us, and without special warrant, hint, and instinct, we may not do contrary unto them; both Joshua and David had special direction for what they did, or else it was evident to them that they approved and justified their fathers' facts, and so became guilty of the same, and suffered according to law.

"The righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him." Look what the righteous hath done, accordingly shall he have; as iniquity before did note punishment, so righteousness here notes reward, he shall have the fruit of his righteous acts. Isa. xlvi. 18, "Thy righteousness had been as the waves of the sea," that is, the fruit or reward of thy righteousness had been great, and coming in daily: so the word "righteousness" is to be taken, Gen. xxx. 33; James iii. 18; Gal. v. 5.

Some from these words, and those in ver. 19, "Hath kept all my statutes, and done them, he shall surely live," do conclude that a man may keep the law, and so by his own righteousness attain unto, if not merit, life eternal.

But where is that man that ever yet did keep the law exactly? since Adam's fall there is none. If Adam in innocency could not do it, how shall we think men subject to sin and many infirmities can do it? Eccles. vii. 20, "There is not a just man upon earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not." Solomon had observed men, and the best of men; the most just sinned and broke the law: James iii. 2, "In many things we offend all." Paul durst not stick to his legal righteousness, Phil. iii. 9; he knew it was impossible for himself or any other to keep the law. Rom. viii. 3, "What the law could not do in that it was weak through the flesh, God," &c. Gal. iii. 21, "If there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law." The law was weak and unprofitable, it made nothing perfect, Heb. vii. 18, 19: the law neither justifies nor sanctifies, it neither quickens nor comforts. If men think by legal righteousness to attain life eternal, they will fall short of it, as the Jews did, Rom. ix. 31, 32; x. 3, 4. They think to earn eternal life; but that is not earned, it is given, Rom. vi. 23; Eph. ii. 8, 9. The just live by faith, and look for eternal life, not by Moses, but by Christ, Tit. iii. 5—7.

Obs. 1. Erroneous and corrupt opinions being entertained, are not easily got out of the heads and hearts of men. These Jews had drunk in a hard opinion of God, that he dealt unjustly with them, punishing them for their fathers' sins. The Lord by many arguments and instances clears up the justice and equity of his proceedings with the sons of men, that he punished none without just cause, and that it is for their own sin when he doth it: he spends eighteen verses to convince them of the falsehood and evil of their tenet, to remove it out of them; but they, notwithstanding all this, hold their opinion fast, and dispute it with God: "Yet say ye, Why? doth not the son bear the iniquity of the father?" we are of this mind and judgment, and so shall continue for aught thou hast said. Errors quickly root deep, take strong hold, and cannot easily be pulled up.

The Pharisees held corrupt opinions about washings, Matt. xv. 2, dispensing with children's obedience to parents, Mark vii. 11; about swearing, Matt. xxiii. 16, 18, fasting and tithing, Luke xviii. 12. They held many corrupt opinions touching the law, as in Matt. v. appears; and could Christ prevail with them to get those opinions out of them? He brought the clearest light that ever was, yet they loved their own darkness more than his light; yea, they gat him out of the world, before he could get these errors out of them.

The Sadducees denied the resurrection, Matt. xxii. 23; and notwithstanding Christ took pains to convince them, and spake to the astonishment of others, ver. 33, yet their opinion abode with them, and they were of that mind after Christ was gone to glory, even in Paul's days, Acts xxiii. 8. Hymenæus, Alexander, Philetus, had rather be delivered up to Satan, than deliver up their corrupt and damnable opinion, of saying "the resurrection is past already," 2 Tim. ii. 18, with 1 Tim. i. 20. The apostles had taken up an opinion that Christ would be great in the world, and advance them, from which opinion Christ had oft been beating them off, yet it abode with them till his ascension, Acts i. 6. There were those in the church of Pergamos who held corrupt doctrines, and the angel of it could not get them out, Rev. ii. 14, 15. Take heed therefore what opinions you receive. If in John's time there was need to "try the spirits, because many false prophets were gone out into the world," 1 John iv. 1, much more had men now need to try the spirits, because the world is full of false prophets and false spirits; and men are grown so artificial to deceive, that if it were possible the very elect should be deceived, and that finally. Let the apostle's counsel take place, 1 Thess. v. 21, "Prove all things;" take nothing upon trust for the learning, holiness, worth of, or respect you have to any man; but prove all by the word, see it have a sound bottoming there, and then it is good; hold it fast, then it will do you good, let it not go.

Obs. 2. That what punishments soever befall men, they have no just cause to complain of God, though it be punishment unto death; for he hath said, "the soul that sinneth shall die," not another for it, not it for another's sins. If it were so, there were just cause of complaint; if the son should die for the father, or the father for the child, this were injustice; therefore the Lord saith here, "The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son," &c. God is most just, and cannot do an act of injustice to any man; and if it be just what he doth, why should man mutter, think, or speak hardly of God? Lam. iii. 39, "Wherefore," saith Jeremiah, "doth a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins?" who wrongs him? doth God? he hath wronged God, and God doth but right himself. If a man strike a lion, and the lion bite him, hath he cause to complain of the lion, or his own folly in striking the lion: Prov. xix. 3, "The foolishness of man perverteth his way; and his heart fretteth against the Lord;" but what cause hath he to fret against God, correcting and punishing him for his folly? Men should "accept of the punishment of their iniquity," as it is Lev. xxvi. 41, rather than complain, when it is their own fault that they suffer; yea, men have cause to be thankful to God that he doth punish them less than their iniquities deserve.

Obs. 3. Then God hath authority over souls, to set them what laws he please, and prescribe what punishments he thinks good. "The soul that sinneth shall die:" be persons great or small, honourable or base, wise or foolish, the Lord is above them, hath command over them, hath set them their bounds; which if they transgress, they shall suffer according as his wisdom shall appoint. Have states that power to give laws to the people, and set what punishment they judge fit for the breach of them, as confiscation of estate, imprisonment, mutilation, racking, pressing, decollation? and shall not God much more? Ver. 4, he saith, "All souls are mine; the soul that sinneth shall die:" I have given them all laws, and ordained punishments for the breach of those laws.

Obs. 4. No man's sin shall go unpunished; men shall not sin, and go away without suffering for it. "The soul that sinneth shall die," either a metaphorical death, it shall meet with grievous afflictions, or a violent death, be cut off by some stroke of God, or an eternal death, which is worst of all. Prov. xi. 21, "Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished;" whatever they think or attempt, God will meet with them, whoever they be. Job ix. 4, "Who hath hardened himself against him, and hath prospered?" Did ever any man sin, and enjoy peace, offend God, and have his blessing? No; God hath made men know it is a sad and dreadful thing to sin against him. Adam sinned and God visited him for it; his posterities sin, and they smart for it. In vain do men flatter themselves that they may sin, and not suffer, they may do wickedly, and escape: it cannot be, God who is truth hath said it, "The soul that sinneth shall die." God may defer the stroke, but without repentance it must come. Rom. ii. 9, "Tribulation and anguish shall be upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the gentile." "The wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him."

Obs. 5. Righteous men shall not lose the fruit of their righteous doings. "The righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him." Psal. cxvii. 11, "Light is sown for the righteous." And Psal. lxxviii. 11, "Verily there is a reward for the righteous." Prov. xi. 18, "The wicked worketh a deceitful work; but to him that soweth righteousness shall be a sure reward." Isa. xlvi. 18, "O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea."

Ver. 21—23. But if the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die. All his transgressions that he hath committed, they shall not be mentioned unto him: in his righteousness that he hath done he shall live. Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die? saith the Lord God: and not that he should return from his ways, and live?

In these verses and the next, you have a more full and particular answer of the Lord's to the unjust replication of the Jews, and charge laid upon him in ver. 19. "Why? doth not the son bear the iniquity of the father?" No, saith God, he that doth right he shall live, and he that sins he shall die. There is the general answer, and here comes the particular.

I. Concerning a wicked man, in ver. 21—23.

II. Concerning a righteous man, in ver. 24.

Concerning the wicked man, here are two things required, and two things promised: the things required are,

1. Turning from all his sins.
2. Keeping all God's statutes.

The things promised are,

1. Life.
2. Not mentioning of his sins.

If the wicked will turn from his evil ways, repent him of what he hath done, and walk in the ways of God for the future, he is so far from suffering or dying for his father's sin, that he shall not suffer or die for his own; he shall live, and his sin not once be mentioned unto him: I am so far from punishing him for another's sin, that upon repentance I punish not a man for his own.

"If the wicked will turn from." The Vulgate is, si egerit penitentiam, if he shall repent: the Hebrew is, ושיב from שב and notes turning from ill, and turning to God, which is repentance: so it is used, Ezek. xiv. 6, "Repent," the word is, שׁוּבוּ turn ye, or repent; in repentance there is turning.

This turning from evil is set out by sundry expressions: Isaiah calls it washing, making clean, putting away the evil of men's doings, ceasing to do evil, chap. i. 16. Solomon styles it confessing and forsaking of sin, Prov. xxviii. 13. David terms it departing from evil, Psal. xxxiv. 14; Peter, eschewing of evil, 1 Pet. iii. 11. Daniel's phrase is, breaking off from sin, chap. iv. 27; and Christ's is, "Sin no more," John v. 14.

These words, "if the wicked will turn from all his sins," seem to import power and freedom in man to repent and turn himself. This difficulty was spoken unto chap. xiv. 6, upon those words, "Repent, and turn yourselves." Men may use means, but those means will not produce repentance and turning without God: the Jews used means, Jer. vii. 10, yet could not turn themselves, chap. xiii. 23. Natural instruments have power to work of themselves, there is virtue in them to bring forth such and such effects; but moral instruments, of which sort the word is, do not work so: the word is "mighty through God," 2 Cor. x. 4, 5. Nothing is done towards the conversion of a sinner; therefore repentance is the gift and work of God, Acts xi. 18; v. 31; 2 Tim. ii. 25. Yet when we are called upon to repent, to turn, there is somewhat to be considered: in God's commands, know what you ought to have; in his reproofs, consider it is through your own fault you have it not; in prayer, see where and whence you have it.

Ver. 22. "They shall not be mentioned unto him." Hebrew, לֹא יִזְכְּרוּ they shall not be remembered. His sins shall not prejudice him, he shall not suffer or be punished for them. To remember sin according to the Scripture sense is, to punish. Psal. cxxxvii. 7, "Remember, O Lord, the children of Edom in the day of Jerusalem; who said, Raise it, raise it;" that is, punish them: in the like sense you have it, 11os. viii. 13, "Now will he remember their iniquity, and visit their sins;" so chap. ix. 9. And not to remember, is to pass by, forget, and not to punish, Isa. lxiv. 9. Psal. xxv. 7, "Remember not the sins of my youth;" let them not move thee to punish or be avenged on me for them; as men, when they remember injuries, seek to be avenged on those who have done them.

"In his righteousness that he hath done he shall live." His righteousness shall preserve him from metaphorical and violent death. The papists from these words pretend that a man is justified before God for his own righteousness; but we know the Scripture runs otherwise: Gal. ii. 16, "A man is not justified by the works of the law;" and, "all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags," Isa. lxiv. 6. See Rom. iii. 24, 28; 1 Cor. iv. 7; Rom. v. 19; 2 Cor. v. 21; which places show that we are justified not by our own works, our own righteousness, but by the righteousness of another. Besides, it is not said here, for his righteousness, but "in his righteousness." Good works do not precede justification, and so merit it; but follow the person justified, and declare his justification; they are the path-way to life and glory.

Again, could a man forsake all sins, keep all God's statutes, yet could he not hereby be justified before God, because there must satisfaction be made to the law, and to God, for those sins now left, and that is not in man's power, Micah vi. 7; Psal. xlix. 7.

Ver. 23. "Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die." Hebrew is, הֲרָצָה אֲהַפֵּץ the radical word signifies to have pleasure in, to affect, delight, to desire and will; therefore some render it, do I desire or will the death of a sinner? Others, have I pleasure, or any pleasure? You charge me to punish the children for the fathers' sins, and think I take pleasure in the death of sinners, but I neither do the one nor the other; I punish not you for your fathers' sins, but for your own; and when I do punish you for your own, I had rather you should repent and live, than be cut off for them.

This seems contradictory to what is written, Prov. i. 26, "I will laugh at your calamity, I will mock when your fear cometh;" and Ezek. v. 13, "Thus shall mine anger be accomplished, and I will cause my fury to rest upon them, and I will be comforted." If God have no pleasure in the death of sinners, how can these texts be verified? To clear this difficulty, know that it is not absolutely to be taken, that God hath no pleasure in the death of the wicked, unless you mean it of the wicked who do repent; but respectively, thus, if they could turn from their wicked ways, and keep his statutes, he should have more pleasure in this, than in their death; but when they do not repent, he hath pleasure in their punishment and death, as it is an act of justice, and work of God, for God hath pleasure in all his works: the destruction and ruin of Babylon is called "his pleasure," Isa. xlviii. 14, "He will do his pleasure on Babylon, and his arm shall be on the Chaldeans."

Some refer this to the antecedent will of God, and say so he hath no pleasure in the death of a sinner, he wills it not, delights not in it; but in regard of his consequent will he doth.

Obs. 1. Repentance is a turning, and a turning from sin. Ver. 30, "Repent, and turn." Acts iii. 19; xxvi. 20, repenting, and turning to God, are put together. Sin turns men from God; Jer. xxxii. 33, "They have turned unto me the back, and not the face." Repentance is a turning of them again unto God; it turns them from their sinful and wicked ways, 2 Chron. vii. 14; Jer. xxvi. 3; from all sin, and sinful ways, not some few; "if the wicked will turn from all his sins;" so ver. 30, "Turn from all your transgressions;" it turns men from their secret sins, Psal. xix. 12; Isa. lv. 7. If a man turns not from all, he turns from none in truth, because there is the same reason why a man should turn from all, as well as one, viz. the will and command of God. This turning must be with the whole heart, and therefore it is from all sin, Deut. xxx. 10; Joel ii. 12.

Obs. 2. It is not enough to turn from all sin, but we must turn to all good. "If the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all my statutes, and do," &c. Negative righteousness is no righteousness, negative holiness is insufficient holiness, 2 Kings xvii. 13. We must turn from the commands of sin, Satan, and the world, unto the commands of God. We must turn from worldliness unto heavenly-mindedness, from pride unto humility, from cursing to loving. It suffices not that the tree bears no ill fruit, but it must bring forth good fruit, else it is a barren tree, and must down. The question will be hereafter, What good have you done? 1 Tim. v. 10, "If she have diligently followed every good work." David fulfilled all the wills of God, Psal. cxix. 6, he had respect unto all his commandments; and christians must observe all things Christ hath commanded, Matt. xxviii. 20.

Obs. 3. The way to live comfortably and prosperously is to be godly. He who turns from all his sins, and keeps all my statutes, and doth that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live; he shall live in living; others are dead in living, they have no comfort in their lives: Prov. iv. 4, "Keep my commandments, and live;" see Isa. lv. 3; Amos v.

4, 6; Psal. xxxiv. 12, 14. It is man's sin which maketh times evil, 2 Tim. iii. 1, 2.

Obs. 4. Note, that to penitent, obedient sinners, mercy is promised. "All his transgressions that he hath committed shall not be mentioned unto him." Those that turn from their wicked ways unto the Lord shall find mercy with him, their sins shall be forgiven; let the sins be what they will for nature, never so many for number, they shall all be blotted out, and not be mentioned, Matt. xii. 31; Isa. lv. 7; Jer. xxxi. 12. It was made good in the prodigal. Remission of sins is promised to repentance, Acts iii. 19; when a sinner hath once repented, God will mention his sins no more, and why should we remember or mention them?

Obs. 5. If the sins of the penitent shall not be mentioned, then there is no purgatory to punish them for the same hereafter. How is it true that God remembereth not, mentioneth not the sins of his friends, of penitents, if he punish them so sharply in purgatory?

Obs. 6. God hath no delight in the death of sinners; if they suffer and perish, it is of and from themselves. "Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die?" Ver. 31, "Why will ye die, O house of Israel?" I like it not that men will ruin themselves; I had rather they would consider their ways, turn their feet unto my testimonies, and live. Hos. xiii. 9, "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself; but in me is thy help." Destruction is of man, salvation is of the Lord.

Ver. 24. But when the righteous turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and doeth according to all the abominations that the wicked man doeth, shall he live? All his righteousness that he hath done shall not be mentioned: in his trespass that he hath trespassed, and in his sin that he hath sinned, in them shall he die.

Having laid down the ease of a wicked man, repenting him of and turning him from his sins, and so cleared the proceedings of God, that such a one finds mercy, and suffers not for his own sin, much less for his father's, he comes here to the use of a righteous man, who if he turn from his righteousness, and fall to wicked courses, his former righteousness shall not advantage him, but he shall be dealt with according to his present sin. The sin of the wicked repenting shall not hinder him from mercy, and eternal life; and the righteousness of the righteous sinning, shall not keep him from justice, and eternal death. Old sins shall not burden a returning sinner, and old righteousness will not help a revolting saint.

Of a righteous man, his turning from his righteousness, and committing iniquity, hath been largely spoken of chap. iii. 20, where the first part of this verse is word for word; yet, because this verse is much controverted, and insisted upon by the patrons of apostasy and falling away, I shall touch upon it.

Who the righteous or just man here spoken of is, may be gathered from the opposition to the wicked man; the one is really wicked, and the other is really righteous, that is, with a legal or moral righteousness. He that hath not eaten upon the mountains, lift up his eyes to idols, defiled his neighbour's wife, oppressed the poor and needy, but given his bread to the hungry, clothed the naked, taken no usury nor increase, that hath executed judgment, and walked in God's statutes, such a one is righteous, and the righteous man in the text.

That here is meant a moral, legal righteousness, appears from those words in the 4th and 20th verses, where it said, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." If this did refer to the gospel, and righteousness thereof, and not to the law, and legal righteousness, no man could be saved, because all men sin; but notwithstanding their sinning, those who are righteous with the righteousness of the gospel, they shall not die, but be saved: it must therefore be understood of a legal, civil, moral righteousness.

Gerhard brings this verse to prove, that a man by his sins may put away faith and the Holy Spirit, loc. Theol. t. 4. De Bonis Operibus. Bellarmine brings it, tom. 4. l. 5. de Grat. et lib. Arb. e. 29. to prove that a man may lose a new heart; and lib. 3. de Justif. e. 14. he makes use of this verse to show that faith may be lost. The Arminians also say, Hence it is so evident that every one may see it, that a righteous man may totally and finally fall away, Ames. in Antisynod. de perseu. Sanct. c. 2.

For answer unto these, know,

1. It is said when the righteous man doth turn away, he shall be so dealt with, as if he had never been righteous. It is a caution to prevent a righteous man's falling, rather than an implication that he will or shall turn from his righteousness.

2. The prophet speaks here of a righteous man considered in himself, not in relation to God, or Christ; and so he may turn from his righteousness, as angels and Adam did.

3. The scope of the chapter is, not to prove falling away from grace, but to clear the Lord's justice, and that in two things:

(1.) That he doth not punish one man for the sin of another, if he be not guilty thereof: a guiltless son shall not suffer for the sins of a guilty father, ver. 4, 20.

(2.) That he is not partial in his dealings, either with the wicked or righteous; he punishes wicked men if they sin, he spares them if they repent: and as for righteous men, he blesses, prospers them, because they walk in his statutes, keep his judgments, and deal truly; but if they forsake their righteousness, and fall to sinful courses, he will punish them as he doth wicked men: so that here is not any thing spoken of grace, or faith, whereby men are united to Christ, justified, sanctified, and evidenced to be in covenant with God, through Christ; but what is here said, is spoken in a legal way, namely, to vindicate God from what unjustly they cast upon him, viz. that they suffered for the sins of others. Jer. xxxi. 29—31, "In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten a sour grape, &c. But every one shall die for his own iniquity. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel." God is now put upon better terms with the house of Israel, than he was at that time. If they sinned they should die, if they did well they should live, this was the covenant of works; but God promised to make a covenant of grace with them, which they should not break as they had done the former, ver. 32; for he will put his fear into their hearts, that they should not depart from him, chap. xxxii. 40, and his Spirit, which should cause them to walk in his statutes, to keep his judgments, and to do them, Ezek. xxxvi. 27. And Christ tells his disciples, that he would send the Comforter that he might abide with them for ever, that he might dwell with them, and be in them, John xiv. 16, 17. And John saith, "He that is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." 1 Epist. iii. 9. If he cannot sin, then surely not so sin as to shake off faith, thrust out the Spirit, totally and finally to fall away. This last place troubleth all those who hold that opinion of falling away. Bellarmine saith, that this place is the hardest of all to answer. Ambrose refers it to the state of glory, in his Commentary upon Isaiah. Bernard, by seed understands gratum prædestinationis, and saith, the predestinate cannot sin so as to harm them, seeing their sins are forgiven, and to work for their good. Others expound it, cannot sin, ought not to sin, Those who are born of God ought not to sin; but that is nothing to purpose, those who are born of God ought not to sin. If sin ought to be, it were not sin, Aug. Tract. 5. in Epist. Johannis expounds it of deadly sins; and Bellarmine likes this exposition, and acknowledgeth that he who is born of God does not sin nor can sin unto death, while he continues a son of God. The text saith, he neither doth sin, nor can sin, because he is born of God; therefore he shall continue to be the son of God, and so never fall into those sins which will murther him, disinherit him, unjustify, and unsave him. Some that say, saving faith may be lost, do make three degrees of saving faith.

The first and highest degree is, the attainment of the life and divine nature of Christ into our souls; after which attainment we live still by faith carrying us out after the nourishment of this new life, and nature begotten in us, which are the heavenly satisfactions of God and Christ: from this faith it is acknowledged impossible to fall away.

A second or middle degree of saving faith is, such a belief of Christ's fullness, life, and divine communications, as brings us not only to fall in love with Christ, and those communications in him, of life and divine things, but also causeth us to leave all things in our desires and affections, wholly to depend on God, and to wait with earnestness, longing, and patience, for the giving in of Christ, his life, and divine communications; and though such a degree of faith doth not likely fall away, yet it is possible it may; Heb. x. 35, "Cast not away your confidence," which intimates they might do it.

A third, and the lowest degree of true saving faith, is that which believes the satisfaction and fullness of Christ to be for us, and so affects us therewith, that it carries us out after Christ, for himself, and for the things believed to be in him, causing us to do and forsake much for him, yet brings us not to willing and actual forsaking of all we have for him, Luke xiv. 33. This is true faith, and will make us partakers of Christ, if continued in, Heb. iii. 14: from this faith it is affirmed that we may fall for ever. John viii. 31, 32; Col. i. 23, there is mention of true, saving faith, for it would save them if continued in; and this manner of speech shows, they might not continue, and so lose what they had.

Answer. I. I find not salvation put upon the strength, but truth of faith, not upon the highest degrees, but any degree of faith, John iii. 16; Mark xvi. 16; 1 Pet. ii. 6; 1 John v. 1; Acts x. 43; xiii. 39; xvi. 31. It is not said in these or other places, if you have such a degree of faith you shall be justified, saved; but simply believing is required, the lowest degree of true faith will do it: Rom. x. 9, "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." The thief upon the cross had not attained to such high degrees of faith; he by one act, and that of a weak faith, was justified and saved, Luke xxiii. 42, 43.

2. The power of God is in the weakest faith, as well as in the strongest. 1 Pet. i. 5, "Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation;" it is not, through strong faith, or such a degree of faith, but only, "through faith." The power of God begets faith in the soul, Eph. i. 19; it keeps it alive there, how weak soever it be, and it keeps it unto salvation. That we may be saved by faith, he saves faith in us; he will not let faith perish, that we may not perish. God's power must fail, if true faith in the lowest degree fail. But, John x. 29.

3. If men may fall from true, saving faith, being in its infancy, what hinders but they may fall from it being grown up, and come to man's estate? Death, which seizeth upon infants, seizeth also upon men; water, which extinguisheth a spark, will extinguish also a great fire. The sense and operations of faith men may be without, but the substance of it abides. All the fiery darts of the devil cannot pierce the shield of faith, Eph. vi. 16. All the strength, malice, and opposition of the world, cannot overcome a little true faith; 1 John v. 4, one born of God, though but new born, a very babe, he overcomes the world. He is "born, not of corruptible seed, but incorruptible," 1 Pet. i. 23; he hath an anointing which abides in him, 1 John ii. 27; his faith hath made him a son of God, Gal. iii. 26, and sons abide in the house for ever, John viii. 35. Yea, he that believes "hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation," John v. 24; God puts his fear into his heart, and he shall not depart from him, Jer. xxxii. 40. His Spirit being in the heart of a true believer, causes him to walk in God's statutes, to keep his judgments, and do them; he shall be confirmed to the end, 1 Cor. i. 8. So that by these texts it appears, that where true, saving faith is, it will abide, not be extinct, but will live for ever.

Be it granted, therefore, that in the places mentioned, John viii. 31, 32; Col. i. 23, a true saving faith is meant, then the words, "if ye continue," do not import they should not continue. "If" is not a word of doubt, but of caution and encouragement; so it is taken, 2 Pet. i. 10, "If ye do those things ye shall never fall." This and the like places are encouragements to stir them up unto perseverance, and do show, that none have true saving faith, are intrinsically and really in Christ, but those do continue in the word and faith to the end.

Suppose they do continue and not fall from their faith, yet doth not this word, "if," note a conditionality that they may fall from their faith? Conditional suppositions are of things impossible, as well as of possibles. Gal. i. 8, "If we, or an angel from heaven," &c. Matt. xxiv. 24, "If it were possible, they should seduce the very elect;" but they cannot be seduced, and those that have true faith cannot fall away finally. Job xvii. 9, "The righteous shall hold on his way, and he that hath clean hands shall be stronger and stronger." 2 John 2, "The truth dwelleth in us, and shall be with us for ever." And Psal. cxxv. 1, "They that trust in the Lord" are or "shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever." Mount Zion was a great and firm mountain, which could neither move itself, nor be removed by others; whatever rains, floods, winds, earthquakes there were, yet mount Zion stood immovable; and those who trust in God are, and shall be, like mount Zion for ever. They are not like a ship floating upon the water, a tent pitched upon the earth, a house built upon the sand, which may be sunk, pulled up, or blown down, but like a mighty mountain that stands fast, and is immovable for ever. It is not the freedom of their wills can do it, Psal. cxlviii. 14, for "God will be their guide unto death." It is not the strength of corruption can do it, for their faith purifieth their hearts, Acts xv. 9; 1 Pet. i. 22. It is not the world can do it, 1 John v. 4, nor all the power and policy of Satan, Matt. xvi. 18.

"And committeth iniquity." These words were opened in chap. iii. ver. 20, where they were somewhat largely insisted upon: something is now to be given in about them. This phrase, to commit iniquity, is equivalent to and the same with that in the gospel, viz. to commit sin, I John iii. 8; John viii. 34. All men sin, but all do not commit sin; I John iii. 9, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin." Sins of infirmity they have; they sin against the inclination and tendency of the divine nature in them occasionally, from some sudden temptation, but they do not commit iniquity. They that do so are under the influence of the love of sin; there is study, counsel, meditation, purpose, resolution in their sinning. John vii. 34, "Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin;" and what it is to commit sin, he shows, ver. 40, "Ye seek to kill me," your studies, counsels, meditations, purposes, resolutions, endeavours, are upon that. So Jer. ix. 5, "They weary themselves to commit iniquity." When the bent of the heart and head is that way, studying, plotting, and endeavouring to accomplish some evil thing, then iniquity is committed; as here in our prophet, the man is turned from righteousness, and turned to iniquity, the bent and operations of his heart and head are that way. Such men, by the voice of the Spirit, are said to be given to sinning; as Isa. xlvii. 8, "Thou that art given to pleasures." Jer. vi. 13, "Every one is given to covetousness;" their counsels, thoughts, desires, spirits, are taken up about, and work after their pleasures and covetousness. The Lord Christ calls these "they that work iniquity;" Matt. vii. 23; and Luke xiii. 27, "workers of iniquity;" that is the trade they profess, and are skilful in. Samuel calls them, "doers of evil," 2 Sam. iii. 39; Isaiah, evil-doers, chap. ix. 17; Solomon, "wicked doers," Prov. xvii. 4; they do what the wicked man doth, and as he doth.

"According to all the abominations that the wicked man doeth." Of abominations hath been spoken formerly; I pass therefore to the following words.

"All his righteousness that he hath done shall not be mentioned." The Hebrew is, all his righteousnesses, it is plural: whatever good works or righteous acts he hath done, they shall not be mentioned, or remembered.

From these words some gather, that a man pardoned, and justified, may fall into those sins which do cancel his pardon, and reduce him to an unjustified condition, and revive the guilt of his former sins.

This place doth not speak of a man pardoned, and justified by faith in Christ, for such a man, though he may, and sometimes doth fall into foul sins, yet they never prevail so far as to reverse pardon, and reduce to a state of non-justification. Psal. xxxvii. 24, "Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down; for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand." He speaks of a good man pardoned, justified; he may fall, but how far? from pardon, from justification? No, then he should utterly fall, be cast down beneath God's hand; but the text saith, "he shall not be utterly cast down; for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand;" or, as Montanus renders the words, the Lord upholdeth his hands, and he will not let him sink into such a condition. If it were so, then sin should have dominion over him, but, Rom. vi. 14, "Sin shall not have dominion over you," and chap. viii. 2, justified ones are freed "from the law of sin and death;" and ver. 30, the predestinated, called, justified, and glorified ones, are so linked together, that there is no breaking their chain: if they do sin, they have "an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins," I John ii. 1, 2.

Further, know that grace and great sins may stand together; though grace consist not with the dominion, strength, and power of sin, yet flesh and Spirit will be together while we live. David's great sins did not destroy and annihilate his grace: Psal. li. 11, "Take not thy Holy Spirit from me." This psalm was made when Nathan came to him, told him of his sins; and then, even then he had the Spirit of God abiding in him, else he could not have made that psalm, nor would have prayed in that manner: so those places in I Kings xi. 4, 6; Acts xiii. 22, do testify as much. Peter sinned greatly, yet did not he sin away his faith. His sin, and aggravations of it, you have Matt. xxvi. 70, 72, 74; he denied that he knew Christ, did it with an oath, with swearing and cursing; this was dreadful, yet notwithstanding such sins, his faith abode with him: Luke xxii. 32, "I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not." Christ's prayer was heard, therefore his faith could not fail; if it failed totally, as men affirm that hold falling away, then Christ's prayer was not heard, which is contrary to John xi. 42, "I knew that thou hearest me always," and he deceived Peter, telling him his faith should not fail. That faith which is in thee shall not fail, not totally; for that which fails totally, fails finally, there is an end of that, and it must be a new faith, not the same, if there be faith given in after a total failing. Peter's faith therefore did neither fail totally nor finally, but did consist with those great sins and shakings of his. Whatever then the sins of the justified, pardoned ones be, though in their own nature such as are destructive to salvation, yet they do not bring them to an unpardoned and unjustified condition; nor do they revive the guilt of former sins with God: with us they may, but not with him; for whom God pardons, he pardons absolutely, not conditionally; he so pardons sin as he will not remember it again: Isa. xliii. 25, "I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins." See Jer. xxxi. 34; Mic. vii. 18, 19; Heb. viii. 12.

"In his trespass." Hebrew is, שגגתו in his pre-variation. שגג signifies a transgression voluntary and against conscience, with contempt and contumacy, saith Kirker. And it differs from חטא which is, to err, to miss of the mark, to turn aside; and chiefly notes those sins which come from ignorance, and infirmity of the flesh, which are more easily cured; but the trespass here is, of a man turned from his righteousness unto wickedness, and so sins irremediably; for it follows,

"In them shall he die." That is, in the guilt of them shall he die; as Christ told the Jews, John viii. 21, 24, in the guilt of their unbelief they should die; or, for them he shall die: so divers expositors read the words; and by death is not meant only a temporal but an eternal death also.

Obs. 1. There is a righteousness which men may turn from. "When the righteous turneth away from his righteousness." There is an opinionative righteousness, Luke xviii. 9, and Matt. xxiii. 23; many think themselves righteous, and appear so to others: there is also a duty, a moral, or legal righteousness, such as Paul had, Phil. iii. 6; and from these righteousnesses men may and do turn daily. Many attain to a duty righteousness under the gospel, but yet fall off again, as you may see, Matt. xiii. 20—22; I Tim. v. 15; John vi. 66; 2 Pet. ii. 2; I Tim. iv. 1. Take heed therefore of trusting in or to any righteousness of your own. Matt. v. 20, "Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." It is Christ's righteousness only which will let you in thither: lay aside your own righteousness, and labour for that, as Paul did, Phil. iii. 8, 9; and if any fall away, let it not offend and stumble you, knowing it is from their own righteousness, not Christ's. 1 John ii. 19, "They went out from us, but they were not of us, for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us."

Obs. 2. It is not sufficient to begin well unless we proceed: fair beginnings without progress come to nothing. "If a righteous man turn from his righteousness," if he do not go on with perseverance, it will not advantage him, it is not acceptable with God or men. Joash, while Jehoiada lived, did well, that was his glory; but when he was dead, he fell to commit iniquity, that was his shame. Paul blames the Galatians, chap. iii. 3, 4, who were near the tropics: "Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh? Have ye suffered so many things in vain? if it be yet in vain:" it argues great foolishness, and will be accompanied with great loss, if you do go off from your hopeful beginnings. When men withdraw, fall off, it is argument they were never sound. 2 John 9, "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son." If men forsake the ordinances and gospel, whatever they think of themselves, they have neither Father nor Son. Peter thunders against such as fall off from their former professions, 2 Epist. ii. 20—22. Let it not be said of any here, They "did run well," as it is, Gal. v. 7, but let us go on, "run with patience the race that is set before us," Heb. xii. 1; and "so run that we may obtain," 1 Cor. ix. 24. Consider the arguments which lie here in the text, to keep you from falling off, and encourage you to persevere in God.

(1.) If you do turn back you will fall into iniquity; you will commit iniquity, the frame, bent, and set of the heart will be that way; the thoughts, studies, counsels, motions, endeavours, will be towards and in iniquity, you will be an evil-doer, a worker of iniquity.

(2.) He lies obvious to all manner of sin; what will not the man do that turns from his holy profession? He is liable to do according to all the abominations that the wicked man doth: if there be any man more wicked than others, that doth abominable things, such will that man do; and it may be, not some one or two abominations, but all the abominations of the wicked.

(3.) Whatever good he hath formerly done shall be all forgotten: if he have done good to the church and saints, to the state in a military, consultatory, navigatory, or contributory way, if he have done much good to his family, or friends, it shall be all laid aside, buried in the dark, and not once be mentioned into him. What if he have built an hospital, free-school, redeemed captives, maintained many lectures, relieved thousands of poor, done more good than many others? yet if he turn from his good he was doing, God turns also, and will never mind it more.

(4.) He shall die, and that eternally, in his apostasy, and the guilt, not of one sin, but all his sins, shall be upon him.

Ver. 25—29. Yet ye say, The way of the Lord is not equal. Hear now, O house of Israel; Is not my way equal? are not your ways unequal?

When a righteous man turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and dieth in them; for his iniquity that he hath done shall he die. Again, when the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive. Because he considereth, and turneth away from all his transgressions that he hath committed, he shall surely live, he shall not die. Yet saith the house of Israel, The way of the Lord is not equal. O house of Israel, are not my ways equal? are not your ways unequal?

The Jews had complained of the Lord's hard dealing with them in the 2d verse, to which unjust complaint he makes a large answer to the 19th verse, where they reply upon God the same thing still; to which reply he returns a sufficient defence, thoroughly satisfactory to any unprejudiced, and that is in the six verses last opened; but they not taking satisfaction from what the Lord gave in by the prophet here, they come again to charge him.

In these verses you have,

I. Their charge; "The way of the Lord is not equal."

II. God's answer to this charge; where,

1. Attention is called for; "Hear now, O house of Israel."

2. An interrogation made; "Is not my way," &c.

3. A retort of the accusation upon themselves.

4. The probation of the equity of his ways, in ver. 26—28.

5. A repetition of the charge, interrogation, and recrimination, ver. 29.

For the words, something to the opening of them must be spoken.

"The way of the Lord is not equal." The Hebrew word for "not equal" is, אֵין שָׁוִים. The Septuagint puts it actively, κατορθου. The way of the Lord shall not be direct; we look not upon it as so, but as crooked; or, it doth not direct us, but lead us to think hardly of him; his way is such as would make any sort of men judge that he deals unjustly. The most expositors have it as it is here, "the way of the Lord is not equal." The Hebrew verb, שָׁוָה signifies to ponder, weigh, frame artificially; 1 Sam. ii. 3, "By him actions are weighed." The charge here that God's way is not equal, amounts to this; that his way is not well weighed, artificially framed, and exactly done, but irregular, crooked, and sinful: so Munster hath the words, it is not equally carried.

"Way." Hebrew, דָרֶךְ the work, action, dealing, judgments, and proceedings of God with them: not ratio, as Castalio puts it, unless it be taken thus; there is no reason in that which God doth, or he hath no reason for what he doth.

"Is not my way equal?" It is an interrogation, which is more than a plain or naked affirmation; had the Lord said, My way is equal, whatever you think or say, however you carry yourselves, it had not had such weight, efficacy, and strength in it, as now the words contain. "Is not my way equal?" what! not my ways? do you doubt or question the same? If there be not equity in my way, there is none in any way: all ways are rough, crooked, perverse, to my ways; they are weighed exactly, wrought artificially, and done upon such mature, rational, wise, and strong grounds, that neither you nor any have cause to quarrel, and say my ways are not equal; they are equal, yea equity itself.

There are some things which men can catch at to make the ways of God seem unequal, especially these: 1. His punishments. 2. His choices. 3. His distribution of things to men. 4. Disappointments. 5. His rewards.

1. For his punishments. Great was the complaint and charge here in this chapter, that God did punish them for their fathers' sins, to which calumny sufficient hath been spoken. That of Adam's sin, and all his posterity to suffer for it, sticks much with some; that millions should perish upon that account, makes the way of God seem unequal. But upon due consideration it will appear otherwise; for Adam being a public person, represented all mankind; and God covenanted with him, that if he stood and kept that image of God in which he was created, that then his posterity should be like him, and happy with himself; but if he fell, that they should suffer in him, and with him; and what unequalness was here? Adam was the root of all men, had all in his loins; and as all lost the image of God in him falling, Rom. v. 12, 16—19, so all should have had the image of God in him standing.

2. For his choices. God seems to respect persons, because he dealeth unequally with men that are equal. All men are fallen in Adam, equally guilty; yet some of these God chooseth to life, others he leaves and passes by; all are his creatures, and he deals not alike with them. Besides, he chooseth the foolish, the weak, the base and despised, and sets by the wise, mighty, and noble, 1 Cor. i. 26—28; what equity therefore in his ways? yea, oftentimes he takes great, notorious sinners, and those who are less sinful are rejected.

To set all straight here, consider what it is to accept or respect persons. It is to look at men upon external grounds, some outward qualities, and thereupon to do for them, as riches, honour, birth, breeding, power, kindred, family, beauty, strength, condition of life, learning, wisdom, parts, policy, &c. Now the Lord doth not look at any external adjuncts or ornaments in his elections and choices of men; nothing in the creature or from the creature moves him, it is his own good pleasure and will sets him at work to choose any, 2 Tim. i. 9; Eph. i. 5, 11; Rom. ix. 18.

Besides this, know God is not bound to deal equally with men, being equally miserable, for then he must destroy all, or save all, and so have the glory of justice alone, or mercy alone, and not the glory of both; then he should not have made Christ sin for us, 2 Cor. v. 21, but have punished Adam and all those who sinned in him; and what then had become of the world? hell had been full, and heaven empty. And for his choice of any out of those who are equal in sin, or of greater sinners, what doth this show but the freedom of his grace, and his sovereignty over the creatures, to do with them as he pleases? Rom. ix. 21, shall that privilege be denied to God which is given to the potter, and God's way seem more unequal in his dealing with men, than the potter's is with the clay? And whereas God doth take the weak, base, foolish, and despised things of the world, it is argument that he doth not respect persons: he takes those who have nothing in them to move him: should he take the wise, mighty, noble, rich, and learned, then there would be some ground for charging God with acceptation of persons; but examine the Scriptures, and they quit the Lord abundantly from it: Deut. x. 17; 2 Chron. xix. 7; Job xxxiv. 19; 2 Sam. xiv. 14; Acts x. 34; Rom. ii. 11; Gal. ii. 6; Eph. vi. 9; Col. iii. 25; 1 Pet. i. 17; in all these places the Lord is freed from regarding, respecting, or accepting of persons.

3. For his distribution of things, the Lord is accounted to deal unequally. Why, say men of this humour, have many so much, and others so little, or nothing at all? Some have manors, lordships, counties, kingdoms, when others have neither house nor land; some have five talents, others one; some are wise, and others idiots; yea, that which shows the way of the Lord to be unequal, is, wicked men have great estates, high places, they ride, and the righteous go on foot, being poor and low.

For answer to this, know, that the Lord is a free agent, and may give what he pleases, when, where, and in what proportion seems good to himself and to his infinite wisdom. Men blame not Providence, that some trees are stronger, taller, bigger than others: if the vine, olive, and fig tree are lower than cedars and oaks, they are more fruitful, and yield pleasanter fruit. Is the merchant blamable if he fraught one ship with coals, another with corn, one with skins, another with silks, one with boards, another with the richest wines? surely no; and may not the Lord put into these earthen vessels of men what he will, and as much as he will? is he unequal in such dispensations? What if wicked men have much? it is but "thick clay," Hab. ii. 6; "meat that perisheth," John vi. 27; "unrighteous mammon," Luke xvi. 11; "the lust of the flesh, eyes, and pride of life," 1 John ii. 16; "vanity and vexation of spirit," Eccl. i. 14; and that which will not profit in an evil day, Prov. xi. 4. Better things than these are given to the righteous: peace of Christ and God, "which passeth understanding," John xiv. 27; Phil. iv. 7; joy unspeakable and glorious, 1 Pet. i. 8; "precious faith," 2 Pet. i. 1; "the spirit of power, love, and of a sound mind," 2 Tim. i. 7; the "great and precious promises," yea, "all things pertaining to life and godliness," 2 Pet. i. 3, 4. Therefore though they be low in a worldly sense, yet they are lifted up in a spiritual sense, and so highly exalted, that the world is not worthy of them, Heb. xi. 38.

4. His disappointing of men and means which are likeliest to attain unto those ends that are aimed at. Eccl. ix. 11, "The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither bread to the wise, nor riches to men of understanding, nor favour to men of skill." To whom should these be, if not to such? When men use honest means, and with all their might, they are disappointed and discouraged. If the race be to the slow, the battle to the weak, bread to the foolish, riches and favour to the ignorant and unskilful; what equity is there in God's ways, and why should we having talents use them, or using them be disappointed?

This objection seems to strike deep, yet wounds not the honour of the Lord and equity of his ways. For,

(1.) God's ways are not unequal, because we cannot see the reason of them; we are poor purblind creatures, and know little. The Lord's "understanding is infinite," Psal. cxlvii. 5; "there is no searching of it," Isa. xl. 28; his "judgments are a great deep," Psal. xxxvi. 6, there is no fathoming of them; "his ways are past finding out," Rom. xi. 33. It is not safe therefore, because we see not the equity of them, to conclude they are unequal.

(2.) God disappoints men of abilities using lawful and direct means to attain their ends, compounded, because they trust in the means, idolize them, looking at God in the second place, or not at all. Acquaint yourselves with these places, and you will find the reality of it, that men are apt to confide in their own abilities, to trust in an arm of flesh, to applaud their own preparations, and expect much from them; Isa. xxxi. 1—3; Jer. ix. 23; Psal. xx. 7; xlix. 6; Jer. vii. 4; Ezek. xvi. 15; Amos vi. 1; Hos. x. 13. If God disappoint them for their own sin of their expectation, what inequality is there in God's ways?

"The wages of sin is death," death of designs and undertakings, as well as of men the undertakers.

(3.) Let it be granted, that men use their abilities and means conducing to their ends propounded, the right way, without confidence in the same, in subordination unto God; yet may the Lord disappoint men's purposes, contrivances, aims, and ends, and that without sin; for the Lord is above all second causes, his providence rules and runs through all, and doth give check when, where, and how it pleases, to all creature motions; and God will have men to see, that, without concurrence of his providence and assistance, nothing can be done. It is not human dispositions, counsels, preparations, operations, use of any medicines, that can produce any effect without God: Lam. iii. 37, "Who is he that saith, and it cometh to pass, when the Lord commandeth it not?" Let princes, potentates, and powers, consult of, attempt, what they will, if the Lord have not commanded the thing, if he do not co-operate with them in doing the thing, it proves abortive: see 1 Kings xii. 21—23; 2 Chron. xxv. 6, 7; Isa. xxxvii. 33, 34, 35; 2 Kings vii. 5—7; Isa. xix. 3; Job v. 12; Isa. viii. 9, 10. The sum of all which is, that in Psal. xxxiii. 10, "He maketh the devices of the people of none effect." If men have that power to stop and frustrate great undertakings at sea and land, shall it be denied to the great God of heaven and earth? God should not be omnipotent, nor reign in the kingdoms of the earth, if men should carry on their designs, and attain their ends, without him.

(4.) Events and successes of things are hidden in the hand of God; men must, therefore, improve their talents, use all lawful means, for accomplishing those things which are good in the sight of God, and wait upon the Lord for discovery of his mind and good pleasure therein. It argues an ill spirit, to say we shall be disappointed, and therefore we will sit still. How know we what shall be the issue of any undertaking? If one enterprise fail, another may take; if one arrow hit not the mark, a second or third may. If we hide our talents in napkins, we shall be found ill servants; and the command is, " whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might," Eccles. ix. 10. Men must not be idle, but active, and active to the utmost; for, there is a season to every thing, and a time to every purpose, chap. iii. 1. What that season and time will prove, no man knows; you must venture therefore: Eccles. xi. 6, "In the morning sow thy seed; and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good."

(5.) If there be disappointments, God may make them as advantageous to thee as enjoyments, or recompense it in another undertaking. Amaziah hired a hundred thousand mighty men of valour out of Israel for a hundred talents of silver; God sends a prophet, who bids him dismiss them all; this disappointment troubled him; what shall we do for the hundred talents? the prophet answered him, "The Lord is able to give thee much more than this," 2 Chron. xxv. 9. So God is able to make up any disappointment, and more too: what injustice or iniquity then is in his way?

5. The last thing propounded making God's ways to seem unequal, is his rewarding men unproportionably to what they do or suffer. Matt. xx. 12, "These last have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day;" we have been eleven or twelve hours in thy vineyard, we have wrought hard, the work hath been heavy upon our hands; we have endured the heat and scorching of the sun, done ten times as much as those who came in but an hour since; and what justice, what equity is it that they should be equal with us in the pay, that were so unequal in the labour?

To quit the Lord, let us consider only what the parable affords us, and there in is plentiful matter to justify him from wronging those who here did murmur and complain: for,

(1.) Those who were hired earliest in the morning, and so were longest in the vineyard, and at the work, the Lord agreed with them for a penny a day, ver. 2, which he paid them, ver. 10, and therefore did them no wrong, ver. 13.

(2.) Those who were hired at the third, sixth, and ninth hours, ver. 3, and 5, the Lord promised them whatever was right and equal, ver. 9. Whatever they had, then, it was just; and where justice is, there is no ground of complaint. So for the eleventh hour men, they had the same promise; ver. 7, "Go ye also into the vineyard; and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive." How is God's dealing with them unequal and wrong, when he gave them that which was equal and right?

(3.) If the last did not deserve the penny, yet God might give them the penny; and so he did, ver. 14, "I will give unto this last, even as unto thee." God may give what reward he pleases unto those who do him the least and latest service, equalize them with the first, and those who do most, and that without partiality; for it is lawful for him to do what he will with his own, ver. 15.

"Are not your ways unequal?" You observe, complain of my ways, charge them to be unequal; but your ways, if examined, will be found the unequal and unjust ways, the charge you lay upon me will light upon yourselves. The Vulgate reads it, Non magis via vestra prava sunt? you say my ways are not right, but rather, are not your ways wicked and corrupt? Surely they are, you are blind, prejudiced, and cannot judge aright of me and my ways; but I am God, light and no darkness, I know you and your ways, and do assert them to be unequal; you have forsaken me, Isa. i. 4; even me, "the fountain of living waters, and hewed you out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water," Jer. ii. 13; you have filled the temple with idols, and the land with violence, Ezek. viii.; you have devised mischief, and given wicked counsel, chap. xi. 2; driven out the brethren, ver. 15; you have scoffed at my prophets and prophecies, chap. xii. 22; you have hearkened to lying prophets and prophetesses who have daubed with untempered mortar; saddened the hearts of the righteous, and strengthened the hands of the wicked, chap. xiii. 10, 22; you have set up idols in your hearts, chap. xiv. 3; you have justified Sodom and Samaria in all their wickedness, and done more abominably than they, chap. xvi. 46, 47; you have broken covenant with Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, and revolted from him, and sent to Egypt for help, chap. xvii. 15. And now, consider, "are not your ways unequal?" yea, most unequal; had you any cause to charge me? have not I just cause to charge you?

Of the 26th, 27th, and 28th verses, hath been spoken before in the 24th, 21st, and 14th verses of this chapter. Only those words in the 27th verse we shall speak a little unto, namely,

"He shall save his soul alive." The Hebrew is, הוּא יִחַי נַפְשׁוֹ הוּא יִחַי אֶת-נַפְשׁוֹ he shall quicken his own soul. The Septuagint hath it, ἡμεῖς ὑπομένομεν ἑαυτοὺς ἰσχυράμεθα. he hath preserved, or shall preserve, his own soul. This expression appears contradictory to what is recorded in Psal. xxii. 29, where it is said, "none can keep alive his own soul."

1. We must search out the meaning of the Hebrew word; and,

2. See how to reconcile the places.

I. For the word vivificare, or vivificare animam, doth not note always bringing to, or begetting, life in the soul, being dead: for how can that which is dead act and produce life in itself: quickening from death, either natural or spiritual, is from the Lord, John v. 21; Eph. ii. 5. Sometimes it notes sparing of a man's life, 1 Kings xx. 31, "Peradventure he will save thy life;" it is spoken of Benhadad, being in the hands of Ahab: the Hebrew is, אולי יהיה אתה-נפשו, peradventure he will quicken thy soul. Benhadad was alive, but in danger of death: the meaning therefore is, that, if they tried the king of Israel, he might free him from death, spare his life, and that was the quickening of his soul. In this sense it is used, Gen. xix. 19. Sometimes preserving of life; 2 Kings vii. 4, say the lepers, Let us go to the Syrians, if they save us alive, we shall live; the Hebrew is, if they quicken us; if they will give us to eat and drink, our lives will be preserved; and so the word signifies, Gen. vi. 19; xlvii. 25. Sometimes it notes putting into a former condition, as Neh. iv. 2, "Will they revive the stones out of the heaps of the rubbish which are burned?" that is, Will they restore the stones burnt to ashes, and set them in the wall as formerly. Sometimes to comfort; Ezek. xiii. 18, 19, so the false prophets are said to quicken or save souls that came unto them; they, by their feigned and fair words, did beget hopes in them of good things, and good days. The sense we are to take it in here, is the first and second: "He shall quicken his soul, and make it alive;" that is, save it from death, and destruction, which wicked men are subject unto; they do that wickedness which shortens their days. Job xxxvi. 6, "He preserveth not the life of the wicked:" the original is, he shall not quicken the wicked; he shall not deliver him from the death and judgment he hath brought upon himself, he shall die for his sin. But when a man ceases from wickedness, he shall free his soul from death; and that this is the meaning, is clear from the words in ver. 26, viz. "For his iniquity that he hath done shall he die." A righteous man, turning from his righteousness, and sinning, shall die, shall be cut off; a wicked man, turning from his wickedness, he shall save his life, and preserve it in a comfortable condition, he shall surely live. For the place in the psalmist, you may understand it of a natural death; so, "no man can keep alive his own soul," that is, himself. Or thus, he speaks of Christ in the verse, The rich shall worship him, and the poor shall bow before him; and, as it follows, "none can keep alive his own soul;" that is, without him, without Christ, John xv. 5; without him none can free his soul from wrath, and eternal death. And if any will stretch Ezekiel's words so far, that he shall save his soul alive from wrath to come, and the second death, he must take in Christ; it is not man's own acting will do it.

The 29th verse is a repetition of the 25th, which is not in vain; but,

I. Sets out the impiety and impudence of those who charged God's ways to be unequal.

II. How ill God took it at their hands.

III. It tends to a further clearing of God. And,

IV. A fuller conviction of the chargers, that they were guilty: all which I shall pass by, and come unto some few observations.

Obs. 1. Men are apt to question, quarrel, and carp at God, and the ways of God; they say, "The way of the Lord is not equal." Sometimes men charge his ways to be grievous and burdensome: John vi. 60,

"This is an hard saying; who can hear it?" Amos vii. 10, "The land is not able to bear all his words." Sometimes to be dangerous: Prov. xxvi. 13, "The slothful man saith, There is a lion in the streets;" if I walk in God's ways, I shall meet with reproaches, persecutions, temptations, and tempters, and these are all lions. Sometimes to be unprofitable: Mal. iii. 14, "Ye have said, It is vain to serve God: and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hosts?" so, Isa. lviii. 3, "Wherefore have we fasted, and thou seest not? wherefore have we afflicted our soul, and thou takest no knowledge?" all our labour is in vain, there is no benefit in his ways. Sometimes to be lying, and false: Ezek. xii. 22, "The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth;" 2 Pet. iii. 4, "Where is the promise of his coming?" Sometimes to be heretical, Acts xxiv. 13. And here, they are said to be unequal. And not only do men charge God's ways, but himself also; they blush not to speak it out, that God seeth not, that he hath forsaken the earth, Ezek. viii. 12; ix. 9. Some in these days affirm, that God is the author of sin, that it is injustice in him to punish the souls of the wicked in hell, while their bodies lie at rest in the grave; that God doth as much hurt as good, take one time with another. Oh the corruption, pride, impudency, arrogancy of men, that dare sit in judgment upon God and his ways, charge and sentence him and them so unjustly! And that which is to be lamented, good men sometimes have gone too far this way: see Psal. lxxvii. 7—9; lxxiii. 13, 14; Jer. xx. 12; Job x. 3. Let us take heed of this wretched disposition, humble yourselves for failings this way, and learn not to judge of God and his ways by our fancies and shallow capacities; though we cannot see the reason of his proceedings, let us adore him, and justify them; for,

Obs. 2. God's ways are just and straight, whatever men's thoughts are of them. "Are not my ways equal?" his ways are full of equity. Those which seem grievous are pleasant, Prov. iii. 17; those which are thought dangerous are safe; Prov. i. 33, "Who-so hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely, and shall be quiet from fear of evil;" those which are said to be unprofitable, are very profitable, Psal. exix. 56, "This I had, because I kept thy precepts;" Psal. xix. 11, "In keeping of them is great reward;" those which are reckoned false, and heretical, are most true: Psal. exix. 160, "Thy word is true from the beginning;" Ezek. xii. 23, "The days are at hand, and the effect of every vision;" Rev. xv. 3, "Just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints." God is a God that cannot lie, Tit. i. 2; that cannot deal unjustly, that cannot pervert his ways; and therefore he makes challenge to the sons of men to prove it if they can, to produce one instance of that kind if they can: Mic. vi. 3, "What have I done unto thee? and wherein have I wearied thee? testify against me;" let your kings, nobles, princes, prophets, priests, people, their wise men, and ancient ones, come forth, and testify against me if they can. I have been amongst you ever since I brought you out of Egypt, now almost a thousand years, and if there be any unjust act done by me, if I have walked in any unequal way, let me hear of it, spare me not. So Jer. ii. 5, "What iniquity have your fathers found in me?" God put them to it, to make it out if there were any, but none could be found out. It did stand for a truth in David's days, it doth stand now, and must stand for ever: "The Lord is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works," Psal. cxlv. 17.

Obs. 3. When we have a controversy with any, we should not reproach them, be in passion, give them hard language, but gentle, sweet, loving compellations. "Hear now, O house of Israel;" what a loving term was this, what entreaty was here from the great wronged and provoked God! Mic. vi. 2. 3. "The Lord hath a controversy with his people, and he will plead with Israel." But how doth he plead? not in fury, in an upbraiding, reviling way, but in a loving manner, "O my people, what have I done," &c. Men, when they are charged unjustly, and have controversies with others, they forget God, and themselves; they are full of passion, bitterness, reproaching, exasperating, and dangerous expressions; they think they may take liberty to speak and vindicate themselves. True; but not in an unjust way; you must not speak evil of any man: Tit. iii. 2, you must not brawl, you must "be gentle, showing all meekness unto all men." Thus did Christ to a reprobate, Matt. xxii. 12; thus did Michael to the devil, Jude 9.

Obs. 4. When men are once prejudiced against God and his ways, it is hard to unprejudice them. When corrupt opinions are once gotten into the head or heart, they root, take such hold, as it is a great difficulty to get them out again. These Jews said they suffered greatly for the sin of their fathers; that his ways, therefore, were not equal. The Lord spends this chapter upon them, to free them from that prejudice, to extirpate that misconception they had of him and his ways, and to set himself right in their thoughts; but "yet say ye," ver. 19: "yet ye say," ver. 25; "yet saith the house of Israel, The way of the Lord is not equal," ver. 29. The strong arguments the Lord brought did not prevail with them.

No marvel, then, that ministers cannot prevail; people hold fast errors, lies, delusions, and will not let them go. Many wonder that learned men should not convince those who are unlearned, and weak, and take them off from their opinions; but see here, they stood it out against God. Men are very tenacious of erroneous and false tenets, and being by them prejudiced against God, his truth, and ways, they will not let them go, they will rather die in than depart from them. Ahab is prejudiced against Micaiah, and in him against God: "He prophesies no good, but evil, concerning me;" he is a man I hate, 1 Kings xxii. 8. Jehoshaphat, though a good man, and great king, he could not take him off from this prejudice he had against God and the prophet, but he persisted therein to his death.

One Rabbi Akibba, being imprisoned amongst the gentiles, another rabbi brought him as much water as served to quench his thirst, and wash his hands. The keeper of the prison one day poured out half of it. Akibba, seeing not enough water, said to the other rabbi, Give me that to wash my hands; to which he replied, There is not enough to quench your thirst. Akibba answers, It will be better for me to die for thirst, than to despise the tradition of my elders. Burdorf. Synag. Ind.

The Jews are so strongly possessed with untoward opinions, that no reason, no time will keep them off from them. They still think that neither Elias nor Messiah are come, but look for them daily, and that God deals unkindly with them that he doth not send them. They hold that their Messiah shall not come in such a clandestine way as the christians' Messiah did; he shall have a glorious kingdom here on earth, many wives, and leave children to reign after he is dead and gone. The papists retain their opinions about images, transubstantiation, Christ's descent to hell, purgatory, &c. notwithstanding all the protestants' disputes and writings to the contrary; they will die in their errors, rather than leave them to embrace truth.

Obs. 5. Men faulty themselves, are forward to fault others, even those who are most innocent. These Jews, whose ways were most unequal, they spy faults in God, as they conceive, and say his ways are unequal. Jonah, who ran away from God, yet he was wroth with God for sparing Nineveh, and destroying the gourd; he thought the Lord did ill in both, Jonah iv. And so with men; those who are most guilty and obnoxious, they are usually censuring, accusing, disgracing, condemning. Ahab, who had sold himself to do wickedly, set up idols, and done more abominably than others, yet he sets upon Elijah, and accuses him to be the troubler of Israel, 1 Kings xviii. 17. The scribes and Pharisees, who were very wicked and notorious hypocrites, were most forward to charge Christ.

Ver. 30—32. Therefore I will judge you, O house of Israel, every one according to his ways, saith the Lord God. Repent, and turn yourselves from all your transgressions; so iniquity shall not be your ruin. Cast away from you all your transgressions, whereby ye have transgressed; and make you a new heart and a new spirit: for why will ye die, O house of Israel? For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God: wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye.

In these three verses we have the second general part of the chapter, which is an exhortation to repentance.

The particulars contained in the words are,

I. A conclusion drawn up from the former exposition; ver. 30, "Therefore I will judge you," &c.

II. The exhortation itself, which is variously set down and under divers expressions.

1. "Repent, and turn yourselves from all your," &c.
2. "Cast away from you all your transgressions."
3. "Make you a new heart and a new spirit."
4. "Turn yourselves."

III. The reasons hereof, which are three.

1. Is, from the benefit of so doing; "so iniquity shall not be your ruin," ver. 30; ye shall live, ver. 32.

2. Is, from the danger, if they do it not; ver. 31, "Why will ye die?"

3. Is, from the disposition of the Lord; he hath no pleasure in the death of a sinner.

Ver. 30. "Therefore I will judge you, O house of Israel, every one according to his ways." You have charged my ways not to be equal, that I have wronged you, and herein you have condemned me, and justified yourselves; but I find mine own ways equal and straight, your ways unequal and crooked. "Therefore I will judge you," even "every one according to his ways;" I will recompense upon you your deserts, and make you experimentally to see and say, that my ways are equal, that you suffer for your own sins, and not the sins of others. The Hebrew is, Therefore every one according to his ways I will judge you; that is, I will so judge you, as I will judge every one of you, not in general, but man by man. Of judging men according to their ways hath formerly been spoken, chap. vii. 3, 8, 27; only take this, That whatever thoughts men have of God's ways and their own, the Lord will judge righteously, and make it appear to the world, and to the consciences of those that misjudged him, that his ways are equal, and himself just in his proceedings with them, and in the government of the world; he will stop the mouth of iniquity itself, and overcome in judgment.

“Repent, and turn yourselves.” Of these words was spoken, chap. xiv. 6, where the same words are, “Repent, and turn yourselves.”

“Yourselves” is not in the original; is, instead thereof, have, others; Repent, and turn others. So the word hashivu is, make to convert, whether themselves or others. When men are once returned from their wicked ways, they will labour to bring others out of them; they will use what means they can to make others partake of their grace and mercy, especially those they have been instruments to draw to sin.

This turning themselves is called, in 1 Kings viii. 47, and 2 Chron. vi. 37, bethinking themselves; if they shall return to their heart, or, bring back to their heart. When men go from God and his ways, they are inconsiderate, without heart and understanding; Prov. xi. 12, he is destitute of heart; but when they repent and turn to him, they come to themselves, Luke xv. 17; then they have hearts, then they understand.

Sometimes repenting and turning is given to man, as here, and in sundry other places; sometimes unto God, as Acts iii. 26; 2 Tim. ii. 25; Jer. xxxi. 18: sometimes to the instrument, or medium, God useth, as Acts xxvi. 18; xix. 26; Luke i. 17; which is done to provoke man to use those talents and abilities God hath given him to further his own good, as also to beget a due esteem of, and respect to, those God employs in such a work; and especially, to cause men to look unto God, who works both the will and the deed, Phil. ii. 13.

“So iniquity shall not be your ruin.” The Hebrew for ruin is, מכשול which is, a scandal, an offence, that which causeth a man to stumble, to fall. מכשול is an axe, or hatchet, from כשל to weaken and cause to fall. Scandals are axes, hatchets, which do weaken men, and cause them to fall.

Ver. 31. “Cast away from you all your transgressions.” You hug and hold them fast, but cast them away. השליכי cast off, cast out, cast away: ἀποποιήσατε, fling away, rid yourselves of them. This casting away of sin doth import more than cessation from sin, or caution of sin; men may cease from sin, take heed of sin, and yet keep much sin in their bosoms. You may mind such expressions as these in the book of God, as, hiding, and, keeping of sin, Job xx. 12, 13; cleaving unto sin, 2 Kings iii. 3; taking hold of sin, 1 Kings ix. 9; holding it fast, Jer. viii. 5; setting up sin in the heart, Ezek. xiv. 3; gathering iniquity to itself, Psal. xli. 6; regarding of it, Psal. lxxvi. 18; setting the heart upon it, Hos. iv. 8; or, lifting up the soul unto it, as the Hebrew sounds. Now casting away of transgressions is contrary to all these; he who doth so, lifts not up his heart to, sets it not upon, sin, regards it not, gathers it not, nor sets it up, he holds it not fast, cleaves not to it, keeps it not, nor takes any hold of it, but to throw it out, to cast it away. Answerable unto which is what you have in Heb. xii. 1, lay aside every burden; “all filthiness, and superfluity of naughtiness,” James i. 21; and that in 2 Tim. ii. 21, purging a man’s self; likewise what you have, Eph. iv. 22, “Put off the old man;” and Matt. vii. 5, “Cast out the beam out of thine own eye.” It is to lay aside, purge out, and put off, and cast forth all sin. There are three things implied in casting away sin.

1. A dissolving of that union which is between sin and the soul. Men and their sins are strongly united together; they love to oppress, Hos. xii. 7; they love flagns of wiae, chap. iii. 1; and it is hard to divide between the drunkard and his drunkenness, Prov. xxiii. 35; they love pleasures more than God, 2 Tim. iii. 4. You may sooner pluck men from God than from their sins. Christ tells you, that men’s lusts are their eyes, hands, feet, Matt. xviii. 8, 9. Paul calls them “members,” Col. iii. 5; as members have union with the body, so men’s lust and sins have union with them. Now, when sin comes to be cast away, there must be a breach of this union; until that be, there can be no separation of sin from us. Therefore the Lord calls upon men to rend their hearts, Joel ii. 13; to break up their fallow ground, and not to sow among thorns, Jer. iv. 3; there must be a breach and separation between the earth and thorns, before thorns can be cast away.

2. When the union between sin and a man’s heart is broken, he loathes and abhors his sins, and himself for them; Ezek. xxxvi. 31, they loathed themselves for their iniquities; much more, then, did they loathe their iniquities: Psal. exix. 163, “I hate and abhor lying:” he saw matter of detestation and abhorrency in it.

3. Casting out, and away, that which is loathed and detested. Isa. xxx. 21, 22, when their ears heard the word, “this is the way, walk ye in it,” and so were taken off from false ways, then they should cast away the coverings and ornaments of their idols; they should look upon them as loathsome things, and cast them away.

Men cast away things that are either, (1.) Unprofitable and useless; (2.) Hurtful and dangerous; (3.) Loathsome and grievous. Sin is all these.

(1.) It is unprofitable and useless: see Jer. xii. 13; xvi. 19; Prov. v. 10; x. 2. Wickedness hath its treasures, but they are unprofitable; Eph. v. 11, works of darkness are unfruitful: the forbidden tree yields no good fruit; Rom. vi. 21, “What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed.” It is not of God, it hath no good in it, Rom. vii. 18.

(2.) Hurtful and dangerous. Idolatry hurts, Jer. vii. 6; murder hurts, Gen. iv. 23; wantonness and uncleanness wounds, Prov. vii. 26; covetousness hurts, Eccles. v. 13; 1 Tim. vi. 9, 10, it pierces men through, it drowns them in destruction and perdition; lying, fearfulness, unbelief, hurt, Rev. xxi. 8. Nothing harms like unto sin, no poison, no weapon can pain, torment the body, as sin doth the conscience; “A wounded spirit who can bear?” Prov. xviii. 14; it is “more bitter than death,” Eccles. vii. 26.

(3.) It is loathsome and grievous. It is likened to mire and dirt, Isa. lvii. 20; to vomit, 2 Pet. ii. 22; is filth, and filthiness, Isa. iv. 4; 2 Cor. vii. 1; it is corruption, pollution, 2 Pet. i. 4; ii. 20; it is abomination, Prov. xv. 26; it is rebellion, and grievous revolting, Prov. xvii. 11; Jer. vi. 28; it is a detestable thing, Ezek. xi. 21. Men’s righteousnesses are as filthy rags, Isa. lxiv. 6. What, then, are their sins? they are the quintessence of filthiness, exceeding filthinesses.

“Make you a new heart and a new spirit.” These words are made use of by the remonstrants to prove, that the Lord, in conversion of a sinner, doth not use such efficacy of grace as man cannot resist; as also to show, that men not converted have internal grace absolutely sufficient for conversion, or equal to that by which others are converted. Bellarmine brings these words to prove the freedom of will in man.

These words do not favour or countenance such opinions, so far as is thought, if rightly understood. It is a rule in theology, that active verbs are given to those things which do not properly, and by immediate influx, do that which the verbs do signify. And this is frequent in the business of man's salvation, where that is attributed to man which is peculiar to God; and he instanceth in this place, "Make you a new heart and a new spirit." This, saith he, is the work of God alone, who by his saving word creates "a new heart and a new spirit" in men; and in other scriptures you shall find it given to the Lord: Psal. li. 10; Jer. xxxi. 33; xxxii. 39; Ezek. xxxvi. 26; xi. 19, where was spoken of "a new spirit," and somewhat about man's liberty and power. God said to Moses, Exod. xiv. 16, "Lift up thy rod, stretch out thine hand over the sea, and divide it:" had Moses power to divide the sea? no, but because there was a certain concurrence of Moses using the rod according to direction, therefore it is attributed to Moses, which was the work of God alone: ver. 21, it is given to God, for when Moses stretched out his hand, it is said, "The Lord caused the sea to go back." So making "a new heart and a new spirit," is given to man, because of that concurrence of man in using the means appointed of the Lord; but when the new heart and spirit are wrought, they are the work of the Lord, as appears, Phil. ii. 13; Eph. ii. 10. Thus we are to understand all those places which put so much upon a man, as to believe, 1 John iii. 2; to repent, Acts ii. 38; to put off the old man, to be renewed in the spirit of your minds, to put on the new man, Eph. iv. 22—24; to cleanse ourselves from all pollution of flesh and spirit, 2 Cor. vii. 1; to lay hold upon eternal life, 1 Tim. vi. 12; to be filled with the Spirit, Eph. v. 18. In these, and the like places, is nothing given to the power of man, if rightly understood; but man is commanded to apply himself to those means by which God works faith, repentance, holiness, salvation, and conveys the Spirit.

These words, then, do not hinder but that the Lord may, and doth, work efficaciously in the conversion of a sinner. God bids men use means, wait upon him, and he will work powerfully in them by his grace and Spirit; and that the Lord doth work powerfully, see Eph. i. 19; Col. ii. 12, 13; Deut. xxx. 6; John vi. 37.

For man's having internal sufficient grace to conversion, it is strange divinity; it argues a man is converted, and yet unconverted. If a man have grace, he is converted; but you must know that Arminians make reason, understanding, to be grace, and the first grace; but, John iii. 6, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh." And take the excellency of the flesh, even the wisdom of it; Rom. viii. 7, it is "enmity to God; it is not subject to the law of God, neither can be." If men have power and grace sufficient to convert themselves, to make them new hearts and new spirits, why should it be as impossible for men accustomed to do evil to do good, as for an Egyptian to change his skin, or a leopard his spots? Jer. xliii. 23: why is it not easy? what is hard to him who hath power and will? why cannot he be subject to the law of God? why cannot he add a cubit to his stature? Luke xii. 25: surely reason is not grace. The Athenians, who had reason, mocked at Christ and the resurrection, Acts xvii. 18, 32, which if gracious, they would not have done. All men have reason, but all have not grace. "Not many wise men after the flesh are called" or chosen, 1 Cor. i. 26. Had men power in themselves they would boast; that men may not boast, it is of God, ver. 29, 30; it is of grace, not of ourselves, our strength, reason, abilities, Eph. ii. 8, 9.

The ground that papists, Arminians, and others, go upon, is, that commands suppose power in men to do what is commanded. This ground is too weak to build their structure upon. For what man, ever since Adam's fall, had power to keep the law exactly?

Had men been able to have done it, the law would have saved them: Rom. viii. 3, "What the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending," &c.; Gal. iii. 21, "If there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law." Why could not the law give life? because man had not power, strength, to keep it; God may command that which men have not power to do,

1. To break the strength of man's confidence. Men, through apprehension of their abilities, stand much upon doing, and think they can perform much: "What shall I do to be saved?" God may command that now which is beyond man's strength, that so he may know his own weakness.

2. To cause us to sue to him for help to do what is commanded. When Nebuchadnezzar commanded the wise men to tell him his dream, which was impossible, Daniel sought to God for the discovery of the thing, and obtained it: see Dan. ii. 17—19. God commands what we cannot do, that we may know what to ask. If any thing be hard, impossible, let us not stick in ourselves, but run to God.

3. The Lord may do it, because he can give what he commands. Ezek. xi. 4, God bids Ezekiel prophesy; he could not do it unless God gave him the spirit of prophecy; therefore in the next verse it is said, "The Spirit of the Lord fell upon him." Christ saith to Lazarus, "Come forth," John xi. 43; he had no power to do it but he who commanded, accompanied his word with power; and, John v. 25, "The hour is coming, and now is, that the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live."

The meaning then of these words, "Make you a new heart and a new spirit," is, be not negligent and wanting to yourselves, but use the means appointed of God, give diligence to obtain a change of your hearts and spirits, to get repentance, and bring forth fruit worthy thereof.

"For why will ye die?" Hebrew is, and why will ye die? In the former, these, and the subsequent words, God speaks after the manner of men, as a father doth to his untoward children, or as a minister to a perishing people.

Ver. 32, "For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth." Of these words was spoken, ver. 23. I shall give you some few observations, and so end this chapter.

Obs. 1. That repentance is profitable to man, and pleasing to God. "Repent and turn, so iniquity shall not be your ruin: why will ye die?" I have no pleasure in your death, but I have pleasure in your repentance and life. When man hath undone himself, repentance is his setting up again; it is safe landing after shipwreck. The prodigal, repenting and turning, did advantage himself, and please his father, Luke xv. 18—21. "Except ye repent ye shall all perish," saith Christ, Luke xliii. 3, 5; repentance preserves from destruction, and hath that good in it. See Acts ii. 38; iii. 19; Rev. ii. 5, 16; 2 Cor. vii. 9, 10; Acts xi. 18. And that it greatly pleases God, the parable of the lost sheep showeth; Luke xv. 7, there is more joy in heaven for the repentance of one sinner, than for the righteousness of ninety-nine just persons. Sacrifices under the law were pleasing to God; a repentant broken heart is instead of all sacrifices, Psal. li. 17; God will not, he cannot, despise it; he will look to it, Isa. lxvi. 2; he will dwell in it, Isa. lvii. 15.

Obs. 2. Sin is of a ruining nature. "So iniquity shall not be your ruin." Sin, in itself, is destructive. What is said of time, it is edax rerum, a consumer of all things, is verified of sin: nay, more than time could do, sin hath done. Time could never have ruined angels; sin did it, sin threw them out of heaven, Adam out of paradise; sin ruined the old world, Gen. vi. 5, 7; it ruined Sodom and Gomorrah, Gen. xix. 13; the cry of their sins was great, and therefore the angels destroyed it. Wars are ruining and desolating things, so is the plague, and famine; but sin brings them all, Ezek. xiv. 13; xvii. 19; and is more ruining than they all. Sin ruins the name, Prov. vi. 33; it ruins the conscience, and comforts of it, Psal. xxxii. 3; li. 8; it ruins the soul, 1 Pet. ii. 11; 1 Tim. v. 6. These things, the name, conscience, comforts, soul; sword, famine, plague, cannot reach; they may, and do, oft ruin our outward comforts, our flesh, our lives, but further they go not: sin ruins both these and the other. Sin is wonderfully malignant, and proves destructive to them that deal with it. Gideon's ephod was a snare to him and to his house, it ruined him and his, Judg. viii. 27. It was their sin which laid waste the commonwealth of Israel, which brought the slaughtering angels, Ezek. ix, and kindled the fire in the temple and city, and laid all waste.

Obs. 3. That man who in truth comes unto God, must come off from all sin, he must not stick in any, "Repent, and turn from all your transgressions;" cast away all your transgressions; you must not like any, but loathe all, not keep any, but cast out all: if you cast out a thousand, and retain but one, it is no sound coming to God, no true repentance, or turning. Herod turned from many evils, but would not turn from his Herodias, Mark vi. 18—20, and all his turning was nothing. Judas, his life was fair as the other apostles, no visible sin appeared, only he had a covetous heart within; and because that golden devil was not cast out, he was cast into hell: his apostleship, preaching, working of miracles, hearing of Christ, conversing with him, did him no good. Let men go as far as they will in repentance, turning from, and casting off of sin, if it be not from all, it is from none; for if any one sin be kept and lived in, the union between sin and the soul is not dissolved, and so there is no true hatred, no real ejection of sin. If a man did hate sin, and cast it out because it is sin, he would do so by all sin, because there is the same reason for all as for one, and for one as for all. Let us look narrowly to it, that we do not harbour nor spare any sin in our bosoms. Saul spared Agag, and the witch of Endor, whom he should have destroyed, and they were his ruin.

Obs. 4. That for the encouragement of men to use the means, and wait upon God in them, he honours them with the doing of that which is his prerogative and peculiar work. "Make you a new heart and a new spirit, turn yourselves;" these are acts which none but the Lord can do. A new heart, a new spirit, is the work of divine grace. Because there is some effort of man, therefore he is said to do that which the power of divine grace principally effects, Sanct. in locum. This is very fair for a Jesuit: but the apostle goeth further, Phil. ii. 13, the will and the deed are of the Lord. Let us be encouraged, therefore, to be diligent in the use of all means, and that constantly. There may be "a new heart and a new spirit" given in from God, his mighty power put forth to work these, and yet be attributed to us, that we have made ourselves new hearts and new spirits.

Obs. 5. The Lord would not have men run on in sinful courses, and die, but turn, and live; he hath not pleasure in their perishing, but in their living. "Why will ye die?" &c. In this question secretly is locked up an answer to all they could object; as,

(1.) We bear the iniquity of our fathers, who sinned greatly, and therefore we must die. No, you shall not die upon that account; ver. 20. "The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father."

(2.) Our sins are great and grievous. What then? "Why will ye die?" "Come, let us reason together: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

(3.) We have nothing to bring if we come to thee. What then? "Why will ye die?" If you have no money, yet I have mercy, and mercy enough; a sea of mercy, a heaven of mercy, a world of mercy: "Come, buy without money," Isa. lv. 1; I am a God of mercy, delight to show mercy.

(4.) But thou biddest us repent, turn, cast away all our sins, make us new hearts, &c.; we cannot do these things. What then? If you will but look unto me, I can give you what is commanded, it is my way of dealing with sinners; I can give you repentance, power to cast out all your sins; I can give you a new heart, a new spirit; "why will?" &c. Isa. xlv. 22. "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth."

(5.) Thou hast forsaken us, and left us to our own lusts. But now I sue unto you, call upon you, tender life unto you, hold out my hand, and am desirous to take you in; "why will ye die, O house of Israel?"

(6.) Thou hast threatened our destruction by the prophets, and thy threats must take place; thou wilt make good thy word, take pleasure in fulfilling it, and destroying us. What if my threats be out? so they were against Nineveh; they repented of their sins, I repented of my threats: I do not take pleasure in executing of judgments, nor in your death, and "why will ye die?"

(7.) We are Jews, have apostatized from our profession, from what the prophets taught us; we have lived long in such a way, it is too late now to think of turning. No, not so; turn and live, yet there is mercy.

CHAPTER XIX.

Ver. 1—9. Moreover take thou up a lamentation for the princes of Israel, and say, What is thy mother? A lioness: she lay down among lions, she nourished her whelps among young lions. And she brought up one of her whelps: it became a young lion, and it learned to catch the prey; it devoured men. The nations also heard of him; he was taken in their pit, and they brought him with chains unto the land of Egypt. Now when she saw that she had waited, and her hope was lost, then she took another of her whelps, and made him a young lion. And he went up and down among the lions, he became a young lion, and learned to catch the prey, and devoured men. And he knew their desolate palaces, and he laid waste their cities; and the land was desolate, and the fulness thereof, by the noise of his roaring. Then the nations set against him on every side from the provinces, and spread their net over him: he was taken in their pit. And they put him in ward in chains, and brought him to the king of Babylon: they brought him into holds, that his voice should no more be heard upon the mountains of Israel.

This chapter is a chapter of lamentation,

1. For the princes of Israel.

11. For Jerusalem, or the kingdom of Judah.

The lamentation for the princes of Israel is set out under the parable, or similitude, of a lion's whelps, from ver. 1 to ver. 10. The lamentation for Jerusalem is, from ver. 10 to the end of the chapter, held out under the resemblance of a vine.

As for the first part, the lamentation for the princes of Israel, we may consider therein,

1. The lamentation, commanded in ver. 1.

2. The mother of the whelps, or the lioness, and what she did, ver. 2, 3.

3. The advance of the whelps, their carriage, ruin, and punishment, in the 3d, 4th, and rest of the verses.

Ver. 1. "Take thou up a lamentation." The Lord here speaks to the prophet to put himself into a mourning posture, and to bewail the conditions of the kings of Israel. The word for lamentation is קנה the same that Jeremiah useth in the title of his book called The Lamentations, of which was spoken chap. ii. 10.

"The princes of Israel." These were Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah, who were kings of Judah, as appears, 2 Kings xxiii. 31, 34; xxiv. 8, 18. They are called the princes of Israel, because that is a comprehensive term, and included Judah in it, which these were kings of, and not of Samaria, for the ten tribes and their kings were captivated before.

Ver. 2. "What is thy mother?" Because it is not said, What is your mother? some think he means the prophet's mother; but it is said "thy mother," in reference to each prince. Jehoahaz, "what is thy mother?" Jehoiakim, "what is thy mother?" and so of Jehoiachin and Zedekiah. By "mother" here is meant Jerusalem, and the kingdom of Judah. Great cities and kingdoms are in a metaphorical sense called mothers, they bring forth kings, they elect, crown, and set them up to rule.

"A lioness." Jerusalem is likened unto a lioness in several respects.

1. A lion or lioness is a noble and kingly creature, and so was Jerusalem a noble and royal city. The ensign of the tribe of Judah was a lion. Old Jacob, Gen. xlix. 9, said, "Judah is a lion's whelp;" that tribe was the royal tribe, and the chief city in it was Jerusalem.

2. A lioness is strong: Judg. xiv. 18, "What is stronger than a lion?" see Prov. xxx. 30. Jerusalem was a strong city, Psal. xxxi. 21; cxv. 2.

3. A lioness is venturous and bold, Prov. xxviii. 1; 2 Sam. xvii. 10; so Jerusalem was a bold, daring city; the people of it were impudent and provoking, Isa. iii. 8; lxx. 3; Ezek. iii. 7, provoked him to his face.

4. The lioness is cruel and bloody, Psal. vii. 2; Isa. xxxviii. 13; so Jerusalem was an oppressing city, Zeph. iii. 1, 3; a bloody city, Ezek. xxiv. 6.

5. Libidinous, mingles with the leopard and hyena; so Jerusalem mingled herself with other nations, Ezek. xvi. 26, 28. She was not humane, but lionish in her manners; no piety, justice, humanity were in her; she was brutish.

"She lay down among lions." By lions here, are meant the nations, or kings of the nations, round about, who were profane, barbarous, and cruel; and Jerusalem was like unto them; and therefore it is said to lie down among lions, as one lion doth among others without fear. The gentiles made no conscience of sin, but did whatever they liked or lusted after: and Jerusalem had cast off the worship and ways of God, following their own wills and lusts.

"She nourished her whelps." Hebrew is, she multiplied whelps; in a little time she had many princes, which were to succeed in the kingdom. These whelps were Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah, whom he calls "whelps."

1. Because they were young when they began to reign, 2 Kings xxiii. 31, 36; xxiv. 8, 18. One was but eighteen, another twenty-one, a third twenty-three, and the eldest was but twenty-five when he came to the throne.

2. Because they were little, in comparison of former kings. David and Solomon were great lions, in respect of them; the kingdom then flourished, but now it was declining; they reigned long, these but a little while.

3. "Whelps," because of their disposition and propensity to do like lions and lionesses: there is the same nature in the whelps as is in the dams; if the lion be fierce, cruel, the whelps will be so.

"Among young lions." Hebrew, in the midst of young lions. כפיר is a young lion that begins to prey. Whether we take them for the princes of the nations, or the princes and nobles of Jerusalem, (for there were princes who were not of the royal family, 2 Kings xxiv. 12; 2 Chron. xxiv. 17,) they were brought up after their manners and fashions.

Ver. 3. "And she brought up one of her whelps." The Hebrew is, she made one of her whelps to come up; that is, to come up into the throne, and to be king. This was Jehoahaz, whom after the death of Josiah, the people took and made king in his father's stead in Jerusalem, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 1; 2 Kings xxiii. 30; Jerusalem, and the people of the land, joined together to make him king: Jehoahaz was the whelp of this lioness.

"It became a young lion." Being made king, he reigned like a lion, yea, a young lion. He was tyrannical, and tyrants are compared to lions, and you may see a true picture of them in the lion.

1. Their faces are stern, and voices terrible. Amos iii. 8, "The lion hath roared; who will not fear?" It is said of the Gadite soldiers, they had faces like the faces of lions, 1 Chron. xii. 8, terrible. Such are tyrants, their countenances and voices trouble and disturb much. When they send out their edicts, proclamations, commands, which are their voices, and have the effigies of their grim countenances within them, how do they shake cities, kingdoms, nations! When Ahasuerus' decree was given forth for the destruction of the Jews, it is said, "the city Shushan was perplexed," Esth. iii. 15; so all the provinces where the sound of it was. Tyrants roar like lions, they strike terror into all: Prov. xix. 12, "The king's wrath," &c.: xx. 2, "The fear of a king is as the roaring of a lion."

2. As they are roaring, so ravening. They are greedy of their prey: Psal. xvii. 12, "Like as a lion that is greedy of his prey." See Psal. xxii. 13; Lam. iii. 10. Psal. civ. 21, they roar after their prey, and are hardly satisfied; Job xxxviii. 39, "Wilt thou fill the appetite of the young lions?" So wicked rulers and tyrannical princes are ravenous and greedy of the prey. What a strong appetite had Ahab to Naboth's vineyard! he was sick, and refuses to eat, if he have not that morsel to feed upon, 1 Kings xxi. 2, 4. When the Jews would have a king, the Lord told them what a ravenous creature he would be, 1 Sam. viii. 11—17. It is said of Saul, their first king, that he did "lly upon the spoil," chap. xv. 19. What a vast appetite had the king of Babylon, who "enlarged his desire as hell and death, and could not be satisfied, but gathered unto him all nations, and heaped unto him all people," Hab. ii. 5. That princes are greedy of their prey, see Zeph. iii. 3; Ezek. xxii. 27; Micah iii. 11. Caligula, his impositions, tributes, and new devised exactions, were innumerable, Herb. 129.

3. They are vigilant and subtle, lying in wait to get their prey. They sleep little, and when they sleep it is with open eyes; they mind their prey much, and are cunning to catch it. Psal. xvii. 12. "The young lion lurks in secret places;" he hides himself, and when the prey comes near, he suddenly surprises the same. Our prophet saith here of the young whelp, "it learned to catch the prey;" it learned the cunning of the old lions.

Basil saith, they use to lie down flat upon their bellies, to counterfeit sleep, not to stir, and to do as cats when they catch birds. Another cunning device the lions have is, when the prey is too swift for them, and so likely to save itself by flight, they roar grievously, which so affrightens the creatures fleeing from them, that their spirits faint, are forced to stand still, and become a prey: he also hides his claws, and covers his steps with dust by his tail, that he may not be discovered.

So tyrannical princes are watchful and cunning to catch their prey. Saul had many stratagems and devices to catch David. What a cunning plot had Jezebel to catch Naboth! The policies of tyrants are infinite to catch the people, and make a prey of them.

4. They are proud and stately. They go alone, they eat not with the lionesses, much less with other creatures; they will not stoop to, or turn away for any, Prov. xxx. 30; they do what they list: such are tyrants. You may see the pride and arrogancy of Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. iv. 30. The prince of Tyre said he was a god, and sat "in the seat of God," Ezek. xxviii. 2. "Who is the Lord, that I should obey his voice?" said Pharaoh, Exod. v. 2.

Alexander would be accounted and worshipped as the son of Jupiter Ammon; Caligula, Domitian, Heliogabalus, would be worshipped as gods.

5. They are cruel, bloody, devouring creatures. Nahum ii. 12, "The lion did tear in pieces, and strangled for his lionesses." They have terrible claws, sharp teeth, and are mighty to crush and break all the bones. The devil is called a devouring lion, 1 Pet. v. 8, because he destroys as lions do: 2 Kings xvii. 26, the lions slew them. Such are tyrannical princes: Prov. xxvii. 15, "As a roaring lion, and a ranging bear; so is a wicked ruler over the poor people." Like as lions and bears in a forest do catch, crush, and devour the sheep, lambs, kids, comies, and whatever they find preyable, so wicked rulers deal with the people: Mic. iii. 1—3, the princes of Israel plucked off the skin and flesh of God's people from their bones, brake and chopped them in pieces as for the pot: when they kill men, they think it lawful, not sinful. Our prophet tells you, that this lion, Jehoahaz, devoured men, he "learned to catch the prey, and devoured men."

History tells us of cannibals, men-eaters; such are tyrannical governors, they feed upon men. Athaliah devoured all the royal seed at a meal, 2 Chron. xxii. Jezebel ate up Naboth at a fast, 1 Kings xxi. What a multitude of children did Herod devour at once in Bethlehem! Matt. ii. 16. What tearing, flesh-eating, bone-breaking was there, when that roaring cruel lion Manasseh filled Jerusalem with innocent blood! 2 Kings xxi. 16. What lions were in the time of the ten persecutions! Christiani ad leones, The christians to the lions.

6. It is dangerous to meddle with lions: Numb. xxiv. 9, "He lay down as a lion, and as a great lion: who shall stir him up?" Lions, if offended and provoked, are revengeful. Ælian tells of a bear that came into a lion's den, and bit the whelps she found there. The lion returning, the bear, to shift for herself, got up into a high tree; the lioness watched at the foot of the tree: the lion ranged abroad in the woods, and meets with a man that had an axe, and used to fell trees; this man the lion brings to the den, showed him the wounded whelps, directs him to the tree where the bear was, which he cut down: the bear, being torn in pieces, the man was safely dismissed. In the hunting or taking of lions, the lion observes who wounds him, and on him, if possible, he will be revenged. Such are tyrannical men: it is ill meddling with them; if they be roused, or any of theirs wronged a little, they will remember and revenge.

Ver. 4. "The nations also heard of him." After the death of Josiah by Pharaoh-necho, king of Egypt, Jehoahaz was by the Jews set up king; but the Egyptians thought themselves wronged, that they had no hand in disposing of that kingdom, and placing a king over it; which it is probable the Jews apprehended, in that they passed by Eliakim, who was elder, and set up Jehoahaz, who was younger; as is evident, if you compare 2 Kings xxiii. 31, with ver. 36. They judged this doubtless of a more warlike and lionlike spirit, and so fitter to encounter the Egyptians, if they should assault them; which it is conceived they did, for he reigned but three months and then was taken.

"He was taken in their pit." The word for pit is, shachath, which signifies, a net, or, a pit, and is from שָׁחַת to corrupt, or kill, because pits and nets are to take creatures, and so tend to their killing and corruption. One way of taking lions was, to observe their haunts, and in that way they used to dig a round pit, leaving a pillar of earth in the midst of it, upon which they tied a lamb, covering the pit with boughs; the hungry lamb, bleating in the evening, invites the lion to supper, who hastening thercunto, falls into the pit, and so is taken. Ezekiel alluding hercunto, saith, Jehoahaz was taken in their pit. Some think he was taken by a wife; that Pharaoh sent for him, under pretence of friendship and kindness, and then when he had him in his power, kept him. Others, that there was a bloody battle between Jehoahaz and Pharaoh, in which though he was taken, yet not without great loss to the Egyptians; therefore the Vulgate renders these words, Non absque vulneribus sui ceperunt eum, They took him, but not without wounds.

"They brought him with chains," &c. The Hebrew is, בַּרְזֵיִם with hooks. Chains are hooky things linked together; the word "chains" here, in 2 Kings xxiii. 33, is "bands:" Pharaoh-necho put him in bands; he was carried bound to Egypt.

Obs. 1. It is matter to be lamented, when princes are wicked, tyrannical, and ruin themselves and the people they are set over. "Take thou up a lamentation for the princes of Israel;" so Ezek. xxxii. 2, "Take up a lamentation for Pharaoh king of Egypt, and say unto him, Thou art like a young lion of the nations, and thou art as a whale in the seas," &c. When princes, rulers, are roaring and ravening lions, when they are cunning and cruel, and take such courses as tend to the ruin of thselves and others, it is a great and just ground for lamentation. Solomon saith, there is a time to mourn, Eccl. iii. 4; and if any be a fit time to mourn, it is when it goes ill with the church of God, with the state, when rulers are lions, and do like lions. We mourn when some personal or family evil is upon us, but public evils are neglected. Evil rulers, evil princes, evil magistrates are public evils, like so many lions and wild beasts. Where such are, there is a house of mourning, and let the living lay it to heart. I fear we have lions among us, for whom we may justly take up a lamentation.

Obs. 2. That those princes who oppress their people and ruin their kingdoms, are ungrateful and unnatural, for their people and kingdoms are their mothers. "What is thy mother?" Jerusalem, Judea is thy mother. It is the people chooses them, and so brings them forth, sets them up: 2 Kings xxiii. 30, "The people of the land took Jehoahaz the son of Josiah, and anointed him, and made him king in his father's stead." How wickedly did he, therefore, to become a lion to this people, who advanced him! If he were unnatural who ripped up the bowels of his own mother, so likewise is he that rips and rends the bowels of that kingdom which begat him. Princes should entreat them well who have given them their princely being; they have their milk and maintenance from them, and it is height of ingratitude to wrong or ruin them.

Obs. 3. Such as the people are, usually such are the rulers, the princes. If the mother be a lioness, the whelps will be lions; if the lioness be audacious, bloody, libidinous, idolatrous, the lions will be such. Jerusalem was very wicked, and her princes likewise; the princes were like the people. Hos. viii. 4, "They have set up kings, but not by me:" the people set up Jehoahaz, and he was a lion; he did wickedly, 2 Kings xxiii. 32.

Obs. 4. Great is the efficacy of evil example, it prevails more than good example. Jehoahaz had a godly parent, Josiah by name, of whom it is said that there was no king like him before or after him, that turned to the Lord with all his soul, heart, and might, according to all the law of Moses, 2 Kings xxiii. 25. Not the good education nor good example he had from and by his father, did sufficiently antidote him against the poison and power of evil example; he was brought up among lions, and learned of them to catch the prey: they were wicked, covetous, proud, fierce, subtle, cruel, revengeful, and their manners he took up, conformed unto. Wickedness is easily learned; men are so apt to it, that they need no rods to put them on. Parents cannot propagate piety; if that could have been, Josiah would have had sons as eminent for holiness as they were for impiety. Gracious parents have graceless children: but none be troubled thereat as a thing strange, it was so with Josiah. If you be godly, and would have your children so, take heed of being ill examples yourselves, or letting them be amongst those who give ill example; for tinder is not apter to take fire, wax the impression of the seal, paper the ink, than youth is to receive the impressions of wickedness.

Obs. 5. After good princes and great reformers, Divine Providence orders it so, that wretched, wicked kings, enemies to all good, are set up. Josiah was a most godly king, and more thoroughly reforming than ever Judah had any before; yet after him comes a lion, a wicked Jehoahaz. When people are unthankful for good princes and rulers, when they murmur against reformation, have a secret enmity, open bitterness, against godliness, and those who are godly, it is just with God to set lions over them, to be terrible unto them, to eat up their estates and them.

Obs. 6. When wicked men come to places of eminency, they vent their corruptions which lay hid before, they make progress in wickedness, nothing restrains them. When this whelp, Jehoahaz, came to the throne, he became a young lion, a lion rampant, he could catch the prey, and devour men. We oft think that the whelps of great ones are well natured, well educated, very hopeful, will prove admirable instruments of God's glory and public good; but we deceive ourselves; when they come to public and high places, their lionish natures do appear, and they grow worse and worse; they perfect wickedness, nothing prevails to keep them in, but they must play the lions, slay the skins, suck the blood, eat the flesh, and crack the bones. There was as great hope of Josiah's sons, as ever of any, yet you see how they proved. Nero at first for five years carried himself well, like a lamb; but he was a lion, and his lionish disposition showed itself to the full. You, who are godly, and have hopeful issue, promise not too much unto yourselves of them; great expectations disappointed cause great vexations.

Obs. 7. That princes pervert the end for which they were ordained of God, and set up by men. God appointed not magistrates, be they princes or others, to lurk for the prey, to devour men, but to preserve men. They should be shepherds, not lions; nursing fathers, not cannibals; they should govern them according to divine rule, Dent. xvii. 18—20, not after prerogative, a devouring beast, which eats up men's estates, honours, lives; they should do justice, not obstruct or pervert it. But where are those princes that answer the end of their institution, that lurk not for prey, that devour not men? In Micah's days, the heads of the house of Jacob, and the princes of the house of Israel, abhorred judgment, and perverted all equity; they built up Zion with blood, and Jerusalem with iniquity; and for their sins and sakes was Zion ploughed as a field, and Jerusalem made heaps. Take heed, you who are governors of families, that you pervert not that institution; be not bitter to your wives, beat not servants for your fantasies, oppress not any who are under you, Eccles. iv. 30.

Obs. 8. The evil doings of princes fly abroad; if they play the lions, roar, raven, tear, oppress, the nation will hear of it. When Jehoahaz became a lion, caught the prey, devoured men, "the nations also heard of him;" not only his own nation knew it, but the nations round about. Princes, great persons, stand high, their voices are heard and actions seen far: let them whisper in secret, plot mischief in their closets, out they come; cabinet-letters, counsels, designs, treasons, come abroad and spread far. Their projects, how cryptically soever carried, are observed, divulged, and fill the nations with the noise thereof. Princes generally are so wicked, that their evil report is widely spread; chronicles and nations are filled with the reports thereof; if they will do infamous things, they cannot be concealed.

Obs. 9. When princes prove lions, God stirs up some to hunt and take those lions. The nations, hearing that Jehoahaz caught the prey and devoured men, they bethought and bestirred themselves, digged a pit, hunted this lion into it, and took him. When Zimri had gotten the crown, he did rend and tear like a lion; but presently God stirred the people to set up Omri to be king, who hunted that lion into a fiery pit, 1 Kings xvi. Saul played the lion in his reign, and at last he was hunted, slain, and taken by the Philistines, 1 Sam. xxxi. Jehoram became a young lion, preyed upon his brethren, devoured them, 2 Chron. xxi. 4; and the Lord stirred up the spirit of the Philistines and Arabians against him, who came and spoiled him and his, ver. 16, 17. Manasseh was a ramping and roaring lion, he brake the bones of many, and sucked much blood, and he was taken in the pit of the Assyrians, 2 Chron. xxxiii.

When the rulers and potentates of the earth ep-press and tyrannize over the people, God, in his wise providence, sets some to work to catch and crush them. Amos iii. 10, 11; one way or other their strength is brought down, and they suffer for their oppressions, and are cut off by violent and untimely deaths. Tiberius was poisoned or smothered by his own nephew; Caligula slain by his own guard; Vitellius was overthrown in battle, taken prisoner, and drawn with a halter about his neck along the streets, half naked, and after many outrages done unto him, he was killed and east into Tiber. Fitz-herbert. Leander, tyrant of Cyrena, was taken alive, and being sewed into a leathern bag, was cast into the sea. Thirty tyrants were slain in one day at Athens by Theramenes, Thrasibulus, and Archippus, who did it with seventy men.

Obs. 10. Princes who, by covetousness and cruelty, spoil others of their estates and liberties, through the just judgment of God come themselves to be deprived of their estates and liberties. Jehoahaz, he caught the prey, and himself was caught and made a prey; he devoured men, and himself was devoured; he fettered, chained others, and himself was put in chains; he lost his kingdom and liberty; Pharaoh took him, bound him, carried him to Egypt. This was he whom Jeremiah calls Shallum, chap. xxii. 11, 12, and saith he should return no more, but die in his captivity. It was a great evil, a sad judgment, to be taken and carried out of his own land, and to die in a profane land amongst Egyptians; therefore it is said, ver. 10, "Weep sore for him that goeth away; for he shall return no more, nor see his native country." Such judgments do princes bring upon themselves; to satisfy some base and bloody lusts, they hazard all, yea oft do lose their kingdoms, liberties, and lives; whereas they might be happy if they would keep within their bounds, yea, live and die comfortably in their own lands; but when they deal injuriously with others, hook, fetter, and spoil them, God meets with them, Amos i. 2. Those who oppressed the poor, and crushed the needy, God would take them with hooks, and their posterity with fish-hooks; he would pull them out of their estates, power, greatness, as fishes out of the water.

Ver. 5. "Now when she saw that she had waited, and her hope was lost." When Jerusalem, the lioness, had expected the return of Jehoahaz from Egypt, and saw it was vain, that there was no hope of it. The Hebrew runs thus, And she saw, because she hoped, her hope had perished. The Septuagint, for her hope was lost, her substance perished, or was lost. She thought the prince (and so usually do states) was a strong and substantial foundation to build upon; but she was deceived, and her hope failed her.

"Then she took another of her whelps." What whelp this was is controverted amongst expositors. Some make this whelp to be Zedekiah, but there is least reason for that, because hereby both Jehoiakim and Jehoiachin are passed over, who were both kings before Zedekiah; this whelp, therefore, must be one of them. The protestant expositors do make it to be Jehoiakim, called also Eliachim, and Joachim, and so do some others; but the difficulty is, if meant of them, how that is true which is in ver. 9, "They brought him to the king of Babylon: they brought him into holds, that his voice should no more be heard upon the mountains of Israel;" whereas Jehoiakim came back again, if he were in Babylon, and his voice was heard. If it be meant of Jehoiachin, there is also this great difficulty, how he, reigning but three months, could lay waste their cities, and make the land desolate, as it is, ver. 7; being but eight years of age, as it is 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9; or at most but eighteen, as it is 2 Kings xxiv. 8. To let pass Jehoiachin, and to come to Jehoiakim, whom we may take to be the man represented by the whelp here, the difficulty shall be answered when we come to ver. 9.

"She took another of her whelps, and made him a young lion." That is, she set him up to be king. But this seems cross to what you have, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 4; 2 Kings xxiii. 34, where it is said, that Pharaoh "king of Egypt made Eliakim king over Judah and Jerusalem, and turned his name to Jehoiakim." If Pharaoh, therefore, made him king, how is it said here, that she, viz. Jerusalem, made him "a young lion," that is, exalted him to kingly dignity? The answer is, that Pharaoh did it not by force, but by the joint consent of the people: Jerusalem's concurrence was in this work; the prophet saith, she "made him a young lion." You may find it frequent in the historical books, that the people did elect and set up their kings. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 1, the people made Jehoahaz king; 1 Kings xxi. 24, the people made Josiah king; they made Omri king, 1 Kings xvi. 16; they made Jeroboam king, 1 Kings xii. 20; they made David king, 1 Chron. xii. 38; they made Saul king, 1 Sam. xi. 15; they made Jephthah head, Judg. xi. 11. God himself, when he commended a king unto them, would have their consent and concurrence in it, Deut. xvii. 14, 15. There is an essential and fundamental right in the people to choose and set up them who are to rule over them; therefore they are called ἀρθρωπιον κτιστος, 1 Pet. ii. 13, the ordinance of a man, or a human creation.

Ver. 6. "He went up and down among the lions." Being advanced to princely state, here his carriage is set out: he conversed with lions, that is, with wicked men who had lionish dispositions, who were stern, covetous, crafty, and cruel; the king of Egypt, the king of Babylon, the princes about him in the bordering countries; they were lions, and he went up and down amongst them, their counsels he took, their manners, fashions, customs he learned, their steps he trod in, &c.

"Became a young lion." That is, had the nature, properties, and qualities of a young lion; of which you heard before.

"Learned to catch the prey." Hebrew is, to prey the prey. The word טרף is that which wild beasts, hunting, do get and feed upon, from טרף to catch and tear with the teeth, and is applied here unto kings, who are metaphorical lions; and whatever they can get, catch, tear and rend from others, that is their prey, that they feed upon. Psal. lxxvi. 4, there is mention of "mountains of prey," which are the kingdoms of this world. They are like mountains, where wild beasts are, which prey upon what is thereon, or thereabouts; and so kingdoms have wild beasts in them, which prey upon those who are in their kingdoms.

"Devoured men." Septuagint, ἀρθρωπιος ἐφαγε, eat men. This young lion fed upon men. The Hebrew is, man in the singular number, but hath the force of a plural, and so is rendered. This devouring of men was by taking away their estates, liberties, limbs, lives. Jehoiakim was very covetous and very cruel. Jeremiah, chap. xxii. 17, speaking of him, he saith, "Thine eyes and thine heart are not but for thy covetousness, and for to shed innocent blood, and for oppression, and for violence, to do it;" his eyes and heart were set upon nothing else but catching the prey, and devouring of men. 2 Kings xxiii. 35, "He exacted silver and gold of the people of the land;" Pharaoh, that Egyptian lion, commanded him to tax the land: he yields to Pharaoh, taxes and exacts upon the people. It is not improbable that he was perfidious, bloody, and cruel towards the Syrians, Moabites, and Ammonites, who infested him, 2 Kings xxiv. 2, and interpreters say he slew the prophets.

Ver. 7. "And he knew their desolate palaces." Hebrew is, וַיֵּדַע אֶלְמָנוֹתַי which Montanus renders, cognovit viduas ejus, he knew their widows; the Hebrew, וַיֵּדַע אֶלְמָנוֹתַי is so translated, Psal. lxxviii. 5, "A father of the fatherless, and a judge of widows, is God:" so it should be: the word is alm-anoth, widows. But in Isa. xlii. 22, it is used for desolate palaces: "And wild beasts of the islands shall cry in their desolate houses." If we take the word for "widows," and so the old translation hath it, the sense is, That Jehoiakim defiled the widows, whose chastity he ought to have preserved; he wronged them greatly, by devouring their husbands and defiling their bodies. Or thus: When their husbands were put to death, and estates unjustly taken away, the widows came petitioning for relief; whereupon he knew them; but was so hard-hearted, as that he was not moved with their tears, cries, requests, or complaints. If we take it for "desolate palaces," as it is here, the interpretation is, That have deprived the palaces of their husbands, their owners and inhabitants, and made them widows: he did confiscate them to his own treasury, he challenged them to be his. Having unjustly devoured the men, he thought he might justly devour their palaces; he knew their palaces, and took possession of them.

"He laid waste their cities." He made their cities to be waste, desolate, or dried up, as the word imports. As the sun dries up ponds, brooks, or some diversion draws away the water, that they are void, empty, so did this king, by his taxes and impositions, draw away their estates, and dry up trading: or, he did those things which caused their cities to be laid waste; he provoked God and men against himself and them, by his tyranny and cruelty; he caused many to fall, many to flee, and forsake their habitation, so that the land was desolate, and the fulness thereof.

"By the noise of his roaring." Hebrew, by the voice of his roaring. וַיִּשָּׁא is, to roar, as lions do; yea, it is proper to lions, but is metaphorically given to men, as here. The roaring of lions is very terrible: Prov. xix. 12, "The king's wrath is as the roaring of a lion." When the lion roars, it troubles all the beasts of the forest and mountains; and when kings in their wrath roar, and send out their commands, edicts, &c. they trouble and make desolate families, cities, lands.

Ver. 8. "The nations set against him on every side." His wickedness and tyranny was such, as that all the nations were provoked against him, and contributed their help to take this young lion. The original is, the nations gave upon him; they gave their judgments upon him, that he was not fit to range, ramp, and roar any longer. Vulgate reads it, concurrent, they came together, took counsel, resolved to hunt and take this wild beast.

"From the provinces." What provinces these were you may see, 2 Kings xxiv. 2: the Chaldeans, Syrians, Moabites, Ammonites, these all called upon and called out one another, to hunt this lion, and to take him.

"And spread their net over him." Hebrew for net is, רֶשֶׁת which is either from יָרַשׁ to possess, because a net holds in possession what it catcheth, or from רָשַׁע to make poor, because a net deprives of liberty, and oft of life. These hunters prepared a net strong enough to hold this lion, and they spread it out for him.

"He was taken in their pit." Of these words were spoken, ver. 4.

Ver. 9. "And they put him in ward." Hebrew, they put him into safe custody, into some prison; they shut him up, that he might not escape, and be as a lion among the people any more; they put chains upon him, an iron collar, or about his neck a chain, and brought him to the king of Babylon. They did not carry him into Babylon, some think; for, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6, Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up against him, and bound him in chains or fetters, to carry him to Babylon; but that he did carry him thither, or send him back, having rebelled against him, 2 Kings xxiv. 1, doth not appear, neither is probable. That which makes most for this opinion is what you have in Jer. xxii. 19, "He shall be buried with the burial of an ass," drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem. These words induce some to believe, that either he went not to Babylon, or, if he did, that he returned, that Jeremiah's prophecy might be made good; and if that were so, how is it true here, "that his voice may be heard no more upon the mountains of Israel?"

To clear this doubt and difficulty, it is most probable that Jehoiakim was carried to Babylon; for that in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6, of Nebuchadnezzar coming up against him, is to be understood of his forces, rather than his person; and in 2 Kings xxiv. 2, it is said, "bands of the Chaldees," not Nebuchadnezzar himself: our prophet also saith, "they brought him to the king of Babylon." And whereas some affirm he died by the way, (being led in a disgraceful manner, like a wild beast, with an iron collar about his neck, and a chain fastened therunto,) how suits it with what is recorded, "They brought him to the king of Babylon: they brought him into holds?" That was, saith Piscator, into the city of Babylon, which was full of strong holds; and being there shut up till his death, "his voice was no more heard on the mountains of Israel."

For that in Jeremiah, it is a mistake to conceive the prophet meant that Jehoiakim should die in Jerusalem, be drawn up and down the streets thereof, and be cast out at the gates thereof. The words are, "he shall be cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem;" that is, beyond the bounds and limits which belong to Jerusalem. Dying, or being slain, in Babylon, he was cast out, and judged unworthy of burial, his carcass lay like an ass, to be meat for the beasts of the earth and fowls of heaven, to be subject to all wind and weather: Jer. xxxvi. 30, "His dead body shall be cast out in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost."

Though two whelps only be here spoken of, yet I make no doubt but that the other two also, Jehoiachin and Zedekiah, are intended, who were caught and carried away, "that their voices might no more be heard upon the mountains of Israel."

Obs. 1. The hopes of the wicked are not long-lived, they are soon dashed and disappointed. "When she saw she had waited, and her hope was lost:" she promised much to herself, expected much from Egypt, and from Jehoahaz; but all was in vain, no relief came thence. Prov. xi. 7, "The hope of unjust men perisheth," and that easily and speedily. Job viii. 14, it is likened to a spider's web or house, a little thing; a besom sweeps away the house and inhabitant together, and that in a moment: such is the hope of wicked men, it is suddenly and easily ruined. Had not they great hopes that were before Dublin? did they not think to take it and triumph in it? but I may say of them as Ambrose did of wicked men. They came, they went, they stood still, they vanished. God hath cut down their hopes, and many of them, the spider and her web, are gone together; they may say, the Lord "hath destroyed us on every side, and our hope hath he removed like a tree," Job xix. 10. There is a difference between the hopes of the righteous and those of the wicked: Prov. x. 28, "The hope of the righteous shall be gladness; but the expectation of the wicked shall perish."

Obs. 2. Corrupt states are so affected with and addicted to their princes, that they will set them up, have them rule over them, though it be to their own ruin, and ruin of the state also. Jerusalem, the lioness, sets "up another of her whelps, and makes it a young lion;" she put this whelp into the royal seat, and stirred him up to do lion-like, such things as did undo himself and Jerusalem also. She learned nothing by the loss of her former whelp, but proceeds in her old way, and would have lions, tyrants to be over her; she, being a lioness very corrupt and wicked, couples with that Egyptian lion Pharaoh, and brings forth, advances a lion like themselves.

The over-much love of states, of mothers to their children, is the undoing of them; they set them up who tear out their own bowels. When an astrologer told Agrippina that Nero her son should be emperor, but withal that he should kill his own mother; what said she? even like a fond and foolish woman, So he may reign, I care not, though he be my ruin. The men of Shechem made Abimelech king; but he proved not only a bramble, to scratch them, but a fierce and fiery lion to consume them. Mothers had need consider the temper of their sons, and how they advance them; and states, whom they set over them, lest they become lions unto them.

Obs. 3. Such as men live amongst and converse withal, such they prove. "He went up and down among the lions, and became a lion:" those lions he conversed with, talked of enriching themselves, by laying taxes, rates, and burdens upon the people, by taking them out of the way who should oppose, of making themselves great, of having their wills, and ruling by prerogative; and these things, and such like, were soon learned by this whelp. When Nebuchadnezzar was among beasts, he became brutish, and did as they did. Plutarch reports of a woman brought to a serpentine and poisonous nature by feeding on serpents ordinarily; and those who converse with a generation of vipers, will prove viperous; those who converse with lions will prove lionish. Ill company is the Delilah that bewitches, defiles, undoes many in their estates, names, bodies, and souls. Men that have infectious diseases you will not come near; you love your bodies, your lives. Wicked company have infectious vices; come not near them, neither yourselves nor your children, love your souls and theirs too. If you suffer your children to be among lions, among wicked ones, they will learn their manners; and those who will not leave ill company, it is a thousand to one they will lose their souls. Be choice of your company; it is the making or marring of young ones. Many are choice in their diet, in their apparel, choice in every thing they buy, yet have no care of company. Will you not admit a foul dish to come to your table? and will you admit foul and vicious ones to be your companions? We should touch no unclean thing. Ill company is pitch, it is poison. David knew it, therefore said, "Depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity," Psal. vi. 8; and, "I am a companion of all them that fear thee," Psal. cxix. 63.

Obs. 4. They who converse with wicked ones do not only become wicked, but many times they prove eminently wicked; they are skillful in wickedness, they exceed their teachers. Jehoiakim, by his converse with lions, became not only a lion to catch the prey, but such an one as devoured men, defiled widows, made desolate palaces, laid waste cities, and the land also. He tyrannized so, that he went beyond other tyrants; he was an inventor of wickedness, and profited above others in his way, and came to a perfection of iniquity. It is incident to man's nature to outstrip one the other, if not in good, yet especially in evil. It is said of this Jehoiakim, 2 Kings xxiii. 37, "He did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, according to all that his fathers had done:" take any, or all his predecessors, he did evil according to all they did.

Obs. 5. Tyranny is hateful unto heathens. "Then the nations set against him on every side." Jehoiakim was such a roaring lion, that the heathens could not endure him; he spoiled their palaces, cities, land, so with his tyrannical proceedings, that he became hateful to all round about him. Doubtless the princes of the nations were tyrannous themselves; yet this man, being a prince of Israel, exceeded so in his tyrannical practices, that he incurred the displeasure and hatred of them all. Tyranny is contrary to humanity. Tyrants cease to be men, and become beasts; therefore here are called lions, and are ranked amongst wild, savage creatures, which none can endure. When there are wild beasts in a land, all are against them, and often there is a mutual agreement and concurrence of all sorts to destroy them, being destructive to the public. So was it here; the nations agreed to hunt and take this lion, which roared, preyed, spoiled, and did so much mischief.

Obs. 6. God hath times, means, ways to catch lions, to deal with covetous, cruel, and bloody men. "Then the nations set against him on every side." When Jehoiakim made desolate the palaces, wasted the cities and land, became a terror to all; then the Lord stirred up the nations; they were his net, his pit, his instruments he used to take this lion withal. When wicked men, tyrannical spirits, are at their height, have filled a land with confusion, oppression, desolation, and bloody doings, through their roarings and tearings, then the Lord appears, roars like a lion against them, and sets his agents on work to catch those roaring and ramping lions; he wants not means to take them, he is richly stored and provided that way; he hath the nations at command, and can call them forth, set them on to hunt lions when he please. Jer. li. 27—29, "Blow the trumpet among the nations, prepare the nations against her," (that is, Babylon and her princes, who were great tyrants,) "call together against her the kingdoms of Ararat, Minni, and Ashchenaz; appoint a captain against her; cause the horses to come up as the rough caterpillars. Prepare against her the nations with the king of the Medes, the captains thereof," &c.

Nebuchadnezzar was a crafty, cruel, and bloody lion, and so were the whelps that came of him and after him, but the Lord had a time and means to catch those lions and whelps. Jer. l. 9, "I will raise and cause to come up against Babylon an assembly of great nations from the north country." Great lions must have great nets, great pits, great doings to take them; God would bring an assembly of great nations.

Obs. 7. Tyrannical princes are not of long continuance; usually they are short-lived; either they lose their power, or their power and lives both. Jehoiakim roared and played the lion eleven years, and then he was taken in the pit of the nations, and lost his power. So Jehoahaz before him, he tyrannized three months, and then was taken. In 2 Kings xv. you may read of four lions which roared, but their roaring quickly hastened their ruin. Zechariah lionized it six months, Shallum one month, Pekahiah two years, and Pekah twenty years, and then they were cut off. When potentates oppress, tyrannize, their ruin is at hand. God hath said, "Bloody men shall not live out half their days," Psal. lv. 23, and he makes it good; "He cuts off the spirit of princes; and is terrible to the kings of the earth," Psal. lxxvi. 12. Stories will tell you what quick despatch hath been made of tyrants.

Obs. 8. Eminent wickedness brings eminent judgments. Both Jehoahaz and Jehoiakim exceeded in wickedness, and their judgments were answerable, they were chained, carried into strange lands, put into strong holds. Abimelech murdered seventy of his brethren, that he might get to the throne; but a woman cast a piece of a millstone upon his head, brake his skull, and manifested the just hand of God upon him, Judg. ix. 5, 55, 56. Jezebel and Ahab were eminently wicked, and God's hand was upon them both in an eminent manner, 1 Kings xxii.; 2 Kings ix.

Richard the third obtained the crown by the murder of his nephews; and having tyrannized two years, two months, and one day, he was slain in a battle at Bosworth Field, his naked body was laid upon a horse like a hog or calf, his head, arms hanging on the one side, and his legs on the other; and being all besprinkled with mire and blood, he was brought into Leicester, where for two days he lay naked and unburied; after, his body was buried, but without solemnity, and the stone chest wherein his body lay is since made a drinking trough for horses at a common inn.

Obs. 9. God takes away wicked and tyrannical princes, that it may be well with his people, that Zion may have the benefit of it. Jehoiakim was taken, chained, carried to Babylon, put in strong holds; and why? "that his voice should no more be heard upon the mountains of Israel;" that the people of God might not be terrified with his roarings, nor torn with his teeth, but might enjoy freedom and safety. It is a great mercy when lions are not in a land, nor other hurtful wild beasts; where such are, there is no dwelling or sleeping in safety; but God, for the good of his people, destroys or drives out the wild beasts. Ezek. xxxiv. 25, "I will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land; and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods." Isa. xxxv. 9, "No lion shall be there."

In the primitive days were many lions, and they roared terribly upon the mountains of Israel; they scattered, tore, and devoured the flocks of the Lord which were feeding upon those mountains; but the Lord hunted those lions into pits, and took them away for his flock's sake.

Sennacherib with a great army comes up to the gates of Jerusalem, roars upon the mountains about it, fills all with fear; but the Lord sends a destroying angel that slew his army, and caused that lion to flee, that "his voice might be heard no more upon the mountains."

Ver. 10—14. Thy mother is like a vine in thy blood, planted by the waters: she was fruitful and full of branches by reason of many waters. And she had strong rods for the sceptres of them that bare rule, and her stature was exalted among the thick branches, and she appeared in her height with the multitude of her branches. But she was plucked up in fury, she was cast down to the ground, and the east wind dried up her fruit: her strong rods were broken and withered; the fire consumed them. And now she is planted in the wilderness, in a dry and thirsty ground. And fire is gone out of a rod of her branches, which hath devoured her fruit, so that she hath no strong rod to be a sceptre to rule. This is a lamentation, and shall be for a lamentation.

In these verses is laid down the second general part of the chapter, viz. the lamentation for Jerusalem, or the kingdom of Judah under the parabolical representation of a vine. We may here consider,

I. The state of this vine, as it was in Jehoiachin's, and especially in Zedekiah's days, ver. 10, 11.

II. The misery which befell it, ver. 12, 14.

III. The transplantation of it, ver. 13.

The words must be opened, and then the observations shall be given in.

"Thy mother." That is, Jerusalem, or the kingdom of Judah, which was the mother of princes. "Thy mother," O Jehoiachin: he had spoken before to Jehoahaz and Jehoiakim as whelps of this mother under the notion of a lioness; now he comes to speak of Jehoiachin and Zedekiah, as branches of this mother, under the notion of a vine.

"Is like a vine." Frequently doth the Spirit of God resemble Israel and Judah to a vine, as Isa. xxvii. 2; v. 2; iii. 14; Psal. lxxx. 8, 14, 17. Jerusalem or the kingdom of Judah is likened to a vine,

1. For the excellency or choiceness of it. Vines are noble, choice, and excellent plants; so this kingdom was a noble vine, Jer. ii. 21, a choice vine, Isa. v. 2; and, Psal. lxxviii. 67, 68, "He refused the tabernacle of Joseph, and chose not the tribe of Ephraim; but chose the tribe of Judah."

2. Because the vine spreads and extends itself far. Psal. lxxx. 9—11, the Jewish vine filled the land, and covered the hills, it extended far. This is one thing chiefly intended here; for after Jehoiakim and Jehoahaz, two roaring lions, which laid all waste, were taken and carried to Egypt and Babylon, in the days of Zedekiah this vine did flourish and spread: Ezek. xvii. 6, "It grew and became a spreading vine," &c.; it grew in wealth, in power, in glory.

3. Because vines are fruitful things, no tree, no plant like them: Psal. cxxviii. 3, "Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine." Vines are fruitful in branches, in leaves, in clusters. This kingdom had princes and nobles, and Zedekiah divers sons, 2 Kings xxv. 7.

"In thy blood." These words are variously rendered by those who touch or treat upon them. The Septuagint is, ὡς ἄθος ἐν ποτῇ, as the flower of a pomegranate or peach; thy mother is ruddy and comely as the flowers of those trees are. But the Hebrew bears not this sense; the word is כַּרְמֶךָ if we take the word for quiet and silence, the sense is this: The kingdom flourished and prospered like a vine, while Jehoiachin and Zedekiah were quiet, and did not roar and raven as their predecessors did. Vines torn, cut down in time of war, do grow again and flourish in times of peace. If we read the word, in thy likeness, or, in the likeness of thee, the meaning may be, Thou, O Zedekiah, art a king, but low and mean in comparison of other kings that were before, as Asa and Jehoshaphat, Hezekiah and Josiah; and thy mother is like unto thee: Jerusalem and Judah flourish not as in former days, but are low and little; according to that in Ezek. xvii. 6, "It grew, and became a spreading vine of low stature;" he speaks there of Zedekiah and the kingdom in his days.

But seeing the words are in our translation "in thy blood," and the original bears it so, it is fit to inquire what sense the words so taken may bear. Thou camest of kings, princes, and nobles, they were thy progenitors; and in production of them, Jerusalem, "thy mother, is like a vine in thy blood." It is usual by blood to note the stock, race, and house that men come of. Or, "Thy mother is like a vine in thy blood," that is, in thy seed and issue; thou hast a numerous issue, and this renders thy mother like a vine, a generous vine, bringing forth noble plants. Some think by "blood" is meant sucus, robur; and then the sense may be this, Thy mother is like a vine upheld by thy influence and strength; thou and thy sons support this feeble kingdom.

"Planted by the waters." In hot countries they were careful to plant their trees and vines where they might not want water. Canaan was a hilly country, yet full of water; Dent. viii. 7, it was "a land of brooks of water," of fountains and depths that spring out of valleys and hills; and their vines planted by the waters could not want moisture, though the heat was great there. Nebuchadnezzar planted Zedekiah among the poor: he carried away with Jehoiahin the princes, nobles, and chief of the land, 2 Kings xxiv. 14, where it is said, "none remained save the poorest sort," and those were the waters this vine was planted amongst and by; chap. xvii. 5, 8, they are called "great waters," and here, "many waters."

"She was fruitful." After the great waste, spoil, made in the palaces, cities, and land by the tyranny of those two lions, Jehoahaz and Jehoiakim, this metaphorical vine did flourish and become fruitful. In chap. xvii. 8, it is said, "it was planted in a good soil by great waters, that it might bring forth branches, and that it might bear fruit;" and here it is said, "she was fruitful and full of branches." She brought forth such as had been carried away; those branches that were plucked off, grew again; smiths, craftsmen, soldiers, mighty men of valour, nobles, princes, counsellors, and such like; the palaces were frequented, the cities rebuilt, the land tilled, the vines dressed.

"By reason of many waters." By waters here we may well understand the mercies and blessings of God upon this kingdom: for as God himself is a "fountain of living waters," Jer. ii. 13, so his blessings, mercies are called waters: Isa. xxvii. 3, speaking of his vineyard, he saith, he "will water it every moment," he will continually bless it, and afford it what may do it good. See Isa. lvii. 18; Hos. xiv. 5. Or if we will understand it of the poor Jews who came "out of the waters of Judah," Isa. xlvi. 1, and are called "waters," Eccl. s. xi. 1, it was by virtue of God's blessing upon their labours; God watered them, they watered the kingdom, so that it became as a flourishing and fruitful vine.

Ver. 11. "And she had strong rods for the sceptres of them that bare rule." Hebrew is, rods of strength; so the Septuagint, a rod of strength; others, sound, strong rods, boughs, or branches. It is said of this Jewish vine, Psal. lxxx. 10, that "the boughs thereof were like goodly cedars." The meaning is, there were in the kingdom of Israel men of great worth and eminence in David's days. Now it had rods of strength, and such rods as were fit to make sceptres of.

How this suits with what we had in chap. xv. is considerable, where it was said, that the vine tree yields not wood fit for any work, no not to make a pin of it to hang any vessel thereupon: and here it is said, the vine had strong rods for sceptres. There he speaks of the material vine, here of a metaphorical vine; there was shown God's rejection of them, and what the vine was in God's account, here what this vine was fit for in man's account. This kingdom thought every son of Zedekiah, which were the rods of strength, being of royal descent, fit and meet to sway sceptres, rule kingdoms; but the Lord thought not so.

We may by "strong rods" understand not only the royal branches, but also the nobles, judges, counsellors, and men of might, who were of use and great service to those who did bear rule, and fit to be rulers under those who did bear the sceptre.

"Her stature was exalted among the thick branches." Hebrew, her stature was lifted up above among the perplexities, contortions, that is, the thick branches. This kingdom, though greatly battered and broken, yet, like a vine, grew up again to a greatness and height; the people were increased much, and the royal family was exalted high. Zedekiah, though he were a wicked king, yet both he and his were magnified by the people; they were the top branches of the vine. In all states there are some more eminent than others.

"And she appeared in her height with the multitude of her branches." She flourished, spread, multiplied, grew so great and high, that her height and greatness appeared to others. It was evident that God had done much for this kingdom, &c. Thus through the multitude of her branches, and greatness of her power, wealth, and honour, she became proud, despised others, and so appeared in her height. The words thus taken, correspond with what you have in chap. xvi. 15, "Thou didst trust in thine own beauty." He speaks of Jerusalem under the notion of a woman; she being grown into a kingdom, become great, rich, renowned, she waxed proud, and trusted in her own beauty.

Obs. 1. That states and kingdoms broken to pieces, ruined in times of war and trouble, do flourish again in times of quiet and silence. When roaring lions are taken away, and men of peaceable and quiet spirits succeed, then the vine grows, then the land prospers, then breaches are repaired, then wastes are built up, &c. Tyranny, oppression, wars pull down, root up, destroy, 2 Chron. xv. 5, 6; but when there is peace and rest, it is otherwise. Chap. xiv. 7, "They built and prospered;" and why? they had "rest on every side." In storms at sea, tight ships suffer much in their sails, masts, tacklings, often they are greatly broken; but when the storms and fights are over, then all things are mended and made up again. So when state-storms are over, all things begin to grow up again, that were broken or trodden down. Peace after war is like spring after a sharp winter, which revives, causeth growth and greenness; yet know that states ruined by tyranny of princes, by wars, do not suddenly recover themselves, or attain to their former greatness and splendour: though Jerusalem became a vine after the roaring and spoil of Jehoiakim, yet she was a "vine of a low stature." Thy mother is a vine in thy likeness; thou art low, and thy mother is low.

Obs. 2. It is through the mercy, goodness, and blessing of God that wasted kingdoms do become as vines, and flourish again. "Thy mother is like a vine, fruitful and full of branches by reason of many waters." God watered the kingdom with blessings; he gave peace, he gave the poor strength to labour, he rained upon them, and gave sap to the vine, that she was fruitful. When God lays waste his vineyard, then he commands "the clouds that they rain no rain upon it," Isa. v. 6; but when he causes it to flourish, then he calls forth the rain, he moistens the spirits of men of all sorts, to contribute their help, thoughts, counsels for the good of a kingdom; he stirs up the spirits of men to be doing for the public; he gives people planted by him many waters, many blessings. We have been rent, torn, waste!

God is beginning to make us as a vine fruitful and full of branches; let us take heed we abuse not our mercies, lest God dry up the waters, and so we wither and be utterly laid waste.

3. When mercies are multiplied, men are apt to abuse them, and swell with the enjoyment of them. This metaphorical vine, the kingdom of Judah, had "strong rods, her stature was exalted among the thick branches, and she appeared in her height with the multitude of her branches:" she grew up again to a height, greatness; she had a multitude of branches, variety of mercies, and these swelled her so, that she became proud, insolent, and despised others. Prosperity is a dangerous thing, and hath hazarded many. Isa. xlvii. 5, 7, the Babylonian kingdom was so rich, great, populous, plentiful, that it was called "The lady of kingdoms," and she herself said, "I shall be a lady for ever;" she prided herself in her prosperity: so spiritual Babylon; Rev. xviii. 7, "I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow." She had abundance of blessings and delicacies, ver. 3, but she glorified herself, not the Lord. When Amaziah had smitten the Edomites, and prospered in his undertakings against them, his heart was lifted up, and that unto boasting, as Joash told him, 2 Chron. xxv. 19. After Hezekiah had received many mercies, "his heart was lifted up," 2 Chron. xxxii. 23—25. Rehoboam, when he was strengthened in the kingdom, "forsook the law of the Lord, and all Israel with him;" here was a sad effect of prosperity, 2 Chron. xii. 1. This people were seldom the better for mercies and blessings bestowed upon them. Jer. xxii. 21, "I spake unto thee in thy prosperity, but thou saidst, I will not hear. This hath been thy manner from thy youth, that thou obeyest not my voice." The Hebrew is, in thy prosperities; for she had many times of prosperity, and in none of them did she hearken, but grew so wicked that the daughters of the Philistines were ashamed of her lewdness, Samaria and Sodom were less sinful, Ezek. xvi. 27, 47. She had forgotten the caution the Lord gave her in the days of her infancy, Dent. viii. 11—14, "Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God; lest when thou art full, thy herds, flocks, silver, gold, and all thou hast is multiplied, then thine heart be lifted up," &c.

Ver. 12. "But she was plucked up in fury." Here he shows the miserable event of this vine; it was not broken, pruned, cut down, but "plucked up." The Hebrew word signifies to eradicate or pluck up by the roots, as trees and plants are pulled out of the earth, roots and all; and it is metaphorically applied to other things, as Jer. i. 10, "I have set thee over nations and kingdoms, to root out," that is, to profess the extirpation of them.

"In fury." Not in mercy, with a gentle hand, as sometimes the owner or vine-dresser doth, but "in fury." When a vine hath been planted in a good soil, watered, and long waited upon, with expectation of fruit, and yields nothing but leaves, suddenly, and in great displeasure, the master of the vineyard comes, lays hands upon it, puts forth all his strength, and pulls it out of the earth, and saith it shall never cumber the ground longer.

"She was cast down to the ground." Vines are weak things, and have props to support and uphold them, and when they are gone they fall to the ground. The Lord would no longer uphold this vine, this kingdom of Judah, he would withdraw all supporting props it had, pull it up, and cast it down; as a man doth a dry or barren plant, when he hath pulled it up, he throws it away in anger. God would bring down the exalted stature of this vine to a low condition.

"The east wind dried up her fruit." Of this east wind was spoken, chap. xvii. 10. East winds are very prejudicial to corn, fruit, and plants, especially to vines; when east winds blow much upon them, they are barren, and often dried up. These winds are scorching and consuming; therefore great afflictions are called east winds, Isa. xxvii. 8. This eastern wind was Nebuchadnezzar with his forces. Habbakkuk mentions him and his army under this notion of an eastern wind, chap. i. 9, "They shall come all for violence; their faces shall sup up as the east wind." This wind hath a sucking virtue in it; the water, the moisture of the earth, the juice of trees and plants, are sucked up by it, so that it leaves things dry and withered: so should the Chaldeans suck up and devour all the pleasant things of this kingdom, all the fruit of this vine, from the highest branch to the lowest.

"Her strong rods were broken and withered." Montanus reads the words thus, They are broken and withered, and leaves the other words to be joined with what follows, thus, The rod of her strength the fire hath consumed it; and so Lavater. But others read the words as you have them: and which way soever you read them, there is no considerable difference therein. The Hebrew is in the singular number, which frequently in the holy language is put for the plural. The rods of strength on this vine were not only Zedekiah's sons, but all the principal young men, who were full of blood and spirits, as the chief branches in a vine are full of juice. Yea, all that had places of power and trust, and were supporting strength to this vine, did Nebuchadnezzar by his forces pluck away, break in pieces, and make to wither. Break off the strongest part of a vine, the strongest rod upon it, and throw it aside, it quickly dries up; so these being pulled from their places, stripped of their wealth and power, withered.

"The fire consumed them." When the branches, the strong rods of a vine, are plucked off and withered, they are fit for the fire, and that consumes them: these strong rods and branches the fire consumed. This fire was the fire of God's wrath; the coals which the man clothed in linen scattered over the city, chap. x. 2. Jerusalem, with all the precious and pleasant things in it, was burnt with fire, 2 Kings xxv. 9. By the Babylonish army the walls were broken down, the land laid waste, and all considerable things and persons carried away. Thus was this Jewish vine, which had been planted by God's hand in a good ground, plucked up again by him in fury.

Ver. 13. "And now she is planted in the wilderness." This wilderness was Babylon, which was a fruitful, pleasant, and well watered country; the city and land were the "glory of kingdoms," Isa. xlii. 19. It had variety of rivers; Psal. cxxxvii. 1, "By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down." Some write of it, that it yields two hundred, yea, in the most fertile parts of it, three hundredfold increase: that it abounds with dates, whereof they make honey and wine. Now if this were the nature of the country, how is it here called a wilderness? It is so called not in respect of itself, but in reference to the Jews, who being captives therein, were as in a wilderness.

In a wilderness, 1. A man is destitute of all comforts; 2. Exposed to many dangers. So were the Jews in Babylon.

1. They were destitute of comforts. They came naked into Babylon, where they were amongst a people of a barbarous and unknown tongue, that knew nothing of God; there they had no form of a church or state; they had no life, but were as dry bones, Ezek. xxxvii. 11. There they were captives; Babylon was a prison unto them, and prisons of what kind soever are not pleasing. Prisoners endure much hunger and thirst, and doubtless so did the Jews in Babylon. Though there were plenty, yet they had little enough, and therefore it was "a dry and thirsty land" to them.

2. They were exposed to many dangers, being amongst them that mocked and hated them. The Babylonians were "bitter and hasty, terrible and dreadful," Hab. i. 6, 7. They were like wild beasts in the wilderness, and sought, upon all occasions, to make a prey of the poor captived Jews. They got the three children into the fiery furnace, Daniel into the lions' den, and Haman attempted the total ruin of them.

"She is planted." Before, in ver. 12, it is said, "the fire consumed them?" what is consumed in the fire is burnt to ashes, and how then can that be planted? He doth not say the whole vine was burnt, but her "strong rods" were broken off and burnt; some were burnt and consumed by famine, some by the plague, some by the sword: 2 Chron. xxxvi. 17, "The king of the Chaldees slew their young men with the sword," but "they that escaped the sword he carried away to Babylon, where they were servants to him and his sons," ver. 20.

If it should be granted that the whole vine was dried up, withered, and burnt to ashes, yet these words may bear a good and sound sense, viz. thus, they may be understood of Jehoiachin and those that were with him in Babylon at that time when they were spoken; for the words run in the present tense, "she is planted," not, she shall be planted; for Zedekiah and those that escaped the sword were carried after this prophecy to Babylon.

Ver. 14. "And fire is gone out of a rod of her branches." What this rod was, and the fire that went out of it, is fit to inquire. I will not say that Ishmael was the rod, and the fire that went out of it the destruction of Gedaliah, whom the king of Babylon had left governor over the land, and this Ishmael slew, 2 Kings xxv. 25; Jer. xli. 1—3, with many others: but rather conceive Zedekiah to be this rod, who being of the royal family, was a principal rod of this vine; and the fire which went out of this rod was his rebellion against the king of Babylon, who had set him up upon the throne of Judah; for this act of his stirred up Nebuchadnezzar to come and lay all waste, 2 Kings xxiv. 20; xxv. 1—11; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13, 17; Jer. lii. 3, 4. So that Zedekiah was a fire and cause of destruction, he did that which brought fire and destruction upon this vine.

"Which hath devoured her fruit." The fire caused by him did devour the young men, maidens, old men, the vessels of the sanctuary, the treasure of the Lord's house, and the treasure of the king and princes, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 17—19.

"So that she hath no strong rod to be a sceptre to rule." The meaning is, that this vine was so ruined, that there was none left to bear rule. Zedekiah's sons were slain, and the princes of Judah, Jer. lii. 10; yet not all, for it is said, 2 Kings xxv. 25, that Ishmael was of the seed royal, or of the kingdom; and Jer. xli. 1, that "the princes of the king, even ten men," that is, those princes or nobles who had escaped, joined with Ishmael in the murdering of Gedaliah; but these and others which had some small power were glad to flee, some to the Ammonites, some to Egypt, for fear, as appears in Jer. xli. and 2 Kings xxv. 26. None of them were able to raise up the kingdom again; now the kingly power was taken from them, and expired in Zedekiah. His daughters were left in the custody of Gedaliah; but it was not for women to sit upon the throne of Judah.

The kings and kingdom of Judah were swallowed up in the Babylonish captivity; for afterwards they had no kings, but governors, Haggai ii. 2. And Paul called their state not a kingdom, but "the commonwealth of Israel," Eph. ii. 12. So that in this sense also, she was "planted in a wilderness, in a dry and thirsty land;" she had not virtue, power, strength, to bring forth any rods for kingly government.

The sceptre seemed now to be departed from Judah, there being no strong rod to be a sceptre to rule. Now there was no king in Israel, nor any more to be. True, it seemed so, but it was not so; for though Zedekiah and his seed were cut off, yet the Lord had an eye to his promise, remembered the covenant with David, Psal. lxxxix. 34—36, and showed his faithfulness; for he thought upon Jehoiachin or Jechonias, from whom as a dry root sprouted Salathiel, and Zerobabel, who brought them out of Babylon, and was ruler over this people; and so in him, his, and the high priests after him, was the power of the sceptre continued till Christ came.

The promise was not that there should be kings always of the tribe of Judah, but that ruling power should be in that tribe of one kind or other, which was made good.

"This is a lamentation, and shall be for a lamentation." This prophecy is matter of mourning to me at present; to hear and speak of such sad things coming upon Judah and Jerusalem "is a lamentation," and when they shall be accomplished, they will be "for a lamentation" to posterity; they will lament for the princes of Israel, for Jerusalem, for the temple, and for this vine plucked up by the roots.

Obs. 1. God lays waste, destroys flourishing and potent kingdoms when they provoke him by their sinful and grievous courses. This kingdom of Judah did flourish like a vine, had many branches, strong rods, much wealth and power; but it trespassed grievously, Ezek. xiv. 13, and here God plucks it up in fury, he spares neither branches, body, nor roots. The quiet, happiness, and flourishing condition of earthly kingdoms is not perpetual. God hath ways to weaken them, to ruin and root them up; by the Egyptians he lopped this vine, and by the Babylonians he pulled it up; see 2 Kings xxv. 11; Jer. lii. 15. God had threatened oft before to pluck up and root them out, if they provoked him by their disobedience, Deut. xxviii. 25, 48, 63; 1 Kings xiv. 15; 2 Chron. vii. 20, "I will pluck them up by the roots out of my land which I have given them." "I will pluck up even this whole land," Jer. xlv. 4. God made good his word, he plucked them up; though the house of Israel had been his vineyard, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant, Isa. v. 7. If nations would flourish like vines, and continue in a flourishing condition, they must not provoke the Lord to fury, but bring forth fruit answerable to mercies given in, answerable to the soil they are planted in, the waters they are planted by, the digging, dunging, pruning, hedging, and shining upon they have had; if not, but bring forth sour grapes, injustice, oppression, profaneness, hear what is said, Psal. cvii. 34, "He turneth a fruitful land into barrenness, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein;" yea, he drives out princes for their wickedness, Ezek. xxxi. 11; and men cannot be established thereby, Prov. xii. 4. It is "righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people," Prov. xiv. 34; and though they may prosper a while, be like vines, yet God plucks them up at last, and that in fury.

Obs. 2. When God is in his fury, and yet he shows some mercy. Although he plucked up this vine, threw her down to the ground, dried up her fruit by an east wind, brake off her strong rods, consumed them in the fire; yet something of this vine he spared and planted in the wilderness, the body and some branches of it were carried to Babylon, and set there, which was mercy. God might have burned them all in his fury and fire of his indignation; but in wrath he remembers mercy; though he let out much wrath, much fury, yet he lets out some mercy. When Pharaoh pillaged this vine, plucked off the principal branch, yet some mercy was shown, Jehoiakim was planted in his room: when Nebuchadnezzar took him away, Jehoiachin was set up, which was mercy; and when both Jehoiachin and Zedekiah were plucked away, yet here was mercy, some were planted in Babylon. The Lord let not out all his wrath at any time against them, but, as Isaiah saith, he left them a remnant, and made them not as Sodom and Gomorrah, chap. i. 9. God's wrath and fury have appeared towards our English vine; and though he hath plucked up many branches and rods of strength, yet hath he not plucked us up in wrath and fury, he hath shown us rich, great, extraordinary mercy. Let us bring forth better fruit henceforward, lest he put forth his hand and pluck us up by the roots.

Obs. 3. Those who are planted amongst wicked and ungodly people, they are in no better condition than men in a wilderness. What though the place be pleasant, well watered, fruitful, and abounding with outward blessings, yet it is no better than a wilderness to them who have lived in Canaan.

When these Jews were planted in Babylon, which was a garden, a land of rivers, of delightful things, it was unto them like a heath and wilderness: things were not suitable to their spirits, they were destitute of true comforts, they had no temple, no sacrifice; they were exposed to great and many dangers, and lived amongst wild beasts. Canaan was the land of the living. There the living God did manifest himself; there were the living oracles, the living waters, and the living people: all lands else were heaths and wildernesses; they had dead and dumb gods, dead worship, dead waters, and were full of dead and dry bones. Such was Babylon, affording no spiritual and living sap to nourish this vine. The Jews could not sing the Lord's song there, Psal. cxxxvii. 4.

When people plant themselves among wicked and profane ones, they plant themselves in Babylon, in a wilderness.

Obs. 4. When men are planted in a good soil, and bring not forth good fruit, it is just with God to remove them from the means they enjoy. This vine was "planted in a good soil," Ezek. xvii. 8, "by many waters," ver. 10 of this chapter; but she brought not forth good fruit, therefore God plucked her up, deprived her of those mercies and means she formerly enjoyed, and "planted her in a dry and thirsty land." Deut. xxviii. 47, 48, "Because thou servedst not the Lord with joyfulness and gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things; therefore shalt thou serve thine enemies which the Lord shall send against thee, in hunger, in thirst, in nakedness, and in want of all things." This it may be they had forgotten, being given out in Moses' days; but Jeremiah oft minded them of it, who lived amongst them, even when they were removed; see chap. xv. 4; xxix. 18; xxxiv. 17. God had brought this vine formerly out of Egypt, and planted it in Canaan, where it took deep root, Psal. lxxx. 8, 9, for it enjoyed many mercies; but because it degenerated, and was like the plant of a strange vine unto God, Jer. ii. 21, therefore he removed it from the pleasant land to the wilderness, he carried it out of his orchard or garden, and set it in the forest.

Obs. 5. The wasting and ruin of kingdoms is from themselves; the cause is intrinsical. "A fire is gone out of a rod of her branches, which hath devoured her fruit." It was not Nebuchadnezzar, but Zedekiah that kindled the fire; he was a rod of this vine's branches, he did the mischief by his rebellion, he brought the eastern wind which dried up the fruit of this vine, broke off her strong rods, and burnt them in the fire. Jehoiakim was a rod of this vine's branches, he likewise rebelled, 2 Kings xxiv. 1; and so fire came out of this rod to destroy the vine; for presently lands of Chaldees, bands of Syrians, bands of Moabites, and bands of the children of Ammon, came against Judah to destroy it, ver. 2. Manasseh was a rod of this vine, and out of him went fire to waste it; he plucked off and consumed many branches of it, 2 Kings xxi. 16; and he caused the Lord to bring in the captains of the host of the king of Assyria to spoil it more, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11; yea, his sins had the greatest influence into the consumption of this vine, Jer. xv. 4; 2 Kings xxiv. 3.

The desolation of kingdoms usually have been by their own kings and rulers, by those they have brought forth and set up; their follies, cruelties, treacheries, have fired and consumed their kingdoms. It was Hoshua's conspiracy that ruined the kingdom of Israel, 2 Kings xvii. 4—6.

Obs. 6. When a lawful form of government is abused by governors growing tyrannical and unfaithful, God may set by, yea destroy, such governors and their posterity, and change the government. "Fire is gone out of a rod of her branches, which hath devoured her fruit, so that she hath no strong rod to be a sceptre to rule." Zedekiah was tyrannical and perfidious, and here God excluded him and his family from all kingly power and ruling, and changed the government.

The Lord is not tied to any men, any family, any way of government; but whom he please he may pull down, and what form of government he will he may set up. "He bringeth princes to nothing, he maketh judges of the earth as vanity. Yea, they shall not be planted; yea, they shall not be sown; yea, their stock shall not take root in the earth: and he shall also blow upon them, and they shall wither, and the whirlwind shall take them away as stubble;" Isa. xl. 23, 24.

CHAPTER XX.

Ver. I—4. And it came to pass in the seventh year, in the fifth month, the tenth day of the month, that certain of the elders of Israel came to enquire of the Lord, and sat before me. Then came the word of the Lord unto me, saying, Son of man, speak unto the elders of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Are ye come to enquire of me? As I live, saith the Lord God, I will not be enquired of by you. Wilt thou judge them, son of man, wilt thou judge them? cause them to know the abominations of their fathers.

VI. A doleful conclusion of the prophet, ver. 49.

In the exordium or introduction you have,

1. The time of this prophecy punctually set down, both the year, month, and day, ver. 1.

2. The occasion thereof, which was the coming of the elders to the prophet to inquire of the Lord, ver. 1.

3. The commission the prophet had to give out this prophecy, ver. 2, 3.

Ver. 1. "And it came to pass in the seventh year." That is, of their captivity. Ezekiel began to prophesy in the fifth year thereof, chap. i. 2; and now it was the seventh year of their captivity in Babylon, and of Zedekiah's reign at Jerusalem, and two years and five months before Jerusalem was besieged, as appears, 2 Kings xxv. 1.

"In the fifth month." The Jews, before they came out of Egypt, computed their year from the month Tisri, or Ethanim, which was part of those months we call September and October; but after they came out of Egypt, they began their year from the month Nisan, which comprehends part of March and part of April. Their fifth month was called Ab, which had half of July and half of August in it.

"The tenth day of the month." Often in this prophecy the very day of the month is set down, as chap. i. 2, the fifth day of the fourth month, and chap. viii. 1, the fifth day of the sixth month, and here, the tenth day of the fifth month. The Spirit of God put the prophet upon an exact chronology, both to strengthen the credit of the prophecy, and to mind them of the many years that were yet behind of their captivity, that so they might repent them of their iniquity which had brought them into that condition, and patiently submit to the Babylonish yoke which God had put upon them for seventy years.

"Certain of the elders of Israel came." In chap. viii. 1, the elders of Judah sat before him, and chap. xiv. 1, elders of Israel came unto him, and so it is here. "Certain of the elders of Israel came;" the Hebrew is, men of the elders, that is, some of the ancient that were or had been governors and chief amongst them, they came; from whence? from Jerusalem, say some, but they had Jeremiah there to consult with; and it is not likely that after Zedekiah and the chief men had broken covenant with Nebuchadnezzar, that men of the elders at Jerusalem would take a long journey to Babylon to consult with Ezekiel. Others therefore say, they were of the captives, to whose judgment I should incline, if I could see how that which is said in ver. 34, and so after, might fitly be applied unto them. It seems probable to me, that some of the elders at Jerusalem, upon the revolt of Zedekiah from Nebuchadnezzar, and falling in with the king of Egypt, might send to some of the elders among the captives to make inquiry of Ezekiel touching their affairs.

"To inquire of the Lord." They came to the prophet, that he consulting with God, might make known his mind unto them. They had been now seven years in captivity; the false prophets had possessed them with hopes of returning to Jerusalem, which should abide and not be destroyed, as Jeremiah had said; and therefore some think they came to inquire what should become of them. Others make the ground of their coming to the prophet, and inquiring, to be the rumours of, if not the preparation for, war by Nebuchadnezzar, because the Jews at Jerusalem had rebelled and broken covenant with him. Hereupon they thought it might go ill with themselves, that they might suffer very hard things, if not be cut off by the Babylonians, and therefore came to the prophet to inquire what would be the issue of things. It is probable they were in danger through the perfidiousness of their brethren at Jerusalem, and that the considerations thereof might have some influence into their coming to the prophet; but there was more than so. They now, to secure themselves, thought and resolved of a sinful way; ver. 32, "We will be as the heathen, as the families of the countries, to serve wood and stone:" they conceived, that if they conformed to the Babylonian worship, they should be taken for good subjects, and be safe, whatever befell them at Jerusalem for their provocation of the Babylonish king. This they concealed from the prophet, and come to him to inquire (seeing they were now more odious to the Babylonians than before Zedekiah's breaking covenant) whether it were not better and safer for them to disperse, than to live in bodies, and multitudes together, which caused envy, hatred, and great danger at that time, as they pretended. But they dissembled deeply, for while they lived together, they could not so easily desert the Jewish religion, and embrace the Babylonish idolatry. There would be special observation of it, and bitter reprehension for it. But if they had the prophet's counsel, and consent to scatter themselves, and fix their habitations here and there, they thought they might do it without any noise or check.

"And sat before me." The Hebrew for before me is, before my faces, that is, in my presence, expecting some answer from me.

Ver. 2. "Then came the word of the Lord unto me." The Hebrew is, and the word of the Lord hath been to me.

"Saying." Hebrew is, to say; the Spirit moved him that he might speak to others. There being an opportunity and season for speaking, the Spirit came upon him, and informed him touching the mind of God, and commissioned him to deliver it.

Ver. 3. "Son of man." He saith not, Ezekiel, but, "Son of man," to mind him of his original, that he was his creature, and ought to hearken to and observe the laws of his Creator. Of this appellation hath been spoken heretofore.

"Speak unto the elders of Israel." Here is a command laid upon the prophet. The Lord commands him to speak, and puts into his mouth what he shall speak. False prophets were neither sent of the Lord, nor spake from the Lord, chap. xiii. 3, 6.

"Are ye come to inquire of me?" Or, Do ye come to inquire of me? The words are an interrogation, and this interrogation imports distaste at their coming. Do you come to inquire of me? your hearts are not right in this matter, you play the hypocrites and dissemble egregiously, for you pretend to honour me in asking counsel at my mouth, and that if you knew my mind you would do it, whereas you are resolved beforehand what to do, let my counsels be what they will. O you dissemblers, ye are come to try and tempt me, whether I will give out what suits with your intentions and resolutions; if so you will embrace it, but if not, my counsels must be rejected, and your own established.

"As I live, saith the Lord God, I will not be inquired of by you." This hypocritical carriage of theirs did so displease, yea, provoke the Lord, that he swears he will not be inquired of by them. Had they come in truth and simplicity of heart, intending to hearken to the Lord, and obey his voice, whatever he had advised them, he would have been inquired of by them; but being they had fallacious spirits, and came in a way of mockage unto God, therefore he deals roundly and severely with them, and binds it with an oath, that he will not be inquired of by them.

But they did inquire of God, they came to the prophet to inquire of him, ver. 1: how then is it true that the Lord saith, and swears, he will not be inquired of by them? The meaning of those words is, I will not answer them: let them inquire, ask what they please, I will not answer them, and so it is all one as if I were not inquired of: so the Septuagint, Vulgate, and French have it, though they do ask, they shall not obtain, they shall not prevail, I will not answer: or if I do, it shall not be such an answer as you would have.

Ver. 4. "Wilt thou judge them?" &c. Besides the appellation, this verse consists of an interrogation and an injunction. The interrogation is double, "Wilt thou judge them? wilt thou judge them?" The injunction, "cause them to know the abominations," &c.

In this verse, the Lord doth anticipate and prevent the prophet, who having good thoughts of these elders of Israel, that came to inquire of the Lord, was ready to plead for them, when he saw the Lord so severe and resolute against them, as not to vouchsafe them an answer: Lord, what is the matter? these men are conscientious, they do their duty, they come to consult for the good of the people, they would do nothing, being in a strait and danger, without thee: Lord, be not so peremptory, listen unto them, and give them a gracious answer. God foreseeing that the prophet would be their patron, and plead for them, he takes him off from this, by saying, "Wilt thou judge them?" that is, Wilt thou deem them to be honest, sincere, plain-hearted men, that come with a purpose to know and obey the will of God? thou art deceived, they are deep dissemblers, devilish politicians, pretending one thing and intending another; they come not out of duty or conscience, but to get countenance from me and thee, to cloak their cursed designs; therefore parley not with them, plead not for them, be not troubled about them, pray not to me in behalf of them. So that this interrogation carries the force of a negation and prohibition with it.

The word "judge" is frequently used for pleading, as in Jer. v. 28; Isa. i. 17; Psal. lxxii. 4; Ezek. xxii. 2; xxiii. 36; and so we have interpreted it here. The doubling of the words, "Wilt thou judge them? wilt thou judge them?" sets out the heinousness of their sin, and the severity of the Lord, that would not suffer the prophet to plead for them.

"Cause them to know the abominations of their fathers." Be thou so far from pleading for them, that thou possess them with and present before them the abominations of their fathers which they follow. Of abominations hath been spoken before; by fathers, their predecessors, kings and others, are meant, who were idolaters, oppressors, and profane.

Obs. 1. The Lord keeps an exact account of his people's sufferings; be the time long or short, he observes it. "In the seventh year, fifth month, and tenth day:" that was, of their captivity. The Lord forgot not how long they had been in Babylon, he notes how the time of their trouble passes. In chap. xxiv. 1, the ninth year, tenth month, and tenth day are mentioned; in chap. xxix. 1, the tenth year, tenth month, and twelfth day are set down; in chap. xxvi. 1, the eleventh year and first day of the month are specified; in chap. xl. 1, the twenty-fifth year of the captivity is named. They were captives in Babylon, suffered hard things, but God took notice of the time, and how the years ran out. It is said Israel served Eglon eighteen years, Judg. iii. 14; that Jabin oppressed them twenty years, chap. iv. 3. It is not said only that the woman had a spirit of infirmity, but the time is recorded also, she had it eighteen years, Luke xiii. 11; so in John v. 5, not only the man and his infirmity is mentioned, but the time also how long, thirty-eight years: so Æneas is said not only to have had the palsy, but to have kept his bed eight years, Acts ix. 33. God tells the years, months, and days, that his people endure adversity: seventy years were determined that they should be in Babylon, Jer. xxix. 10, 11, and God gave them to see, he observed as well, yea, better than they, how they passed.

Obs. 2. The time of men's doing some things is specially noted by the Lord. These elders coming to inquire of the Lord, the time of it is recorded, "in the seventh year, fifth month, and tenth day." Though all things be noted by the Lord, yet some things more especially than others. See how the actions of Josiah are observed; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3, "In the eighth year of his reign, while he was yet young, he began to seek after the God of David his father: and in the twelfth year he began to purge Judah and Jerusalem from the high places." Ver. 8, "In the eighteenth year of his reign" he repaired the house of the Lord his God; and kept the great passover in that year, chap. xxxv. 18, 19. When Jeroboam feasted and sacrificed to the calves he had made, God took notice of the month and day; 1 Kings xii. 32, it was the eighth month and fifteenth day. When Jehoiakim cut the roll, cast it into the fire, and burnt it, God noted the time of it, Jer. xxxvi. 22, 23. When Esther was taken into the royal house by Ahasuerus, the time is eyed by the Lord, and recorded, chap. ii. 16. See Ezra x. 16; 2 Chron. xxix. 17; Esth. ix. 1, 18; Jer. lii. 31; xxxix. 2, where the times of things are specially recorded. Let men take heed what they do, and when they do it. Matt. xxvi. 15, 16, God observed the time when Judas covenanted with the chief priests, to sell Christ for thirty pieces of silver; "from that time forth he sought opportunity to betray him." When the persecution of the church was, God took notice of it; Acts viii. 1, "At that time:" so Herod's slaying of James; "About that time, he stretched forth his hands," Acts xii. 1, 2.

Obs. 3. Hypocrisy is a close sin, and is in those ofttimes we little think. It is found where it was not expected, in "the elders of Israel;" those who here came to Ezekiel, pretended piety, sat before him, as if they would hearken to whatsoever the Lord should say, and do it; yet they intended no such thing, but were resolved to go on in their own ways, and to be as the Babylonians and heathens, as you may see, ver. 32, that so they might enjoy peace and safety. They did here like many that are upon marriage, who will go to two or three to inquire and have counsel, but are resolved to go on, whatever is said unto them: so whatever counsel they should have had given them from the Lord, they meant to go on in their wicked ways; and this was profound hypocrisy, whose wont it is to veil the foulest things with the fairest pretences. In Ananias and Sapphira there was dissimulation, Acts v.; so in those who came to Jeremiah, entreating him to pray for them, and to consult with God for them: it was a time of affliction, and they would do whatever God should say unto them by Jeremiah; but they dealt hypocritically with him, and God; they were resolved to go into Egypt, although they sent Jeremiah to ask of the Lord, whether they should or no. He told them they must not go; if they did, they should perish there; and because they would go, Jer. xlii. 20, he tells them they dissembled in their hearts, when they sent him to the Lord to pray for them: here was damnable hypocrisy in them. So those that came to Christ, Matt. xxii. 16—18, they carried a foul business very smoothly: "Master, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, neither carest thou for any man. Tell us therefore, What thinkest thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Caesar, or not?" Here was villany couched under these words; they thought to entangle Christ, and to have got advantage hereby to have cut him off; and therefore perceiving their wickedness, he saith, "Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites?" There are many, it is to be feared, who will be found hypocrites at last, who now frequent the assemblies, and come to hear the word of God, but do it not. Are there not many who come to hear and sit before the Lord, and his ministers, as if they would conform to what he should give out by them; but they hold fast their corrupt opinions, vile lusts, wretched practices: and what is this but hypocrisy? Those in Ezek. xxxiii. 31, 32, they came to the prophet, heard him, gave him good words, but nothing they would do; their hearts went after their covetousness, and they were no better than hypocrites. So now, if men come not with honest hearts, intending to do what they hear, they come hypocritically.

Obs. 4. To inquire and ask counsel of the prophets and men of God, is of ancient standing and warrantable. Here the elders of Israel, that had years, experience, they come to a prophet. Their coming was not unlawful or condemnable, but their coming sinfully. It was a frequent practice of old, to consult with the prophets, 1 Sam. ix. 9; 1 Kings xxii. 15; 2 Kings viii. 8; Jer. xxi. 2; xxxvii. 7; and their coming to them was coming to the Lord, as here they came to inquire of the Lord. Then men look the right way upon the prophets, when they look at God in them, and what he saith by them, with resolution to follow the same. What though now there are no prophets nor apostles immediately inspired and infallible to consult withal, yet there are pastors and teachers, with whom Christ hath promised to be to the end of the world, who are given to perfect and edify the body of Christ: and therefore upon consultation with them, you may be helped to that light which of yourselves you cannot attain unto.

Obs. 5. The prophets were to give out the Lord's mind in his name and words, unto those they were sent unto. "Speak unto the elders of Israel, and say, Thus saith the Lord God:" he might not speak his own mind, his own words, in his own name, he must not say, Thus saith Ezekiel, but, "Thus saith the Lord:" this gave weight and authority to the word, and bred the greater reverence in the hearts of the hearers. That which is from the Lord, hath a divine stamp upon it, a divine power in it; but that which is man's is like himself, frail and feeble: you may refuse it without any considerable prejudice, but not so with the word of the Lord.

Obs. 6. How closely soever men carry their wicked devices, with what colours soever they varnish and paint them over, though they may, can, delude and deceive men, even prophets, yet they cannot impose upon God and deceive him. Ezekiel was outreached by these old foxes, these hypocritical elders, because he could not see into their hearts, discern their intentions; but the Lord, whose eye pierceth into the depths, saw what was within, and detected their foul insides, notwithstanding their pious pretences. "Are ye come to inquire of me?" whom do you think I am? what a God do you make of me? am I like unto man, such as yourselves? No, no; I know your hearts, ye hypocrites. How dare you come into my presence to inquire of me, when you are resolved to go on in your own ways? The Lord knew they had idols in their hearts, Ezek. xiv. 1—3; they were elders of Israel likewise. Great men oftentimes are great hypocrites, they think, being crafty, to go beyond God and his prophets; but it cannot be; he knows upon what grounds, with what purpose, intentions, resolutions, men come to hear his word, to ask counsel of his servants. Look to yourselves, spirits, and all your ways; God seeth and knoweth all, and if you be not sincere, upright, without guile and hypocrisy, he will find you out and detect you.

Obs. 7. When men come to God or his ordinances with hypocritical hearts, they get nothing of him; he is so far from accepting and hearing of them, that he rejects them, and resolves not to answer them. "Come ye to inquire of me? as I live, I will not be inquired of by you." Do you think to have my ear, my countenance, my heart, my hand to do for you? No, you shall have nothing at all of me; be gone, I will afford you no answer: though ye be elders of Israel, yet you are hypocrites, and they are odious to me, be they of the highest rank, or lowest; it is not your hoary heads will move me, seeing you have hypocritical hearts: you are resolved to go on in your ways, and I am resolved to go on in my way. I will not answer you; come oft, sit long before the prophet, if you will, answer of me you shall have none, none suitable to your desires and expectations. Job, speaking of a hypocrite, saith, "Will God hear his cry when trouble cometh upon him?" chap. xxxvii. 9; at such a time he will cry, and cry hard, but will God hear him? No; God hath no pleasure in hypocrites: therefore saith Ezekiel, chap. viii. 18, "Though they cry in mine ears with a loud voice, yet will I not hear them;" the like you have in Micah iii. 4. If men's hearts be not upright, sincere, let them pray, and cry in prayer, let them hear, and hear attentively, let them come to a prophet to ask counsel, and wait, God respects them not, will not answer them: "the upright in their way are his delight," Prov. xi. 20; he delights in their persons, their presence, their prayers, in doing for them. Prov. x. 29, "The way of the Lord is strength to the upright." What is the way of the Lord? Prayer, hearing of the word, asking counsel of his prophets and servants, are the ways of the Lord; in these he appears, is found, lets out strength, but it is when men are upright, not hypocritical. Come not therefore resolved to go on in your own ways, but, as Peter saith, "Lay aside all malice, all guile, and hypocrisies, envies, and evil speaking, and as new born babes," &c.

Obs. 8. Hypocrites and wicked men may carry themselves so, as to deceive the prophets and servants of God. These elders, by their coming, putting the prophet on to inquire of the Lord for them, sitting before him for an answer, bred such good thoughts of them in the prophet's mind, as that when God told him he would not be inquired at by them, he was ready to plead for them, and excuse them from being hypocrites, wondering the Lord should be so hot and resolute against them, as not to vouchsafe them an answer. He thought they were good men, and worthy of better entertainment at the hands of God, than they had, but he was deceived. Simon Magus demeaned himself so, that he begat a good esteem in the heart of Philip, and was admitted to baptism, Acts viii. 13. In John's days many got into the church, who seemed saints, but were hypocrites: 1 John ii. 19, "They went out from us that they might be made manifest." John and others had had good opinions of them, but were deluded by them. False apostles got into the church of Ephesus, and for a time had gained too much upon the angel thereof, Rev. ii. 2. When the captains and people came to Jeremiah in a smooth way, promising to do whatever the Lord should say by him, they insinuated so far into him, that they prevailed with him to inquire of the Lord for them; but they juggled with him, Jer. xlii. Prophets and ministers may be and are deceived oft with the specious pretences of naughty men; because they would not be uncharitable, they are many times too credulous.

Obs. 9. Hypocrites are not to be pleaded for. "Wilt thou judge them, son of man, wilt thou judge them?" God would not have the prophet to plead for or excuse them. Hypocrites are so odious in God's eye, that he takes it unkindly when his prophets and ministers appear for them: if they have thoughts that way, he dislikes it, and forbids them. This double interrogation is a double negation. These hypocrites would have drawn in God and the prophet to have countenanced their vile intentions, therefore God would neither answer them, nor suffer his prophet to speak for them. Hypocrites are not always the greatest of sinners, but they are ever the worst of sinners, because they pretend to be holy, and under pretence of holiness cover all their wickedness. The devil is never more devil, than when he transforms himself into an angel of light; he seeming light, being darkness, is devilishly hypocritical, hiding all his hellish darkness under pretended light: and so do all hypocrites, who are his eldest sons; under the light of being religious, they do all their deeds of darkness. The Jews were "a hypocritical nation," Isa. x. 6; Jer. vii. 9, 10; and therefore God forbids Jeremiah to pray for them, chap. xiv. 11. And what if they would pray themselves? you have an answer in Job xliii. 16: God tells you that "an hypocrite shall not come before him," that is, to have acceptance of his person, or hear any comfortable answer from him. Christ hath told hypocrites what they must look for, Matt. xxiii. "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!" woe they may look for, and must hear of. Woe to them for imposing upon God, as if he saw not their close wickedness! Woe to them for abusing religion to further their devilish designs! Woe to them for deceiving others by their painted shows and professions! and woe to them for deceiving themselves!

Obs. 10. The prophets and servants of God, when they are inquired of by men, must not proceed according to their desires, or their own apprehensions of them that do so desire, but they must wait for the mind of God, and do answerably thereunto. "Wilt thou judge them, son of man? cause them to know the abominations of their fathers." They would have thee inquire of me for them, but I will not be inquired of, they shall not have their desires: thou apprehendest they are good, and wouldst speak for them, but thou must not do after thy own apprehensions, thou must attend my pleasure, and do what that is; and it is this, "make them to know the abominations of their fathers." They did such things as provoked me to cast these their children into this Babylonish captivity; and will they continue in their ways, or proceed to worse? Go thy ways, lay before them the abominable things their fathers I have done, see what effect that will have with them. Stand not their desires, stand not upon thy own apprehensions of them: I have made known my will unto thee, go thou and make it known unto them without dispute or delay. Not the people's desires, nor the prophet's fancies, must be his direction, when he is to make answer to those that inquire: but the will of God made known by his word and Spirit.

Ver. 5. And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God: In the day when I chose Israel, and lifted up mine hand unto the seed of the house of Jacob, and made myself known unto them in the land of Egypt, when I lifted up mine hand unto them, saying, I am the Lord your God.

Here begins the third part of the chapter, which is the relation of God's dealing with them, and theirs towards him:

1. In Egypt, from this verse to the 10th.
2. In the desert, from the 10th to the 27th.
3. In Canaan, from the 27th to the 33rd.

In the first of these you have sundry choice mercies of God set down, with his command, and their notorious wickedness.

The mercies are reckoned up in ver. 5, 6, 7, and 9, and they are these:

- (1.) His election of them.
- (2.) His revelation of himself unto them.
- (3.) His profession of being their God.
- (4.) His promise to bring them out of the land of Egypt into the land of Canaan.
- (5.) His confirmation of all these, by lifting up his hand.
- (6.) His sparing of them for his name's sake.
- (7.) His bringing them forth out of Egypt.

The command is to cease from Egyptian idolatry, ver. 7.

Their sin was rebellion, ver. 8.

I come now to open the words, and so to give you the observations.

"In the day when I chose Israel." The Hebrew is, in the day of my choosing in Israel. Septuagint, from what day I chose the house of Israel.

"Day," here, is not taken in opposition to night, as it is John xi. 9, 10, nor for time indefinitely, as Gen. iii. 5, but for the time wherein some particular thing was evidenced to be done.

By election, here, is not meant the decree or purpose of God, to take the Jews to be his people, that was before all time, from eternity: but the manifestation of that election. In the day that I made it appear that I had elected you. Election or choosing, in the Scripture, sometimes refers to things, as Deut. xxiii. 16; Gen. xliii. 11; 1 Kings xviii. 25; Prov. xxii. 1; sometimes to persons, and then it is either to Christ, as Isa. xlii. 1; or to angels, as 1 Tim. v. 21; or to men, and then it is spoken either of persons who are invisible members of the mystical body of Christ, as 2 Thess. ii. 13, or of a community and visible body, and so it is here. God chose this nation of the Jews to be his nation and church, Deut. vii. 6, to have his oracles, ordinances, and means of grace amongst them.

"In the day when I chose Israel." What time this was, is to be searched out. It was not that time when God manifested himself to Abraham, and bid him get him out of his country, to a land he would show him, and he would make of him a great nation, Gen. xii. 1, 2; nor that time when he appeared to Jacob, and said, "I am God, the God of thy father: fear not to go down into Egypt: for I will there make of thee a great nation: I will go down with thee into Egypt; and I will also surely bring thee up again," Gen. xli. 2—4. They were not yet a nation, nor in Egypt, of both which the choice here is meant. The time, then, was, when God took notice of their hard sufferings in Egypt, by the rigorous taskmasters, and appeared to Moses, and bid him say to Pharaoh, "Israel is my son, my firstborn; let my son go, that he may serve me," Exod. iv. 22, 23; and sent Aaron with him upon that message to Pharaoh, chap. v. 1, where they go in to Pharaoh and say, "Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Let my people go, that they may hold a feast unto me in the wilderness." Thou thinkest these people are thine, and therefore holdest them in servitude and bondage; but the Lord God of heaven is the God of Israel, he challengeth this people to be his, and commands thee to let them go and serve him.

"And lifted up mine hand." Lifting up the hand is a phrase much mentioned in the book of God; it is seven times in this chapter, twice in this verse, once in the 6th, and then it is in ver. 15, 23, 28, and 42. To lift up the hand notes divers things, and was used in divers weighty things.

1. In blessing. Psal. cxxxiv. 2, "Lift up your hands in the sanctuary, and bless the Lord." Lev. ix. 22, "Aaron lifted up his hand toward the people, and blessed them." Luke xxiv. 50, Christ "lifted up his hands, and blessed them."

2. In prayer. Psal. lxxiii. 4, "I will lift up my hands in thy name." 1 Tim. ii. 8, "I will that men pray every where, lifting up holy hands." And Psal. lxxxviii. 9, Demas saith, he called upon God daily, and stretched out his hands unto him. Lam. ii. 19, "Lift up thine hands toward him for the life of thy children."

3. It notes open mercy, favour, aid. Isa. xlix. 22, "I will lift up mine hand to the gentiles," that is, I will reach unto them the gospel, and by the power and grace of it, bring them to Zion. In this sense it is to be taken, Psal. x. 12, "O God, lift up thy hand; forget not the humble;" that is, evidence thy power, and help the humble and afflicted against their oppressors.

4. To lift up the hand, imports threatening, hurting, smiting. Psal. cvi. 26, "He lifted up his hand against them, to overthrow them in the wilderness." When men are angry with others, and threaten to do them harm, to ruin them, they oft lift up their hands and fists against them; thus it signifies in Micah v. 9; Ezek. xliv. 12.

5. To lift up the hand, implies swearing. It was a gesture used in that sacred act, Gen. xiv. 22; Deut. xxxii. 40. It is expressed so in Isa. iii. 7, "In that day shall he swear," the Hebrew is, lift up the hand. The first and second sense pertains not to this place; and though some would have it meant of God's lifting up his hand to help the Israelites out of their bondage, by the smiting of Pharaoh and the Egyptians, yet to me the last sense seems most suitable; and lifting up the hand here imports swearing; it refers to what you have Exod. vi. 8, "I will bring you to the land concerning which I did swear," or lift up my hand, "to give it to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob." God had promised and sworn to them, that he would bring their seed out of Egypt, into Canaan, Gen. i. 24; xv. 7, 14, 16.

"Unto the seed of the house of Jacob." Montanus reads the words, for the seed of the house of Jacob. Vatablus, upon, or, on the seed. Here it is, "unto the seed;" God's promise and oath was for them, over them, and unto them. By "seed" is meant, the posterity of Jacob. God had told Jacob that his seed should be as the dust of the earth, Gen. xxviii. 14; and his seed did greatly multiply in Egypt, Exod. i. 7; and his seed is called sometimes "the seed of Israel," Isa. xlv. 25, and "seed of the house of Israel," Jer. xxiii. 8; sometimes "the seed of Jacob," Psal. xxii. 23, and here, "the seed of the house of Jacob," because Jacob or Israel was the root, stock, family out of which the Jews in Egypt sprang. "And made myself known unto them." Great were the afflictions of the Jews in Egypt; they were like men in a storm at sea, and that in a dark night; when day breaks it is some refreshing, and such was God's making himself known unto them. This making himself known unto them was for their deliverance. God appeared to Moses in the burning bush, and told him who he was, and what he was about to do, Exod. iii. 2. 6—8; he had promised Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to give their seed the land of Canaan, and now he was come to give being to that promise, to make himself known by his name Jehovah, which they knew not; in this sense they saw not that promise fulfilled, but Moses, Aaron, and their seed should now see it, chap. vi. 3, 8; God would put forth his mighty power, and by a strong hand bring them forth, ver. 1. God made himself known to them by Moses, who was God's messenger, and instrument to speak, and do what he pleased; Psal. ciii. 7, "He made known his ways unto Moses, his acts unto the children of Israel;" God's pity, faithfulness, and power were abundantly made known.

After the Lord had appeared to Moses, answered all his objections he made against undertaking the difficult work of delivering the people, and joined Aaron with him for his assistant, in chap. iv. they gather all the elders of Israel together, they told them all the words God had spoken, and did the signs by which God had confirmed the words concerning their deliverance; which the people believed, bowed, and worshipped God, ver. 29—31. Here God was made known unto them.

"I am the Lord your God." Hebrew is, I Jehovah your God. The first is absolute, the second relative. Of Jehovah I have spoken heretofore; it notes God's nature and being, which is of itself, within itself, and dependent upon none; all other beings are from him, and depend on him, according to what you have, Rom. xi. 36, "Of him, through him, and to him are all things;" and Acts xvii. 28, "In him we live, move, and have our being."

"Your God." This is a great word, and hath great mercy in it; an engaging word, tying God and all his attributes to them: your God to counsel you, your God to protect you, your God to deliver you, your God to comfort you, your God to plead for you, your God to teach you, your God to set up my name and worship among you, your God to bless you with the dews of heaven and fulness of the earth, your God to hear your prayers and to make you happy.

While they were in Egypt, God professed himself to be their God: Exod. vi. 7, "I will take you to me for a people, and I will be to you a God; and ye shall know that I am the Lord your God." He would not be a titular God unto them, like the heathen's gods; but they should have experience of him and his attributes, he would do by them, and for them, as a God in covenant.

Obs. 1. There are times when the Lord is pleased to show mercy to people in misery and great afflictions. In the day that I chose thee. Israel was in a distressed condition in Egypt, in a very low estate; their lives were embittered with hard bondage, inasmuch that they sighed and cried, Exod. ii. 23; and now at this time, and being in this condition, God heard their groanings, looked upon and had respect unto them, now he chose them, ver. 24, 25; therefore Isaiah saith, chap. xlviii. 10, God chose them "in the furnace of affliction." Times of misery are times of God's showing mercy; when they were in a hot fiery furnace, ready to be consumed to ashes, no likelihood of escaping, yet even then did the Lord appear and manifest his choice of them. Ezek. xvi. when this people were in their blood, filth, nakedness, saith God, "I passed by thee, and looked upon thee, and beheld thy time was the time of love; I spread my skirt over thee, and covered thy nakedness," ver. 8: at that time God took this people into favour. God hath his day to bind up the breach of his people, and to heal "the stroke of their wound," Isa. xxx. 26. Hosea tells you, that after two days he will revive his people, and in the third day raise them up; though they be like men dead and buried, yet God hath his time to revive, raise, and to cause to live in his sight. They were as dry bones in Babylon, and served a hard service there; but there was a day wherein God gave them rest from their sorrow, fears, and servitude, Isa. xiv. 3, 4. The gentiles were a long time in the wilderness, in a lost and perishing condition; Eph. ii. 12, there was a time they were without Christ, without hope, without God in the world, but God had a day to manifest his choice of them; ver. 13, "But now in Christ Jesus they who sometimes were afar off, are made nigh:" there was a now, a time, a day for them. So Zeph. iii. 16, 19, 20.

Obs. 2. The taking of a people to be the Lord's, is of mere grace and mercy; it is God's own free act. "In the day when I chose Israel." Israel did not choose him, Israel had nothing to affect him, but out of his good pleasure he chose Israel. The Lord makes open protestation, Deut. vii. 7, 8, that he did not set his love upon them, nor choose them, because they were more in number than other people, but because he loved them. And what made God love them? were they better than other nations? They came of the Amorites and Hittites, they were in their blood, when he said unto them, "Live," Ezek. xvi. 3, 6. Did he foresee they would believe, repent, and persevere in keeping his commands, and honour him above the rest of the world? no, he foresaw that they would be more wicked than the nations and countries round about them, chap. v. 6, 7, and exceed Sodom and Samaria in wickedness, as it is chap. xvi. 47, 51, 52. What was it then caused God to love and choose this people? Nothing without God himself, all was within doors that stirred him up to do it. "I will say to them which were not my people, Thou art my people," Hos. ii. 23. God's will is the cause, and nothing else: Rom. ix. 18, he will have mercy on whom he will: Isa. xli. 9, "I have chosen thee, and not cast thee away."

Obs. 3. When God's people are in troubles, he discovers and reveals himself unto them, one way or other, by one means or other. "I made myself known unto them in the land of Egypt." That was a land and house of bondage to them, they met with reproaches, threats, stripes, rigour, and hard labour there; and when the case was so with them, then God unmasketh, and shows himself unto them. When Joseph's brethren were in great trouble, then he made known himself unto them, Gen. xlv.; and so did God unto his people by Moses and Aaron: he made known what promise and oath he had made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; he made known his tender-heartedness to them, that their cries came up to his ears, and that he was affected with their sorrows, and would no longer endure the Egyptians to oppress them: he made known his mighty power unto them, that he was stronger than Pharaoh and all his strength: Deut. iv. 34, 35, "Hath God assayed to go and take him a nation from the midst of another nation, by temptations, by signs, and by wonders, by war, by a mighty hand, by a stretched-out arm, and by great terrors, according to all that the Lord your God did for you in Egypt before your eyes? Unto thee it was showed, that thou mightest know that the Lord he is God." The Lord made himself known by these in an eminent manner unto them. It is God's way to appear to his people in the time of their calamity and darkness: Isa. liv. 11—14, "O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colours, and lay thy foundations with sapphires. And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones. And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children. In righteousness shalt thou be established," &c. What a precious, glorious discovery of God was here unto the church, being in a storm! So when Rachel wept for her children, and refused to be comforted, because they were not, how did the Lord break out of the clouds and shine, when he said to her, "Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears; for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemies," Jer. xxxi. 15, 16. In the time of affliction God's words and works are more observed, take deeper impression, endear more unto him, therefore he loves to manifest himself in them.

Obs. 4. God knowing men's weakness, condescends for to strengthen and establish them in the assurance of his favour towards them. Not only by word and works did God evidence it, that the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were his chosen ones, his people, which might have sufficed; but he took his oath upon it; "I lifted up mine hand unto the seed of the house of Jacob:" yea, that it might be the more firm, he doubled it; "When I lifted up mine hand unto them, saying, I am the Lord your God." For God to tell any people he hath chosen them, argues great favour; then, to appear unto them, and make large manifestations of himself and his good will unto them, by words, providential and wonderful working for them, argues more and more favour; and then to swear unto them, or declare he hath sworn unto them, and not only to do some few things for them, but to be their God, this is height of favour, wonderful stooping on God's part; and this he did to confirm their hearts in assurance of his love. God cannot falsify his word, much less his oath. God did swear, that Abraham and his seed might have strong consolation, not stagger, question his love any more; and the apostle applies it to himself, Heb. vi. 17, 18, to all believers, who are heirs of the promise, and under the oath of God, that we might have strong consolation.

Ver. 6. In the day that I lifted up mine hand unto them, to bring them forth of the land of Egypt into a land that I had espied for them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands.

God, having chosen the Jews to be his people, made himself known unto them, and professed himself to be their God: here he tells them of the good promise he made unto them, which was, to bring them out of Egypt into Canaan. The praise and encomium whereof is set out more fully in this verse than in any part of holy writ besides. It is threefold:

1. From the Discoverer; it was a land of God's looking out for them.

2. From the commodities it had; that in plenty it flowed "with milk and honey."

3. From the eminency of it above other lands; it "is the glory of all lands."

Of "lifting up the hand," hath been spoken in the former verse.

"The land of Egypt." The Hebrew is, the land of Mizraim. So Egypt is constantly called in the Old Testament, and thrice, "the land of Ham," Psal. cv. 23, 27, and cvi. 22; and once, "the tabernacle of Ham," Psal. lxxviii. 51. Mizraim was the son of Ham, who possessed that part of Africa, and from him it was called Mizraim, or the land of Mizraim, and sometimes the land of Ham, who was his father.

Parasus in Gen. chap. x. Josephus saith, the Egyptians in his time were called Mesraei, by the eastern people. In the Septuagint it is rendered Egypt, so called from one Egyptus, who reigned there some three hundred and ninety years after the Israelites came out of Egypt. This land was very plentiful, and in Joseph's days supplied Jacob's family with corn, when the famine was great: for the fruitfulness thereof, it was called the granary of the Roman people; but to the Jews it was a house of bondage.

"Into a land that I had espied for them." This land was Canaan, which God looked out for them amongst all lands in the world. The Hebrew word signifies, to search out by wandering over, and viewing on every side: so did the Lord here; he took special notice of this land; his eyes did run to and fro throughout the earth, to see what land was the chiefest, and Canaan was the land he pitched upon. The Septuagint is, to a land which I had prepared for them: God had long before prepared and provided this land. Israel was his son, his firstborn, and like a loving and provident parent, he provided a land and habitation for him.

"Flowing with milk and honey." This encomium of this land is eighteen several times in the book of God: four times in Exodus, as chap. iii. 8, 17; xiii. 5; xxxiii. 3; once in Leviticus, chap. xx. 24; twice in Numbers, chap. xiii. 27; xiv. 8; six times in Deuteronomy, chap. vi. 3; xi. 9; xxvi. 9, 15; xxvii. 3; xxxi. 20; twice in Jeremiah, chap. xi. 5; xxxii. 22; once in Joshua, chap. v. 6; and twice in this chapter, in this verse and the 15th. Doubtless the land of Canaan abounded with milk and honey, as may appear by Gen. xviii. 8; Prov. xxvii. 27; 1 Sam. xiv. 26; 2 Sam. xvii. 29; but the phrase here, of "flowing with milk and honey," is proverbial, and notes plenty of all good and precious things; as you may see, Joel iii. 18; Amos ix. 13; and in Job, plenty is set out by rivers, floods, and brooks of honey and butter, chap. xx. 17. And it is clear that the fruits of the earth were called "milk and honey;" Numb. xiii. 26, 27, when the spies that searched the land came back and brought of the fruit thereof, they said, "Surely it floweth with milk and honey," and this is the fruit of it; the figs, pomegranates, and grapes, were part of the "milk and honey." So that synecdochically here by "milk and honey," are understood all good things, needful and delightful.

This plenty is set out by "milk and honey," rather than by other things,

1. Because they are most common, serving old and young, all sorts of people. Milk is food for babes, and for those whose age hath so enfeebled their stomachs, as that they cannot bear strong meat.

2. They are always in a readiness. Other meats usually require much time to fit them for our tastes.

3. They are sweet and pleasant. Though other things be so, as oil and wine, yet not comparable to "milk and honey."

That Canaan did abound with all good things, see Deut. viii. 7—9, where it is called, "a good land," in which they should not want any thing. This was partly from the nature of the air and soil, the one being very wholesome, and the other very fat, and partly from the peculiar blessing of God upon the Jews; he gave them the former and the latter rains, he made the land in the sixth year to bring forth fruit for three years, Lev. xxv. 18—21; chap. xxvi. 3—5; Deut. xi. 13—15; which blessing, for their sins, God hath taken away, as he threatened, Lev. xxvi. 20; Deut. xxviii. 38—40; therefore they are deceived that think or say Judea was no fertile place. Rab-shakeh, who was an enemy to the Jews and their God, yet acknowledged their land to be a fertile land, 2 Kings xviii. 31, 32. Whatever men's conceits are of it now, it was a land which flowed with "milk and honey;" which proverbial speech was of use also among others, to set out plenty and fruitfulness by.

"Which is the glory of all lands." The Hebrew is, which is the ornament of all lands, the honour, ornament, or glory of all. The Septuagint hath it, κρητιον, the honeycomb; it was so fruitful and pleasant a land, that it was like a honeycomb, wonderful sweet to the inhabitants. Vatablus calls it the land to be desired above all lands. Kireker interprets צַי of that which affects the mind and sense, and invites to the loving of it, affording pleasure and delight. The Spirit of God calls it, the land of desire, thrice, Psal. cvi. 24; Jer. iii. 19; Zech. vii. 14, so the Hebrew is, and so the margin hath it; a "good land," Deut. viii. 7; an "exceeding good land," Numb. xiv. 7. It was not only a "good land," but a land that exceeded in goodness; "that good land," Deut. iv. 22; the words are very emphatical, הָאֶרֶץ הַטְּיִבָה הַזֹּאת that land, that good, that. In Dan. xi. it is twice termed the "glorious land," ver. 16, 41. אֶרֶץ הַצְּבִי the land of ornament, or the land of glory, yea, that glory which no other land attained unto.

The land is thought to be situated in the midst of the world, being very temperate, neither too hot, nor too cold; it is computed to be two hundred miles in length, and not above fifty in breadth. It had thirty-one kings in it when Joshua smote it, when he brought the Jews to possess it, Josh. xii; and in David's days there were found in Israel and Judah (for so it was then divided) thirteen hundred thousand fighting men, besides women, children, and such as were not able to fight, 2 Sam. xxiv. This land was "the glory of all lands," in regard of the fruitfulness and plenty of it, of which see Deut. viii. 7—9; xxxii. 13, 14; Isa. xxxvi. 17; a land beyond Egypt, (though some have affirmed the contrary,) for, Deut. xi. 10—12, "The land thou goest in to possess is not as the land of Egypt, from whence ye came out, where thou sowedst thy seed, and waterdest it with thy foot, as a garden of herbs: but the land whither ye go to possess it, is a land of hills and valleys, and drinketh water of the rain of heaven: a land which the Lord thy God careth for: the eyes of the Lord thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year." This is a divine testimony, and a high praise of it, and doth justly entitle it to be the "glory of all lands."

What our prophet saith here of Canaan may be suspected, and seems to be contradicted by Isaiah, chap. xiii. 19, where he calls Babylon "the glory of kingdoms;" and if that be the glory of them, how can Canaan be the "glory of all lands?" He speaks of the city Babylon, which was the head of Chaldaea, and gave denomination to a great part of Mesopotamia and Assyria, the walls whereof were two hundred feet high, fifty cubits broad, and sixty miles in compass, which the Babylonians counted the glory of kingdoms, and boasted of. If it did exceed Jerusalem in its greatness, richness, strength, and populousness, yet it fell short of it in other things. Jerusalem represented the true church, Gal. iv. 26;

Heb. xii. 22; Babylon, the malignant and false church, Rev. xvii. 5. Glorious things were spoken of Jerusalem; and it was the faithful city, Isa. i. 21; the holy city, Isa. lii. 1; the city of truth, Zech. viii. 3; a city of righteousness, Isa. i. 26; the city of the Lord of hosts: such things were never spoken of Babylon.

Again, if Babylon be the glory of kingdoms, it is not said to be of all kingdoms. It might be the glory of heathenish kingdoms, it was not the glory of Canaan; for there was the idol Bel, other images, and abominable idolatry, Jer. li. 44, 47, which eclipsed the other glory it had.

Again, if it be granted that Babylon was the glory of all kingdoms, and so of Judea or Canaan, yet take Canaan in its latitude, with all its excellences, and so considered, it is the "glory of all lands," and beyond Babylon, taken for the city or the country; for, besides its milk and honey, its fruitfulness and plenty, there was something of a higher nature which made it so. For,

1. It was the land of promise, Heb. xi. 9.

2. A type of heaven, Heb. iii. 11.

3. The land God chose to dwell in, Psal. cxxxii. 13, 14; Exod. xv. 17.

4. In it was the temple, worship, ordinances, and oracles of God, 1 Kings vi. and viii. Whence it was called the holy land, Zech. ii. 12; holy habitation, Exod. xv. 13; the land of the Lord, Isa. xiv. 2; Psal. lxxxv. 2; the land of uprightness, Isa. xxvi. 10; the land of Immanuel, Isa. viii. 8; and upon this account, it was "the glory of all lands;" for no land besides in all the world was so called as this, or had such prerogatives.

Obs. 1. Old mercies should be minded, not only by those they were first bestowed upon, but also by their posterity, who had benefit by them also. In the former verse and this, God minds them of old mercies, his choice of them, his making known himself unto them, his professing himself to be their God, his bringing them out of Egypt, which were some eight or nine hundred years before, and his espying out a land for them, which was four hundred years before that; for it was in Abraham's days that God took notice of that land; Gen. xii. 1, "Get thee to a land that I will show thee;" ver. 7, "Unto thy seed will I give this land." These old mercies God would have them to mind, though they were in Babylon, and deprived of that good land God had given them. Let men be in what condition they will, old mercies should not be forgotten, especially signal, great, emphatical mercies. When God shall publicly own a people, deliver them from great slavery, put them into a state of freedom, safety, and honour, provide all good things for them, such mercies ought not to be forgotten, but to be remembered from generation to generation. This was done in David's days: Psal. xlv. 1, 2, "We have heard with our ears, O God, our fathers have told us, what work thou didst in their days, in the times of old; how thou didst drive out the heathen with thy hand." Judg. vi. 13, fathers told their children of the miracles God had wrought for them, and how he brought them out of Egypt. And because men are apt to forget former mercies, when they grow old they grow out of mind, the Lord laid a charge upon the Jews that they should not forget them, Deut. vi. 10—12; and commanded them to "remember the days of old, and to consider the years of many generations," and to inquire of the ancient what he had done for them, Deut. xxxii. 7. There are no works like unto God's works, and they ought to be had in remembrance. David kept them in mind, for he professes to the Lord himself, "I remember the days of old, I meditate on all thy works,

I muse on the work of thy hand;" he looked back to the days of Noah, of Abraham, of Joseph, of the Israelites, and of God's dealing with them; and, because the heart is not quickly affected with old mercies, and works of God, he meditated and mused on them, and that till his heart was warmed, and stirred up to praise; as it is, Psal. cv. 5, "Remember his marvellous works that he hath done; his wonders, and the judgments of his mouth; O ye seed of Abraham his servant."

Obs. 2. That lands, countries, and habitations of people, are appointed, ordered, and disposed of by the Lord. He "brings them forth of the land of Egypt, into a land that he had espied for them." All souls, and all lands, are the Lord's, and whom he will he plants where he pleases; he distributes lands and habitations to whom he thinks meet: "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof," Psal. xxiv. 1; he is the sole owner thereof, the true Lord of the soil, and all it brings forth, and he hath "given it to the children of men," Psal. cxv. 16; he hath assigned them their several portions. Deut. xxxii. 8, "The Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam;" the most high God, being Lord paramount, would not have the sons of Adam to live all in one country, or land, but appointed them several lands and countries to dwell in, and set them their bounds and limits, as you may see in Gen. x. especially ver. 25, where Eber names his son Peleg, (which signifies division,) because the earth was divided in his days. After the flood, at the building of Babel, God confounded the languages, and dispersed the posterity of Noah into divers lands, and set them their bounds, Gen. xi. 9; and so, when he brought the Israelites into the land of Canaan, he gave them their bounds, according to what you find, Psal. lxxxviii. 55, "He cast out the heathen also before them, and divided them an inheritance by line, and made the tribes of Israel to dwell in their tents;" he drove out and destroyed the Hittites, the Gergashites, the Amorites, the Canaanites, the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites, seven great and mighty nations, Deut. vii. 1, and gave the land unto his people the Jews. If God now will drive out the bloody, perfidious, and idolatrous out of Ireland, and give it unto others, that the seed of his servants may inherit it, and that those which love his name may dwell therein, who shall blame him for it? And that England hath had right thereunto, not only from Henry the Eighth's days, who was proclaimed king thereof, in parliament here, and in an Irish parliament likewise, if Heylin say true, but also from Henry the Second's time, yea, from Edgar's, who was long before, appears by English history.

Obs. 3. The Lord provides and bestows the choicest mercies upon his own people. If there be a land in the world that flows with milk and honey, that exceeds other lands for plenty and pleasantness, his people shall have it; he espies out Canaan for them, that land was too good for heathens, his people must have it. When God carried Jacob and his family into Egypt, he provided the good and fat of that land for them, Gen. xlv. 18; yea, they were placed in the "best of the land," chap. xlvii. 11. God fed and filled his people with the "finest of the wheat," Psal. cxlvii. 14. Moses mentions seven things together in Deut. xxxii. 13—15, as, "honey out of the rock, oil out of the flinty rock, butter of kine, milk of sheep, fat of lambs, and rams of the breed of Bashan, and goats, fat of kidneys of wheat, the pure blood of the grape;" these the Lord provided for his people, and they had all an excellency in them. When God gives honey, oil, butter, milk, fat, flour, wine, he giveth the best and purest. You may read what choice mercies God bestowed upon this people, Ezek. xvi. 10—13; they had “goodly pleasant things,” Joel iii. 5; the Hebrew is, goodly desirable things; and David acknowledged he had a “goodly heritage.” Psal. xvi. 6. God had not measured out to him a mean portion, but a good; yea, a “goodly heritage,” that which was so in the eyes of all, even a “wealthy place,” Psal. lxxvi. 12. God provided the best places in the court for Esther and her maidens, when in Babylon. Esth. ii. 9, 16; so likewise Daniel and the three children were set in eminent places, Dan. ii. and iii. God made his people to ride and tread upon the high places of the earth, and of their enemies, Deut. xxxii. 13; xxxiii. 29.

Obs. 4. Spiritual mercies make a land glorious, yea, more glorious than all lands that want the same, whatever mercies they else enjoy. Canaan was the glory of all lands, not so much for its flowing with milk and honey, its great plenty it had, as for the spiritual mercies it enjoyed; there was the Lord’s presence, his prophets, his worship, his oracles, and his ordinances, and these made it glorious, yea, more than all the nations far or near. Psal. lxxvi. 1, 2, “In Judah is God known: his name is great in Israel. In Salem also is his tabernacle, and his dwelling-place in Zion.” God was not known in Babylon, in Egypt, in other nations, his tabernacle and dwelling-place was not amongst them, therefore they were not glorious. But see what is in the 4th verse, “Thou art more glorious than the mountains of prey;” thou Judah, thou Israel, thou Salem, thou Zion, that hast spiritual mercies and blessings, art more glorious than they, whatever their glory be. Have the nations abroad goodly towers? thou hast the temple; have they stately cities? thou hast Jerusalem, the city of God; have they wise men? thou hast the prophets; have they gods of gold, silver, and stones? thou hast the true living God, Jehovah, to be thy God; have they human laws that are good? thou hast divine laws that excel; have they temporal excellences? thou hast spiritual; have they the glory of the world? thou hast the glory of heaven. Psal. l. 2, “Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined.” What made Zion so glorious and beautiful? it was the presence of God: if he had not been there, Zion had been like other mountains, and Canaan like other nations; but his presence was like the sun, darting out her beams, and making all lightsome, glorious, and beautiful. Spiritual mercies are beams and rays of that God, who is ten thousand times more bright than the sun; by these he shined in Zion, and made it the perfection, or universality, of beauty; by these he shined out of Zion, and darkened all the glory of the nations, what or how great soever it was. Where God and his ordinances are, there is glory; and where these are not, there is no glory, but Egyptian darkness, a land without the sun.

In Canaan was spiritual light and glory. There were glorious appearances of God, glorious praisings of God, glorious conversions of sinners unto God, glorious sabbaths and assemblies; and glorious beauties of holiness, glorious types of Christ, and people who were the glory of God, Isa. iv. 5, and had glorious communion with God. There were glorious truths, ordinances, and dispensations of God.

So then, wise counsellors, good magistrates, stout soldiers, rich merchants, industrious labourers, strong towns, stately houses, high mountains, fertile vallies, pleasant rivers, goodly corn-fields, herds of cattle, flocks of sheep, with plenty of all outward things, do not make a land so glorious as spiritual mercies do: if God, Christ, gospel, and the ordinances of it, be in a land, they make it glorious, and glorious beyond all other things, and above all other nations. Let us learn to know our true glory, even spiritual mercies, and prize them highly, though loathed by some like manna of old, and pray that such glory may ever dwell in our land.

Ver. 7. Then said I unto them, Cast ye away every man the abominations of his eyes, and defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt: I am the Lord your God.

This verse is a command: wherein you have the Commander, the things commanded, and the reason thereof.

I. The Commander; “Then said I unto them.”

II. The things commanded; which are,

1. Casting away of abominations; where,

(1.) You have a specification of these abominations, they are the abominations of their eyes.

(2.) The extent of this act, “every man.”

2. Non-defilement of themselves with Egypt’s idols.

III. The reason: “I am the Lord your God.”

“Then said I unto them.” For “then,” the Hebrew is, and I said to them. Where the Lord said thus to them, we do not find; the words refer to the time of their being in Egypt, and nothing is recorded in Exodus, that the Lord spake thus unto them, before they departed from Egypt. They were a long time in Egypt, and though Moses mentions not this passage, yet our prophet assures us that the Lord said so; whence we may take this observation:

Obs. That many things said and done by the Lord, and his servants, though omitted in those places which seemed most proper for them in penning the Scriptures, yet are occasionally given forth in other places; as this verse, spoken by the Lord when they were in Egypt, omitted by Moses, and now given out to Ezekiel in Babylon, and recorded by him in this place. Enoch’s prophecy, being uttered in the infancy of the world, was either unknown to, or passed over, if known by Moses, the prophets, and apostles, till Jude’s time, and then it was recorded upon the occasion of the scoffing and profaneness of that time, Jude 14. The names of Jannes and Jambres, who withstood Moses, were not taken into the text till Paul’s time, 2 Tim. iii. 8: so Moses his refusing to be called the son of Pharaoh’s daughter, his choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, his esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt, and his eyeing the recompence of reward, were not mentioned by himself, nor by any other till the apostle set them down, Heb. xi. 24—26: these things they had by the Spirit, not by tradition.

“Cast ye away.” Of these words hath been largely spoken in chap. xviii. 31, “Cast away from you all your transgressions;” the word is there the same.

“Every man.” In the Hebrew it is איש a man, let man cast away; that is, let every one that hath the name or nature of man do so. It is from a word which signifies, essence, or being, and is often put indefinitely for any man; as Hos. ii. 10, “None shall deliver her out of mine hand;” the Hebrew is, not a man; that is, not any man shall do it: and for “every man;” Psal. lxxii. 12, “Thou renderest to every man according to his work;” the word for “every man” is, איש to a man, that is, to every man, whoever he be.

“The abominations of his eyes.” Of “abominations,” formerly. These “abominations” were their idols, things abominable and to be abhorred. They are here called the "abominations of their eyes," because their eyes were lift up unto them, as it is chap. xviii. 6, and went a whoring after them, chap. vi. 9. Their "eyes" were taken with the form, beauty, ornaments of the idols, and so let in that to their hearts which inflamed and provoked them to idolatry.

"And defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt." Of the word "defile," see chap. v. 11. "With the idols of Egypt;" the Hebrew is, in the idols of Egypt; that is, in the idolatry of the Egyptians, in their defilements, do not you defile yourselves. The Septuagint renders it, in the superstition of Egypt; Junius and Tremellius hath it, with the dirty or dunghill gods of Egypt; and Piscator, with the dung of the Egyptians. They were so addicted to idolatry and superstition, that they made gods of every thing, even of beetles, that live in and feed upon dung; Exod. xii. 12, "Against all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgment." They had many gods and idols, Isa. xix. 1; they had images of the house of the sun, and houses of gods, Jer. xliii. 13. These gods of theirs were all thrown down and broken in the night the Israelites came out of Egypt, say the Jews, which was the judgment executed upon them.

The Jews living in Egypt, fell into their superstitions and idolatries, as appears clearly by that you have in Josh. xxiv. 14, "Now therefore fear the Lord, and serve him in sincerity and in truth: and put away the gods which your fathers served on the other side of the flood, and in Egypt." Their fathers were not only idolaters in Mesopotamia, which was beyond the flood, that is, Euphrates, but also in Egypt; there they were notorious idolaters; and no sooner were they come out of Egypt, but they would have a calf, an Egyptian god, to whom they might attribute the honour of their Egyptian deliverance, Exod. xxxii. 4.

"I am the Lord your God." In the preface to the ten commandments you have these words, "I am the Lord thy God," which is a strong reason why they should have no other gods before him; and so here, they are the reason why they should cast away their idols, and not defile themselves any more with them. The strength of the argument runs thus, I am the Lord of all creatures, it belongs to me to give laws, and command what I please. There is no God besides myself. I allow none in heaven or earth to be set up and acknowledged for God by any, much less by you, whose God I am in a more special manner, whom I have chosen for my people, and made as it were my temple to dwell in; therefore cast ye away all idols, all false gods, defile not yourselves with them, but be a holy people unto me your God, who hate all such things, and delight in holiness.

Obs. 1. That the posterity of good men, by living amongst idolaters, and conversing with them, do in time drink in their opinions and manners, and become like unto them. The Jews, who were the posterity of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the holy seed, by living in Egypt, and conversing with Egyptians, they learned their opinions and practices, they delighted in and served the Egyptian gods. Their fathers' piety, precepts, examples, did not antidote them sufficiently against this contagion. Superstition, idolatry, and profaneness, are prevalent things. Solomon himself, the son of David, was caught in this snare, 1 Kings xi. 4. It is said of the Israelites after they came out of Egypt, that they mingled among the heathen, and learned their works, yea, served their idols, Psal. cvi. 35, 36; by dwelling amongst them, they were transformed into their likeness; what they saw them do, they did, what they saw them worship, they worshipped. The heathens served idols, or griefs, as Montanus hath it, because idols cause grief; and the Hebrews served idols, which brought grief and vexation. There is a secret but strong power in all wickedness to assimilate, and few who dwell near her borders escape subscription to her laws and practices. When Dinah went out to see the daughters of the land, she was caught and defiled, Gen. xxxiv. 1, 2; and when men go not only to see, but to converse with, and live amongst the daughters of a land, viz. the corrupt inventions and practices thereof, they are in great danger to be caught and corrupted. Grace is not communicable from parents to posterity; corruption is, and that inclines strongly to conform to their ways and worship among whom men live.

Obs. 2. When the Lord shows mercy to a people, doth great things for them, then he requires and expects they should be holy. When the Lord chose Israel, made himself known unto the house of Jacob, promised them to bring them out of Egypt into a land flowing with milk and honey, then he said, "Cast ye away every man the abominations of his eyes, and defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt;" that is, be ye holy, this I call for, this I look for. Exod. xix. 4, 5, "Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bare you on eagles' wings, and brought you unto myself. Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine." Here the Lord reckons up the great benefits he vouchsafed them: (1.) His dealings with their adversaries; "Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians," not heard, but seen, seen how I plagues them in Egypt, and drowned them in the Red sea for your sakes. (2.) His dealings with them; he "bare them on eagles' wings," that is, carried them out of Egypt, and through the Red sea, with much speed, strength, and tenderness, as an eagle carries her young when in danger, speedily, strongly, tenderly, not in her talons, as other fowls do, but on her back and wings. He took them unto himself; having taken them out of the hands of the Egyptian tyrants and task-masters, he put them not under the power of strangers, but took them to himself, he became their Lord and Sovereign; they took not him, but he took them. Having done such things for them, he expected they should be holy; for he saith, "Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant," that is, if you will be holy, and honour me, I will put dignity upon you, such as no people have, "ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people," as dear, and as much cared for, as any precious things are by princes. God's mercies are engagements unto holiness, Lev. xx. 23, 24; and especially ver. 26, "Ye shall be holy unto me: for I the Lord am holy, and have severed you from other people, that ye should be mine;" distinguishing mercies should breed distinguishing qualities; "I have severed you from other people, that you should" forget their manners, and conform to me, a holy God, even every one of you.

Obs. 3. The eyes are instrumental to, and inlets of, much wickedness. Their eyes behold the idols, and let in that which stirred their hearts and them to do abominably, even to idolatry. Whether more evil enter by the ear, or eye, may be questioned, but most certain it is, that abundance of wickedness is let in to us by the eye. The breach of most, if not of all, the commandments, hath been occasioned by the eye.

Of the first: Hos. iii. 1, they "look to other gods." Of the second: 2 Kings xvi. 10—12, Ahaz saw an altar at Damascus, and makes the like, and sets it in the place of God's altar. Of the third: Mark vi. 22, 23, Herod, being pleased at the sight of Herodias' dancing, swears to give her whatever she would ask, unto the half of his kingdom. Of the fourth: Ezek. xxii. 26, they "have hid their eyes from my sabbaths;" they would not see what holiness that day required, they connived at the pollution and profaning thereof.

Here you see the breach of the first table, and we may find the second violated by means of them.

For the fifth, see Gen. ix. 22, Ham saw the nakedness of his father, and discovered it. For the sixth, see Esth. iii. 5, 6, "When Haman saw that Mordecai bowed not, he was full of wrath. And thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone, but sought to destroy all the Jews." For the seventh, consult Gen. xxxiv. 2; 2 Sam. xi. 2, 4. When Shechem saw Dinah, and David Bathsheba, they were so taken with their beauties, that they committed folly, and brought evil upon themselves and others. For the eighth, that in Psal. l. 18, proves it, "When thou sawest a thief, then thou consentedst with him." For the ninth, consider that in Jer. xxxvii. 13; when Jeremiah was going out at the gate of Benjamin, Irijah, a captain, spies him, and accused him falsely, "saying, Thou fallest away to the Chaldeans." For the tenth, take that place in Josh. vii. 21. "I saw," saith Achan, "among the spoils a goodly Babylonish garment, two hundred shekels of silver, a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight, then I coveted them, and took them." By these instances you see the eyes have been instruments to further the breach of all the commandments. The sight is a great mercy, a principal sense, yet it had been good for some men if they had been born blind, their eyes occasioned so much sin and wickedness. By the eye the heart sends forth and receives in wickedness; the eye is the pander between both; and what thing created is worse than a wicked eye? Solomon advises you to keep your hearts with all diligence; and you had need keep your eyes with all diligence: both heart and eyes are roving and mischieving things, if not well kept. God calls for both, Prov. xxiii. 26, "My son, give me thy heart, and let thine eyes observe my ways." If this were done, multitudes of sins would be prevented; the eye would let in good to the heart, and the heart send out good by the eye.

Obs. 4. The consideration of God being our God, should take us off from all former engagements, sinful conformities, and false confidences, and cause us to cleave to the Lord, to conform unto and confide in him. The Jews here were engaged to Egyptian gods, conformed to them, and confided too much in them; I am the Lord your God, you must engage, conform yourselves to me, and confide in me: I am your God, able to counsel, help, deliver you; so are not, so cannot, the idols of Egypt. I am a holy God, they are abominations; I am for you Israelites, they are for Egyptians. God becoming our God, is a great condescension, a favour beyond comprehension, and should knock us off from all false ways, and cause us to conform to him, Exod. xxiii. 24, 25; Lev. xi. 43—45; xviii. 2—4; xix. 2—4; Numb. xv. 38—41. In all these places God uses this argument why they should conform to him and be holy; because he is the Lord their God, and a holy God. He made them his temple, to dwell in and among, and his temple must not be defiled, admit of any thing unsuitable to his mind; therefore he tells them, Deut. vii. 6, that he hath chosen them to be a special people unto himself, special in their holiness, special in their love, special in their obedience, and special in their confidence in and reliance upon him.

Ver. 8. But they rebelled against me, and would not hearken unto me: they did not every man cast away the abominations of their eyes, neither did they forsake the idols of Egypt: then I said, I will pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the midst of the land of Egypt.

In this verse you have two things to be considered.

I. Their wickedness; which is set out.

1. In general: "they rebelled," they hearkened not.
2. In particular: "they did not cast away the abominations of their eyes," they did not forsake the idols of Egypt.

II. God's purpose hereupon, which was severely to punish them: "then I said, I will pour out my fury," &c.; which is illustrated from the circumstance of the place where he would do it, "in the midst of the land of Egypt." There is little in this verse which hath not been opened and spoken of formerly: the word "rebelled," we had, chap. xvii. 15; ii. 3.

"And would not hearken unto me." The Hebrew is, and have not desired to hearken to me; they had no desire that way, but the contrary. Nou velle here, is nolle, their not willing, was nilling, and Zechariah calls it, refusing, ch. vii. 11; they had not a heart inclinable to hearken unto God.

"Then I said, I will pour out my fury upon them." The Hebrew is, and I said to pour out; that is, I purposed, seeing they dealt thus by me, to make them examples of my fury, and to destroy them. Of pouring out fury, and accomplishing anger, was spoken chap. vi. 12; vii. 8; ix. 8; xiv. 19.

"In the midst of the land of Egypt." We find not in Moses any thing recorded of this nature, but here the prophet delivered what God commanded him; ver. 5, "Say unto them, Thus saith the Lord." He had it not by tradition, that God bid them cast away the abomination of their eyes, and not defile themselves with the idols of Egypt, that they rebelled and would not do so, that God purposed their destruction in Egypt; these things he had not by tradition, but by divine inspiration. They were so corrupted with the idolatry of Egypt, and averse from hearkening to the admonitions, counsels, and exhortations of God, that he thought in his heart to destroy them in the midst of Egypt. Many of their children were drowned, and the oppressions they endured were very great, and long, which, Lavater saith, was for their Egyptian idolatry: Psal. cv. 25, "He turned their heart to hate his people, to deal subtilly with his people."

Obs. 1. Those the Lord hath bestowed great mercies upon, and professed much kindness unto, they, even they, are ungrateful when he calls for reformation at their hands. This people the Lord chose, made himself known to, promised to bring out of Egypt into a land he had looked out for them, even a land flowing with milk and honey, the glory, ornament, desire of all lands; and now, calling upon them to purge themselves from their abominations and idolatries, and to conform to him who professed himself to be their God, what do they? rebel against him; "but they rebelled." Here was ingratitude, and ingratitude at a height. God bids them cast away abominations, and they cast away his counsels; he bids them eye him, his beauty and glory, and they eye the form, beauty, and glory of their idols; he bids them be holy, and they defile themselves with idols; he bids them cleave to him, the God of Israel, and they cleave to the idols of Egypt; he bids them forsake all their evil ways, and they forsake him. This people were very ungrateful; whatsoever mercies they had from God, he seldom had any testimony of true thankfulness from them. Neh. ix. see what a multitude of mercies, great, reasonable, wonderful, God bestowed upon them, calling, by his prophets, for turning to him. And did they turn, reform, and testify a thankful frame of heart to be in them? no; they were disobedient, rebelled against him, cast his law behind their backs, and slew his prophets, ver. 26. God did choice things for this people all along, but they forgot him, and provoked him. The 106th Psalm is a psalm of God's mercies, and their ingratitude; he tells them they had a multitude of mercies, "but they provoked him at the sea, even the Red sea," ver. 7; "but they lusted exceedingly in the wilderness," ver. 14; "but they murmured in their tents," ver. 25; "but they mingled among the heathen," ver. 35. Here are four "buts," testifying their ingratitude.

God hath done great things for us, bestowed Israelitish mercies upon us, he hath made himself known amongst us, brought us out of Egyptian bondage, owned us for his people above any people, and professed himself to be our God, and hereupon called upon us to cast away our abominations, to reform and become a holy people, conformable to his mind; but may not the Lord come in with a reproaching "but," and say, "But ye rebel;" your abominations are not cast away, you do defile yourselves with the idols of England. And notwithstanding all the mercies we have had, God may come in with many buts, and say, "But" you provoke me by your oppressions, divisions, and bitterness; "but" you lust exceedingly after a king, and to be like other nations; "but" you murmur against me, my servants, and dispensations; "but" you mingle with the customs, corruptions, and fashions of the times; "but" you forsake my truths, and run into dangerous and damnable opinions.

Obs. 2. Such is the corruption of men's natures, that frequently the more mercies and means they have, the worse they grow. This people had variety of mercies, and every mercy should have led them to repentance, according to that in Rom. ii. 4, especially such mercies as they had; but, above all, God's speaking to them should have done it. How he spake to them in Egypt we find not, no prophets are mentioned to have been there before Moses. Whether he spake himself unto them, or by angels, or by Joseph, or some others, he did speak, but they rebelled and hearkened not, their corrupt hearts and natures degenerated more and more. The Jews, who had the pleasant land, the prophets, temple, oracles, and ordinances of God, grew worse than any of the nations; see Jer. ii. 10, 11; Ezek. xvi. 47; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 15, 16. It is observable, that men living in the christian world, and where, besides a multitude of other mercies, they have the gospel to do them good, to draw them to God, to direct and enable them to work righteousness, and go beyond heathens in all things, yet in many things they fall short of them, some of them; and divers in many things, are worse than the worst of them. If mercies and means prove not the savour of life, they ripen and perfect men's corruptions, and become the savour of death. Was there heard of amongst the heathens such a wretch as Judas was, who betrayed such a Master as he did? Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum, were the more unhappy, and exposed to the deeper condemnation, because they had more mercy and means.

Obs. 3. Not doing what God commands, is not hearkening; and not hearkening, is rebellion. They "rebelled," and would not "hearken" unto me, they did not cast away the abominations of their eyes, nor forsake the idols of Egypt. They "rebelled" because they hearkened not, they hearkened not because they "did not;" it is like they heard God commanding, but hearing, and not doing, they did not hearken. Doing, is knowing of God, Jer. xxii. 6; and doing, is hearkening to God, Deut. xxxiv. 9; but not doing, is not hearkening, and not hearkening, is rebellion. Hence not doing is called "rebellious against the command of the Lord," Deut. i. 26; going "backward," Jer. vii. 24; rejecting of the words and law of God, chap. vi. 19; hardening of the neck, Neh. ix. 16, "Our fathers dealt proudly, and hardened their necks, and hearkened not to thy commandments." It is pride, and hardness of heart, not to hearken unto God and his commands.

Obs. 4. Men's not hearkening unto God, puts him upon thoughts and purposes of punishing them, and that severely. "Then I said, I will pour out my fury upon them," and accomplish, consummate, perfect mine anger against them: "then," when they would not do as I bid them, I had thoughts and resolutions to destroy them. When the glorious, great, and only wise God, shall speak to the creature, to do that which tends to its great good, and shall not be heard, but disobeyed and slighted, this provokes God, and precreates thoughts of destruction. When they hearkened not, but sinned so in the business of the calf, it was in the heart of God utterly to destroy them: Exod. xxxii. 10, "Let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them;" and not only them, but "their name from under heaven," Deut. ix. 14. Had not Moses poured water upon this fire and quenched it, he had done it; they had no longer been a people, nor had any memorial left of them. Of this speaks David, Psal. cvi. 23, "He said that he would destroy them, had not Moses his chosen stood before him in the breach, to turn away his wrath, lest he should destroy them." This is spoken of God, after the manner of men; when they are offended, they purpose and resolve to destroy those who have provoked them, but some friend interposes, prevails with them, and prevents them, as Abigail did David. So Moses here prevented the Lord by his prayers and entreaties from destroying this people. Men's perverse dealings with God do put him upon intentions of their ruin: Deut. xxxii. 26, "I said, I would scatter them into corners, I would make the remembrance of them to cease from among men."

Ver. 9. But I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted before the heathen, among whom they were, in whose sight I made myself known unto them, in bringing them forth out of the land of Egypt.

In this verse are set down God's last kindnesses to this people, being in Egypt; and they are two:

1. His sparing of them for his name's sake.

2. His bringing them out of that condition.

Touching the first, in the latter part of the former verse God had said he would pour out his fury upon them, and accomplish his anger against them in the midst of Egypt; but foreseeing and considering what would be the event thereof, if he should do so, viz. that his name would suffer and be polluted, here he provides for the honour of his own name, and spares them.

"But I wrought." The Hebrew is, I did, or have done, not what I purposed, but what was most convenient for me to do, what was for the honour of my name: when I saw that like to suffer, I did that which prevented it, I took care of my name, had respect unto it.

“For my name’s sake.” “Name,” in the Scripture, as it refers to God, is sometimes put for God himself, as Psal. xxxiii. 21; and Neh. i. 11, “who desire to fear thy name;” that is, God himself, he is the object of fear, Isa. viii. 13; sometimes it is put for God’s titles, Psal. lxxxiii. 18; Exod. iii. 13—15; sometimes for the attributes of God, as chap. xxxiii. 19, compared with chap. xxxiv. 6, 7; sometimes for the glory, esteem, and renown of God, Psal. viii. 9, and Psal. lxxvi. 1; here it is put for God’s attributes and honour. Three of his attributes had been questioned, if he should have destroyed this people in Egypt.

1. His faithfulness. For God had promised and sworn to bring them out of Egypt, as it is ver. 6; and Gen. xv. 14; xlviii. 4; and had he not done it, Egyptians and others would have charged God with breach of promise, with unfaithfulness.

2. His power and almightiness. For they would have said he was not able to bring them from under the Egyptian gods and Pharaoh, that their power was beyond the power of the Jews’ God.

3. His mercy. That he had a people who professed him to be their God, but he was so merciless, that he destroyed and cut them all off; a thing that the heathen gods never did to any which worshipped them.

Now, had the case been thus, how had God’s honour been laid in the dust, his glory stained, and renown eclipsed.

“That it should not be polluted.” The word, to pollute, in Hebrew, signifies originally, to grieve, to cut; and metonymically, to pollute, to violate, profane, which are grievous and cutting. When God’s name is polluted, we are not to conceive any actual defilement to adhere to it, for God’s name can no more be defiled than the beams of the sun. It is said to be polluted,

1. When it is not hallowed; that is, not acknowledged, not esteemed to be holy and honourable. As the sabbath, when it was not sanctified, it was polluted; so here, when the glory due to God’s name is not acknowledged, it is a polluting of his name.

2. When it is slighted, and not used reverently. God’s name is great, glorious, excellent, holy, and dreadful, and ought to be revered, Psal. cxi. 9.

3. When occasion is given to the wicked to speak evil of God and his ways. As, 2 Sam. xii. 14, David by his sins gave great occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme; so, Ezek. xxxvi. 21, the Jews, by their sinful carriage, caused the name of God to be profaned among the heathen.

Had the Lord, then, destroyed this people in Egypt, according as he purposed, the Egyptians and other nations would have slighted him, spoken evil of his doings, blasphemed his name, and wounded his honour. Therefore, though this people deserved to die in the way of justice, yet God spared them in the way of mercy, for the honour of his name.

Quest. Seeing God purposed to destroy them, and did it not, is not his will alterable and inefficacious?

Ans. The counsels, purposes, decrees of God are unalterable, and do take place: see Psal. xxxiii. 11; Isa. xiv. 27; xliii. 13; xlv. 10; Mal. iii. 6; Heb. vi. 17. For that said and done here, it is after the manner of men. God saw cause sufficient to move him to their destruction, but seeing what evil was like to come from it, he would not destroy them. Had the Lord decreed it before the world, it must have taken place; no change or alteration could have been.

“Before the heathen.” The Hebrew is, in the eyes of the heathen. God would not have them to see or behold any thing which might occasion them to dishonour him; he would not slay his people in their sight, but made himself known by his word and mighty works unto the Jews, in the sight of the heathen, so that hereby he was known unto both.

Obs. 1. The Lord spares and saves sinners deserving death, even for his name’s sake. “But I wrought for my name’s sake.” Thou, for thy rebellion, idolatry, and other sins, didst deserve to die, and I could almost have cut thee off; but for my mercy and name’s sake, I spared and saved thee: Isa. xlviii. 8, 9, “I knew that thou wouldest deal very treacherously, and wast called a transgressor from the womb;” that is, worthy so to be called, seeing as soon as ever thou camest out of the womb of Egypt in which thou wast shut up as a child in the womb, thou fell’st to idolatry. Here was enough to have caused God to stifle this child; but what follows: “For my name’s sake will I defer mine anger, and for my praise will I refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off.” Nothing in this metaphorical child, this Jewish people, moved him to show mercy; but his own “name,” his own praise, prevailed with him to preserve them from destruction. God’s honour and glory are strong arguments to move him to show mercy to his people. This the servants of God have known, and made use of, in their straits. When Jerusalem was in a manner laid desolate, and the jealousy of God burned like fire, what argument did the church use then to move God to show mercy, but his “name,” and glory of it? Psalm lxxix. 9, “Help us, O God of our salvation, for the glory of thy name: and deliver us, and purge away our sins, for thy name’s sake.” The church was low, weak, beset with enemies and sins at once, and now it would have help, deliverance, pardon, and upon the account of God’s name: “for thy name’s sake” help us, “for thy name’s sake” deliver us, “for thy name’s sake” purge away our sins. What hurt would it be to God’s name if he did it not? It would not be glorious, but dishonoured; for in the next verse it is said, “Wherefore should the heathen say, Where is their God?” they trusted in their God, and he is a non-helping God, a non-delivering God, a non-pardoning God. This was the argument Joshua used when Israel fell before their enemies, “Lord, what wilt thou do unto thy great name?” God’s name was precious to Joshua, but more precious to God himself, Josh. vii. 9, and he did great things for his name’s sake. When the people forgot the multitude of great mercies they had in Egypt, and provoked him at the sea, even at the Red sea, and deserved to be drowned in it, and that their blood should be mingled with the waters thereof, what saith the text? Psal. cvi. 8, “Nevertheless he saved them for his name’s sake.” When nothing else induced him to do it, the honour of his name Vide Muscul. in locum. did, that he might appear faithful, merciful, powerful. God did not save them for their prayers, for their faith, for their fathers’ sakes, for their righteousness, or for their enemies’ sakes, being very malicious and wicked, but for his “own name’s sake;” God doth more upon that account alone, than upon the account of all the rest. You may hear the Lord speak graciously to this purpose, Isa. xliii. 25, “I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake;” here is “I” twice; one “I” referring to them, it is “I” that blot out their transgressions, and none besides; the other refers to God, “I” blot them out “for mine own sake,” not your sakes: God doth all freely.

Obs. 2. God’s sparing of his people, and preventing the reproaches, blasphemies, and mischiefs which would come by his destroying of them, is an honouring and sanctifying of his name. I wrought, saith God, that my name might not be polluted before the heathen: that is, that it might be honoured and sanctified in their sight. God doth often spare his people, being ripe for destruction, that the enemy might not blaspheme and profane his name; and when he doth so, he honours his name. Deut. xxxii. 26, 27, God saith there, he would scatter and destroy his people; but why did he it not? he "feared the wrath of the enemy, lest their adversaries should behave themselves strangely, and lest they should say, Our hand is high, and the Lord hath not done all this." God foresaw what they would say and do, if he should have used them as instruments to punish his children: they would have been very outrageous, bloody, and cruel, and when they had vented all their malice against them, and done whatever they would, they would have denied God's hand to have been therein, and arrogated all to themselves, which had been a great dishonour to God; he therefore prevents their blaspheming by sparing of his people, and so provides for the honour of his name. Moses once and twice put God upon it, to take heed he caused not the Egyptians to speak evil of him and his ways, when he was upon the design of destroying his people for their sins: see Exod. xxxii. 10—12; Numb. xiv. 12—16. God deals with his people sometimes, not after the ordinary rule and course of his proceedings, but in a prerogative way: he spares them, though their sins be great, because their enemies would be proud, arrogant, bloody, and blasphemous. And hath he not spared England upon this account?

Obs. 3. That notwithstanding the sins of God's people, he shows them kindness openly, and in the face of their enemies. Though the Jews had rebelled against God, and the Egyptians would have rejoiced in their ruin, yet, in their sight, God made himself known unto them, in bringing them forth out of the land of Egypt. God would have the Egyptians see that he could be kind to his people, though they were disobedient unto him; that he would not break with them, though they broke with him.

When the Jews were in Babylon, under great displeasure of God for their sins, yet God did show them such favour, and do such things for them, that their enemies were convinced, and said, "The Lord hath done great things for them." Psal. cxxvi. 2; he made known his salvation, and openly showed his salvation in the sight of the heathen, Psal. cxviii. 2. This the Lord doth, as to magnify his own name, to rejoice the hearts of his people, and to gain upon them, so to vex and consume the wicked: Psal. cxii. 10, "The wicked shall see it, and be grieved; he shall gnash with his teeth, and melt away." Hath not this been God's method with us? notwithstanding our sins, and ill deserts, hath he not openly made known himself to us, showed us kindness in the sight of our enemies? have they not seen it, grieved, gnashed their teeth, and melted away? they have seen God's kindnesses to us, and we have seen God's vengeance on them.

Ver. 10, 11. Wherefore I caused them to go forth out of the land of Egypt, and brought them into the wilderness. And I gave them my statutes, and shewed them my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them.

Having seen and heard of God's dealings with them, and theirs with him, in Egypt, now we are led to consider their mutual dealings each with other in the wilderness, which reacheth to the 27th verse.

Where he shows in general,

I. What benefits he had bestowed upon them.

II. What their sinful deportment was towards him.

III. How worthy they were to perish, if the Lord had not showed them mercy for his name's sake.

In these two verses you have,

1. Their eduction out of Egypt.

2. Their introduction into the wilderness.

3. The donation or promulgation of the law.

"I caused them to go forth." The Vulgate is, I east them forth, or drove them forth; which shows their backwardness to leave that land where they were born, had habitations, and other accommodations. It is like many of them neither thought of the promise made to their fathers, nor of the promised land, but thought Egypt a good land, yea, a "land flowing with milk and honey," as they called it, Numb. xvi. 13; only they were troubled at the hard labour the Egyptians held them to. But the word here imports not any violence, but a powerful bringing of them forth. We will inquire,

1. How the Lord brought them forth?

2. When?

1. How? It was not in an ordinary way, but in a way full of extraordinaries. To do it, the Lord came down from heaven, Exod. iii. 8; that was in the vision of the burning bush; he prepared Moses, Aaron, and the people, by signs and miracles, to leave Egypt, and because all the power and wisdom that Pharaoh and Egypt had was employed to retain the Jews there, they being utterly averse from their departure, the Lord sent strange and dreadful plagues, one after another, till their spirits were brought off to let them go, chap. xii. 30—33. Pharaoh was resolved not to let them go, (he had so much profit by their service,) unless it were by a strong hand, chap. iii. 19; and God was resolved to bring them out, and therefore he did arise, put forth his power, and by "strength of hand" brought them out, chap. xiii. 3; by "an high hand," chap. xiv. 8; by "mighty power, and a stretched-out arm," Deut. ix. 29. You have it fully set down in chap. iv. 34, God took them from the midst of another nation by "temptations, by signs, and by wonders, and by war, and by a mighty hand, and by a stretched-out arm, and by great terrors." There was great strife between God and Pharaoh, who should have this people, as there was between Michael and the devil about the body of Moses. Pharaoh pulled hard to hold them in Egypt, but God out-pulled Pharaoh, and pulled them out of Egypt, and so caused them to go forth.

2. When. You have the time punctually set down in Exod. xii. 40, 41, where it is said, "At the end of the four hundred and thirty years, even the self-same day, they went out." Not that they were four hundred and thirty years in Egypt, for they were there but two hundred and ten, or two hundred and fifteen, as chronologies inform upon good account. The four hundred and thirty years are to begin from the time of the promise made to Abraham, which Stephen tells us, Acts vii.

2. was before he dwelt in Charran, even while he was in Ur, and but seventy years old; from which time, to the going out of Egypt, were four hundred and thirty years: two hundred and fifteen, or two hundred and twenty whereof, were run out before Jacob went down into Egypt. From the promise made to Abraham to Isaac's birth, were thirty years, some make it but twenty-five, (they then reckon from his time of departing out of Haran,) for he was a hundred years old when Isaac was born, Gen. xxi. 5; and from thence to the birth of Jacob were sixty years, Gen. xxv. 26; and from thence to Jacob's going into Egypt, one hundred and thirty years, chap. xlvii. 9; which, summed up, make two hundred and twenty, at least two hundred and fifteen, and so the rest of the four hundred and thirty they were in Egypt. And at the just time they were accomplished, the Lord brought them out, to show his faithfulness, as it appears, Deut. vii. 8.

"And brought them into the wilderness." There is mention made of one "wilderness" before they passed through the Red sea, Exod. xiv. 11, and of other wildernesses after they had passed the same; as the "wilderness of Sin," chap. xvi. 1; the "wilderness of Paran," Numb. xiii. 3; which doubtless was but one, though diversely called from the several parts it bordered upon. A "wilderness" is a desolate, solitary place, where is no way, where are no comforts, but where are many dangers. Deut. viii. 15, it was "a great and terrible wilderness," wherein were fiery serpents, and scorpions, drought, and no water. It had many wild beasts in it, and therefore was called the "howling wilderness," chap. xxx. 10. Jeremiah tells you, chap. ii. 6, this "wilderness" was a land of deserts, and of pits; but not pits which would hold any water, for he adds, it was a "land of drought," and of the "shadow of death," a land that no "man passed through," and where "no man dwelt;" while they were in this "wilderness," they were in danger of death, or in such straits as that they desired death. The "wilderness" here meant was the "wilderness of Sin," which was not far from Sinai, where the law was given, of which the next verse speaks. Into the wilderness God did bring them, to try them, to humble them, and to do them good at their latter end, Deut. viii. 16.

Obs. 1. That God, for the honour of his name, shows mercy after mercy to his people, deserving no mercy, yea, deserving destruction. In the former verse, to prevent the dishonour of his name, he spared them, made himself known to them, and here he goes on, adding mercy to mercy: "Wherefore I caused them to go forth."

Obs. 2. No length of time, no depth of misery, no power or policy of adversaries whatsoever, can hinder God from delivering his people when his time is come. The Jews had been long in Egypt, suffered very hard things for the space of one hundred and sixteen years, or one hundred and twenty-one, from the time of Joseph's death till their departure out of Egypt, that house of bondage, which was thereabout. They were under heavy pressures and great tyranny; Pharaoh, that great dragon, used all his cunning and power to keep them longer in that condition; but notwithstanding all these, the Lord caused them to go forth, his time was come. The like did God for this people when they had been in Babylon seventy years, were as dry bones, and out of hope, Ezek. xxxvii. 11; he opened their graves, and caused them to come up out of them, and come to the land of Israel, ver. 12. There is nothing too hard for the Lord to do; he can, and will, remove all obstructions, break through all difficulties, and shake the foundations of heaven, earth, and hell, to bring to pass his good pleasure in the time thereof. The state of the Jews in Egypt represents men's condition under sin and Satan; that in Babylon, the condition of God's servants under antichrist. Now, let men be never so long in bondage to either or both of them, suffer never such hard things; let Satan, that red dragon, and antichrist, that man of sin, improve all their craft, skill, and power, to hold men in darkness and ways of false worship; yet when the Lord's day is come, he will cause them to come out of Egyptian bondage, and Babylonian darkness, he will fetch them off from all sinful practices, all invented ways of worship, and bring them into his marvellous and glorious light.

Obs. 3. When God doth show his people special mercy, in freeing them from old and special miseries, he doth not wholly exempt them from new miseries. Though he caused them to go forth of Egypt, yet he brought them into a "wilderness," where they met with hunger, thirst, danger, and death; they were freed from Egyptian miseries, not from wilderness miseries. They thought if once they were freed from their making brick, gathering straw, and rigid task-masters, they should be happy; but they met with new hardships, new miseries; they did ride upon the back of mercy, out of old miseries into new, out of a house of bondage into a wilderness, a howling wilderness, a wilderness that made them howl many a time. It is God's method oft to mingle water with our wine, miseries with our mercies, crosses with our comforts, to lead us out of great straits in much mercy, and to lead us into others for trial. David was delivered oft out of straits, but shortly after he was freed from one he was brought into another, and that by the same hand; which made him say, "Thou hast showed me great and sore troubles," Psal. lxxi. 20. Sometimes he was on the mount of mercies, and sometimes in the valley of miseries, yea, in the valley of the shadow of death. Take it in a spiritual sense, When men are converted, do they not meet with hard things, are they not brought out of Egypt into a wilderness, where are dangers, fiery serpents, scorpions, &c.?

Ver. 11. "And I gave them my statutes, and showed them my judgments." This people being brought out of Egypt, and freed from great bondage, being in a wilderness, might now fancy a total liberty to themselves, and exemption from all obedience. To prevent this, some fifty days after their coming out, the Lord at mount Sinai gives them out his law, by which they might be ordered and regulated.

Of "statutes" and "judgments" hath been spoken formerly; by them, both morals and ceremonials are comprehended.

"Shewed them." The Hebrew is, I made them to know; that is, I caused them to be written in the tables of stone, and proclaimed amongst them; yea, I caused them to be opened and expounded unto them. The Lord made known his mind unto them, though not so efficaciously as in these days.

"Which if a man do, he shall live in them." The doing here is, man's keeping, observing, and obeying these statutes and judgments; and if so, he should not be punished as transgressors are, but live a long and prosperous life, and not only so, but a happy and eternal life; for if the keeping God's statutes and commands should reach but unto a temporal prosperous life, what benefit had the Jews thereby above the gentiles, who by their justice, civility, and moral virtues, obtained great prosperity and length of days. The Lord Christ clears it up unto us, that by life promised upon keeping the law, is meant eternal life: Luke x. 25, saith a lawyer to Christ, "Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" Christ saith, "What is written in the law? how readest thou?" He tells him, ver. 27, what he found there: and Christ upon it tells him, ver. 28, that if he did so, he should live; that is, live eternally. There was a righteousness of the law, which if men came unto, the law conferred life upon them; see Gal. iii. 12; Rom. x. 5; Lev. xviii. 5; there was life in them, life by them, and life from them; but because no man could attain unto the righteousness of the law through the weakness of the flesh, Rom. viii. 3, therefore the law was so far from conferring eternal life upon man, that it excludes him from that life, chap. iii. 20, and takes away the life he hath, chap. vii. 10. The commandment which was ordained to life he found to be unto death; that which in itself held out life, accidentally and eventually proved death unto him.

Paul seems to deny any power to be in the law of giving life; Gal. iii. 21, "If there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law." The impotency is not originally and intrinsically in the law, for that is perfect, and able to give life to any, to all that keep it: Matt. xix. 17, Christ makes the keeping the commandments the entrance into life. The fault is in us, not in the law, which is holy, just, and good; if we could keep the law, it could give us life.

Obs. 1. When God brings his people into straits, he will not leave them destitute, he will show them some mercy in such a condition. He brought them into the wilderness; and what then? he gave them his statutes, and showed them his judgments. When they were in the wilderness, they had the cloud, the pillar of fire, the manna, the tabernacle, the water out of the rock, many great mercies did God bestow on them whilst they were in the wilderness. Jacob, by the hand of God, was brought into straits: he must leave his father's house to secure his life, Gen. xxvii. 42, 43; lie in the open field all night, where the earth was his bed, and the stones his bolsters, where the wild beasts might have found and devoured him; but in this condition the Lord appeared to him, and told him what he would give and do for him. It was a good night to Jacob, he met with sweeter, greater mercies when he lay without doors, than ever he did by lying in his father's house. God brought Jerusalem into a strait by Sennacherib; and did he leave it so, and let him sack and spoil it? no, he prepared an angel that was both σωτήρ and ἀπολλύων, a saviour to the Jews, and a destroyer to the Assyrians. Christ, by the Spirit, was led into the wilderness, where the tempter set upon him very fiercely, and ceased not for forty days together to shoot his fiery darts against him: but did not the Lord mind him in that condition? yes, he sent angels unto him; Matt. iv. 11, "Behold, angels came and ministered unto him."

Obs. 2. God is the Lawgiver to his people. "I gave them my statutes, and showed them my judgments." God gave them laws to govern and direct them, both in their worshipping of him, and carriage one towards another. It was no small mercy that God gave them "statutes and judgments," for no nation had the like mercy: Deut. iv. 8, "What nation is there so great, that hath statutes and judgments so righteous as all this law, which I set before you this day?" said Moses to them. Other nations had their statutes and judgments, but either they were not righteous, or at best not so righteous as theirs were; if some were righteous, others were not. Here all were righteous, Psal. cxix. 128; they are called judgments of righteousness, ver. 7; and commands that are righteousness, ver. 172; they are the judgments and commands of the righteous God, they are full of righteousness, and make men righteous. If the law of the twelve tables among the Romans did exceed all the libraries of philosophers in weight and worth, as Tully said, what then did the "statutes and judgments" God gave to this people? they exceeded all the laws that ever were or shall be. This made David to value them above "thousands of gold and silver," Psal. cxix. 72; and to pray unto the Lord to open his eyes, that he might see the mysteries and depths which were in them, ver. 18, 129; and that he would incline his heart to keep them, ver. 36. God gave them these laws, to show that he would be their Governor, that they ought to obey him: Isa. xxxiii. 22, "The Lord is our lawgiver."

Obs. 3. The great bounty and wisdom of God in making promise of a happy life here, and eternal life hereafter, to the keepers of the law, to those who should observe his statutes and judgments.

First, his great bounty: for, suppose a man could perfectly in all things keep the law, and that perpetually, he deserves nothing thereby; being God's creature, it is his duty to do what he appoints and commands; man's works do not exceed, nor carry that intrinsical worth before God, as to merit at his hands: the life therefore attainable hereby is from covenant and promise, not from the nature of man's obedience, but of God's promise; and so is from his bounty and good-will. For God to promise life to man's obedience was great mercy, transcending whatever possibly, or imaginably, could be therein; whereas he might have commanded all man could do without any promise of life at all. Neither let any say, this promise was to no purpose, because man was not able to keep the law; the fault thereof was not in God, nor in the law, but in man himself, who had disabled himself. And here appears,

Secondly, the great wisdom of God, that made this promise of life to the keepers of the law, that so he might draw out their endeavours to the utmost, and that seeing when they were at the height they fell short of that perfection the law required, they might look for life upon another account, viz. the righteousness of faith; see Deut. xxx. 12—15, with Rom. ix. 30—32, and chap. x. 5—8. Therefore the law, finding us incapable of life through our sin, directed us unto Christ, where we might have it through his grace; Gal. iii. 24, "The law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith."

Ver. 12. Moreover also I gave them my sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them.

Here is another mercy which the Lord bestowed upon this people, namely, his "sabbaths," which were,

1. "To be a sign between him and them."

2. To evidence that the Lord was he which sanctified them.

"My sabbaths." The word "sabbath" signifies, rest, and such rest, as work hath gone before; from עָבַד to cease, to be quiet, and give over working; it imports, not a sitting still, or doing nothing, but a resting from what formerly was a doing. Some by "sabbaths" here understand, not only the sabbath of days, but the sabbatical years also, the seventh and fiftieth years, which were years of rest; but it is more genuine to take "sabbaths" here for sabbatical days, one of which came every week, and those "sabbaths" were the "signs" between God and them. It may be inquired whether they had the sabbath before they came out of Egypt, because it is said, that God brought them out thence into the wilderness, and gave them his sabbaths; and there are some of note, who hold that the sabbath was not given at first, but in Moses' days.

To this inquiry, the answer is, That they had the sabbath before that time of Moses giving the law at mount Sinai, as appears, Exod. xvi. 23, 25, 26, on the sabbath day there was no manna to be found or gathered; and Gen. ii. 3, "God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it." Surely this blessing and sanctifying of it was for man's use, God needed no day; therefore in that place, Exod. xvi. 29, he saith, "The Lord hath given you the sabbath," alluding to the first institution; and the word "remember," which begins the fourth commandment, imports that the day was given before, though much forgotten and neglected. And what if there be no particular testimony, which mentions the patriarchs' keeping of it before the law? it doth not follow, therefore, it was not kept.

There is no mention of keeping it in Joshua, in Judges, in Samuel; is it therefore a warrantable or good argument, to conclude that it was not kept? yea, if it were granted that they did not keep it, doth this prove that they were not required to keep it? For Justin Martyr, Irenæus, and Tertullian, their scope is to show, that none of the fathers of those times were justified, or obtained salvation, by keeping of the sabbath.

If the "sabbaths" were given before, how are they said to be given when they were in the wilderness? this is answered in the next words.

"To be a sign between me and them." The first giving of the sabbath was to be a memorial of the creation, Gen. ii. 3, and therefore was observed by the primitive fathers, whom the creation of the world did most nearly concern, and was in use before Moses' days, who was above two thousand years after. But when God gave it out again by Moses, it was upon another account, viz. to be a "sign" between him and his people the Jews, whom he brought out of Egypt, and that upon the sabbath day, as Junius observes.

"A sign." The sabbath was a "sign" of the true sabbath, wherein we shall rest from the labour of this world, so Jerom; "a sign" of love and reconciliation, so Vatablus; a "sign" of holiness, that by the time dedicated to God we might know ourselves dedicated to God, so Cajetane: a "sign" of difference between the Jews and all other people, who were profane, and derided the Jews for losing the seventh part of their time, so Tostatus and Sanctius. They were distinguished from other nations by circumcision, and by meats; but these were not so visible, observable, in the eye of the world as their "sabbaths." A "sign" that God had taken this people to himself, separated them from Egyptians, and others, and would have them in a special manner remember their Egyptian deliverance on that day, as formerly the creation. It was a sign between God and them; they glorified him, owning him for their God, and he sanctified them, owning them for his people. So that here was a second edition, and, as it were, a new institution, of the sabbath: because he brought them out of Egypt with a mighty hand, therefore he commanded them to keep the sabbath, Deut. v. 15.

"I am the Lord that sanctify them." Sanctifying, as it refers to God, notes sometimes preparation to some special service; as, Jer. li. 27, 28, "Prepare the nations against her;" the Hebrew is, Sanctify the nations against her; that is, Babylon. Preparing of the nations to the destruction of Babylon, is sanctifying of them. Sometimes it notes separation to a holy use, as Joel i. 14, "Sanctify ye a fast;" that is, separate a time from common employments to religious. So Christ is said to be sanctified, John x. 36. Sometimes it notes making holy, Lev. xxi. 23, "I the Lord do sanctify them;" that is, make them holy; so John xvii. 17; Rom. xv. 16. We are here to take it in the two last senses. I have given them my holy-days, times separated from all common use and worldly employments; times for drawing near to and worshipping of me; times wherein they ought to be holy and to mind holy things; and so know that it is I which separate them from others, and do make them holy, a peculiar people unto myself.

Quest. Whether was not the sabbath a mutable ceremony, seeing he calls it a "sign" here?

Ans. That proves it not to be so; for, Gen. ix. 12, the rainbow is called a "token" or sign between God and man; and that was no mutable ceremony, but continues to the end of the world. Besides, it is not a "sign" or type of future grace, something to come, but a "sign" of their deliverance out of Egypt, or of the creation, which were things past, or a "sign" of God's sanctifying them at the present, when they met before him on those days. And further, "sign" here, by some, is put for proof; it is a note of your distinction from others, of your being my people, and of my sanctifying of you.

Obs. 1. When God is in a way of mercy with a people, he hath his "moreovers." "Moreover I gave them my sabbaths." Neh. ix. he reckons up many mercies; and ver. 22, he saith, "Moreover thou gavest them kingdoms and nations." So in Isa. xxx. he tells them of what mercies they shall have; and ver. 26, "Moreover the light of the moon shall be as the light," &c. God doth always perform his promises, showing his faithfulness; and many times he gives more than he promises, good measure pressed down, and running over, to show his bountifulness.

Obs. 2. That of holy times and days God is the Author. "I gave them my sabbaths." God blessed and sanctified the seventh day, and gave it unto the Jews, Gen. ii. 3. It is his prerogative to make persons, things, or times, holy; it is not in the power of man, or any sort of men, to make days holy. It was no small sin in our forefathers, that took upon them to make Lent and other times holy, and some days more holy than the Lord's day itself. The Jews had no holy days but at the Lord's appointment.

Obs. 3. The Lord gave forth and appointed holy and resting days, upon weighty and considerable grounds, always after some great mercy, some special thing or other which he had done. As here, when he had brought them out of Egypt, drowned Pharaoh and his host in the deeps, then he gave them out the sabbath again. At first it was instituted after that great and glorious work of the creation; God would have great works and mercies to be kept in memory. So the day we keep was appointed in memorial of that great work, man's redemption, by the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, and therefore is honoured with the title of "Lord's day," Rev. i. 10.

Obs. 4. The sabbath is a day of special concernment to God and his people. "I gave them my sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them." As the rainbow is a sign of special concernment between God and the world, so is the sabbath. It is an argument and evidence that God looks upon them as his people, where his sabbath is, and that they acknowledge God their God, who keep his sabbaths: by it God keeps alive the memory of his glorious, great, and gracious works, and by it the people are brought to glorify and magnify his name for those works; by it he distinguisheth his people from the profane, and by it they distinguish him from the idol gods; in it the Lord sanctifies his people, and they in it do worship him; it is the day wherein they meet, visit, and make each other cheerful and glorious. Let us have more honourable thoughts of the sabbath, and not think it concerns not us; if we be his people, it is still a "sign" between him and them.

If we have no sabbath, or no day answerable to it, we come short of the Jews, who had it given unto them as a great mercy: "I gave unto them my sabbaths," my holy resting days.

Obs. 5. Sanctification is the work of the Lord, and specially of the Lord when people meet on his day. He gave them his "sabbaths," and they were called holy convocations, because on them the people met, Lev. xxiii. 3. And why did he give them those days? that they might know that he was the Lord, which sanctified them. There is none which can sanctify persons by way of separation or inherent holiness, but the Lord; he assumes this power and privilege to himself; see Lev. xx. 8; Ezek. xxxvii. 28; and his sanctifying is chiefly when people meet on his day. Then the law was read and opened unto them, Acts xv. 21; Neh. viii. 8; then did God appear amongst them, and work by the means he appointed for their sanctification. Psal. lxxxix. 7, "God is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints," there he convinces them of their sinfulness and sinful practices; there he beats down their strong holds, and captivates their thoughts to the obedience of his will. What was it made David openly to proclaim it, that "a day in God's courts was better than a thousand?" one sabbath day, wherein he had communion with God, and found him sanctifying his head and heart, was more esteemed of him than a thousand other days: "For the Lord," saith he, "is a sun and shield," he enlightens me, he strengthens me, and so separates my darkness and weakness from me, and makes me more holy. Let us, therefore, look unto God alone for sanctification, and wait upon him on his days in the solemn assemblies, and he will sanctify us; those are days of his special presence, power, and blessing.

Obs. 6. God's people should observe and take notice what God doth in them, on sabbaths, when they appear before him. They had the "sabbaths" given them, that they might know the Lord did sanctify them, that they might have experience in themselves of the powerful operations of God in them; God observed what they did that day, and they were to observe what he did that day. They read the law and the prophets, and expounded them, Acts xiii. 15; Neh. viii. 8; they prayed, Acts xvi. 13; they discoursed, reasoned, and persuaded men out of the Scriptures, Acts xviii. 4; they offered sacrifices, Numb. xxviii. 2, 10; they did sing, Psal. xcii. title. Those things they did, and God observed their spirits in the doing of them; he observed how they sanctified the day, and himself in the duties of the day; and they were to observe what he did in the assemblies, and in their bosoms. This David did: Psal. xcvi. 6, "Strength and beauty are in his sanctuary," saith he; and Psal. lxxiii. 2, he confesses he had seen God's power and glory there; the "strength" and "beauty" in one place, is the same with "power" in the other. It is a glorious, beautiful work, when God sanctifies a sinner; it is a work of power and strength, when he breaks the snares of our lusts, the chains of unbelief, and enlarges our hearts, quickens, comforts, strengthens, and enlightens us. It is a common sin and sickness amongst christians, that they heed not what the Lord does in his ordinances for them, and in them; they cannot say from experience, We know it is the Lord that sanctifies; most can say this from the tongue, few from the heart. It was not without cause, that Solomon said, "Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear, than to give the sacrifice of fools," Eccles. v. 1. Some think he alludes to Exod. iii. 5; xxx. 19; and Josh. v. 15; where is mention of putting off their shoes, and washing their feet, because they were to approach unto the holy God. And surely we had need look to our feet, that is, our affection, (foot is put for feet, the singular for the plural,) for we approach near to God when we go to his house; we go to be sanctified, and therefore should take heed we defile not ourselves.

Ver. 13. But the house of Israel rebelled against me in the wilderness; they walked not in my statutes, and they despised my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them; and my sabbaths they greatly polluted: then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them in the wilderness, to consume them.

Having represented unto them the mercies he conferred on them in the wilderness, here he declares what their carriage was towards him therein, and what his purpose was towards them.

1. Their carriage towards him is laid down,

1. In general; "the house of Israel rebelled against me."

2. In special; and that in three particulars:

(1.) "They walked not in my statutes."

(2.) "They despised my judgments."

(3.) They polluted my sabbaths, and that greatly.

Now all these are aggravated,

[1.] From the place where they were done; "in the wilderness," where they had special need of God's protection and provision, where they had and saw his miracles daily.

[2.] From the nature of the statutes and judgments given, which were such, as, if done, they might have lived.

11. The Lord's purpose towards them was, "to pour out his fury upon them," and consume them, and that in the wilderness.

Little shall I speak of this verse, because in the 8th and 11th verses you have already had most things in it.

"The house of Israel rebelled against me." Of their rebellion in the wilderness you may read, Deut. i. 26, 43; Exod. xvii. 7; with Numb. xx. 24, 27; chap. xiv.; Deut. ix. 22.

"They despised my judgments." The Hebrew word for despise, notes, rejecting, hating, vilifying. They looked upon them as contemptible things, and threw them away; they did not only refuse to walk in his law, Psal. lxxviii. 10, but they "despised" his judgments, and abhorred his statutes, Lev. xxvi. 43; it was such despising as had an abhorrency accompanying it.

"My sabbaths they greatly polluted." Of their polluting his "sabbaths," you may read, Exod. xvi. 27, they went to gather manna on the sabbath day; one gathered sticks, Numb. xv. 32; they carried burdens, and did servile work, Jer. xvii. 22, 23; whereas they should have highly praised the "sabbaths," resting from doing their own ways, finding their own pleasure, speaking their own words, and wholly have been taken up in the worship of God, and the duties peculiar to the day.

Obs. 1. Such is the corruption of man's nature, that nothing will keep it within its bounds, but it breaks out against God, neglects and abuses the ordinances and means he hath appointed for man's salvation. "But the house of Israel rebelled against me, they walked not in my statutes, they despised my judgments, and they greatly polluted my sabbaths:" these God gave them for their good, life, salvation, but they slighted, perverted, polluted them. God had done great things for them, he provided for them in the wilderness manna, water, shoes, clothes, all in a miraculous way, so that they could not subsist without him; yet they rebel against him, despise him, Numb. xi. 20; cast off his statutes and judgments, and profane his sabbaths to his face.

Thus they dealt with the Lord when he brought them out of Babylon, Neh. xiii. 15, 16; they greatly polluted the sabbaths of the Lord; whereupon saith Nehemiah, ver. 18. "Did not your fathers thus," and so bring evil upon us? and will you bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the sabbaths? Neither the mercies their fathers had, when they were brought out of Egypt, nor the mercies themselves had, when they were brought out of Babylon, kept in their corruptions; but they rose to a great height, and brake out so far as to set at nought all his counsels, Prov. i. 25, to reject the word of the Lord, Jer. viii. 9, to mock and misuse his messengers and prophets, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16, to speak stoutly against God, Mal. iii. 13; yea, so strong grew their corruptions, that their souls abhorred God, Zech. xi. 8. Is it not thus in our days? neither miraculous mercies, nor wonderful judgments, do keep men within bounds, or chain up their corruptions, but they break out, greatly polluting the Lord's day, despising all or some ordinances. Do they not set at nought and reject the whole counsel of God, the very Scriptures? do they not mock and misuse the messengers and ministers of God? do they not blaspheme, curse, and glory in it? do they not speak stoutly against Christ and God? do not some turn Jews, and others atheists, denying Christ, God? Surely iniquity abounds, and is within little of its perfection: the harvest is near, sinners are almost full ripe for judgment, and ere long God will say, Thrust in the sickle.

Obs. 2. When men do neglect, despise, and abuse the ordinances of God and means of grace, they provoke God even to their destruction. They neglected to walk in God's statutes, they despised his judgments, they polluted his sabbaths; and what then? "Then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them, to consume them." Men think that neglecting and slighting of ordinances, profaning of the Lord's day and holy things, is no such great evil, if it be an evil at all; but there is hardly any thing kindles the wrath of God hotter than the casting off, despising, and abusing the ordinances and mediums appointed of God, for his worship, our good, comfort, and salvation. Their sins here of this nature put God into fury, which is more than anger or wrath; upon pouring out of fury, and such pouring out as to consume them. Heb. x. 25—27, he tells us of some that did forsake the assemblies, cast off the ordinances of God, which was a wilful and provoking sin, excluding mercy, and hastening judgment and fierce indignation, which should destroy. When God in his infinite wisdom and mercy hath condescended to man's weakness, given him ordinances and mediums wherein he will be worshipped, and through which he will do good to the creature, and now the foolish creature to neglect, despise, or profane them, this pierces God's heart, and transforms his patience into fury, and puts him into ways of destruction. Those who despised Moses' law were to die without mercy; and what will be their portion who despise Christ, the gospel, and ordinances thereof? see Heb. xii. 25. Acts iii. 23, "Every soul that will not hear Christ shall be destroyed;" that is, whosoever shall not hearken to Christ's voice in the gospel, submit to the ordinances appointed by him therein, and worship the Father in the way he hath prescribed, he shall be destroyed. The Corinthians abused and profaned the supper of the Lord, and were they not smitten and destroyed for that sin? 1 Cor. xi. 30. Moses had the sword drawn upon him by the Lord himself, because he neglected the circumcision of his son, Exod. iv. 24.

Ver. 14. But I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted before the heathen, in whose sight I brought them out.

Whilst they were in the wilderness, and Moses in the mount, they made a calf, and fell to idolatry, which exasperated the Lord so, that he thought to destroy them; and had not Moses interposed and pressed God with the honour of his name, he had done it. Exod. xxxii. 12, "Wherefore should the Egyptians speak, and say, For mischief did he bring them out, to slay them in the mountains, and to consume them from the face of the earth? Turn from thy fierce wrath, and repent of this evil against thy people." God did so, and wrought for his name's sake. Of these words was spoken in the ninth verse.

Ver. 15—17. Yet also I lifted up my hand unto them in the wilderness, that I would not bring them into the land which I had given them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands; because they despised my judgments, and walked not in my statutes, but polluted my sabbaths: for their heart went after their idols. Nevertheless mine eye spared them from destroying them, neither did I make an end of them in the wilderness.

In the 15th verse you have mention of God's swearing, that he would not bring them into Canaan; in the 16th, the reason thereof; in the 17th, his indulgence and pity towards them.

"I lifted up my hand unto them," &c. This was, when upon the ill report the spies had brought upon the land of Canaan, the Israelites murmured against Moses and Aaron, as you may see, Numb. xiv. 28—30, and chap. xxvi. 65.

But here a difficulty ariseth. In the 6th verse of this chapter, it is said that God had lifted up his hand, and so sworn to bring them not only out of Egypt, but into the land of Canaan; and here it is said, he had lifted up his hand to the contrary, that he would not bring them into the land he had given them: so that it seems here is one oath against another. And in Numb. xiv. 34, God acknowledges his breach of promise, for he saith, "Ye shall know my breach of promise:" I have promised and sworn to bring you into the land of Canaan, but you have so sinned against and provoked me, that I will not do it, yea, have sworn you shall not enter into my rest, Psal. xev. 11.

This difficulty is removed, by considering, that God did not make promise, or swear, to those individual men that were kept out of Canaan, that they should be brought into it; if it had been so, God had forgot and forsworn himself; but his promise and oath was, that the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob should be brought into it, Gen. xii. 7: xiii. 15: xv. 18: xxvi. 4: 1. 24: Deut. xxxiv. 4; and their seed was brought into the promised land, Josh. i. 2: iv. 1: xiv. 1: xxiv. 13; and so God's promise and oath was kept. Those he swore against, were those that murmured against him, even all from twenty years old and upwards, except Caleb and Joshua, whose carcasses fell in the wilderness, as you may see, Josh. v. 6.

As for that, Numb. xiv. 34, God's breach of promise, the original is, my frustration: You looked certainly to have entered into Canaan, but for your murmuring and unbelief, I have frustrated your expectations: or thus, You think my oath cannot be true, because of a former oath, and that the words I have uttered will prove false, a lie; but you shall know whether my words and oath be false or not. Junius and Piscator read it, abruptionem meam, and make the sense this; You have broken off from me, and you shall know what it is to have me break off from you; I will plague you for your murmuring, ingratitude, unfaithfulness, and unbelief, so that you shall never come into the land of promise. The Septuagint hath it, You shall know the wrath of mine anger.

“Flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands.” Of these words hath been spoken largely in the 6th verse. They are repeated here, to show the ingratitude of this people, that were not affected with this land, which was a second Paradise, but despised it, and raised an ill report upon it; as also to show what they lost in being kept out of it, and their folly in preferring Egypt before it.

There is nothing needful to open in the other two verses, because occasion hath been given formerly in this chapter and others to open them.

Obs. 1. Men’s sins disappoint them of choice mercies, yea, mercies promised, expected, and near at hand. God had promised them Canaan, they were near unto it, Numb. xiii. expected to go in and possess it; but God would not bring them into the land, because they despised his judgments, walked not in his statutes, but polluted his sabbaths.

In Heb. iii. 19, it is said, “They could not enter in because of unbelief;” and Psal. evi. 24, “They despised the pleasant land, they believed not his word.” It was their sins kept them from so great, so near, so longed-for a mercy. Such is the malignity of sin, that it drives mercies back when they are at the door, and blocks up the passage, that none for the future may issue forth towards us. Isa. lix. 1, 2, “Behold, the Lord’s hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear;” God can hear and help; “but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear;” your sins stand like a brass wall, a mighty mountain, between him and you; they have cramped his will, so that though he can, yet he will neither hear your prayers nor help your persons. It is sin that keeps mercy from us; Jer. v. 25, “Your iniquities have turned away these things;” what things? the former and latter rain, the harvest and fruits of the earth; they were coming to you, but your sins turned them back again, and hid them be gone: Away, rain, away, harvest, away, fruits of the earth! and so the next words import, “your sins have withholden good things from you;” they have forbidden good from you, so Montanus and the Vulgate read the words. Our sins do forbid and withhold good from us; see it, Matt. vi. 15, “If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.”

John viii. 19, “If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also.” Isa. xlviii. 18, “O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea: thy seed also had been as the sand,” &c. See Luke xiv. 16—20; xiii. 34; John v. 40; Psal. lxxxi. 13, 14: it was their sins which frustrated them of mercies. If the word profit not us, it is sin that hinders the profit, Heb. iv. 2; Jam. i. 21; 1 Pet. ii. 1, 2.

Obs. 2. When the heart is carried out after unlawful things, then the ways and ordinances of God are neglected, slighted, and profaned. This rises from the words of the 16th verse; they despised God’s judgments, walked not in his statutes, they polluted his sabbaths; and why did they so? “for their heart went after their idols.” These had stolen away their hearts from God; these had their thoughts, desires, affections, and the things of God were of little account with them; his statutes, judgments, sabbaths, were laid aside, and only what their hearts were carried forth unto, that they magnified. Ezek. vi. 9, they had whorish hearts, and whorish eyes, which went after their idols, and made them depart from God, that is, from his judgments, statutes, sabbaths, ordinances: idols had their eyes and hearts, and as to God and the things of God, they were eyeless and heartless. When Solomon’s heart was carried out to women and idols, then he did evil in the sight of the Lord, 1 Kings xi. 4—8; then the Lord’s ordinances were despised, and his sabbaths polluted. If once the heart go out to unlawful things, it is drawn off from lawful; so much as it adheres to evil, so much it is divided from God and good, Ezek. xxxiii. 31, “Their heart goeth after their covetousness;” so much as it went after riches, so much it was distanced from God, and walking in his ways. David hereupon advised men not to set their hearts upon riches, Psal. lxxii. 10; they will then be their idols, and make them forget God and his ways, and do those things which will profane his ordinances. Look well to your hearts, and let not them carry you away, Job xv. 12.

Obs. 3. When sinners provoke God into ways of destruction, he doth not utterly destroy them, but shows some pity and mercy. “Nevertheless mine eye spared them from destroying.” God did destroy many of them in the wilderness; three thousand upon their making the calf, Exod. xxxii. 28; twenty-four thousand upon their committing whoredom with the daughters of Moab, Numb. xxv. 9; much people by fiery serpents upon their murmuring, Numb. xxi. 6; Korah, Dathan, and Abiram were swallowed up of the earth, and all theirs, and the two hundred and fifty men that offered incense, were consumed by fire, Numb. xvi. 32, 33, 35; fourteen thousand seven hundred were destroyed by the plague, ver. 49; and many by the Amorites in Seir, Deut. i. 44. Now notwithstanding so many were destroyed, yet all were not; he did not make an end of them in the wilderness, he did not consummate and perfect his wrath upon them, his eye spared them, he was moved to mercy, and had compassion on them.

Though men have sinned much, and God have let out much wrath, yet nevertheless he hath an eye to spare, and a heart to pity. If he should punish, destroy none, he would be thought to be like unto sinners, Psalm l. 21; if he should destroy all, he would be thought to be cruel; to show therefore that he is a just God, he cuts off some; and to show he is a merciful God, he spares some.

In the late powder blow, some were destroyed, some were spared, yea, wonderfully spared and preserved.

It was the 4th of Jan. 1619, about eight o’clock at night.

Ver. 18, 19. But I said unto their children in the wilderness, Walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers, neither observe their judgments, nor defile yourselves with their idols: I am the Lord your God; walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them.

In the 18th verse God exhorts them from following their fathers’ ways.

In the 19th he exhorts them to follow his ways, and shows them the reason why they should do so, because he is their God.

Where the Lord spake thus unto them in the wilderness, is not recorded by Moses, but that he did speak what is in the 18th verse, our prophet assures us, who spake as he was moved by the Spirit. You have that which is equivalent thereunto, Deut. v. 32, “Ye shall observe to do as the Lord your God hath commanded you: ye shall not turn aside to the right hand or to the left;” not to your fathers on the right hand, nor to the heathen on the left.

The 19th verse you have Lev. xviii. 4, 5. "I am the Lord your God; ye shall therefore keep my statutes and my judgments." Nothing in these verses requires explanation. Take these observations.

Obs. 1. Children are prone to follow the corrupt decrees, counsels, and examples of their parents. "I said, Walk not in the statutes of your fathers," that is, in what they decree, appoint; "observe not their judgments," that is, their counsels and advisements; "nor defile yourselves with their idols," that is, follow not their examples. They were addicted much to what their sinful fathers said or did. Of the kings of Israel it is said, they did evil as their fathers had done, 2 Kings xv. 9; xxiii. 32; xxiv. 9; and Jer. xlv. 17, the children would sacrifice to and defile themselves with idols, as their fathers had done. Fathers, laws, customs, traditions, examples, persuasions, counsels, are loadstones, and draw them strongly to that which is evil.

Obs. 2. Posterity are not tied to the statutes and judgments of their fathers or forefathers. "I said, Walk not in the statutes of your fathers, neither observe their judgments," &c. Though there be a strong tie between parents and children, and they are bound by the command of God to obey their parents, yet when they shall command or counsel them any thing unlawful, contrary to the statutes and judgments of God, they are not to hearken, not to observe or obey them. Here is divine authority for it, "I said."

If it be God's command that lead children to obey parents, and people to obey magistrates in lawful things, then God's prohibition must keep them from obeying in unlawful things. When masters or parents are so wicked, as to put their servants or children upon lying or swearing, to put off their commodities, they should remember what God hath said, "Walk not in their statutes," &c.

This holds especially in matters of faith and worship; men's statutes and judgments must not come in there: what is not divine, is no matter for my faith, nor rule for my worship. Men's chaff and bran must not come among God's wheat; their weeds and nettles must not come amongst his flowers: it is not popes' decrees, canons of councils, judgments of fathers, votes of synods, customs of churches, religion of ancestors, that must tie my conscience, or guide my practice in the worship of God. He hath said it, who is above them all, "Walk not in their statutes, neither observe their judgments, nor defile yourselves with their idols." Men have their statutes, their judgments, their inventions and additions to points of faith and matters of worship, which are no other than idols, and will defile.

Obs. 3. That we are only to walk in God's statutes, and to keep his judgments; not men's statutes or judgments. "I am the Lord your God," I have authority over you, I am in covenant with you; I have given you statutes and judgments which are right, Psal. xix. 8, true and good, Neh. ix. 13; therefore "walk in my statutes, keep my judgments." When the Israelites walked in other statutes, the statutes of the heathen, or the statutes that themselves made, the Lord was wroth with them, and afflicted them for it, 2 Kings xvii. 8, 19, 20; and commanded them to observe his statutes and ordinances, and to do them for evermore, ver. 37; see Josh. xxiv. 14, 15.

Ver. 20. And hallow my sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God.

In this 20th verse, the Lord proceeds in his exhortation of the children of those rebellious Israelites in the wilderness, and exhorts them to hallow his sabbaths, which their fathers had polluted.

"Hallow my sabbaths." Not make holy, but keep holy; the Hebrew word is the same with that, Exod. xx. 8. The hallowing or sanctifying of the sabbath here, consisteth in two things:

1. In resting from labour and work. "Servile work," Lev. xxiii. 7, 8, that is, such work as men may lawfully do on other days, works for gain and profit, might not be done on sabbath days; they were to rest from their own works, words, and pleasures, Isa. lviii. 13. See Exod. xx. 10; Neh. xiii. 15; Jer. xvii. 22; Exod. xvi. 29; xxxi. 14.

2. In doing those things which God required on that day; as, meditation on the works of creation, for which it was first instituted, Gen. ii. 2, 3; remembrance of their servitude in Egypt, and deliverance thence, Dent. v. 15; meeting in solemn assemblies, Lev. xxiii. 3; in which the word was to be read, opened, and reverently heard, Luke iv. 16; Acts xv. 21; Eccles. v. 1; prayer to be made, Acts xvi. 13; God to be praised, Psal. xlii.; sacrifices to be offered, Numb. xxviii. 9, 10; and they were to exercise works of mercy on that day, Matt. xii. 10—12; John v. 9; and all these duties they were to do with delight, Isa. lviii. 13.

"They shall be a sign between me and you." Of these words you heard in the 12th verse. Besides what was said there, the sabbath was a sign of the covenant God made with them to be their God, and to own them for his people; for it follows, "That ye may know that I am the Lord your God." The sabbath day was the time wherein God and this people met; God made himself known unto them then, by sanctifying of them, ver. 12, for whom he is a God unto, he blesses and sanctifies, and specially on his sabbaths; then he heard their prayers, accepted their offerings, and let out his loving-kindness unto them.

Obs. 1. Having and hallowing God's sabbaths, is a sign and manifestation that God is the God of that people. The Jews had the Lord's sabbaths, and he bade them hallow them, that so being hallowed, they might signify and certify to them, that God was their God. As circumcision and the passover were signs that the Jews were in covenant with God, so likewise was the sabbath, Exod. xxxi. 13; and because it was a sign of the covenant between them and God, ver. 16, God tells them, they must observe it for a perpetual covenant; and hence it was, that when they violated the sabbath, God accounted it the violation of the covenant between them.

Ver. 21. Notwithstanding the children rebelled against me; they walked not in my statutes, neither kept my judgments to do them, which if a man do, he shall even live in them; they polluted my sabbaths: then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the wilderness.

Here the unsuccessfulness of God's exhortation is evidenced; he pressed them to be obedient, and dutiful to him, being their God, but they rebelled, and would not walk in his statutes, nor keep his judgments; their fathers' statutes and judgments they would walk in and observe; they chose rather to be defiled and die in their fathers' ways, than to be sanctified and live in God's ways; whereupon God had a purpose to destroy them, as he had formerly to destroy their fathers. This verse is the same with the 13th, which hath been opened, and the observations given.

Ver. 22. Nevertheless I withdrew mine hand, and wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted in the sight of the heathen, in whose sight I brought them forth.

God having purposed their destruction, saw that if he should proceed thereunto, the heathens would make an ill sense of it, and blaspheme his name: for prevention whereof, he let fall his purpose, and would not destroy them. This verse falls in with the 9th and 14th, only this is in it, which they have not:

"I withdrew mine hand." God's hand was stretched out, and he pulled it back again. The Hebrew word notes thus much, I made to return, I made mine arm come back again, when it was going forth to destroy them.

Obs. God's people do oft provoke him, both fathers and children, and so that they are at the door, brink, point of destruction, and yet he is merciful unto them, and that for his name's sake. When he cannot show mercy for their sakes, he will show mercy for his own name's sake. In ver. 8, is set down their "but." "But they rebelled against me, they would not hearken." they would not forsake their idols, whereupon God purposed to destroy them. In ver. 9, is God's "but," "But I wrought for my name," &c. In ver. 13, again is their "But," "But the house of Israel rebelled," &c.: then God was angry again, and purposed to consume them. In ver. 14, you have God's "but" again. "But I wrought for my name's sake," &c. In ver. 16, you have their "but" the third time, "But they polluted my sabbaths." In ver. 17, you have God's "nevertheless," or but, again, for it is the same in the original, "Nevertheless mine eye spared them," &c. In ver. 21, you have their "notwithstanding," or but, once more, the Hebrew is the same with "but" before; "Notwithstanding," or but, "the children rebelled," &c. And in this 22nd verse you have God's but, or "nevertheless" answering thereunto, "Nevertheless I withdrew mine hand, and wrought for my name's sake." Four times in this chapter you have them provoking God even to their ruin, and as many times his sparing of them: this last time his hand was stretched out, even at the work, and had he stricken one blow, had broken them all; but he recalled his hand, he would not let his power fall upon them to crush them in pieces, but wrought for his name, and their safety. If we have our "buts" and "notwithstanding," importing rebellion, ingratitude, and disobedience, the Lord hath his "buts," and "nevertheless," importing mercy, patience, and loving-kindness.

Ver. 23, 24. I lifted up mine hand unto them also in the wilderness, that I would scatter them among the heathen, and disperse them through the countries; because they had not executed my judgments, but had despised my statutes, and had polluted my sabbaths, and their eyes were after their fathers' idols.

In these two verses you may see,

I. A commination, backed with an oath, in ver. 23.

II. The reason thereof, in ver. 24.

"I lifted up mine hand unto them in the wilderness." Of this gesture used in swearing, you heard before, ver. 5, 6; but where it was done will hardly be found in Moses' writings, that God thus lifted up his hand, and threatened to disperse them. Something like hereunto, see in Deut. iv. 26, 27; xxviii. 25, 36, 37, 64; chap. xxxii. 21—26; Lev. xxvi. 33; in those places the Lord threatens to scatter them; and David tells you, he "lifted up his hand" to do it, Psal. cvi. 26, 27. "He lifted up his hand against them, to overthrow them in the wilderness; to overthrow their seed also among the nations, and to scatter them in the lands." Maldonate makes the lifting up the hand here, to be in way of threatening, not of swearing.

"That I would scatter them among," &c. Of their scattering and dispersion, was spoken in the 5th, 6th, and 12th chapters.

"Because they had not executed my judgments." Some refer these words, and the rest in the verse, to the time after their entrance into Canaan; if then they should not keep God's judgments and do them, he having performed his promise unto them, he would scatter and disperse them among the nations; but because the verse speaks of the time past, we must also look at what was done, as well as what was to do. The children before mentioned had rebelled, and did not keep the judgments of God to do them, they polluted his sabbaths, and defiled themselves with their idols, whereupon God thought to have destroyed them in the wilderness, but spared them for his name's sake, that the Egyptians and nations might not blaspheme and pollute his name; but knowing that when he had possessed them of Canaan, that their children would do as they had done, he lifts up his hand, and threatens their driving out of that land again, and dispersion in the countries, and so makes their sin the cause of their posterity's ruin.

"Their eyes were after their fathers' idols." In the 8th verse, he mentions the idols of Egypt, and they were their "fathers' idols," which the children minded, and were intent upon; for when the eyes go after any thing, there is some affection in the heart unto that thing, ver. 16; and chap. vi. 9, "I am broken with their whorish heart, which hath departed from me, and with their eyes, which go a whoring after their idols:" if the heart did not affect them, the eyes would not. "Fathers' idols" affected both the hearts and eyes of their children; Rachel stole her father's gods, Gen. xxxi. 19, and said, they should be her gods.

Obs. I. That parents' sins prepare heavy judgments for their posterity many years after. God lifted up his hand in the wilderness, that he would scatter them among the heathen, and disperse them through the countries, because they were statute-breakers, sabbath-polluters, and idol-minders, which fell not upon them, but their posterity many hundred years after; Junius makes it five hundred; and then they were driven out of the land of Canaan, and dispersed into heathenish nations, a judgment that deprives men of all their own comforts, and exposes them to all the injuries of others. One calls this judgment the beginning of new evils, and it may be added, of unknown evils. Let parents therefore take heed how they provoke God by sinful and wicked practices, their posterity may smart soundly for it many years after. Saul's, Jeroboam's, and Manasseh's sins, made their posterity to feel sad strokes long after; and some in our days have suffered for their fathers' sins, and it is just with God they should, when they tread in their fathers' steps, who have rebelled against God.

Ver. 25, 26. Wherefore I gave them also statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live; and I polluted them in their own gifts, in that they caused to pass through the fire all that openeth the womb, that I might make them desolate, to the end that they might know that I am the Lord.

Here is a further progress of God's judiciary dealings with them, which lies,

1. In the statutes and judgments he gave them.

11. In the polluting of them.

Then you have the end of both, which is,

1. To make them desolate.

2. To bring them to the knowledge of himself.

In this verse is first a figure called antanaclasis, which is the reciprocating the same words, in a diverse sense: in the former verse is mention made of statutes and judgments, which God gave them, ver. 11, and were his divine word; here is a mentioning of statutes and judgments, which he gave them as divine punishments, being the commands and devices of men.

Secondly, a figure called meiosis or tapeinosis, which is, when less is expressed, and more intended; as, not good, is a mild expression, but more is intended in it, viz. hurtful, deadly: so these words, "should not live," are moderate, but they include that which is grievous, namely, death, yea, terrible deaths; they should not only have no good by them, but much evil, sore destruction.

"I gave them statutes that were not good." The Hebrew is, statutes not good. These statutes were not the moral law, though it be a killing letter, 2 Cor. iii. 6; for the "law is holy, just, and good," Rom. vii. 12, yea "perfect," Psal. xix. 7: not the ceremonials, viz. sacrifices, and sacraments, as Jerom and Estius calls them; for though these were shadows of things to come, yet they had purifying virtue in them, and led to Christ, Heb. ix. 13; Gal. iii. 24; and in this chapter, God speaking of the statutes and judgments he gave them, which comprehend both morals and ceremonials, he saith, ver. 11, 13, 21, that they were such, as, if they kept them, they might live in them. Neither doth it advantage to say, these are called "not good," because they are less good than those of the gospel; let that be granted, yet those statutes, kept, would afford life, but the statutes here meant, were such as whereby they should not live. Not the tributes and taxes imposed upon them by the nations, when they prevailed against them in war, for they were under none in the wilderness, and these statutes were given when they were there.

By these statutes are meant,

1. Those punishments that befell them in the wilderness; as, the sword, Exod. xxii. 27, 28, fiery serpents, Numb. xxi. 6, the plague, chap. xvi. 49, the earth swallowing up Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, ver. 31, 32, fire, ver. 35, suspension, chap. xxv. 4: God commanded the hanging up the heads of the people, he appointed the fire, the earth, the plague, the sword, to do execution upon them, these were "statutes not good;" not good for them, but hurtful, yea, very hurtful, for so much "not good" implies, and the next words prove, being a further declaration of these "judgments, whereby they should not live;" these statutes and judgments took away their lives.

2. Those threatenings and curses you find Deut. iv. 26—28; xxvii. 15—26; xxviii. 15—68; Lev. xxvi. 14—40: these were sentences of death.

3. The inventions, laws, rites, decrees, superstitions, of men, which are called statutes, Dan. vi. 7, Micah vi. 16, "The statutes of Omri are kept;" and 2 Kings xvii. 8, "The statutes of the heathen." And God is said to give them, in that he gave them over to these which were not good, but tended to death and destruction: Seeing they would none of mine, I gave them men's.

Obs. When men slight and violate the statutes and judgments of God, he doth not only threaten and punish them with temporal judgments, but also with spiritual. Because they despised God's statutes, and did not keep his judgments, therefore he gave them "statutes not good, and judgments whereby they should not live." God threatened them with cursings, cut off many of them in the wilderness, and gave over others to believe errors, to follow the imaginations of their own hearts, the commandments and statutes of men, which was a more dreadful judgment. When men care not for the ways of God, which have good and life in them, it is just with God to give them over to the ways of men, that have no good, no life in them; nothing but expense, labour, disappointment, vexation, and destruction, Ezek. xxiv. 12; Jer. ii. 36, 37; Prov. xiv. 12. When God's people would not listen to him, he gave them up to their own hearts' lusts, to the perverse intendments and pertinacities of their hearts; they intended the statutes and judgments of men, of heathens and idolaters, those they were set upon, and God gave them up unto them, as you may see, ver. 39 of this chapter, "Go ye, serve ye every one his idols;" seeing you will not submit to me any ways, go to your idols where your eyes and hearts are, and serve them according to the statutes and judgments of the nations whence ye had them; or if they be of your own devising, serve them according to the ways of your own hearts. 2 Thess. ii. 10—12, when men receive not the love of the truth that they might be saved, God sends them strong delusions that they should believe a lie, and be damned; ἐπιβουλεύων πλάνην, the efficacy of error; the truth comes with love, error with efficacy; if truths wooing and love be not entertained, God sends error with efficacy to seize upon men. Because we have been wanton with the truths, ordinances, and things of God, not received the love of them, but busied our wits and parts about them, yea, against them, therefore God hath sent the efficacy of error to take hold of men. Is not the efficacy of error upon them that say, there is no devil but hoiness, no heaven nor hell but what is in a man's own conscience, &c.?

"And I polluted them in their own gifts." God being most holy, could not communicate any thing that should defile them; from a holy God comes nothing but that which is holy and good. Some take it in this sense, that God suffered them to do those things which defiled them, to prostitute themselves to all abominations.

Sanctius informs us, that one is said to do a thing, when he declares it to be done; Lev. xiii. 3, "The priest shall look on him," וַיִּשָׁא וַיִּטַּעַם and shall pollute him, that is, pronounce, declare him polluted; so ver. 6, he shall cleanse him, saith the original, that is, declare him to be clean; and ver. 44, the priest shall by polluting pollute him, that is, declare him altogether polluted; and our Ezekiel is said to destroy the city, whereas he did but declare the destruction of the city, chap. xliii. 3: so here, God is said to pollute them, in that he did declare them polluted; and not only so, but in that he dealt with them as polluted ones, rejecting them and their gifts.

"In their own gifts." The Septuagint reads it, ἐν τοῖς δόγμασιν αὐτῶν, in their opinions. When men leave the statutes of God, and take up opinions of their own, or tenets of the world, they pollute themselves, God judges them so, will declare them to be such, and deal with them as such: this by the way.

By "gifts" are not meant all the sacrifices which they brought unto the Lord, but their firstborn, which were to be given to God in remembrance of their coming out of Egypt, when the firstborn of the Egyptians were all slain, and the firstborn of the Israelites all preserved, Exod. xiii. 2, 3, 12.

1. 4. Sect. 57, p.
26. Col. 1. 1. 8.

"In that they caused to pass through the fire all that openeth the womb." The Hebrew is, making to pass all opening of the womb; it is a periphrasis, the opening of the womb, for the firstborn, and that of the male kind, which were to be offered to the Lord; but they offered unto idols, causing them "to pass through the fire," as it is in the 31st verse of this chapter. They were forbidden, and that upon pain of death, to let any of their seed to pass through the fire, or to give them unto Molech, Lev. xviii. 21; xx. 2: God expected they should strictly have observed his ordinance of consecrating their firstborn unto him, and they either sacrificed or consecrated them to idols. David, Psal. cvi. 37, 38, tells you, "they sacrificed their sons and daughters unto devils;" he calls their idols devils, and they sacrificed their sons, not only their firstborn, but others, and not only sons, but daughters, so corrupt were they in their opinions and practice.

If it should be granted here, as some interpreters conceive, that they did not offer their firstborn to idols, but to the true God, that they did not cause them to pass through the fire, as the heathens did, but caused them to pass from themselves, from under their power, and give them to God; yet because they despised his statutes, polluted his sabbaths, minded idols, and kept not his statutes, God polluted them in these gifts, declared them and their gifts to be such.

"That I might make them desolate." The word for "desolate" is, עָרָבָה from עָרַב to make waste and desolate even to astonishment. Some render it here, that I might destroy them, and then the sense runs thus: I have declared what polluted creatures they are, that I may thence take occasion to destroy them; but this suits not so well with what follows, "that they might know that I am the Lord." To keep then to the word as it is here; God would "make them desolate," by convincing them of the pollution of their offerings, and by afflicting their consciences; making them to see, that though they had offered their sons, their firstborn to him, or to idols, yet they had gained nothing at his hands thereby, but were so far from pleasing him, that they had greatly provoked him, so that they should be amazed at their desolation.

Obs. 1. That if men alienate from God what is due to him, or bring him his due and live in the breach of his commands, he will not respect them, but declare them to be and deal with them as polluted ones. They alienated their firstborn to idols, which God commanded to be consecrated to him; or brought them to God living in the breach of his statutes; and hereupon he saith, "I polluted them in their own gifts." They thought they did me good service, and should obtain much favour at my hands, that I would be a great benefactor unto them, but they were deceived; I look upon them and their gifts as defiled, loathsome things, and pronounced them to be so. Many think their persons, prayers, and other duties are very acceptable to God, but they will find them otherwise, Isa. i. 11—14; Matt. vii. 22, 23.

Obs. 2. The Lord would not have men to confide in their sacrifices and services. He declared them polluted, that he might make them desolate, beat them off from their hopes and confidences they had upon doing these things. We are apt to rest upon duties, and to promise much to ourselves thereupon; but when God shall tell men they are polluted things they offer, yea, that themselves are polluted in those offerings, this will shake their vain foundations and hopes. When God told them, "He that killed an ox was as if he slew a man; he that sacrificed a lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck; he that offered an oblation, as if he offered swine's blood; he that burned incense, as if he blessed an idol," Isa. lxvi. 3; did he not undermine their strong holds, and make them naked? for he shows that all they did was either lost labour, as the blessing of an idol; or abomination, as swine's blood; or dangerous, as cutting off a dog's neck; or deadly, as killing of a man: thus God "polluted them in their own gifts" and doings, and made them desolate. Thus Christ dealt with the scribes and Pharisees, Matt. xxiii. 13—16, 23, 25, 27, 29; they look for blessings, not for woes: but they were polluted, whatever their confidences were, and Christ declares them to be so, and makes them desolate.

Obs. 3. The Lord strips men of their righteousness, and beats them out of their confidences, that they might come to him, bottom upon him, and find him a sure foundation. God would make them desolate, to the end, that they might know that he was the Lord, that they might not trust in their sacrifices, but in him, the God of them and their sacrifices: in him that could show them their errors, and pardon them being shown. When men are deprived of their supposed comforts, convinced of the falseness of their confidences, surrounded with the guilt and evil of their ways, they begin to look where succour is to be had; to run from the sand to the rock; from themselves, and all that is their own, unto the living God, and look at his promises to believe them, and his statutes to obey them, and so embracing him for the all-sufficient good, abide with and build upon him alone.

Ver. 27—29. Therefore, son of man, speak unto the house of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Yet in this your fathers have blasphemed me, in that they have committed a trespass against me. For when I had brought them into the land, for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to them, then they saw every high hill, and all the thick trees, and they offered there their sacrifices, and there they presented the provocation of their offering: there also they made their sweet savour, and poured out their drink offerings. Then I said unto them, What is the high place wherunto ye go? And the name thereof is called Bamah unto this day.

Having spoken of the proceedings between God and this people in Egypt and the wilderness, we are come now to the passages between them in the land of Canaan.

For the Lord's part, he "brought them into the land," ver. 28, which is the only mercy mentioned; but it was such a mercy as included a multitude of mercies in it, for it was a land "flowing with milk and honey, the glory of all lands," as twice you have it in this chapter; and something of the goodness of this land you may see, Dent. viii. 7—9. And, chap. vi. 10, 11, it was the land that God had lifted up his hand, and sworn to give them; and he brought them into it, without the help of any other people, even by his own arm, for he destroyed the seven nations in it, Acts xiii. 19; and he "gave them the lands of the heathen; and they inherited the labour of the people," Psal. cv. 44. And why did the Lord bring them into this land? the next verse shows, "That they might observe his statutes, and keep his laws." Which thing they did not; for,

1. They blasphemed him, ver. 27.
2. They fell to idolatry, ver. 28.
3. They persisted in it, ver. 29.

"Yet in this your fathers have blasphemed me." The Hebrew for "yet in this," is, moreover this. Septuagint, even to this; they sinned and dealt ungratefully, not only till they came to Canaan, but in Canaan: they were not content with what they had done in Egypt and the wilderness against me, but they continued in their wickedness, and added sin to sin, doing worse and worse daily. Or, moreover in this, and so it notes some heinous and great offence, viz. what he mentions in the end of the verse.

"Have blasphemed me." The Hebrew word signifies, to revile with words, to reproach, and blaspheme. The Septuagint is, they provoked me, they were contumelious, disgracing me. Our translation has it, blaspheme, which is to hurt the name or fame of any, and is a kind of evil speaking, derogating from the glory of God: God's glory or name in itself is inviolable, but blasphemy doth what it can to violate it.

Aquinas makes it to consist,

1. In attributing to God what is not congruous to him; as to say, He is the author of sin; he sees not, he hath forsaken the earth, Ezek. viii. 12; He is like unto man, Psal. l. 21.

2. In detracting from him what belongs unto him; as to deny his providence, his omniscience, his omnipotence; as, Can he provide a table in the wilderness? Psal. lxxviii. 19; If he should make windows in heaven could this thing be? 2 Kings vii. 2: to which may be added,

3. The doing of such things as cause God's name to be blasphemed; as Rom. ii. 24, "The name of God is blasphemed among the gentiles through you." As there is practical atheism, Tit. i. 16, so practical blasphemy.

"In that they have committed a trespass against me." The Hebrew is, in their prevaricating a prevarication against me. The doubling of the word intends the signification, and notes the greatness of their sin, and progress in their wickedness. The Vulgate is, seeing that despising they have despised me. The word לע notes such prevarication, and sinning, as hath the will in it: hence Piscator renders the words here, they have perfidiously sinned against me. They sinned not ignorantly, or of common infirmity, but with a high hand. Junius saith, their sin was, speaking against the truth of God's worship, for when people fall to false worship, they will disparage, if not wholly despise, the worship they had before. So then here we may understand, both their speaking against the true worship of God, and practising contrary thereunto.

Obs. Wilful sinning is a reproaching, a blaspheming of God, and provokes him greatly. "In this your fathers have blasphemed me, in that they have committed a trespass against me;" they have spoken against my worship, and run out to other ways which I forbade them; other sins they have committed which I could have winked at, but when they sin wilfully, despising me, my laws, my worship, they reproach, blaspheme, provoke me so, that they shall hear of it. Son of man, go and speak to the house of Israel, go and tell them how they have dealt with me, and how I take it. Such sins deserve death: Numb. xv. 30, "The soul that doeth ought presumptuously, whether he be born in the land, or a stranger, the same reproacheth the Lord." לע is the same word which is here for "blasphemed," and may as well be rendered so as "reproacheth;" (for he that reproacheth the Lord blasphemeth him, and he that blasphemeth him reproacheth him, they are joined together, 2 Kings xix. 22;) and what then? "That soul shall be cut off from among his people. Because he hath despised the word of the Lord, and hath broken his commandment, that soul shall utterly be cut off." There was no mercy for those who sinned in that manner, Heb. x. 26, 27. Many, I fear, commit such trespasses in these days, by speaking against providence, ordinances, Scriptures, angels, Christ, God himself, and so sin away mercy and their own souls at once. David prayed that God would keep him back from "presumptuous sins," Psal. xix. 13; and we had need do it, for there is that in our natures which carries us on strongly towards them, as much as they did him. Remember what Solomon saith, Prov. xxviii. 14, "Happy is the man that feareth always; but he that hardeneth his heart," that presumeth, that is wilful, pertinacious, "shall fall into mischief;" into mischievous sins, into mischievous judgments. Chap. xiii. 13, "Whoso despiseth the word shall be destroyed; but he that feareth the commandment shall be rewarded;" he that slights the word and ways of God, destruction is his portion; but he that fears to violate the command of God "shall be rewarded." לע he shall have peace, safety. A man by despising or fearing the word and command of God, doth neither hurt the one nor advantage the other; but he may, he doth, hurt or advantage himself, and that greatly.

Ver. 28. "Then they saw every high hill," &c. In this verse you have the idolatry they fell into when they came into the land of Canaan, with the degrees thereof.

1. Their leaving of God, and looking unto the hills, yea, "every high hill, and all the thick trees;" they gave liberty to their eyes to spy out places suitable to their idolatrous thoughts; on hills, and places beset with thick trees, the heathens worshipped, and their hearts and eyes were towards such places.

2. Their making altars, and sacrificing there; "they offered there their sacrifices," &c. They should not have sacrificed any where but in the place God appointed, which was first the tabernacle, afterwards the temple; but they spied out hills, groves, thickets, set up altars, and sacrificed on them those offerings which were peculiar unto God.

3. Their continuance and expensefulness therein; "they offered sacrifices, they poured out there their drink-offerings."

4. Their content and delight they took therein; "there also they made their sweet savour."

"The provocation of their offering." The Hebrew is, the indignation and anger of their corban, that is, their approaching gift, or offering. There is a figure in these words called hypallage, which is such a transposing of words, as that is said of one, which should be said of the other, as here, provocation of offerings, for offerings provoking.

"There also they made their sweet savour." The original for "sweet savour" is, literally, the odour of their rests, their acceptable odours; when they had offered these, they thought the Lord smelt a sweet savour, was well pleased with them, and so rested in them; which fancied rest was pleasing to them, though it lasted not, neither had reality in it, for their incense or "sweet savour" was a provocation to God.

Obs. 1. That what the Lord promiseth he makes good, how difficult or impossible soever it seems to man. The Lord had promised them Canaan; and how should they come to it? They were bond-men in Egypt, there is a Red sea, a vast wilderness, between Egypt and Canaan; and besides, Canaan had strong men in it, sons of Anak, cities walled and great, several kings to oppose and keep them out: but notwithstanding all these difficulties, God having promised to bring them in, he did it: "when I had brought them into the land, for the which I lifted up my hand to give it to them." His hand that was lift up to confirm them it should be done, was let out for the doing thereof; that hand that could take away all doubts, could also take away all difficulties. There is nothing too hard for the Lord; he will work, and who shall, who can, let it, Isa. xliii. 13. As he is gracious to promise, so faithful and able to perform, and doth in due time make good whatever he hath promised, though it seem impossible. He said, a virgin should bring forth, Isa. vii. 14; and was it not made good? Matt. i. 18: that Abraham who was aged should have a child, and his seed be as the stars of heaven; and were not both made good? Gen. xxi. 2; Exod. xii. 37; Numb. xi. 21; not one word failed of all that God promised Moses, 1 Kings viii. 56. This should make us believe the promises of God, whatever flesh and blood objects.

Obs. 2. Men's habitations are given and assigned unto them of the Lord. I brought them into the land, I gave it them. If men be removed from place to place, seated here or there, the hand of the Lord is in it; if they have commodious, pleasant, gainful habitations, if they dwell safely under vines and fig trees, as it is 1 Kings iv. 25, it is the Lord's doing, his providence disposed it so; and we should be thankful in and for our habitations, and mind the heavenly Canaan, and those mansions mentioned, John xiv. 2, prepared for those who do believe, and glorify God, out of which, when once we are possessed of them, we shall never be removed.

Obs. 3. Circumstances of time and place do aggravate men's sins, and make them heinous. When I had brought them into the land, then they saw every high hill, there they offered sacrifices, there they presented the provocation of their offerings, there they made their sweet savour, there they poured out their drink-offerings; here are four theres, every one aggravating and accenting their sins. This was ingratitude with a witness, that the Lord should bring them into such a land as flowed with milk and honey, and they should bestow the milk and honey upon idols; into such a land as was the glory of all lands, and they should defile it, and make it abominable, as it is Jer. ii. 7, "I brought you into a plentiful country, to eat the fruit thereof and the goodness thereof; but when ye entered, ye defiled my land, and made mine heritage an abomination." This, this made their sin exceeding sinful, and the Lord to set the emphasis upon it. There, in Canaan, the land I espied out for them, they sinned; there, in Canaan, where I fulfilled my promise made to their fathers and them, they sinned; there, in Canaan, out of which I drove mighty nations for their sakes, they sinned; there, in Canaan, the land I chose to dwell in, they set up altars, and diverted my sacrifices, offerings, and sweet savours unto them; there, where I looked they should have become a holy people unto me, they became like the nations, and worse than the nations round about them. Sinning after great mercies bestowed, and where they were bestowed, makes sin sinful above measure.

Obs. 4. When men go out from God's truths, ordinances, and ways of worship, they are restless, and run from opinion to opinion, and from one way to another. "They saw every high hill, and all the thick trees;" they ran from hill to hill, from tree to tree, and were not long satisfied any where; when they had found a hill which pleased them, set up an altar there, and sacrificed awhile, they grow to dislike of that place and that altar; then they must to another hill, have another altar, which had its time, and then that was left; and to the thick trees they go, and there they fall in with the worshippers and ways there in practice; and so from altar to altar, from place to place, and not satisfied, Ezek. xvi. 29. And it is just with God, that those men who go out from him, and off from the ways and forms of worship he hath prescribed, (depriving him of his legislativeness therein,) should be given up unto restlessness of spirit. This is abundantly verified among the papists, where they run from saint to saint, from altar to altar, and from one order of friars and Jesuits to another; yea, this hath been signally fulfilled amongst us, in our days, wherein many having left and cast off God's ways and worship, have run into variety of opinions and practices; they have seen every hill, every tree, every altar, every way; and may it not be said, as of the unclean spirits in the gospel, they have walked in dry places, sought rest and found none? Men's ways, opinions, intentions, are dry things, and have no rest in them. Only God's ways and ordinances have virtue in them, to moisten, quicken, comfort, and satisfy us. Micah ii. 7, "Do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly?" whatever the sickly fancies of men are, God's words and ways are good, and they only do good to the sons of men that walk uprightly: Prov. x. 29, "The way of the Lord is strength to the upright," not to those who turn aside to the whimsies, fancies, and wills of men.

Obs. 5. That may be offensive and hateful to God, which men judge to be grateful and acceptable. "They presented the provocation of their offering," or provoking offerings. Whom did they provoke? even the Lord, whom they concluded they greatly pleased, for it follows, "there also they made their sweet savour;" they made account their sweet savours would be sweet in the nostrils of God, but they were stinking and loathsome, because not offered where they should have been offered, nor as God had appointed, nor came from hearts believing and obedient. They were at great pains and charges in their sacrifices, offerings, sweet savours; and what was the issue of it? instead of pleasing, they provoked God. Amos v. 21, 22, 24, "I hate, I despise your feast days, and I will not smell in your solemn assemblies. Though ye offer me burnt offerings and your meat offerings, I will not accept them; neither will I regard the peace offerings of your fat beasts. Let judgment run down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream." They thought that notwithstanding all their injustice, that their sacrifices and services should be accepted; but God was so far from it, he despised and hated them: the like you have in Jer. vi. 20. Let us take heed lest we provoke God by our sacrifices, while we think we please him. If they be not from gracious hearts, tendered up in faith, according to rule, and for his glory, he will say, as it is Isa. lvii. 6, "Should I receive comfort in these?"

Ver. 29. "Then I said unto them, What is the high place whereunto ye go?" Here the Lord doth reprove them for, and seek to reclaim them from, their idolatry. You know that place I have chosen, where my tabernacle is, the altar I have appointed for sacrifices: what is the high place whither ye go? what is it for? what do you there? why transgress you my statutes, and keep not to them? To this effect and purpose the Lord spake by his prophets unto them.

The word for "high place" is, הַבְּסֵה that high, or the high place. Some think it a high altar, or a chapel built in a wood, or on a high hill. It was the practice of the gentiles, upon hills, and under green trees, to build altars with steps, or ascensions to go up by, which the Jews imitated contrary to command; for God had bid them to make an altar of earth unto him, and where he should appoint; and if of stone, it must not be of hewn stone, neither might his altar have any steps, Exod. xx. 24—26. Neither was the altar of God ever called "Bamah," a high place, but Mizbeach, the sacrificatory, or the place of slaying and sacrificing. But the Jews falling to heathenish customs and practices, learned their names, and imposed them upon their altars, called them Bamahs or Bamoths. When God therefore saith, "What is the high place," or Bamah? he doth reprove and upbraid them for their idolatry: What madness is this in you, that you have forsaken the temple and altar of God, to go to the Bamahs, the high places, hills and trees of heathens, that you prefer their ways before mine? what is it you find there, that you cannot keep your habitations, and content yourselves with what I have appointed you? Are the gods of the nations, and their high places, better than the God of Israel and his altar?

"And the name thereof is called Bamah unto this day." They desisted not from that idolatrous name and practice they had taken up, but persisted therein; they had called those places Bamah, and would call them so still, they were tenacious of their superstitious opinions, names, and ways; the high places remained till the days of Josiah, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3.

Obs. 1. Such is the perverseness of men's natures and spirits, that they are not content with what God in his infinite wisdom and goodness hath prescribed them in point of worship. "What is the high place whereunto ye go?" Am not I your God? have not I given you an altar, appointed sacrifices, and told you where and how you must sacrifice? have not I accepted your sacrifices, when brought according to my direction? why do you go out from me, and are not content with what is mine? This is the evil of man's nature, that it oft rejects what is divine, and chooses what is human, it leaves the Creator's, and chooses the creature's: Jer. ii. 13, "My people have committed two evils; they have forsaken me the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water."

Obs. 2. That superstitious names, ways, and practices, once taken up, are not easily laid down again. They had a high place called Bamah, and that high place they would go unto, and keep that name, though the Lord had oft reproved them for it; and not only that, but other high places also: when the altar of Damascus, the image of jealousy, and Tammuz, were once admitted amongst them, they were not suddenly or easily removed again. Ephraim having taken up the names of Baalim, would not lay them aside till God took them out of her mouth, Hos. ii. 17. Are there not names amongst us, kept to this day, which sprung from gross idolatry? Vorstegan tells you, that Sunday was so called from the idol of the sun, unto whose adoration it was dedicated; so Monday from the idol of the moon, Tuesday from the idol Tuisco, Wednesday from the idol Woden, Thursday from the idol Thor, Friday from the idol Friga, or Frea, and Saturday from the idol Seater, not Saturn. These were Saxon idols, and they who gave the days their names, and dedicated them unto such idols, sinned greatly; and it is not excusable that we keep their memory still alive, calling the days by such names, which are dishonourable to God and Scripture. The Rhemists disallow these names of the days; they say Sunday is a heathenish calling, as all other of the week days are; some imposed after the names of planets, as in the Romans' time: some by the name of certain idols that the Saxons did worship, and to which they dedicated their days before they were christians, which names the church used not.

Ver. 30—32. Wherefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers? and commit ye whoredom after their abominations? For when ye offer your gifts, when ye make your sons to pass through the fire, ye pollute yourselves with all your idols, even unto this day: and shall I be enquired of by you, O house of Israel? As I live, saith the Lord God, I will not be enquired of by you. And that which cometh into your mind shall not be at all, that ye say, We will be as the heathen, as the families of the countries, to serve wood and stone.

Here you have, besides the prophet's commission in the beginning of the 30th verse,

1. An imputation of their wretched practices unto them; they followed the steps of their fathers, they became idolatrous like them, offering their gifts to idols; they caused their children to pass through the fire; they persisted in their wickedness.

2. God's resolution and oath not to have to do with them: "Shall I be inquired of by you?" &c. ver. 31.

3. His frustration of their counsels and designs; ver. 32, "That which cometh," &c.

"Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers?" The elders of Israel that were in Babylon came to the prophet to inquire of the Lord, touching the affairs of Jerusalem. The Lord commands the prophet to ask them this question, "Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers?" intimating that they were, and therefore, their coming to the prophet was but a pretence, and should speed accordingly.

Ecclampadius reads the words thus, Do ye not pollute yourselves in the way of your fathers? Vatablus, Are ye not polluted in the way of your fathers? Castalio hath it without an interrogation, You are polluted with the manners of your ancestors; but it is best with the interrogation. Interrogations in Scripture sometimes serve for admiration, as Luke i. 34, "How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?" sometimes for demonstration, Psal. xv. 1, "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle, who shall dwell in thy holy hill?" Sometimes they are arguments of doubting, as Luke i. 18, saith Zacharias, "Whereby shall I know this? for I am an old man, and my wife well stricken in years." Sometimes they note indignation, as Exod. x. 3, "How long wilt thou refuse to humble thyself before me? let my people go, that they may serve me." Sometimes they hold out accusation, and exprobration, as Mal. iii. 14, "What profit is it that we have kept his ordinance, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hosts?" Here the interrogation notes both indignation and exprobration; "Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers?" do ye live in their sins, and come to inquire of the prophet, and of me by the prophet? I am angry, and cannot endure such vile pretences and deep dissimulation.

"And commit ye whoredom after their abominations?" By "whoredom" is meant idolatry; and wherein idolatry resembles whoredom, hath formerly been hinted unto you, chap. vi. 9. It is a violating the covenant between God and his people, which is called marriage, Jer. iii. 14; Hos. ii. 2; it is to go out from the true God to other gods, Deut. xxxi. 16; it is to sacrifice to devils, Lev. xvii. 7; to mind wizards, chap. xx. 6; to seek after our own hearts, eyes, and inventions, Numb. xv. 39; Psal. cvi. 39.

Ver. 31. "When ye offer your gifts." The Hebrew is, in elevating your gifts. By "gifts," in the 26th verse, were understood their firstborn; but here "gifts" and firstborn are distinct. "When ye offer your gifts," when you make your sons to pass through the fire. These "gifts" were those other oblations appointed in the law, or whatever they voluntarily bestowed upon their idols, as in chap. xvi. 18, 19.

"When ye make your sons to pass through the fire." Of these words something hath been said before in chap. xvi. 20, 21. I shall add a little.

The heathens were wont, in times of public calamity, to sacrifice their children, saith Eusebius; and Lactantius tells of Pescennius Fertus, saying, That the Carthaginians did sacrifice men to Saturn, and being overcome by Agathoeles, king of the Sicilians, thinking their god was angry with them, they offered two hundred noblemen's sons to pacify him. Sometimes they killed them, sometimes they drowned them, and sometimes they burnt them.

This practice of sacrificing their children, to pacify their provoked gods, some affirm to be taken up from Abraham's sacrificing of his son, with which God was so well pleased, that he gave forth a large eulogy of him for it. But it is not probable that it proceeded thence, for the Lord suffered not Abraham to do it, and prohibited by a severe law the doing of such a thing, viz. the sacrificing of their children to idols, Lev. xx. 2. It was more likely from the devil in their oracles, for Plutarch tells of the Lacedæmonians, who being greatly afflicted with the plague, had an answer from the oracle of Apollo, that the plague should cease, if they sacrificed a virgin chosen out of the chief of the nobility. Doubtless it was Satan put this into the hearts of men, for he "was a murderer from the beginning," and delighteth much in shedding of man's blood, especially in honour to himself, Psal. cvi. 37, for such sacrifices were to him and his. Some sacrificed men to Diana, some to Mercury, some to Saturn, whom divers think and affirm to be Molech, the idol the Jews sacrificed their children unto. They admitted the heathenish idol, and the heathenish practice: 2 Kings xvi. 3, Ahaz made his sons to pass through the fire according to the abominations of the heathen; and it was to Molech that he, and others, made their children pass through the fire unto, chap. xxiii. 10. This Molech was a great brazen idol, having a calf's head and hands to receive whatever was offered; it being hollow, had seven distinct cavities in it. 1. For those who offered fine flour. 2. For those who offered turtles. 3. For those who offered a sheep. 4. For those who offered a ram. 5. For those who offered a calf. 6. For those who offered an ox. 7. For those who offered their children. For the children offered, it is conceived they were burnt alive in that hollow place they were put into, or upon, or else they were put into the arms of the idol, and roasted to death in them; at the doing whereof, they made hideous noises with kettles, or drums, that the screechings and cries of the children might not be heard.

"And shall I be inquired of by you, O house of Israel?" &c. These words you had in ver. 3, they need not now to be opened, only there is, "elders of Israel," and here it is, "O house of Israel."

Obs. 1. The ways of our forefathers are not always to be trodden in and followed. "Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers? and commit ye whoredom after their abominations?" Here the Lord is angry with them, accuses and upbraids them, for following their fathers. It is not always unlawful so to do. Josiah walked in all the ways of David his father, and turned not aside to the right hand or to the left, 2 Kings xxii. 2; so Hezekiah did according to all that David his father did, chap. xviii. 3. Men that are good, and walk in the ways of God, they may be followed. Solomon commends them that "walk in the way of good men, and keep the paths of the righteous," Prov. ii. 20; but when men forsake the ways of truth, mercy, and righteousness, fall to false worship, unjust and unwarrantable practices, children ought not to tread in their fathers' steps; if they do, they will pollute themselves, and provoke God against them, as these did here. Forefathers are not to be followed in doctrine, worship, or manners, further than they follow the word and Christ. Paul, that great apostle, would not have any to follow him further than he followed Christ, 1 Cor. xi. 1. The Thessalonians followed Paul, Sylvanus, Timothy, but they followed the Lord also, and these men no otherwise than they followed him. If men will follow their fathers, they must see to it that they were sound in the faith, sound in their worship, and sound in their lives; for the exhortation is, 3 John II, to "follow not that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doeth good is of God: but he that doeth evil hath not seen God:" and, Heb. vi. 12, Be "followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises."

Obs. 2. That children, to uphold the customs and practices of their fathers, will part with things dear, and do unaturally, especially if pretence of religion come in. The fathers of these in Babylon, they were idolaters, they sacrificed their children to idols, under pretence of the more acceptance; and to uphold such customs and doing of their fathers, the children part with their dear and tender infants, do impious, unjust, and inhuman things, cause their little ones to pass through the fire, to be burnt to ashes, in honour of their feigned and false deities. Superstition and idolatry make men unnatural. Beasts will preserve their young, and venture their lives to save their little ones, when men do willingly destroy theirs under pretence of religion, and put them to such cruel tortures. The papists do uphold the sinful ways of their forefathers at dear rates, and are unnatural in whipping of themselves. If these, and Jews, did part with dear things to maintain the wicked ways of their fathers, and do unaturally, unjustly, to keep them up, what condemnation will it be to us, if we will not part with things needful, do things christian and just, to uphold true religion, and uphold the lawful and godly practices of our forefathers! If they would part with their children and blood for maintenance of idolatry, what should we think too dear for maintenance of the gospel? People will part with dear things to maintain their opinions, even their modesty, to uphold a conceit of perfection.

Obs. 3. Hypocrisy so displeases God, that he will have nothing to do with hypocrites. These elders, this house of Israel, they polluted themselves in their fathers' sins, they took up ways of false worship, and lived in the same to the day they came to inquire: and what saith God? "Shall I be inquired of by you, O house of Israel?" you dissemble, act the hypocrite's part, and you provoke me not only to refuse to hear you, but to swear against you: "As I live, I will not be inquired of by you." You come not in sincerity, but in subtlety; you pretend to walk in my ways, but you intend to follow your fathers' ways; you make as if you would worship me, but you mean to worship idols. Ah! you old hypocrites, painted sepulchres, why come ye to me? I will not hear, answer, nor have to do with you. Hypocrites seem to do that they do not: 2 Kings xvii. 33, "They feared the Lord, and served their own gods;" that is, they seemed to fear him, but did not, for, ver. 34, it is said, "They fear not the Lord." Hypocrites would join God and their own ways, or fathers' ways, together, but it will not take with him: Matt. vi. 24, "No man can serve two masters." The great Master of truth said this; and when men lean to their fathers' ways, love them and idols, they despise God, and hate his ways. There is no truth in them; no metaphysical truth, their notions agree not with the mind of God; no physical truth, there is no reality in their words or actions; no moral truth, their lives agree not with their professions. John Huss had the devil pictured upon his clothes, but he had Christ within; hypocrites have the picture of Christ without, but the devil within. Satan hath their hearts, or the greatest part of them; Hos. x. 2, "Their heart is divided; now shall they be found faulty: he shall break down their altars;" God will not accept them, nor their sacrifices, he will appear against them and their doings.

Labour, therefore, to be sincere, for the upright are his delight. Those who regard iniquity in their hearts, whoever they be, whatever they inquire and seek for at the hands of God, God will not hear them, but discover them, and give them the reward of hypocrites.

Ver. 32. "And that which cometh into your mind shall not be at all." The Hebrew runs thus, that which ascends upon the spirit by being shall not be; that is, your thoughts, purposes, counsels, determinations, which are risen up in your heads and hearts, and take impression there, have a being in them, they shall lose their being, and come to nothing; you look upon them as having much essence in them, but they shall all vanish. The Vulgate is, the thought of the mind shall not be effected.

"That ye say, We will be as the heathen." Here the thought of their heart is made known. These elders of Israel, considering the condition they were in, thought it best to cast off the God of Israel, and his worship, and to fall to the gods of the nations, and their worship; to cease from their judaism, and to turn to gentilism. They thought the gods of the heathen dealt better with them than the God of the Jews did with them. Or, if their God were the God of all nations, yet he showed more kindness to them, serving wood and stone, than he did to the Jewish people, who were tied up by strict laws, burdened with a multitude of sacrifices and ceremonies, now spoiled, captives, held under hard bondage, in danger of being cut off for Zedekiah's revolt and perfidiousness; whereas the Babylonians and provinces that belonged to them did prosper, were in safety and peace; and let the best be made of it, they knew that they must abide many years under the Babylonish yoke, therefore thought it the wisest course to become like the heathens, to conform to their worship and manners, whereby they should be looked upon as of them, and not of Abraham; as men of Babylon, not of Zion; as gentiles, not Israelites; and so provide for their safety, peace, and prosperity.

"As the families of the countries." They made account to cast off the worship of the God of Israel, which exposed them to reproach, hatred, and hard sufferings, and to give up themselves fully to their gods, their worship, and observance of their rites: they intended to incorporate and become one with the Babylonish race and brood, that so they might have a Babylonish happiness, and be free from the strokes of the God of Israel, under whom they suffered so much.

"To serve wood and stone." That is, gods, or idols, made of wood and stone. See Deut. xxxix. 17; chap. iv. 28, "There ye shall serve gods, the work of men's hands, wood and stone."

Obs. 1. How cunningly soever hypocrites do carry their lewd and wicked designs, yet they are known to God, and he will discover them. These elders of Israel were resolved to change their religion, to be like the heathen, and colour it over with coming to the prophet, to inquire how things would proceed with them at Jerusalem; what counsel he would give unto themselves, they would be ready to do it, whereas they never intended it. This the Lord saw, this he discovers, and uncases these dissembling hypocrites. Herod pretended he would go and worship Christ, but his intent was to murder him, Matt. ii. 8, 13, which God discovered.

Obs. 2. There be risings, thoughts in men's hearts which are not of God. What they had in their heads, or hearts, God owned not. Many in these days think every motion they have in their hearts, minds, whatever riseth up there, is of God, and his Spirit, and therefore must be obeyed; hence it comes to pass that darkness is called light, and all vices are practised under the notion of virtue; but corruptions, flesh, old man, Satan, have their operations in the hearts of the wicked always, and too oft in the godly. The earth brings forth weeds of itself, and not corn, unless it be sown.

Obs. 3. Carnal, politic men affect religion as it serves their own interest. These elders, considering what Zedekiah and their brethren had done at Jerusalem, revolted from Nebuchadnezzar; they feared hard measure now would befall them for their Jewish religion, and they resolved not to venture liberty, limbs, or life for that religion, which had been a bondage, and burdensome unto them, and now might hazard all. They would now revolt from God and truth, and be as the heathen, who prospered, were in peace and safety. Politicians think it weakness, foolishness, to suffer for religion. They can change it at pleasure, and fall in with that which hath most pomp and applause in the world. Upon this account many have fallen from protestantism to popery, and from christianity to Turcism; to save their skins, they have parted with their religions. Many men make use of religion as mariners of the winds, merely to serve their own ends; if religion once cross them, they can cast it off, and fall in with those ways of worship which do suit their humours, and further their designs; like children, that, having been held in by their parents, bestow themselves upon any to obtain their own ends. These elders saw their law and worship were differing from the religion of the state where they were, and so exposed them to many inconveniences and dangers; they would therefore be of the state religion, outwardly at least complying with that, serving "wood and stone."

Obs. 4. God sometimes disappoints the designs and expectations of men, who intend and resolve to forsake him, and provide for themselves by sinful and idolatrous ways. "That which cometh into your mind shall not be at all;" you would be as the heathens, but it shall not be; I will not only deny your desires, but dash your designs; you seek heathens' favour, and shall meet with heaven's frowns, and miss of your aims; you would be Babylonians, have the protection and blessing of Babylonish gods, but my thoughts are cross to yours, that which is in my mind shall stand, not what is in yours; that happiness you hope for in the ways and worship of Babylonians you shall not find. Men think, by going out to the world, by conforming to base, vile superstition, and idolatrous practices, to get much; but God, in his infinite wisdom and justice, disappoints them, as Demas and Judas.

Ver. 33. As I live, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you.

Having showed the ingratitude and untoward carriage of this people in Egypt, in the wilderness, in Canaan, and their resolution to cast off God in Babylon, here begins the fourth general part of the chapter, viz. a denunciation of judgment for their hypocrisy and other sins, together with promises of mercy, extending to the 45th verse. In the verse you have.

I. God asserting his authority and power over this people, who thought to cast him off; "I will rule over you."

II. The manner of his ruling over them, which is,

1. With power.

2. With fury.

III. The ratification of both, and that is by oath, "As I live, saith the Lord."

Touching this oath of God much hath been spoken already, in this and former chapters.

"With a mighty hand." The Hebrew is, in or with a strong hand; with a rigid hand, saith Castalio. By "mighty hand" here is not simply meant God's power, but his power in punishing; so the plagues of Egypt were God's strong and "mighty hand." God would punish them for their dealings, and to that purpose, it should be visibly and openly, and therefore it follows,

"With a stretched-out arm." Sometimes the stretching out of God's arm notes powerful and visible deliverance, Psal. cxxxvi. 12; sometimes powerful and visible punishment, as here. In the inflicting of punishments, men stretch out their hands and arms, which here, after the manner of men, is given to God.

"With fury poured out." Of dealing in "fury," accomplishing, "fury," and pouring out "fury," see before, chap. viii. 18; v. 13; ix. 8.

"Will I rule over you." Ruling imports sovereignty, authority, and power over others. Here the genus, by a synecdoche, is put for the species; the whole work of ruling, for punishing; and the sum of the words is this; You think, by withdrawing from me and my worship, and by Babylonizing, to secure yourselves, to escape danger and all punishment; but know assuredly, you are my subjects, I will not suffer you so to revolt from me, I will put forth mine hand, and mine arm, my fury, punishing you for your rebellions and idolatries, so that, willing or unwilling, me shall you acknowledge to be your Lord and Sovereign.

Obs. 1. It is a vain thing to think of getting from under the dominion of God, and impossible to accomplish. These elders thought to withdraw from under the laws and government of the God of Israel, and put themselves under the Babylonish gods and Babylonian government; but what saith God? "I will rule over you;" take what course you please; transform yourselves into heathenish manners, disperse yourselves into by-corners, villages, towns, cities, plant yourselves in what province soever of the king of Babylon's, use what policy you can to cast off my yoke, yet "I will rule over you," for you cannot go from my presence nor from my power. In the second Psalm, the great ones of the earth thought to exempt themselves from the government of God and Christ; "Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us;" but they were laughed to scorn, and vexed for it, ver. 3—5.

Obs. 2. The untoward carriage of God's people causes him to deal more sharply with them. Rebelliousness in them produceth rigidity in him; their treachery bred severity; "With a mighty hand, and fury poured out, will I rule over you." They thought to run from under him, and he held a stricter hand over them; they would not willingly obey as sons, he made them obey as servants. When servants run from their masters, they bestir them, fetch them back with power, punish them severely for their fugitiveness, and hold them harder to it than ever; so did the Lord by these, and made them know that he ruled in Babylon, as well as in Zion, and turned his golden sceptre into an iron rod, and put a yoke of iron upon them. This is that the Lord told them in Moses' days, that if they walked contrary to him, he would walk contrary unto them, and punish them seven times more; that is, rule over them with greater severity, Lev. xxvi. He would make his little finger heavier than his loins had been before.

Obs. 3. God will punish those that shake off his worship to follow false ways, with visible and irresistible punishments. These elders were upon terms of apostatizing from the God of Israel, about to leave his tents, and to betake themselves to the Babylonish temples, therefore the Lord swears he will rule over them with a "stretched-out arm," (he would visibly punish them,) and with "fury poured out;" they should no more be able to withstand it than a man can a great rain or flood. When subjects are upon rebelling, and would fall in with some other, this kindles his fury, causes him to punish them openly and irresistibly. Apostasy is a provoking sin; it is a reproach to God, his truths, and ordinances; it is a violating of all former promises and engagements unto God; it is high ingratitude and rebellion against God; it is a great scandal unto all the godly, especially the weak; it encourages, hardens, and justifies the wicked; it ruins souls; it gratifies Satan; and therefore exposes men to visible and unavoidable judgments. You know how God met with Julian, and other apostates since his time. That men should cast off God, is wonder to heaven and earth; Jer. ii. 12, 13, "Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this; my people have forsaken me;" and because they did so, lions roared upon them, and laid them waste, ver. 15; Egyptians took the crown from their head, ver. 16, 17. It bred astonishment in Paul, that the Galatians were so soon removed from him, that called them into the grace of Christ, to another gospel, Gal. i. 6; they had apostatizing spirits, minding another gospel, another Christ, another way to salvation, than he delivered to them. And may it not be matter of astonishment to us, that many are so shaken, that they have cast off our God, our Christ, our gospel, our ordinances, and have found out another gospel, another Christ, and another way to salvation than ever; but it is to be feared some remarkable and unavoidable judgments are near unto them. God hath no pleasure in those that draw back, Heb. x. 38; they have "cast off the thing that is good: the enemy shall pursue them," Hos. viii. 3. These elders had purposed to become like the heathen, and God sware presently to punish them openly and irresistibly; what will he then do to those who have actually withdrawn from him and his ways? surely his wrath will smoke against them. Let us take heed, in these declining times, of falling away from God and his ways; beware of carnal policy, which was the thing here that put these elders upon it; beware of carnal relations and unmortified lusts, which made Spira and Spalato revolt so foully; beware of promotion and greatness, which made Henry the fourth of France to turn papist; beware of false teachers, corrupt opinions, which have made many among us to go so far from God and his ways. Keep innocency, count all the glory and greatness of the world as nothing; prize truth, and the ways of God, highly; cleave fully to Christ, live by faith, prove all things, and hold fast what is good; so shall there never be an evil heart in you of unbelief, to depart from the living God.

Ver. 34. And I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out.

These words do hold out no good unto them, but declare that what they hoped to be a mercy, should prove a judgment. They thought that if they were scattered up and down among the Babylonians, and quitted the Jewish worship, they should be safe, and live as happily as Babylonians; but God would not lose his right and privilege, he would rule over them; and here he shows the manner of it again, and that more fully, "I will bring you out," &c.

"I will bring you out from the people." Divers expositors, by "people," or nations, understand the Ammonites, Moabites, Tyrians, Egyptians, Idumeans, and Edomites, and cite Jer. xl. 11, 12, and xliii. 7; and so make the prophet to mean it of the Jews dispersed into those places upon the siege, spoiling, and taking of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar in the times of Jehoiachin and Zedekiah; but our prophet and these elders being in Babylon, he speaks of the Babylonians among whom these captive elders and Jews were dispersed, and sought to be like unto them, that so they might be the safer, but God gathered them out from them, and would not suffer them to become Babylonians. Besides, this was in the seventh year of the captivity, as appears, verse 1 of this chapter; and at that time Jerusalem stood, Zedekiah was reigning, and the people were not scattered into those nations mentioned; for Zedekiah reigned eleven years, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 11; and nothing is said of any dispersion when Jehoiachin was taken away, and Zedekiah set up. It is also further added here,

"I will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered." He speaks of those who were scattered at that time. There were many provinces into which they had scattered, or were upon scattering themselves. Vatablus' sense is thus, I will gather you out of the nations among which ye are captives.

Obs. Wherever wicked men hide themselves, or seek for their own safety, God will find them out, and bring them forth to punishment. These elders, and the rest of the captives that were wicked, thought by lurking amongst the Babylonians, and conforming to them in state and religious affairs, they should be safe and well; but saith the Lord, Live where you will, shift for yourselves what you can, be as the heathen, and carry it as close as may be, I will find you out, and bring you forth from them with strength, and punish you to purpose. God's eyes run to and fro throughout the earth, and he quickly spies where sinners lie hid, and brings them forth to justice at his pleasure; Amos ix. 2—4, "Though they dig into hell, thence shall mine hand take them, though they climb up to heaven, thence will I bring them down. Though they hide themselves in the top of Carmel, I will search and take them out thence; and though they be hid from my sight in the bottom of the sea, thence will I command the serpent, and he shall bite them: and though they go into captivity before their enemies, thence will I command the sword, and it shall slay them." The sense of these words is thus much, That whereas other creatures can shift and secure themselves from their enemies; the conies and creeping things by hiding themselves in the holes of the earth, the birds by flying up into the clouds and heavens, the beasts by running to the hills and woods, the fish by sinking down to the bottom of the sea; men that have offended God cannot secure themselves any where, God's eyes are set upon them for evil, and his hand is against them. Isa. xxviii. 15, they were at agreement with death and hell, and thought the overflowing scourge should not come unto them; but, ver. 18, "Your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it." Babel ascended above the height of the clouds, yet was brought down to hell, Isa. xiv. 14, 15; Jer. li. 53; the high places and hills, whither the Jews oft betook themselves, did not secure them, Jer. xii. 12. Let sinners hide themselves in any place, their sin will find them out, Numb. xxxii. 23; they cannot escape the piercing eye, or punishing hand, of God.

Ver. 35, 36. And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face. Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord God.

These verses tell us what God did with them after he had gathered them out of the countries. He did two things:

I. He brought them into a "wilderness."

II. He pleaded with them there; and the manner of his pleading with them is set down,

1. To be "face to face."

2. So as he pleaded "with their fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt."

"Into the wilderness of the people." Not into Babylon, which is called a "wilderness," chap. xix. 13, for they were already in Babylon. "Wilderness of the people," doth not signify desertum inter populos, but rather desertum a populis, as Rom. i. 4, ἡ ἀναστάσεως νεκρῶν, "by the resurrection of the dead;" that is, by the resurrection from the dead: so "into the wilderness of the people," imports, into a wilderness from the people. Vatablus saith, There was a wilderness between Chaldea and Judea, unto which the Lord alludes; as he brought their fathers out of Egypt into Arabia Deserta, so he would bring them out of Babylon into that wilderness. Junius' sense of this wilderness is, That God would bring them into such a place as all men would fly from on account of its dreadful nature. Others make the meaning of the words to be, That God would bring them into a most miserable estate; they thought they should be best of all if they turned heathens, but this caused God to bring them into a worse condition than they were. I incline to take the words literally, rather than metaphorically, because he speaks of bringing and gathering them out from people and countries, and bringing them "into the wilderness," which notes motion from place to place; and this "wilderness" is paralleled with that of the land of Egypt, which was real, and not metaphorical.

"There will I plead with you." Not only dispute and reason the case with you, but also deal with you according to your sins; I will be revenged on you, I will execute my judgments upon you. As I punished your fathers when they were in the wilderness for their sins, so will I punish you for your sins. They smarted for their murmuring, lusting, whoredom, idolatry, rebellion, ingratitude; and so shall you for doing as your fathers did.

“Face to face.” The rabbies, being very propitious to their own nation, interpret these words thus: God alone, having them alone separate from the nations, would punish them, that they might not see what punishment he laid upon them, and rejoice thereat. But the phrase notes God’s presence and visible manner of punishing them, so that it should be most evident to be the hand of God.

“As I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt.” How God “pleaded” with them in that “wilderness” which belonged to the Egyptians, let us search a little.

1. He pleaded with them speedily. Numb. xxv. 1, “The people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab;” and, ver. 4, the Lord bids Moses “take all the heads of the people and hang them up;” here was quick work. So Exod. xxxii. 7, 10, “Get thee down; the people have corrupted themselves: let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them:” ver. 28, “There fell of the people that day about three thousand men.”

2. He pleaded with them severely. Numb. xxi. 6, “The Lord sent fiery serpents among the people;” these bit them so that many died; their venomous bitings did so inflame them, that they were in a manner burnt to death, which was a dreadful judgment. Before Aaron could take his censer, put in incense, and make an atonement for the people, fourteen thousand and odd were destroyed by the plague, Numb. xvi. 46, 47, 49; which was both sudden and severe pleading with them.

3. Immediately. He caused the earth to open her mouth, and to swallow up Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, them and all theirs; he sent fire and consumed the two hundred and fifty men that offered incense, Numb. xvi. 32, 33, 35; and so were the fiery serpents the immediate hand of God.

4. Openly. Numb. xxv. 4, “Take all the heads of the people, and hang them up before the Lord against the sun.” The Septuagint is, make them examples.

5. Strongly. They could not withstand his pleadings, his judgments and strokes were unavoidable. Though Moses and Aaron interposed and pleaded hard with God for them, yet multitudes of them perished by the sword, plague, serpents, fire, and earth. Thus God pleaded with their fathers, and so he would plead with them. Nothing secured their fathers from his judgments, and nothing should secure them; not Babylonians, or Babylonish gods; not their prophets or priests, not prayers or tears: their fathers fell in the wilderness, and so should they; if not by the same judgments, yet by those which were not much unlike, there should be an analogy between them.

Obs. 1. When men seek to avoid straits and dangers by sinful policy, and ways unwarrantable, God meets with them, and brings them into greater straits and troubles. These elders thought, by becoming as the heathens were, that they should free themselves from all the troubles and evils that were like to come upon them for Zedekiah’s revolting from Nebuchadnezzar; but the Lord told them that he would bring them into a wilderness, where their condition should be very miserable, and worse than in Babylon, whatever they had suffered there for God and their religion. Jeroboam was in a strait about the people’s sacrificing at Jerusalem: if they went up thither, he feared they would be so wrought upon, as to return to Rehoboam, from whom they had fallen, and kill him. To expedite himself out of this strait, he took wicked counsel; set up the calves at Dan and Bethel, telling the people the journey to Jerusalem was too long and tedious for them, they had God nearer to them, and might worship at an easier rate, 1 Kings xii.; but for this sinful policy and subtle design, God brought him into greater straits and difficulties, as you may see, chap. xiii. 4; xiv. 6, 10—12; his hand was withered, heavy tidings denounced against him and his house, and his son died. Saul was in a great strait when the Philistines had invaded him, and God would not answer him; he would not wait in this case, leaving all to God, but runs into an unlawful practice to relieve himself; he consults with the witch of Endor, and is brought into greater and worse straits than before, 1 Sam. xxviii. 17—20. Men in our days have taken wrong courses to extricate themselves out of dangers and troubles, and hath not God brought them into a “wilderness,” into greater entanglements and worse perplexities than ever before? It is good to wait upon God, and keep his way; then if dangers and deaths do come, there is comfort, they find you in God’s way; but if out of that, they are great evils in themselves, and your being out of God’s way is worse than all.

Obs. 2. That God’s punishments are his pleadings; when he visits men for their sins he pleads with them. Every rod of his hath a voice, and pleads for God. God’s strikings are real pleadings; Isa. lxvi. 16, “By fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh;” his punishments are arguments he uses to convince or confound sinners; and whatsoever punishments he inflicts upon any, they are just and righteous, for he never pleads an ill cause: they are the judgments of God; he is infinitely wise, and as he judgeth aright, so he executeth judgment righteously.

Obs. 3. Those who are like in sinning, must be like in suffering. “Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you.” These Jews were their children, and did as their fathers had done. Their fathers shook off the God of Israel, and chose them an Egyptian god, Exod. xxxii. 4; they mingled with the heathen, and learned their works, Psal. cvi. 35; they polluted his sabbaths, caused their children to pass through the fire, ver. 13, and 26, of this chapter; and these their posterity chose Babylonish gods, became as the heathen, made their sons pass through the fire, and trod in their fathers’ steps, ver. 30—32.

Ver. 37, 38. And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant: and I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me: I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn, and they shall not enter into the land of Israel: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

God being in a judiciary way pleading with this people, here he proceeds further in the manner thereof.

1. He would examine and reduce them to their former state, ver. 37.

2. He would make a discrimination between them, ver. 38.

“I will cause them to pass under the rod.” The Hebrew word for “rod” is, שֵׁבֶט which in this place may signify either a sceptre, as frequently it doth in Scripture, and is so rendered, chap. xix. 11, 14, or a shepherd's staff, or crook, which he useth among his sheep, so it is used, Psal. xxiii. 4. If it be taken the first way, the sense is this, That though they scattered themselves among the Babylonians, and put themselves under heathenish power, yet the Lord would make them "pass under the rod," that is, come under his kingly power; he would rule over them, they should still be his subjects. But of this he spake in ver. 33, therefore I conceive "rod" here, is to be taken in the latter signification, that God would deal with them like a shepherd or herdsman, who were wont to number their cattle with a wand or rod, which is called "passing under the rod," Lev. xxvii. 32. To this purpose is that of Jer. xxxiii. 13, "In the cities of the mountains, in the cities of the vale, and in the cities of the south, and in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, shall the flocks pass again under the hands of him that telleth them?" when the flocks went into the field or fold, and when they went out, their practice was to tell them by a "rod" in their hand, and so they "passed under the rod." Hereunto Christ alludes, John x. 3, when he saith, "He calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out." The meaning, then, of the Lord here is, that he would take an exact account of them, tell them as a shepherd doth his flock, and see which were rotten and which were sound.

God's "rod," are afflictions and judgments, as you may see Psal. lxxxix. 32, "I will visit their transgressions," &c. See Lam. iii. 1.

"I will bring you into the bond of the covenant." You think to break the bond of the covenant made between me and your fathers, by becoming Babylonians, and ceasing to be my people, but it shall not be; I will keep the covenant, and cause you to come under the bond of it, and perform that obedience I look for. The word for "bond" is, במסרת from אסר to bind unto obedience or punishment. When men are in covenant, they are bound to obey, or to suffer if they disobey. Vatablus and others carry it thus, That God would deal with them as he had done with their fathers, that he would make a covenant with these as he had done with them; and so make it another covenant, by which God would bind them up, and refer it to the covenant made in Ezra's days; but rather, I conceive, the Lord intends the former covenant, especially that mentioned, Ezek. xvi. 8, when God, in a solemn manner, took this people to be his in Moses' days, wherein he made good his promise and covenant with Abraham, and bound them unto him by the law; the covenant bound them from other gods and ways of worship.

"And I will purge out from among you the rebels." The Septuagint and Vulgate read the words, I will chase out; the Hebrew ברר signifies both to choose and purge. God would number them, distinguish them one from another, and then "purge out" those who were rebellious; they should no longer be in his flock, but be discovered, and declared to the world what they were. By "rebels," he means those that cast off God and his works, and turned heathens.

"I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn, and they shall not enter into the land." &c. The Hebrew is, Out of the country of their sojournings, or peregrinations, I will bring them. Some make these words to point out those who were then in Judea, whom God would bring forth, and not suffer to return any more; and not only them, but many of those who were in Babylon before, God suffered not to return into the land of Israel: for if we understand these words of the return after the seventy years, as they must, long before that time were these Jews with Zedekiah brought out of the "land of their sojourning," and they, with many others, were never suffered to enter into that land more; for here is a comparing of their return from the Babylonish captivity, to that of their coming out of Egypt. Then they were brought into a "wilderness," where their carcasses fell for their rebellions, and so never entered the promised land: so here, likewise, God brought them into a "wilderness," pleaded with, and consumed many of them, who by that means never returned to the land of Israel.

Obs. 1. The Lord doth not only know, but takes special notice of his people, and doth distinguish them from others. "I will cause you to pass under the rod," I will examine which are sheep, and which are goats, and will sever the one from the other. Christ knew his sheep, his little flock, from all the goats of the mountains, the bulls of Bashan, and wild beasts of the forests: and God knew the "good figs" from the "naughty," Jer. xxiv.; he manifested his love to the good, and displeasure to the bad. When he is in a judiciary way, he knows, owns, preserves his servants, and will not suffer any of them to perish. Ezek. ix. when the men appeared with slaughter weapons in their hands, and execution was to be upon Jerusalem, the Lord made his people to "pass under the rod," he numbered them, and set his mark upon them, that they might not perish in the common calamity; he put a difference between the precious and the vile, as a shepherd doth between sheep and goats, Matt. xxv. 32.

Obs. 2. Though God's people do go out from him, and violate the covenant, yet he will not let them so go, but will look after them, and bring them under his power. These here had transgressed the covenant, broken the bonds, cast off the ways of God, thought to exempt themselves from his rule over them, but, saith the Lord, "I will bring you into the bond of the covenant;" you shall be under my power and law; though I suffer Babylonians, and other nations, to be at their own disposal, to wander where they will, to live as they list, yet it shall not be so with you, who are my people, with whom I am in covenant, and to whom I must be faithful, whatever you are to me, and will be known to be your God and Sovereign; I will have account of you, and make you know you are under my bonds, and not Babylonish ones.

Obs. 3. God's dealings with his people is very different. He brings them "into the bond of the covenant," to see what they are; if they be goats, wicked, he punishes them, and purges them out; if they be sheep, though they have gone astray, he pardons them, keeps them "under the bond of the covenant," and enables them to yield covenant obedience. When God had made them "pass under the rod," and brought them "under the bonds of the covenant," made them know they were his people, though many of them were very wicked, he purged out the rebels, and them that had transgressed against him. He turned the goats out of the fold, and kept the sheep in; he purged out the wicked by judgments and death, and preserved the others: Mal. iii. 17, 18, "In that day when I make up my jewels I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him," &c.; so God showed his different dealings between the righteous and the wicked; for, chap. iv. 1—3, the wicked being but "stubble," should be burnt, and be as ashes under the soles of the feet of the righteous. The righteous were jewels, and therefore spared; the wicked were stubble, and therefore destroyed.

Obs. 4. Though the wicked be among the godly, yet they shall not always be so. "I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me." There were rebels, great sinners, that were among the Israelites in the wilderness of Egypt; Korah, Dathan, and Abiram; others that would have gone back to Egypt; many that murmured, that fell to idolatry, and committed whoredom with the daughters of Moab; but God purged them out from amongst them; and the like he did here. It is God's method, even here in this world, oftentimes, to separate the wicked from the godly, to fan out the chaff from the wheat, to burn the one, and preserve the other. In Sodom God made a separation, preserving Lot, who was wheat, and burning the Sodomites, who were chaff, with unquenchable fire: Isa. i. 25, "I will turn my hand upon thee, and purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin;" the dross and tin were the wicked amongst them, ver. 28, 31, whom the Lord would take away, consume and burn with fire, not to be quenched. Now God's fan is in his hand, and he is purging both the English and Irish floor; yea, he is pulling up the pricking briars, and grieving thorns, that his people may not always be vexed by them, Ezek. xxviii. 24.

Obs. 5. Whatever men's thoughts are of the world, they are but sojourners therein. "I will bring them out of the land of their sojournings," were it Canaan or Babylon: they were no more than "sojourners." Wicked men think they are heirs to, owners and lords of the earth: Psal. xlix. 11, "Their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue for ever, and their dwelling-places to all generations; they call their lands after their own names;" men set their names upon what they conclude is their own. Let lands be good or bad, men are only "sojourners" in them. Godly men, who are said to "inherit the earth," do it but for a season, they are pilgrims and "sojourners" here. David, though king in Israel, yet acknowledgeth himself a sojourner in Canaan, as all his fathers were; they spent a few days therein, and so passed away, and this was his condition. Let us look so upon ourselves, and "pass the time of our sojourning here in fear," 1 Pet. i. 17; and mind that city which hath foundations, out of which, if we be once possessed, we shall never be removed.

Obs. 6. When God brings his people into Canaan, he will shut out the wicked, they shall not enter into the land of Israel. Others shall be brought in, but as for those who would be as the world, as the heathen, as Babylonians, they shall never come into Canaan. Canaan was a type of heaven, and this exclusion of these wicked ones, represented the exclusion of ungodly ones out of heaven. However good and bad are mingled together in this world, and oft in the church, yet when God brings his people to the heavenly Canaan, no unclean thing shall enter there: Rev. xxi. 27, "There shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie." Many may cry, and seek for entrance, as those, Matt. vii. 22; and those foolish virgins, Matt. xxv. 11, 12; but they shall in no wise, by no means, enter; "the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of heaven," 1 Cor. vi. 9; dogs shall be shut out, Rev. xxii. 15.

Obs. 7. Mercies and judgments make God known experimentally. "Ye shall know that I am the Lord," God would purge out the rebels from the obedient, there was mercy; keep them out of the land of Israel, there was judgment; and by these God made them know him to be Jehovah, giving life to his promises, and breath to his threatenings. The rebels should know and acknowledge him to be Jehovah, being convinced with the equity of his judgments, and affected with the severity of them. The godly should do it, being convinced and affected with the nature, greatness, needfulness, and freeness of that mercy. Judgment upon these rebels was mercy to the godly; and mercy to the godly was judgment to the rebels; and both were brought to acknowledge the Lord, but specially the godly. Mercies and judgments work most affectionately and effectually upon them: for it is said, "ye shall know," ye that are purged, ye that shall come to the land of Israel.

Ver. 39. As for you, O house of Israel, thus saith the Lord God; Go ye, serve ye every one his idols, and hereafter also, if ye will not hearken unto me: but pollute ye my holy name no more with your gifts, and with your idols.

This verse speaks fully to the elders of Israel, that came to inquire of the Lord, yet were resolved in their hearts to be as the heathen, and to serve wood and stone outwardly at least: seeing it is so, saith God, "Go ye, serve every one his idols, and pollute my name no more."

"Go ye, serve ye every one his idols." These words may be taken for an ironical concession, a yielding that which the Lord would not have done; which is frequent in Scripture, as Amos iv. 4, "Come to Bethel, and transgress; at Gilgal multiply transgression;" Matt. xxiii. 32, "Fill ye up the measure of your fathers." See Eccles. xi. 9; 1 Kings xxii. 15; 1 Cor. xv. 32; Jer. vii. 21; in all these places is an ironical concession, which the Scripture uses to affect men's consciences the more with the wickedness of their ways. So here; "Go, serve your idols." God commands them not to serve idols, then it had been lawful; but by this ironical concession, would affect them more fully with the evil of their idolatry, and so take them off therefrom. This is a good sense of the words, but they are rather a rejection of them; Seeing you are such dissemblers, and have your hearts set upon idols, go your ways, take your fill of them: and so the Lord utterly cast them off, and left them to perish.

"And hereafter also, if ye will not hearken unto me." Sanctins thinks here is a figure called aposiopesis, which is a sudden breaking off the speech, with concealment of some special thing expected: as Luke xiii. 9, "If it bear fruit;" here is somewhat kept in, which any hearing the words expect, as, if it bear fruit, it should be cut down: so 2 Sam. v. 8, "Whosoever getteth up to the gutter, and smiteth the Jebusites, and the lame, and the blind, hated of David's soul;" what then? here is no more, the speech is broken off, and something left to expectation, which is given out, 1 Chron. xi. 6, "He shall be chief and captain." Here seems something to be concealed, "If ye will not hearken unto me," ye shall be scattered, cursed, or slain: but we may read the words thus, referring "and hereafter" to the former words, Go ye, serve ye every one his idols even hereafter; and then read the other words thus, seeing you will not hearken unto me, or, have not hearkened unto me. And thus divers expositors read them, and the sense lieth fair this way; Go, serve your idols hereafter, seeing ye will not hearken unto me.

"But pollute ye my holy name no more with your gifts, and with your idols." The Hebrew is, and pollute ye, which accords with the reading of the former words mentioned. You have pretended, that by your idols set up in my stead, and the gifts you have offered to them, or by them to me, that you have honoured my name, but by joining them and me together, you have polluted my name. I had rather you should be open idolaters, than that, by your hypocritical practices, dividing between me and your idols, you should cause my name to be polluted and disgraced; either be perfect idolaters, or perfectly for me; give not my glory to idols, pretending you worship me.

“My holy name.” In the Hebrew it is, the name of my holiness; so in Amos ii. 7; Lev. xx. 3; Ezek. xxxvi. 20, and in most places where mention is made of God’s “holy name.” By “name” is meant God’s worship, attributes, and titles, which are “holy;” or himself, as Sanctius affirms, who is holiness.

Obs. 1. God doth punish hypocrites and idolaters with spiritual judgments. “Go ye, serve ye every one his idols;” the house of Israel, whom these elders represented, were hypocritical and idolatrous, set upon idols, and God gave them over to them. Ephraim was of this humour, thus leavened, and see how God dealt with him; Hos. iv. 17, He “is joined to idols, let him alone;” he likes and loves them, let him live and die with them: and, chap. viii. 11, “Ephraim hath made many altars to sin, altars shall be unto him to sin,” he shall have altars enough; he is greedy of them, and his greedy appetite shall be answered: this was a spiritual plague and judgment upon him, to be given up of God to his own heart’s lusts.

Obs. 2. Those that will not hear God, shall be rejected of God, which is dreadful. “Go ye, serve every man his idol.” I will have no more to do with you, my temple, mine altar, mine ordinances, are no longer for you; none of you shall have my presence, worship, or acceptance. Where men will not be reclaimed, they must be rejected; here they would not hearken unto God, and therefore he bids them be gone. 2 Kings xvii. 15, they rejected his statutes, and his covenant that he made with their fathers, and his testimonies which he testified against them, and they followed vanity, and became vain, and went after the heathen, &c.; “therefore the Lord was very angry with Israel, and removed them out of his sight,” ver. 18; only he left Judah; and because Judah would not be reclaimed, the Lord rejected all the seed of Israel, and cast them out of his sight, ver. 20. So, in Jer. xxiii. when they would not hearken to the Lord, who forbid them their mocking of the true prophets, and listening to false ones, what saith the Lord? “Therefore, behold, I, even I, will utterly forget you, and I will forsake you, and the city that I gave you and your fathers, and cast you out of my presence, and I will bring an everlasting reproach upon you.” When God rejects, it is grievous; no sorer judgment can befall the sons of men. This David knew, and therefore advised his son Solomon to keep close to God; if he did otherwise, God would cast him off for ever, 1 Chron. xxviii. 9.

Obs. 3. There is no halving, no dividing, between God and idols, God and the creature, in matters of worship and religion. “Pollute ye my holy name no more with your gifts, and with your idols;” you join me and them together, thinking that I am pleased, honoured thereby, but I am provoked, and my holy name is polluted; I abhor such doings. Seeing your idols must have some honour, and I the rest, I will have none, get ye to your idols, let them have all; I like it better that you should be wholly for them, than divide between me and them: I can brook no partner in my worship, I must have the whole heart, the whole soul, the whole body, and strength of all, else I will have none. 1 Kings xviii. 21, when the people stood halting between two opinions, and were sometimes for God and sometimes for Baal, it pleased neither God nor Elijah; therefore saith the prophet, How long will ye halt between two thoughts, or two branches? how long will ye be like a bird that touches upon one twig, and then upon another, and settles not upon either; so how long will ye be looking one day towards God, another day towards Baal? do ye not yet see the evil of it? while ye stand thus in uncertainty, ye provoke God. If God be God, follow him, and him fully, only, constantly, eternally; and if Baal be god, follow him so; you must follow but one. Christ hath told us, we cannot serve God and mammon, God and the world, God and our bellies, God and our credit, God and our lusts. These are masters who command contrary things, and carry away from God.

Obs. 4. The honour of God’s name is dear unto him. “Pollute ye not my holy name.” Take God’s name for his worship, as it is, Exod. xx. 24; 2 Chron. xx. 8; Mal. i. 6; or for his attributes, as it is, Exod. xxxiii. 19; or for his titles, as it is, Deut. xxviii. 58; his name is very dear unto him; which appears,

(1.) In that he will not endure any mixture with his worship, or tender of any thing to him which hath been in idols’ service; the Babylonish gods, wood and stone, and the gifts offered to them, or by them to God, he would not admit.

(2.) He counted it a disparagement to his name, to have half of them, and not all; and therefore would rather have them lay out all upon their idols, than some upon him.

(3.) He shows vehement affection and indignation upon this account; Get ye to your idols, begone! pollute my name no more; out of my sight! I cannot endure it.

(4.) He cares not for the perishing of their souls and bodies, in comparison of his name; Go ye, serve idols.

God’s name is exceeding dear unto him: he swears by it, Jer. xlv. 26; he sanctifies it being polluted, and will not suffer any blot or stain to lie upon it, Ezek. xxxvi. 23; he labours and works for the maintenance of it, when it is in danger, as you have it in this chapter, ver. 9, 14, 22; rather than it shall suffer, he will defer his anger and judgments, Isa. xlvi. 9. If false prophets presumed to speak in his name, not sent by him, he cut them off, Deut. xviii. 20; or laid heavy judgments upon them, Ezek. xiii. 9. Whoever takes his name in vain any way, he will not hold him guiltless, Exod. xx. 7; and no marvel, for God’s name is his glory, Isa. xlviii. 11; and men must give glory due unto his name, Psal. xxix. 2; not any kind of glory, but that which is proportionable to his glory, even his glorious name, remembering what a magnificent temple Solomon built for the honour of his name, 2 Chron. vi. 34.

Ver. 40, 41. For in mine holy mountain, in the mountain of the height of Israel, saith the Lord God, there shall all the house of Israel, all of them in the land, serve me: there will I accept them, and there will I require your offerings, and the firstfruits of your oblations, with all your holy things. I will accept you with your sweet savour, when I bring you out from the people, and gather you out of the countries wherein ye have been scattered; and I will be sanctified in you before the heathen.

Now we are come to the gracious promises of God to this people; and here you have,

1. A promise of reduction, which is implied in ver. 40, and expressed in ver. 41.

II. Acceptation of them, and their services, ver. 40, 41.

III. Sanctification of himself in them, ver. 41.

Antecedent to these promises is a description of the place whither he would bring them, and where he would accept them, and that is in his "mountain," which is described,

1. From its holiness.

2. From its height.

"In mine holy mountain." The Hebrew is, the mountain of my holiness, as ver. 39, the name of my holiness: so, Jonah ii. 4, 7, the temple of thy holiness; Isa. lxii. 12, people of holiness; Psal. lxxxix. 20, oil of my holiness; Psal. li. 11, spirit of thy holiness; Psal. xliii. 3, hill of thy holiness; Psal. lxxviii. 5, habitation of thy holiness; in all these places you have the abstract, and it is rendered by the concrete, holy mountain, holy name, holy temple, holy people, holy oil, holy spirit, holy hill, and holy habitation. By "holy mountain," he means mount Zion, which is called the hill of his holiness, Psal. ii. 6; there God recorded his name, set up Christ and his kingdom. By a synecdoche, "holy mountain" is put for Canaan, which figured the church of God, in the times of the gospel.

"In the mountain of the height of Israel." Of these words before, chap. xvii. 23. This is spoken, not because Zion was so high a mountain, but because of the honour and glory it had above all other mountains; there was the holy city, the holy temple, the holy ordinances, and the holy God's habitation. Psal. lxxvi. 2.

"There shall all the house of Israel." All that were purged from the rebels and transgressors, ver. 38, all that were true Israelites; for such are described to be the dwellers in God's holy hill, Psal. xv. And not only those of the Jewish race, but even gentiles, that should become christians, and be spiritual Israelites, they should come to the church, which should begin at mount Zion, which represented the true church.

"All of them in the land serve me." That land was Canaan, which being polluted with blood, idols, and other abominations, Psal. cvi. 37—40, God abhorred it, and the people thereof, yea, his sanctuary therein, Lam. ii. 7; which caused him to lay it waste for seventy years, wherein he purged it from its filth and blood, Isa. iv. 4, and them from their iniquities, Ezek. xxxvi. 33, and then brought them in to serve him.

This expression is comprehensive, and imports their worshipping and obeying of God: Exod. x. 7, "Let the men go, that they may serve the Lord their God," that is, worship him: Exod. xx. 5, they must not serve images, that is, worship them, but worship God: the word עבד and so δουλεύω, which the Septuagint does frequently express it by, signifies, to give up oneself wholly to the service of any; so here, they should serve God wholly, worship him, and not any idols, and his own ways, not their ways, and that in spirit and truth; 1 Sam. xii. 24, "Serve him in truth, with all your heart," and "with all humility of mind," Acts xx. 19.

It notes also to obey, and do what he commands; as Josh xxii. 5, "Take diligent heed to do the commandment and the law, which Moses the servant of the Lord charged you, to love the Lord your God, and to walk in all his ways, and to keep his commandments, and to cleave unto him, and to serve him with all your heart and with all your soul;" serving, here, extends to all outward obedience, as well as worship.

They shall "serve" me, that is, worship me, as the only object of divine worship; they shall obey me as their only King and Lord.

"There will I accept them." The Hebrew is, ארצם Montanus renders it, I will will them. When it refers to God, as here, it imports,

1. Pardonning, and passing by, whatever formerly offended. 2 Sam. xxiv. 23, when David would offer a sacrifice for his sin in numbering the people, and for stopping the plague, saith Araamah, "The Lord thy God accept thee;" that is, pardon thy sin, and remove the judgment. Jer. xiv. 12, "When they offer burnt offering and an oblation, I will not accept them; but I will consume them." Non-accepting, was non-pardonning; and that appears most clearly, Lev. i. 4, "He shall put his hand upon the head of the burnt offering; and it shall be accepted for him to make the atonement:" the laying his hand upon the head of the sacrifice, noted the laying of his sins upon the same; and if God accepted the sacrifice, his sins were forgiven, and peace was made, but when he accepted it not, there was no pardon, no peace. When God therefore saith here, "I will accept them," the sense is, he will pardon them.

2. Approving, receiving with favour and delight. Job xlii. 8, "Him will I accept." God would hear and regard the prayer of Job for his three friends. Ecl. ix. 7, "Eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart; for God now accepteth thy works;" רצה he is well pleased with thee, and what thou hast done; so Psal. cxlix. 4, "The Lord taketh pleasure in his people;" and this also is included here, "I will accept them," that is, approve of, favour, and take delight in them. Some render the words, There will I take pleasure in them; when they are come to my holy mountain, to a church state again, being purged from their sins through my grace, I will take pleasure in them, as a husband in a wife, as a father in his children.

"There will I require your offerings." Formerly the Lord had refused their offerings, and manifested his displeasure against them and their offerings; as Mal. i. 10, "I have no pleasure in you, saith the Lord of hosts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand;" see Amos v. 21, 22; Jer. vi. 20; Isa. lxvi. 3; i. 11; but now he would be so far from refusing, hating, and prohibiting of them, that he would call for them, and accept them.

"Offerings." The Hebrew word for "offerings" is, תרומות which notes any offering freely given to the Lord; and frequently it is put for the heave-offering, so called, because it was lifted up unto the Lord. If we take it in this sense, it is, by a synecdoche, put for all their offerings; but we may keep to the words as they are.

"And the first-fruits of your oblations." The Hebrew is, the beginning of your elevations; Septuagint, the first-fruits of your separations; the Vulgate is, the beginning of your tenths. The Jews say, they were to bring the "first-fruits" of seven things only, viz. of wheat, barley, grapes, figs, pomegranates, olives, and dates; but God was to have whatever opened the womb first, of man or beast, Exod. xiii. 2, which may also come in amongst "first-fruits."

"Oblations" and sacrifices do differ thus: that is properly an oblation, which is offered, though nothing be done to it, or about it; a sacrifice is offered, but something is done to it, and about it. The sacrifice was to be killed, flayed, cut in pieces, or the like. By "first-fruits of oblations," we may understand the principal and chief oblations, for ראשית notes, the choicest and most excellent, as well as, the first; and Calvin interprets it, that which was the flower and excellency in your gifts.

"With all your holy things." The Hebrew is, in all your sanctifications. קדש sometimes noted the temple, or sanctuary; sometimes their sacrifices;

sometimes their festivities; and sometimes whatever was dedicated to divine worship: here we may take it in the last sense. Calvin expounds it, in all my worship; and so the sense runs well with that before, I will require your offerings and the first-fruits; i. e. the principal of your oblations, in all your dedications and holy things, and in all my worship. Some read the words, In all the things you shall prepare set a part and conserve for me. If we read it with "all your holy things," the sense is, that the sacrifices, temple, priests, solemnities, and festivals, should be restored.

Ver. 41. "I will accept you with your sweet savour." Of "sweet savour," or savour of rest, as the Hebrew is, you heard in ver. 28 of this chapter, and in chap. xvi. 19. They should be pleasing and delightful unto God, as a sweet savour is unto man. They were wont, when at Jerusalem, to offer incense and sweet things unto God, and he accepted the same; and they should do it again after their return, and be accepted; both they and their sacrifices should be a sweet odour unto God. This, and the like expressions in the Old Testament, the apostle alludes unto, in Phil. iv. 18; 2 Cor. ii. 15; Eph. v. 2.

"When I bring you out from the people, and gather them out of the countries," &c. These words we had before in ver. 34, where they sounded judgment, but here, mercy.

"And I will be sanctified in you before the heathen." The Hebrew is, I will sanctify myself. When sanctification refers to God, it imports,

1. Vindication of his name, being polluted and dishonoured by the sons of men; as Ezek. xxxvi. 23, "I will sanctify my great name, which was profaned among the heathen, which ye have profaned in the midst of them."

2. Making himself known, and acknowledged to be holy, just, and powerful: so it is to be taken, Ezek. xxviii. 22, "They shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall have executed judgments in her, and shall be sanctified in her;" so, Lev. x. 3, by the fury and judgment upon Nadab and Abihu, God sanctified himself, he made himself known to be a holy, just, and dreadful majesty.

3. God's doing of that which redounds to his honour and praise; and thus divers interpreters take it in this place. I will bring you out of Babylon into your own country, unite you into church order, give you another temple, with all the ordinances of it, sanctify you by my word and Spirit, cause you to worship me with pure worship, bringing me the best you have for sacrifices, that so you may praise me for my goodness unto you, and the nations, for the great things done for you. The Lord's bringing them out of the countries where they were scattered, was a great work, and filled the heathens with admiration, making them to say, "The Lord hath done great things for them," Psal. cxxvi. 2; and the Jews also to say, "The Lord hath done great things for us," ver. 3. When the Jews were brought out of Egypt, it is said, Psal. cxiv. 2, "Judah was his sanctuary." God separated them from the Egyptians, as these from the Babylonians, to inhabit their praises, and to be worshipped by them, and so they were his sanctuary, and sanctification.

God doth sanctify himself, when he doth vouchsafe a people manifestations of his goodness, wisdom, mercy, love, and faithfulness, and God is sanctified, when a people doth that which is pleasing and acceptable to God. Numb. xx. 12, "Because ye believed me not, to sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel:" unbelief is a non-sanctifying of God, and believing is a sanctifying of him.

Obs. 1. God accounts not apostates and idolaters, but those who are true Israelites, to be his people, his church. "For in mine holy mountain there shall all the house of Israel be:" those who were rebels, and would serve wood and stone, that would not hearken unto him, he purged out, and the house of Israel, purged, must be in his holy mountain. God esteems those who are godly, true believers, Israelites indeed, to be his. There are none but such in the invisible church, Rom. xi. 26; Gal. vi. 16; but in the visible, there are tares and wheat, yet God doth not reckon the tares to be wheat, they are Satan's, not the Lord's, Matt. xiii. 38; there are goats and sheep, yet the Lord reckons not the goats to be sheep, Matt. xxv. 33. Psal. xv. 1, 2, "Lord, who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh," &c.

Obs. 2. Wherever God's people are scattered, he will bring them, and all of them, into, or unto, Zion, to serve him. "In mine holy mountain, &c. there shall all the house of Israel, all of them in the land, serve me." God would bring them out of Babylon into Canaan, from heathenish mountains to his "holy mountain," from the world and synagogues of Satan into the true church. Wherever God hath any sheep, he will gather them, and all of them, into his fold.

These verses do speak and hold out God's dealing with his people under Christ and the gospel, wherein God would bring them from all nations, to enjoy the great and good things provided for them; of which the evangelical prophet Isaiah speaks at large, chap. lx.; so Zechariah, chap. viii. 20—22; and hereof spoke our Lord Jesus Christ, when he said, John x. 16, "Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice." When the prodigal was in a far country, did not the Lord order things so, that he returned to his father's house? when the sheep was strayed and lost, did not the Lord seek it out, and bring it home to the fold? Luke xv.; and did not Christ send out his apostles into all nations, to gather in those who were given him of the Father? Matt. xxviii. 19, 20.

Obs. 3. The Lord is to be worshipped especially in Zion, in his holy mountain, in the solemn assembly. "There shall all the house of Israel serve me." It is not sinful to worship God any where, 1 Tim. ii. 8, or alone, Matt. vi. 6; but chiefly in the congregation it should be, where his worship is publicly held forth, and with the harmoniousness of many spirits held up, where strangers may come in, and see, yea, say, God is here, 1 Cor. xiv. 25; for he is "in the assembly of the saints," Psal. lxxxix. 7. This made the prophet say, Isa. ii. 2, 3, "It shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths." But in our days this gracious prophecy hath been greatly crossed; for many have said, Come, let us go from the mountain of the Lord, from the house of the God of Jacob; let us go to our own mountain, follow our own teachings, and walk in our own paths; but God hath made it evident, that their mounts are mounts of corruption, their teachings delusions, their paths crooked and cursed. Let us therefore take the apostle's counsel, Heb. x. 23—25, "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; and let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works: not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is:" nor let us meet as the manner of some is, viz. to wickedness. Let us fulfil the prophecy, call upon one another to go up to the mountain of the Lord, &c. and say, He will teach us his ways, and we will walk in his paths.

Obs. 4. In the Lord's mountain, in the church, God will show favour and mercy to his people. "There will I accept them," that is, pardon, approve of, and receive them. When we come to serve the Lord after his own way, in gospel congregations, meeting in the name of Christ, to know the mind of God, and glorify him, God is the Master of such assemblies, he dispenseth many mercies, and distributes sweetest comforts therein. Isa. lx. 7, "They shall come up with acceptance on mine altar," is spoken of the gospel times; men should come from several quarters to the christian congregations with acceptance; God would meet them there, welcome them thither, there he would bless them: see Jer. xxxi. 12; Isa. lxvi. 18. 2 Cor. vi. 16—18, as every christian, so every congregation, is "the temple of the living God;" therefore he told the church of Corinth, he would dwell in them, be their God and Father, and they should be his people, his sons and daughters; God would accept of them as a father doth of his children, take pleasure in them, and let out choice mercies unto them. When the disciples were met, Jesus came to them, bestowed his peace and Spirit upon them, John xx. 19—22; and see what mercies they met with, who served him in his temple, Rev. vii. 15—17.

Obs. 5. Where the person is accepted of God, there the actions and sacrifices of that person are acceptable also. "There I will accept them, and there will I require their offerings." In Zion God would accept the men, and in Zion he would accept their services. If persons or congregations be not accepted of God themselves, nothing they do or tender is welcome unto him, Gen. iv. 5; but if the parties be under divine favour, their presents and duties are grateful. Isa. lvi. 6, 7, those that joined themselves to the Lord, and took hold of his covenant, "them," saith the Lord, "will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer: their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar." They being in covenant with God, and offering in Zion unto God, he was pleased with them and their offerings. Mal. iii. 1, 3, 4, when Christ, "the messenger of the covenant," should come, refine them, and be delighted in and by them, then should "the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord." God is desirous of the prayers, praises, and alms of a good man, who is reconciled unto him: they are sweet odours unto him; so they are called in the next verse, "I will accept you with your sweet savour," or savour of rest; when God hath these, his Spirit is at rest, being in a manner troubled when he hath them not. Hence prayers of the godly are likened to "incense," Psal. cxli. 2; their bounty, to the "odour of a sweet smell," Phil. iv. 18; and their praise is preferred before the sacrificing of an ox, Psal. lxxix. 31.

Obs. 6. God must have the best tendered up to him in our sacrifices and services; he calls for and expects the best from his people. "I require the first-fruits of your oblations;" the chief, principal, and best you have, in all your holy things. If God have lean, lank, lame, imperfect sacrifices offered to him, it is a dishonour, and offends him: Mal. i. 8, "If ye offer the blind for sacrifice, is it not evil? and if ye offer the lame and sick, is it not evil?" yes, it is very evil, it is extremely evil; the interrogation itself portends so much, and being a double interrogation doubles the evil. What! offer it to me? man would not accept of such offerings; go try, "offer it now unto thy governor," that is brought unto me; go tender it to him, "will he be pleased with thee, or accept thy person?" no, I know he will not; and if man, sorry, sinful man, like thyself, will not accept such things, should I, the great God, do it? God is so far from accepting and showing favour in this kind, that he poureth out a curse upon him that doth so: ver. 14, "Cursed be the deceiver, which hath in his flock a male, and voweth, and sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing." Men think if they do something in religion, give God a sacrifice, though it be blind, lame, sickly, they shall have a blessing; but see how the Lord brands them, they are deceivers; and whom do they deceive? not God, but themselves; for instead of a blessing they meet with a curse: such dealings with God, cause him, even then when he uses to be most propitious, to throw forth curses. Suitable hereunto, is that in Hos. viii. 13, "They sacrifice flesh for the sacrifices of mine offerings, and eat it; but the Lord accepteth them not; now will he remember their iniquity, and visit their sins;" if they did bring the best they had, yet they had no respect to God, but to their own bellies.

Obs. 7. When the Lord brings his people out of a scattered, captive condition, into church order, he expects they should set up all his ordinances. "I will require your offerings, and the first-fruits of your oblations, with all your holy things;" circumcision, passover, sacrifices, &c. Their being in Babylon was a representation of the church's condition under antichrist; and as then they, being freed from the Babylonish captivity, fell into the ways of worship formerly given out, so now christians, being brought out of spiritual Babylon, should do the like. Neither let any say, those gifts are lost which the churches once had, &c.

Ezra ii. 62, 63, those priests that were put from their places, because their names were not found in the genealogies, the Tirshatha or governor said, "They should not eat of the most holy things, till there stood up a priest with Urim and with Thummim;" that was, never. They lost at the Babylonish captivity, (1.) The ark with the mercy-seat and cherubims; (2.) The fire from heaven; (3.) Sheivah or divine presence; (4.) The Urim and Thummim; (5.) The spirit of prophecy: these all were wanting in the second temple: yet they did not forbear to set up and use the ordinances of God which formerly were appointed.

Obs. 8. The Lord doth those things for his people, which makes him honourable amongst them and others. "I will be sanctified in you before the heathen." The mercy and kindness he showed them in bringing them out of Babylon, and restoring to them their former enjoyments, set them on work to praise the Lord, and made the heathens acknowledge that God was faithful to them in keeping his promise.

Ver. 42—44. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall bring you into the land of Israel, into the country for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to your fathers. And there shall ye remember your ways, and all your doings, wherein ye have been defiled; and ye shall loathe yourselves in your own sight for all your evils that ye have committed. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have wrought with you for my name's sake, not according to your wicked ways, nor according to your corrupt doings, O ye house of Israel, saith the Lord God.

In these verses you have the event and sequel of the Lord's gracious dealings with this people, in bringing them out of their captivity into their own land again; which is,

I. Experimental acknowledgment of God and his goodness unto them, ver. 42, 44.

II. Consideration of their former ways, ver. 43.

III. Humiliation and repentance for them.

"And ye shall know that I am the Lord." They knew the Lord by the works of creation, by the prophets, by the severe judgments he had executed upon them, but that knowledge had not affected their hearts, and brought them to fear, worship, and serve the Lord answerably; but now upon that great mercy of being delivered out of Babylon, which seemed a thing impossible to them, Ezek. xxxvii. 11, and being brought into Canaan, they should have such knowledge of God as should descend to their hearts, and cause them to hearken to and honour him. They should know him practically, do his will; they should know him to be faithful in performing his promises, powerful and gracious in doing greater things than they looked for, and so should set themselves to serve the Lord. Others knew him by his judgments, ver. 38, which knowledge produced no real effects in their hearts and lives; but these by his mercies and goodness, which knowledge rested not in their heads, but was operative in their hearts, and extant in their lives; so knowing is to be taken, 1 Chron. xxviii. 9.

"When I shall bring you into the land of Israel," &c. Of these words, or not much differing, you heard in the 28th verse. Though the "land of Israel" were a fruitful land, flowing with milk and honey, and so it was a great mercy to be brought in upon that account, yet that was not all; it was the land of promise, the inheritance of their fathers, and their repossession of it evidenced that they were their children, their heirs, the people of God.

Obs. 1. Experimental knowledge of God affects the heart, and makes obedient to his will, to worship and honour God, which other knowledge doth not. Whatever knowledge a man hath of God and his ways, without this, it is a form of knowledge, rather than knowledge itself. 1 John ii. 4, "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him;" that is, he hath no true knowledge of God in him; for what he saith of love, chap. v. 3, "This is the love of God, that we keep his commandments," that is true of knowledge; there is no right knowledge of God if ye keep not his commandments. Hence saith the Lord, Isa. i. 3, "Israel doth not know;" and Jer. iv. 22: chap. viii. 7, "My people know not the judgment of the Lord;" they had the law, the prophets, yet they did not know; and why? they did not keep his commandments: violation of them is an argument men know not God. Where works of iniquity are committed, there the knowledge of God is wanting: Hos. v. 4, "The spirit of whoredom is in the midst of them, and they have not known the Lord;" and chap. iv. 1, when there was no truth nor mercy in the land, then there was no knowledge of God in it. When men are disobedient to the commands of God, they are ignorant of God in their hearts, deny God in their lives, whatever knowledge they have of him in their heads: you may find it in holy writ, that as those who do evil are said not to know God, Jer. ix. 3, so those that do good, are said to know him, Jer. xxii. 16; and pure religion, which is the right knowledge of God, is put upon doing, James i. 27. Daniel therefore tells us, that turning from iniquity, and so walking in the ways of God, is the way to understand truth, and so to know God, Dan. ix. 13; and Christ hath affirmed it, that doing is the way to knowing, John vii. 17.

Obs. 2. The goodness, mercy, and kindness of God begets experimental knowledge of him in the hearts of men. "Ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall bring you into the land of Israel." When God should knock off the Babylonish yoke, and replant them in Canaan, then their hearts should taste and be affected with the dealings of God. Great mercies had great operations upon them, and made deep impressions in them. God teaches men by his works; experimental knowledge comes in that way; when his word is fulfilled in promises or threats, in mercy or judgment, then men come to know God. He is known by executing of judgment, Psal. ix. 16, and known by his mercies, Isa. xix. 20—22. It is one thing to hear of wine, another to find the virtue of it in the stomach; so it is one thing to hear of God and his mercies, another to taste of the loving-kindness of God in his mercies: Psal. xxxiv. 8, "Taste and see that the Lord is good." God's goodness had bred experimental knowledge in David, and he could sensibly speak of it, and provoke others to partake of what he had.

Ver. 43. "And there shall ye remember your ways." These words we had in chap. xvi. 61. The word "remember" notes remembering with affection, so as to do something thereupon.

"And all your doings, wherein ye have been defiled." The Septuagint reads the former words with a part of these, thus, There shall ye remember your ways, wherein ye have defiled yourselves, and leave out these words, "all your doings;" but they are in the Hebrew, and import their idolatries, and other abominations. They corrupted God's worship, fell to Babylonish practices, and greatly defiled themselves.

"And ye shall loathe yourselves in your own sight." In chap. vi. 9, were these words opened, where they are thus, "They shall loathe themselves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations." The Septuagint is, they shall smite their faces; others, you shall be displeased and wroth with yourselves. The meaning of the verse is, that they should seriously consider their ways, be ashamed of them, truly repent of them; yea, so repent, as to judge themselves worthy to be cut off from being God's people, and to be made a curse.

Obs. 1. Sense of mercies, rather than of judgments, makes sin bitter, and leads unto repentance. Their captivity, and the sad things they suffered therein, did not imbitter their sin unto them, and break their hearts; but God's kindness in bringing them out of Babylon into the land of Israel, that prevailed with them; when they had received marvellous kindness from God, then they were marvellously affected, greatly ashamed of their ways, and loathed themselves. Mercies in Zion produced that which judgments in Babylon did not. Great mercies bestowed upon great sinners, do preach the doctrine of repentance most effectually, convincing them strongly of their unworthy and vile carriages towards the Lord.

1 Sam. xxiv. David's kindness brake the heart of Saul, and made him to weep and say, "Thou art more righteous than I; for thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil." If human favour hath such influence into a sinful heart, what hath divine? Moses by his strokes fetched water out of a rock; David, by his kindness. God sometimes by his judgments humbles men, and brings them to repentance, but mostly by his mercies. The sweet influences of the gospel have pierced deeper into sinners' hearts, than the terrors of the law.

Obs. 2. When the Lord gathers up his people out of the world, and brings them into nearer relation to himself, into Canaan, and church order, he looks they should review their former ways, and be much affected with them, and thoroughly repent for them. "There shall ye remember your ways, and all your doings, wherein," &c. When brought into Canaan, they were not only to eat the milk and honey, to behold the glory thereof, but they were to remember days of old, their sins in Babylon, compliances with Babylonians, how they had polluted themselves and provoked the Lord; and thereupon to mourn kindly for their unkindnesses to him, who had showed such marvellous loving-kindness unto them. When God brings men out of the world now into Zion, gives them the milk and honey of the gospel, shows them the glory thereof, then they look back, wonder at their wickedness, and loathe themselves for it, saying, Who is like unto us in sin and wickedness, and who is like unto our God in grace and goodness, in pardon and forgiveness? Micah vii. 18. When it shall please God to bring the Jews out of that Babylon they are now in, unto the true Canaan, the church of Christ, they will remember their iniquities, their bitter and bloody doings against Christ, mourn and loathe themselves for the same, Zech. xii. 10; Rev. i. 7.

Obs. 3. Where repentance springs from sense of love and kindness, as it is real and deep, so it is secret and universal. They should, being brought into Canaan, not only remember their sins, but they should loathe themselves, be displeased so with themselves, that they should smite and abhor themselves, and that in their own sight, and for all the evils they had committed; when no eye saw them, they would spread all their sins before them, and in the sight and sense of them, be vile in their own eyes.

Ver. 44. "And ye shall know that I am the Lord." These words we had in ver. 42, wherein they were opened and expounded of an experimental knowledge.

"When I have wrought with you for my name's sake." Of these words, see ver. 9, 14, 22. The Vulgate is, when I shall have done good to you. The Hebrew is, when I have done to you, or with you, for my name's sake; that is, when I have dealt graciously and mercifully with you out of my free grace, and for the honour of my name.

"Not according to your wicked ways." Of "wicked abominations" was spoken chap. viii. 9, of "wicked counsel," chap. xi. 2, of "wicked way" and "ways," chap. xiii. 22; xviii. 23. Those are "wicked ways" which lead from God, from truth, from just, honest, and good things. In such they had walked long, but God would not deal with them according to the wickedness of their ways.

"Nor according to your corrupt doings." The word for "corrupt" is from נָפַשׁ which signifies to corrupt even to the bottom, thoroughly; and such were they: they were not a little corrupt, but totally corrupted, in their judgments, wills, affections, words, and actions; they were like a corrupt spring, that sends forth nothing but corrupt waters; Ezek. xvi. 47, "Thou wast corrupted more than they in all thy ways."

Obs. 1. The Lord is gracious and merciful unto the sons of men, deserving ill at his hands; he deals with them upon the account of his grace, not their deserts. What did their wicked ways and corrupt doings deserve at his hands, but that he should have poured out his fury, and accomplished his anger upon them, as it is chap. vii. 8? but he wrought with them for his name's sake, that is, out of his free grace and favour he spared them, he pardoned them, he delivered them out of Babylon, and brought them into Canaan. When God seeth nothing in the creature to put him on to show mercy, he finds enough in his own name to provoke him thereunto; you have it four times in this chapter, thrice before, and here, that he wrought for his name's sake: whatever mercy this people had, it was from divine favour, not their desert.

If it was free grace brought the Jews out of Babylon into Canaan, what is it but freeness, fulness, and riches of grace to bring men out of the world into the heavenly Canaan? Predestination, calling, justification, and glorification, are acts of mere grace and favour, Eph. i. 5; 2 Tim. i. 9; Rom. iii. 24; viii. 30; 1 Pet. v. 10. All the sons of men enjoy here, or expect hereafter, is from the bounty, favour, and mercy of God, Psal. ciii. 8—12; Luke xii. 32: to attribute aught to our own wills or endeavours, is to derogate from God, and darken the glory of his name and free grace.

Obs. 2. God doth therefore deal graciously with sinners, that they may know him experimentally. "Ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have wrought with you for my name's sake," &c. God works, and so works, that he makes the hearts of men affected with his works, and to say, Psal. lxxxvi. 8, "Among the gods there is none like unto thee, O Lord; neither are there any works like unto thy works;" none so full of glory, so full of grace and mercy, none so influential and operative upon the heart. It is God's scope and aim in doing good so freely and fully as he doth, to make himself known to the hearts of his people, that so they may be knit to him, provoke them to admire him, and live more fully to him.

Ver. 45—48. Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, set thy face toward the south, and drop thy word toward the south, and prophesy against the forest of the south field; and say to the forest of the south, Hear the word of the Lord; Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will kindle a fire in thee, and it shall devour every green tree in thee, and every dry tree: the flaming flame shall not be quenched, and all faces from the south to the north shall be burned therein. And all flesh shall see that I the Lord have kindled it: it shall not be quenched.

These verses are the fifth general part of the chapter, viz. a parabolical declaration of the destruction of Judea and Jerusalem.

Some refer these words to the next chapter, and make the beginning of that at the 45th verse of this.

The 45th verse sets before us the divine authority of this prophecy against the Jews that were yet in Canaan; the prophet received it from the Lord, it came from God to him, before it went out from him to men.

In this 45th verse we have,

1. The compellation, "son of man," of which heretofore.

II. A command, to declare and utter the word he had received; "Set thy face," &c.

"Set thy face." Of this expression in chap. iv. 3, 7; vi. 2; xiii. 17. Dispose thyself to, and be undaunted in, what thou art to prophesy, and then thou art to prophesy against; speak then like a man of God, and sent from God, not regarding the frowns or threats of any.

"Toward the south." Babylon was north from Jerusalem, Jer. i. 14, and our prophet being there, and having declared the mind of God against those elders who came subtly to inquire of him, he is here commanded to set his face "towards the south," that was, towards Jerusalem and Judea.

“Drop thy word toward the south.” In the Hebrew is not “thy word,” but only thus, drop towards the south. The word נָטַף properly signifies the dropping of the clouds, or rain, which falls by drops; and metaphorically is put for prophesying and preaching; and Vatablus saith, the Chaldee paraphrase hath it, prophesy; and so it is expressed in the next words of this verse, “prophesy against the forest of the south,” which are exegetical of what was before. Preaching or prophesying is likened to rain or the droppings thereof,

1. In respect of the flowing and succession of one drop after another. Judg. v. 4, “The heavens dropped, the clouds also dropped water;” so in prophesying, there is one word, one truth after another; he that prophesieth, poureth out words.

2. In respect of the influence thereof. The drops soak into the earth; so words have influence into men’s ears and hearts. Deut. xxxii. 2, “My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distil as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass;” as the rains and dews insinuate themselves into the grass and ground, so do words into the heads and hearts of men; Psal. exix. 130, “The entrance of thy words giveth light.”

3. In respect of the trouble and hurt that oft rains and droppings produce. Prov. xxvii. 15, “A continual dropping in a very rainy day and a contentious woman are alike,” alike grievous, troublesome, wasting, and wearying; so prophesying of judgments and destruction is grievous and troubles much, it is like great rains and drops. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 25, “My wrath shall be poured out upon this place;” the original is, shall drop upon this place; there should be a storm, and such great drops of God’s wrath, as should consume it.

“Toward the south.” The word here for “south” is, דָּרוֹם a lofty habitation, because the sun goeth high there: and after in the verse you have נָנִי for the south; the word signifies a dry place, and metonymically it is put for the south, because of the great heat of the sun there; Judg. i. 15, saith Achsah to Caleb her father, “Thou hast given me a south land,” that is, a land of drought, “give me also springs of water.”

“Prophesy against the forest of the south field.” That is, against Jerusalem, and those that dwelt in Judea. The Hebrew for “forest” is, יַעַר a wood; and Judea or Jerusalem is compared to a forest or wood.

1. For the number of those in it. In a wood are a multitude of trees: Jer. xlvi. 23, “They shall cut down her forest, saith the Lord, though it cannot be searched; because they are more than the grasshoppers, and are innumerable;” it is spoken of the people of Egypt: so they of Judea were many.

2. In a wood and forest is no order, the trees stand confusedly; so now there was no order amongst them, all run into confusion: Micah vii. 6, “The son dishonoureth the father, the daughter riseth up against her mother, the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law; a man’s enemies are they of his own house.”

3. In a forest, trees are fruitless; or if fruitful, it is wild fruit those trees bear, they are for the axe and fire, Ezek. xv. 6: such were the men in Judea, trees that bare no fruit, or evil fruit; Isa. ix. 17, “Every one is an hypocrite and an evil doer, and every mouth speaketh folly.” See Micah vii. 3, 4.

4. Forests and woods are dens of wild beasts, Psal. civ. 20; Jer. v. 6; and Jerusalem was full of wild beasts, Zeph. iii. 3, 4; Ezek. xxii. 25, 27; Micah iii. 10. Ezek. vii. 23, “The land is full of bloody crimes, the city is full of violence.” Jer. vii. 9—11, there was robbing, murdering, and all abominations.

Obs. 1. When God calls men to prophesy or preach, they are to prepare for it, and undauntedly to proceed therein. “Son of man, set thy face toward the south, and drop thy word,” &c. He must fit himself for that work, and whatever he met with in the work, he must not be discouraged, but go on as one sent out and commissioned by the Lord: thus did Peter and John, Acts iv. 19, 20.

Obs. 2. God’s word shall not be in vain, which is given out against hard-hearted sinners. “Drop thy word toward the south, and prophesy against the forest.” They would not admit the dews of the word for their good; they must feel the droppings of it for their ruin. Men cannot keep the rain from falling upon the earth and rocks; neither can they keep off the threats of God from falling upon them and theirs; and when they fall they will be terrible unto them. Isa. lv. 10, 11, as the rain hath its end when it falls, so hath the word he sends forth and causeth to be dropped; if he drop a word of wrath, that drop will eat into the most stony heart, and consume it at last. Zech. i. 6, God’s words took hold of their fathers; the prophets dropped out such terrible drops of judgment, as consumed them. Let Judea be as a forest full of trees, and mighty ones too, if God once drop his word against it, down must these trees: Hos. vi. 5, God hewed them by his prophets, and slew them by the judgments of his mouth.

Obs. 3. God’s threats and judgments are irrespective, and impartial. “Prophesy against the forest;” the whole forest, and highest trees in it, as well as the shrubs and bushes. Wicked cities and countries are no other in God’s account, than a forest of wild and fruitless trees, which he lays his axe unto, to cut down for the fire.

Ver. 47. “And say to the forest of the south, Thus saith the Lord,” &c. After a command of the prophet to speak, and the forest to hear, you have the parabolical declaration itself, of the destruction of Jerusalem; where you may take notice,

1. Of the judgment, which is fire.
2. The author of it; “I will kindle a fire.”
3. The place where; “in thee.”
4. The effect of this fire; it should devour every tree, both green and dry.

5. The kind or manner of this fire, inextinguishable; “the flaming flame shall not be quenched.”

“I will kindle a fire in thee.” By “fire” is meant that warlike invasion by the Babylonians, who by sword, and what accompanied it, laid all waste.

“Every green tree, and every dry tree.” Jerom makes these to be saints and sinners; so some others expound the “green tree” of the righteous, and “dry tree” of the wicked; but, Ezek. ix. 4, the righteous mourned for all the abominations that were in Jerusalem, and were marked that they might not be destroyed. It is better therefore to understand by “green tree” the rich and wealthy, the young and lusty, the high and mighty; and by the “dry tree” the old, poor, and such as were underlings and inconsiderable: or by them you may understand all sorts of people, as by green trees and dry trees all sorts of trees in a forest or wood are meant.

“The flaming flame shall not be quenched.” The Hebrew is, the flame of flame, the duplication of the word notes the intention of it, a vehement flame, such as should continue, and by no art, power, or policy be extinct; the affliction should be wonderful, sore, and lasting. The war begat famine, famine the plague, plague death; here was a flame of a flame. They strove by the Egyptians to quench that fire, but could not.

“All faces from the south to the north shall be burned therein.” Not all destroyed, or be ashamed only, but all through fear, famine, and diseases, should appear as dry, withered, and burnt up, from one end of the land to the other.

Obs. 1. The Lord sends fierce judgments upon his own people for their wickedness, which do consume all sorts of them. “I will kindle a fire in thee,” in thee, Jerusalem, in thee, Judea, who gloriest in thy princes, in thy nobles, in thy soldiers, in thy privileges, and churchship, which “shall devour every green tree, and every dry tree.” As a fire devours all before it, so do God’s judgments. Let houses be strong or weak, great or small, trees be green or dry, fire conquers them, and brings them to ashes; so do God’s judgments ruin people, be they high or low, weak or strong, rulers or subjects, and dries up the spirits of those that are living: Lam. iv. 8, “Their visage is blacker than a coal; they are not known in the streets: their skin cleaveth to their bones; it is withered, it is become like a stick.” See Isa. xxiv. 4—6.

Obs. 2. God’s judgments once begun, cannot be stayed by the skill or power of the creature. “The flaming flame shall not be quenched;” they used all their policy and power to divert the Babylonians from coming, to remove them being come, but nothing prevailed. God’s fires are not extinguishable by the arts, counsels, or strengths of men. As we cannot avoid his judgments threatened, so we cannot remove them inflicted: if he send a spirit of division among brethren, who can east out that spirit? if he commission the sword to walk abroad, who can command it into the scabbard again, and to keep home? if he cause a burning heat in the body, who can quench that heat but himself?

Ver. 48. And all flesh shall see that I the Lord have kindled it: it shall not be quenched.

“All flesh.” By a synecdoche of the genus for the species, flesh is put for men; and by “all flesh,” he intends the people in the regions round about, and Chaldeans themselves.

“Shall see;” that is, shall acknowledge, that this war, this destructive judgment, is not human, but divine. When strange and dreadful things are done, men inquire into the causes. If mountains be set on fire, fire and brimstone come down from heaven, they will see and say this is the hand of the Lord.

“It shall not be quenched.” God would continue the burning of this fire, till it had consumed what he had appointed to consumption. Not their prayers, tears, or blood, should extinguish it; he that kindled it, only could quench it; only he that calleth for and causeth war, can cease wars.

Obs. It is one main end of God’s severe judgments upon cities, nations, and people, to make them know and acknowledge that he is the causer and continuer of them, yea, that they are unremovable without his hand.

Ver. 49. Then said I, Ah Lord God! They say of me, Doth he not speak parables?

Here is the last part of the chapter, viz. a doleful conclusion of the prophet, wherein he complains of the coarse and reproachful usage he had amongst the people; they mocked and scoffed at him and his parables, they told him they were dreams and fancies of his own. What did he tell them of the “south,” and “forest of the south field,” of “fire,” and “flaming flame,” of green and dry trees? these were dark things, visions, and divinations of his own head, and as for them, they would not heed what he said; his words savoured more of man than of God, setting forth his wit more than any thing else.

“Doth he not speak parables?” Junius and Tremellius have it, Is not he an artist in parabolizing? Piscator, Is he not a deviser of parables? he vexes us with such things, gives us words we understand not.

Obs. 1. The prophets and messengers of God are subject to scorn and reproach, even from those they are sent unto. See Jer. xviii. 18; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16; Isa. viii. 18.

Obs. 2. When the messengers of God are burdened with the revilings, scoffs, and reproaches of men, their refuge is to go unto God, and ease themselves in his bosom; as the prophet here doth.

Obs. 3. When prophets and preachings are not pleasing to the people, they are not willing to understand what is delivered. “They say, Doth he not speak parables?” they knew what fire, forest, flame, green and dry trees meant, but because it was a sad prophesy, and struck at their interests, they would not understand, they put off all as mystical and enigmatical.

CHAPTER XXI.

Ver. 1—5. And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, set thy face toward Jerusalem, and drop thy word toward the holy places, and prophesy against the land of Israel, and say to the land of Israel, Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I am against thee, and will draw forth my sword out of his sheath, and will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked. Seeing then that I will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked, therefore shall my sword go forth out of his sheath against all flesh from the south to the north: that all flesh may know that I the Lord have drawn forth my sword out of his sheath: it shall not return any more.

In this chapter is a double prophecy.

I. One against the land of Israel, and what was therein, from the 1st verse to the 28th.

II. Another against the Ammonites, from the 28th to the end.

Ver. 1. “And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying.” The Hebrew for “came unto me,” is, was unto me, that is, was put into me by divine inspiration; he spake not of himself, but from God.

Ver. 2. “Son of man, set thy face toward Jerusalem, drop thy word, and prophesy.” Of these words see the former chapter, ver. 46, where they were spoken of.

“Toward the holy places.” The temple, which is put plurally, because of the several partitions of it, the sanctum, and sanctum sanctorum, with the buildings contiguous to it, which the Jews esteemed holy.

Here he shows what, in the end of the former chapter, he meant by the “south, forest of the south, and south field,” viz. the land of Israel, Judea, and the temple.

Obs. Holiness of places will not privilege unholy people. Sanctuaries are no protections against divine justice. Canaan was the holy land, Jerusalem the holy city, and the temple more holy than both; yet, “Son of man, set thy face toward Jerusalem, and drop thy word toward the holy places, and phesy against the land of Israel, and say, Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I am against thee," &c.; I will bring the Babylonish army upon thee; which shall utterly destroy thee.

Ver. 3. "Behold, I am against thee." Here was sad tidings to hear, that God was against Jerusalem. See chap. v. 8.

"And will draw forth my sword." By "sword" is meant war, and the grievous evils which accompany it, Lev. xxvi. 33.

"And will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked." The Septuagint reads the words otherwise, I will destroy out of thee the unjust and lawless; the Chaldee hath it, I will cause thy just ones to go out of thee, that I may destroy the wicked; but the Hebrew is, the righteous and the wicked. How this can be understood of a man truly righteous, I find not, for, Psal. v. 12, the Lord blesseth the righteous, and compasseth him with favour as with a shield; if he cut him off; how doth he compass him with favour, and favour as a shield; how doth he protect him? Gen. xviii. 23, 25, "Wilt thou destroy the righteous with the wicked? far be it from thee: shall not the Judge of the earth do right?" said Abraham to God. He thought it an unjust and grievous evil that God should cut off the righteous and wicked together; and the truly righteous were marked, Ezek. ix. 4, that they might not be slain. Divers expositors, therefore, make the "righteous" here to be such as were reputed so, seemed to be so, but were not in truth so. The holy Scripture speaks often according to the opinions and apprehensions which are had of men, or what they have of themselves, Luke xviii. 9, the Pharisees thought themselves righteous, and were reputed so, but fell short of true righteousness. These were less wicked than others, and so appeared righteous.

Ver. 4. "My sword shall go forth out of his sheath against all flesh from the south to the north." This verse is the same for substance with ver. 47 of the precedent chapter; "fire" there is the same with "sword" here; "green tree" and "dry tree," the same with "righteous" and "wicked;" the burning up of all faces from the north to the south, the same with the words, going out against all flesh.

Ver. 5. "That all flesh may know," &c. "All flesh" was to be cut off in Judea, that "all flesh" in other lands might know the severe judgments of God.

Obs. 1. That wars are the Lord's; they come not without his commission, he sends them, orders them, and ends them at his pleasure. "I will draw forth my sword out of his sheath." Ver. 4, "My sword shall go forth against all flesh from the south to the north;" and, ver. 5, "it shall not return any more," i. e. till it had accomplished the Lord's will. Nebuchadnezzar and his army was the sword. Babylon the sheath; God brought them out of their own country into the land of Israel, which he laid waste from one end to the other; and then, having finished the work of the Lord, they returned.

Obs. 2. Outside righteousness doth not secure men from the judgments of God. "I will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked." Such righteousness finds not favour with God; it is no better in his account than wickedness. Labour for true righteousness. What if Josiah fell in war, and other righteous ones have been cut off in public calamities, yet know, death is not punishment to them, but glory.

Obs. 3. From the 4th verse, The Lord is severe in his judgments at last. He bare long with the Jews, but now he would unsheath his sword, and "cut off the righteous and the wicked" from the land, yea, "all flesh from the south to the north." None should escape his stroke, he would find them out wherever hid.

Obs. 4. From the 5th verse, That God's end in bringing judgments upon a nation, is to make known his power, justice, and severity against sinners, and their sinful ways. "That all flesh may know that I the Lord have drawn forth my sword out of his sheath." There is a knowledge of God by his works, as well as by his word; and by his judgments, as well as by his mercies. When Nebuchadnezzar and his army, the great sword of God, should come and cut them down, all men should see and say, God is, &c.

Ver. 6, 7. Sigh therefore, thou son of man, with the breaking of thy loins; and with bitterness sigh before their eyes. And it shall be, when they say unto thee, Wherefore sighest thou? that thou shalt answer, For the tidings; because it cometh: and every heart shall melt, and all hands shall be feeble, and every spirit shall faint, and all knees shall be weak as water: behold, it cometh, and shall be brought to pass, saith the Lord God.

Here is a command laid upon the prophet, which is, to "sigh." The manner of it is threefold.

I. "With breaking of loins."

II. "With bitterness."

III. "Before their eyes."

"With the breaking of thy loins." Sigh as if thy loins were broken; sigh greatly. It is suitable to that in Isa. xxi. 3, "My loins are filled with pain; pangs have taken hold upon me, as the pangs of a woman that travaileth." A woman in travail thinks her back broken, her loins loosed, and sighs grievously, yea, bitterly, as if herself, child, or both, were losing their lives; so should the prophet sigh here, really, not feignedly, deeply, not superficially, bitterly, not to ease himself.

"Before their eyes." How could this be, whenas Ezekiel was in Babylon, and they at Jerusalem? It is probable there were some of Jerusalem came to see and hear how things would go with them there, seeing they had lately revolted from Nebuchadnezzar; or if it were before the revolt, some might be there to bring the tribute they paid to the Babylonish king yearly.

In the 7th verse is the cause of this great sighing laid down, which is double.

1. "Tidings," that is, of the Babylonish army coming.

2. The effects thereof; which are four:

(1.) Melting of hearts.

(2.) Feebleness of hands.

(3.) Faintness of spirits.

(4.) Weakness of knees.

Such fear should possess them upon the tidings of the Babylonish army's approaching, as should make their rocky hearts melt, as snow before the sun, or fat of lambs before the fire; and the hands, spirits, and knees of their stoutest men to be feeble, faint, and weak; so that they should be inept unto all services, especially military ones.

Obs. 1. The goodness of the Lord towards a stubborn, wilful, perishing people, in that he will have the prophet to see what prophetic signs will do, when prophetic threats did nothing. "Sigh, son of man, with the breaking of thy loins, and with bitterness," &c. These were prophetic sighs, representing unto them the great evils which were coming upon them; that so they might consider, sigh in like manner for their sins, and prevent their destruction, or else certainly expect the same. God laid a heavy burden upon the prophet, to sigh so.

Obs. 2. Ill tidings sink the hearts and spirits of hypocrites and wicked ones. When they hear of wars and great forces coming against them, not only doth their mirth cease, but their hearts, hands, spirits, knees, fail them. When Nebuchadnezzar came, their hands were upon their loins, they knew not what to do, whither to go, where to hide themselves. Hath it not been so in Ireland? But, Psal. cxii. 7, it is said of a godly man, "He shall not be afraid of evil tidings: his heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord."

Ver. 8—13. Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, prophesy, and say, Thus saith the Lord; Say, A sword, a sword is sharpened, and also furbished: it is sharpened to make a sore slaughter; it is furbished that it may glitter: should we then make mirth? it contemneth the rod of my son, as every tree. And he hath given it to be furbished, that it may be handled: this sword is sharpened, and it is furbished, to give it into the hand of the slayer. Cry and howl, son of man: for it shall be upon my people, it shall be upon all the princes of Israel: terrors by reason of the sword shall be upon my people: smite therefore upon thy thigh. Because it is a trial, and what if the sword contemn even the rod? it shall be no more, saith the Lord God.

The Lord had said before, he would unsheath his sword, and now orders the prophet to cry out, "A sword, a sword;" and shows the approaching of it, for it was sharpened and furbished, he drew it out for service, to slay both people and princes.

Ver. 9. "A sword, a sword." By "sword" you may understand all those judgments which came with Nebuchadnezzar and his army, or more specially, those warlike instruments they prepared and brought with them.

"Is sharpened, and also furbished." If it were blunt before, now it was whetted; if it were rusty, now it is scoured. Now Nebuchadnezzar was ready with all his military preparations, sharp and shining, full of terror, and fit for execution.

Ver. 10. "It is sharpened to make a sore slaughter." Hebrew is, to kill a killing, that is, to make a great slaughter; it was both furbished and sharpened, that it might terrify with its glistering, and cut more sorely with its sharpness.

Obs. When God is bringing judgments upon a people, he will fit instruments for accomplishing of the same, and that to purpose. He will make that which is blunt, sharp; that which is rusty, glittering; and those who are spiritless, full of spirit: he can make one to chase ten, ten a hundred, and a hundred a thousand; his works shall never fail for want of instruments.

"Should we then make mirth?" The Hebrew is, shall we rejoice?

Obs. 1. Times of war and judgments are no times for mirth. The sword is unsheathed, it is whetted, it is furbished, it is approaching; should we then make mirth? that is as unseasonable as snow in summer, and thunder in winter; that is a time for fasting and prayer, for sackcloth and ashes, for judging ourselves and rending our hearts; that is a time to mourn, and not to be merry: Isa. xxiii. 12—14, "In that day did the Lord God of hosts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth: and behold joy and gladness, slaying oxen, and killing sheep, eating flesh, and drinking wine, &c. And it was revealed in mine ears by the Lord of hosts, Surely this iniquity shall not be purged from you till ye die." It provokes God exceedingly, that man calls for mirth when he call for mourning.

Obs. 2. The godly and faithful, both ministers and people, are affected with judgments coming upon church or state. "Should we then make mirth?" Isa. xxii. 4. 5. "Look away from me; I will weep bitterly, labour not to comfort me, because of the spoiling of the daughter of my people: for it is a day of trouble, and of treading down, and of perplexity." So Jer. ix. 1, "Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears," &c. So Christ wept over Jerusalem, Luke xix. 41—44, for the evils he saw coming.

"It contemneth the rod of my son, as every tree." These words are difficult. The Hebrew stands thus, the rod of my son contemning every tree.

The word "rod," שֵׁבֶט some render, tribe, and so make the sense to be, the tribe of Judah, the son of God, which Nebuchadnezzar, the sword of God, despised as every tree; but thus tribe, son, and every tree, do fall in to be the same.

Others make the sense thus, This sword, the rod of my son, viz. my people, I have appointed to punish them with; and however they have been able to endure other rods, yet this is stronger than they, and shall not be broken or frustrated of its end, when I shall use it: this sense is not to be despised; as if by "son," Nebuchadnezzar be meant, who being armed with power, contemned every tree, the green tree and the dry tree, the high and the low tree, all the men of the land of Israel. If Cyrus, who delivered God's people, be styled but his "servant," it were much that Nebuchadnezzar, who destroyed them, should be called his "son."

Others interpret the words of Christ, who is meant by "son," and "rod," to be the sword in Christ's hand; he was resolved now to cut down every tree by his judgment, and to break this nation in pieces by the iron rod and sword he had in his hand: the Father speaks concerning his Son to the prophet. And the 11th verse strengthens this interpretation: "He hath given it to be furbished." Who is that "he," but the Son? and who gave it "into the hand of the slayer," but he? and that was Nebuchadnezzar.

Obs. 1. Christ hath rods and judgments in his hand. "The rod of my Son." Christ is not all mercy, though full of mercy; "the Father hath committed all judgment unto him;" Rev. vi. 16, the Lamb hath wrath in him, as well as meekness; Christ is a Lion to tear in pieces, as well as a Samaritan, &c. See Psal. ii. 12.

Obs. 2. When sinners profit not, but are worse under lesser judgments, this provokes Christ to bring forth more heavy judgments. The rod of my Son, contemning every tree: though they stood it out against other rods, they should not be able to do so against this. When the axe comes to the root of trees, they must down: a knife they may despise, but an axe despises them.

Obs. 3. Some judgments are so grievous, as they sweep away all. This rod despised every tree, the strongest oaks, the tallest cedars, the king, princes, nobles, counsellors, soldiers, artificers, &c.

Obs. 4. From ver. 11, Enemies cannot hurt unless they have power and furniture given them. The sword was fitted for and given into the hand of the slayer; Nebuchadnezzar could not have stirred, destroyed a man in the land of Israel, unless Christ had empowered him. Pilate had no power but what was given him. No man or nation hath power against another, unless they are armed from God or Christ. Had the Jews kept in with them, none should ever have harmed them.

Ver. 12. "Cry and howl, son of man." The word for "cry" is צעק which signifies to cry out on account of distress of mind. Jer. xxx. 15, "Why criest thou for thine affliction?" afflictions straitened and pressed the spirit of Jacob, so that he cried out. You have the word in Ezek. ix. 8; xi. 13, where it notes, crying from sorrow and pressure of mind.

"Howl." Beasts do howl when pinched with hunger, or suffer some great misery. The Hebrew word, הול, saith Abenacius, hath affinity with הלל and ליל words which signify night, and reduction in a manner to nothing; and when men are encompassed with great calamities, and ready to perish, then they howl. Isa. lxxv. 14, "Ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and howl for vexation of spirit." The Hebrew is, for breaking of spirit; when their spirits should be broken, and they ready to sink, and be ruined, then they should howl.

"For it shall be upon my people." The Hebrew is, it hath been upon my people: it is usual with the Hebrew to put a preter-tense for the future, to signify the certainty of the thing; and so it is here.

"Upon all the people of Israel." In chap. xi. 1, you have "princes of the people." The word there is, שער whence our English word, sir, which is as much as prince, or lord: here it is "princes of Israel," and the word is, נשיות nesiee, from נשא to prefer, lift up, set on high.

"Terrors by reason of the sword." The word for "terrors" is, טריי which is variously rendered. The reading we have I like best, and most expositors agree in it; and so the word is rendered, Lam. ii. 22. Jer. vi. 25, "The sword of the enemy and fear is on every side."

"Smite therefore upon thy thigh." In chap. vi. 11, the Lord commanded the prophet to smite with his hand, stamp with his foot, and here to smite upon his thigh; which were gestures to express grief and sorrow in great and sad calamities: Tundebant femora palmis, They smote upon their thighs with their hands.

Obs. 1. The calamities of wars are matter of great mourning and sad gestures. Cry, howl, smite upon thy thigh. Jer. iv. 6—8, God would bring evil from the north upon them, Nebuchadnezzar the lion was coming; "for this gird you with sackcloth, lament, and howl."

Obs. 2. The sword makes no distinction of persons. "It shall be upon my people, and upon all the princes of Israel;" they should find no more favour than others, not any, not the greatest of them, should be exempted from the evils of the sword. Jer. lii. 10, 11, "The king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes; he slew also all the princes of Judah in Riblah. Then he put out the eyes of Zedekiah."

Obs. 3. Times of war are times of fears. "Terrors by reason of the sword shall be upon my people." The sword drawn is a terrible thing, Josh. ii. 9; x. 12; Jer. xv. 8; xlv. 3—5; xlix. 24, 29. The sword is mugor-missabib, fear round about; it makes families, towns, cities, nations, to fear and tremble; when the sword is without, there is terror within, and such terror oftentimes as is destructive, Deut. xxxii. 25; men's hearts meditate such terrors, as bereave them of their wits, senses, lives.

Ver. 13. "Because it is a trial." The word for "trial" is, ברוך to prove, examine, try. Now they should find and feel the sword more glittering, sharp, and destructive than ever.

"And what if the sword condemn even the rod? it shall be no more." Interpreters are perplexed about these words, as they are in the original, and what to make of them as translated, I know not. Those words, "the sword," and "more," are not in the text, and puzzle the sense. The Hebrew is thus, And what if also the rod despising, hath not been? that is, what if the rod heretofore or hitherto hath not been a despising rod, but rather despised? as Zedekiah and his nobles despised the oath and covenant made with Nebuchadnezzar, chap. xvii. 16; yet now it should be a despising rod; and so it suits with that in ver. 10, The rod of my Son, despising every tree; and that in ver. 12, "It shall be upon all the princes of Israel;" and with that in Hab. i. 10, "They shall scoff at the kings, and the princes shall be a scorn unto them; they shall deride every strong hold." Or thus, There is cause thou shouldst cry, howl, smite upon thy thigh, because the sword shall be a trial; and what also if it shall not be a despising rod? if it be a trying rod, there is cause enough to mourn, but it shall be a despising rod, and so there is more cause to mourn. If this rod make them not try their ways, repent, and turn, it shall be a rod to despise the stoutest of them, and to destroy them.

Obs. 1. That the judgments of God are trials, they discover and make known what people are. The fire tries the metals, and declares what is good silver, good gold, and what is reprobate. Deut. viii. 2, God kept them forty years in the wilderness, to prove them, and know what was in their hearts; the hard things they met with there, discovered some to be murderers, some idolaters, some fornicators, some backsliders. Isa. viii. 21, "It shall come to pass, that when they shall be hungry, they shall fret themselves, and curse their king and their God:" when evil was upon them, then their wickedness appeared. So Jehoram, 2 Kings vi. 33, belched out his vileness in a time of distress, saying, "This evil is of the Lord; what should I wait for the Lord any longer?" he is a cruel God, destroys the people with famine, and puts them upon eating their own children, therefore I will wait no longer on him. When great winds are abroad, they tell you what trees are sound or rotten.

Obs. 2. God tries before he destroys; rods of trial come before rods of destruction. When the sword is drawn, furbished, and whet, the Lord tries men thereby, whether they will consider their ways, repent, and turn unto him, before he cut and destroy therewith. Tidings and terrors of the sword precede the strokes of it. Amos iv. 6, 9, the Lord sent a famine amongst them, but they returned not unto him; he tried them what they would do, he looked for their return. 2 Chron. vii. 13, 14, "If I shut up heaven that there be no rain, or if I command the locusts to devour the land, or if I send pestilence among my people; if my people which are called by my name, shall humble," &c. God tries his people by threatenings, by bringing judgments near unto them, by inflicting lesser judgments upon them, before he makes an utter destruction of them; that they may learn righteousness, humble themselves, and so either prevent the judgments, or have them turned into mercies.

Obs. 3. When rods of trial do us no good, then follow rods of destruction; when the trying rod hath been despised, then comes the despising rod, the rod that will not regard young or old, high or low, prince or people. At first God did lightly afflict Zebulun and Naphtali, but that being in vain, afterwards he afflicts them more grievously, Isa. ix. 4. When Dimon profited not by her first strokes, God laid more upon her, Isa. xv. 9. When smiting the lintel of the door, and shaking the posts, did not prevail, then did the Lord cut and slay with the sword, Amos ix. 1. If fear work not, he hath a pit; if that do it not, he hath a snare, Isa. xxiv. 17, 18. When paternal chastisements profit not, God hath destroying judgments; he will deal then with men, not as erring children, but as open enemies.

Ver. 14—17. Thou therefore, son of man, prophesy, and smite thine hands together, and let the sword be doubled the third time, the sword of the slain: it is the sword of the great men that are slain, which entereth into their privy chambers. I have set the point of the sword against all their gates, that their heart may faint, and their ruins be multiplied: ah! it is made bright, it is wrapped up for the slaughter. Go thee one way or other, either on the right hand, or on the left, whithersoever thy face is set. I will also smite mine hands together, and I will cause my fury to rest: I the Lord have said it.

The instruments, causes, and end, of the sad judgments coming upon the Jews, being formerly declared, here the manner and circumstances thereof are laid down.

“Smite thine hands together.” The Hebrew is, smite hand to hand; כף כף notes the concavity and hollowness of any thing, and so the hollow and palm of the hand. Whether this smiting of hands imports sorrow or joy is questioned; some make it to signify joy, prefiguring the pleasure of God in executing judgment upon the Jews; but when smiting or clapping of hands is referred to the creature to express joy, other words are used, as saphack, Job xxvii. 23; Lam. ii. 15: macha, Psal. xeviii. 8; Isa. lv. 12: takang or takah, Psal. xlvii. 1; Nah. iii. 19. Besides this, the prophet was in a mourning frame; ver. 10, when the sword is coming, “should we then make mirth?” and, chap. vi. 11, smiting with the hand imported sorrow, and so I conceive it doth here: “Smite thine hands together,” once, twice, thrice, oft, for the evils that are coming.

“Let the sword be doubled the third time.” The word for “doubled” is, כפל which signifies also, to repeat, reply. The sense is, let the sword come the second and third time. Some read the words thus, The sword shall come the third time. Nebuchadnezzar had come twice before, in Jehoiakim’s and Jehoiachin’s days, and after came in Zedekiah’s, carrying him away to Babylon; and this is made the mind of the Lord in these words: but because two of these were past, and the Lord speaks of the time to come, we may understand them of the sword of Nebuchadnezzar upon Zedekiah, 2 Chron. xxxvi.; of the sword of Johanan against Ishmael, and the Jews, for murdering Gedaliah, Jer. xli.; and the sword of Nebuzaradan when he laid all waste, carried all away, leaving only a few to be vine-dressers and husbandmen, Jer. lii.

“The sword of the slain.” A sword that is ready to slay, to slay the great ones, and to make great slaughter of them: when many are slain by the sword, that sword is the sword of the slain, or slaying sword.

“It is the sword of the great men that are slain.” It is a sword appointed to slay the great men. In the Hebrew it is in the singular number, the sword of the great man slain, or, of great slaying.

“Which entereth into their privy chambers.” The Hebrew is, chambering or lodging with them; חדר is a chamber, any secret, close place; it notes the inwards of man’s heart, or soul, Prov. xviii. 8: the sword should enter into their chambers, into their bowels and souls, the fear of it should possess them. The Septuagint express it thus, Thou shalt cast them into fear, or amazement; the sword shall first enter into the secret of your souls, and fill you with terrors, and after enter into your bodies, and take away your lives.

Ver. 15. “I have set the point of the sword against all their gates.” The word for “point” is אכפת which interpreters render, splendour, clamour, terror, slaughter, and these are all like the point of a sword to those who are besieged; properly it notes the point or edge of the sword, which God set against all their gates, their public gates of the city round about, and the private gates of their several houses; every where should the sword be, both in city and country, where they had gates, any rule or power.

“That their heart may faint.” In times of great fears and dangers, men’s hearts do often faint and fail them; when they have most need of heart, they are without hearts. God sent and set his sword for to dissolve and melt their hearts, so the word, נבו translated, to faint, signifies; all their spirit, vigour, and courage, should be dissolved, and so they should be faint, feeble, heartless. The Septuagint is, That their heart might be hurt or wounded.

“And their ruins be multiplied.” In the Hebrew it is, to multiply offences: the soldiers would offend them, the sword would offend them, their straits would offend them, the slain would offend them, they met with nothing but offences, at which they stumbling fell also. If we take the words passively as they stand, the meaning is, that their destructions might be many, that multitudes of them might fall.

“It is wrapped up for the slaughter.” This expression seems unsuitable for a sword, and expositors are put to it to make out the meaning of it. The original word means, to cover, clothe, put on, to hasten, and were better rendered, it is put on, or hastened for slaughter, than clothed or wrapped up for slaughter; it is harsh to say, clothed with the hilt, or wrapped up in the belt. Sanctius makes the clothing for slaughter, to be the fitting of it thereto.

Ver. 16. “Go thee one way or other, either on the right hand, or on the left.” Here by an apostrophe the Lord speaks to the sword, and under that to the army of the Chaldeans, commissioning that and them to go through the land of Judea, and to execute his pleasure. The words in the Hebrew run thus, Unite thyself, right-hand thyself, put, or set thyself, left-hand thyself.

“Whithersoever thy faces are prepared.” That is, Sword, unite thyself to the soldiers, soldiers, unite yourselves together, go the right-hand or left-hand way, which you have most mind unto, which way your spirits incline you most to, only see to it that you execute my pleasure upon all you meet. Be not afraid at what befell Sennacherib when he went against Jerusalem; I was against him, but I am with you.

Ver. 17. “I will also smite my hands together.” In this verse is God’s approbation of what the Chaldeans’ sword and army should do; they should conquer and destroy the Jewish nation, and he would rejoice in it. Smiting of hands before expressed grief, and here it is an expression of joy; so it is used chap. xxv. 6. It notes not only God’s approbation of the Babylonians’ undertakings, but his encouragement of them to that work, that so he might execute his vengeance upon them, and be at rest; as it follows:

“I will cause my fury to rest.” God’s fury was stirred against them, and boiled in him, and when this fury should be poured out upon them by the Chaldeans’ army, then should he be at ease, and comforted, as it is Ezck. v. 13, where these words were spoken to.

Obs. I. It is no new thing for the prophets of the Lord to prophesy in sackcloth. Ezekiel must prophesy and smite his hands together, in token of mourning and heaviness; our prophet was in sackcloth, being a captive in Babylon, seeing the sad judgments which were coming upon Jerusalem. So Jeremiah, Hosea, Joel, Amos, had mournful spirits, and prophesied in sackcloth, they smote their hands together, and dropped out sad things. The times were black in their days, they are not clear now; is not the sword coming the third time? is it not putting on for slaughter? shall not the prophets mourn and smite their hands together?

Obs. 2. Where the word prevails not to reform a people, there the judgments of God will come in, one after another, to the destruction of a people. "Prophecy, and let the sword be doubled the third time." He had oft prophesied, but there appeared no repentance, no returning to God, therefore let the sword come again and again. Had they repented of their sins, God would have repented of the evils intended, Jer. xviii. 7, 8; but when people go on in their sins, God will go on in his judgments, even to destruction. See Lev. xxvi. 21, 22, 31—33; Deut. xxviii. 62.

Obs. 3. When God will punish sinners for their wickedness, there is no hiding-place to secure them from the stroke of God, be they great or mean ones; that is the sword of the great men, which entereth into their privy chambers; whatever holes, recesses, vaults, hiding-places, they had, the sword would find them out. God knows where men are when hid, and his hand can reach them as well as his eye see them. When the Syrians fled to Aphek to secure themselves from the sword of Ahab, a wall fell upon twenty-seven thousand, and slew them, 1 Kings xx. 30. In times of danger men think of shifting for themselves, of hiding here and there; but what are cities, towers, chambers, secret places? there is no safety in any of them, or any other place; see Amos ix. 2, 3. The only safe hiding-place, is in "the secret place of the Most High," Psal. lxxxix. 1, that is, in God himself; Psal. cxix. 114, "Thou art my hiding-place and shield." Be wise then, foresee evil coming, and hide yourselves in this hiding place: Prov. xxii. 3, "A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself."

Obs. 4. When the Lord intends the destruction of a people, he will order things accordingly. "I have set the point of the sword against all their gates." Hereby all fleeing was prevented, and if they thought to stand and fight it out with the instruments he used, he made their hearts faint, he threw stumbling-blocks in their way, he multiplied their ruins. When the Lord is against a nation, he besieges them with evils, stops and shuts up all doors of hope, takes away their hearts, makes those things matter of ruin which they made account would be their refuge. Jer. iv. 9, "At that day the heart of the king shall perish, and the heart of the princes; and the priests shall be astonished, and the prophets shall wonder;" and why? "the sword reacheth unto the soul."

Obs. 5. It is the Lord's commission, encouragement, and providence, which puts life into military undertakings, and makes them successful. "Go thee one way or other, to the right hand or to the left." God bid Nebuchadnezzar, the army, and sword, go; had he not bid them go, been with them in their going, and ordered all their undertakings, they had been vain and fruitless. Armies are but instruments, and if they do execution upon enemies, if they conquer and subdue, it is by the hand and power of God.

Obs. 6. Execution of justice upon sinful persons and nations is pleasing and delightful unto God. He put on Nebuchadnezzar to go and destroy the Jewish nation, and when he went, he smote his hands together at it, he rejoiced; by this means the Lord eased himself of his adversaries, as he speaks, Isa.

i. 24, rested from his fury, and comforted himself. They had pleased themselves in their sinnings, but wearied God thereby; now God would please himself in punishing them for their sins, and weary them, yea, waste them with his judgments.

Obs. 7. That which is matter of mourning unto man, is matter of joy unto God. This rises from the various sense of the phrase, smiting of hands; because the sword was come, therefore Ezekiel was to smite his hands together, and manifest mourning, and because it was to come, God would smite his hands together, and manifest joy.

Ver. 18—24. The word of the Lord came unto me again, saying, Also, thou son of man, appoint thee two ways, that the sword of the king of Babylon may come: both twain shall come forth out of one land: and choose thou a place, choose it at the head of the way to the city. Appoint a way, that the sword may come to Rabbath of the Ammonites, and to Judah in Jerusalem the defended. For the king of Babylon stood at the parting of the way, at the head of the two ways, to use divination: he made his arrows bright, he consulted with images, he looked in the liver. At his right hand was the divination for Jerusalem, to appoint captains, to open the mouth in the slaughter, to lift up the voice with shouting, to appoint battering rams against the gates, to cast a mount, and to build a fort. And it shall be unto them as a false divination in their sight, to them that have sworn oaths: but he will call to remembrance the iniquity, that they may be taken. Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye have made your iniquity to be remembered, in that your transgressions are discovered, so that in all your doings your sins do appear; because, I say, that ye are come to remembrance, ye shall be taken with the hand.

These words do treat of Nebuchadnezzar's consultation about his military undertakings, and the way he took to accomplish the same, viz. divination, and the event thereof in respect of the Jews.

"Appoint thee two ways." In the fourth chapter the prophet was to portray out Jerusalem upon a tile, and to lay siege against it; here he is commanded to foretell the coming of the king of Babylon, not verbally, but typically, by way of representation, and he must draw out upon the same tile, or some such thing, two ways; put before thee, or make unto thee, two ways.

"That the sword of the king of Babylon may come." Much was said before of the sword, the drawing, sharpening, furbishing, and slaughtering of it; and here is a plain discovery whose sword it was, the sword of a king, and the king of Babylon.

"Both twain shall come forth out of one land." These two ways must come out of Babylon; he must first draw a line, and then branch it out into two, as a river runs a long tract in one channel, and then divides itself into two.

"Choose thou a place, choose it at the head of the way to the city." Choose you the hand, side, or place, where the king of Babylon, having mustered up his forces, may deliberate and consult what to do, whither to go, which way to take; let it be at the head of the way. Where the beginning of the two ways was, that was the head of the way.

Ver. 20. "Appoint a way that the sword may come to Rabbath." Draw out one way leading to Rab-bath, that so Nebuchadnezzar may see work for his sword there. Rabbath was the royal city, and chief city of the Ammonites, 2 Sam. xii. 26, who were the posterity of Ben-ammi, the incestuous son of Lot, Gen. xix. 38.

“And to Judah in Jerusalem the defended.” That the sword may come not only to the Ammonites, but also to the Jews which dwelt in Jerusalem, a city well fortified. Rabbath was strengthened by waters, 2 Sam. xii. 27, and therefore was called “the city of waters;” but Jerusalem was compassed about with hills, Psal. exxv. 2, had strong towers and bulwarks, Psal. xlvi. 12, 13, and was called a strong city, Psal. xxxi. 21.

Ver. 21. “For the king of Babylon stood at the parting of the way, at the head of the two ways.” Here is a preter-tense put for the future; the king of Babylon had not yet stood there, but he shall stand at the parting of the way, at the mother of the way: when a way divides into or begets two ways, the Hebrew calls the first way, the mother of the other, and head of them, as here, “the head of the two ways.”

“To use divination.” He being doubtful what to do, whither to go, the right-hand or left-hand way, should make a stand, where the way parted, to consult; he thought it not meet to divide his army, and to go both ways at once: to set upon two such great cities as Jerusalem and Rabbath, each of them would require his whole strength, and therefore he would try by divination to which of them he should go.

“He made his arrows bright.” This is the first kind, which expositors call, βελομαντία, seu δαβδομαντία, a divining by weapons, or rods. The Hebrew for “arrows” is, כַּרְצִים which signifies an arrow or knife, so called from cutting or dividing, for רָצַח is from רָצַח to cut in pieces. Some render it, arrows, as the manner of divining by them, was either by writing the names of Jerusalem upon one, and of Rabbath upon another, and then putting them with other arrows into a quiver. The arrow first drawn out with either of those names upon it, determined the case. If the arrow with Jerusalem upon it was first drawn, they then went thither; if that with Rabbath upon it, then they went to Rabbath. Some affirm they made the arrows to leap out of the quiver by magic art, and that which leaped on the right hand led them to Jerusalem, that on the left hand to Rabbath. So the Septuagint renders the words τοῦ ἀναβρασιῆ ῥάβδον, to make the rod spring forth. Others make the manner of this divining to be, by the king's throwing up an arrow into the air, which if it fell on the right hand, they went the right-hand way; if on the left hand, the left-hand way. Others render the word, knives, and so the sense may run thus; He made bright his knives, to cut open the birds or beasts that were to be sacrificed: or take the word for arrows or knives, he made them bright, he scoured and polished them, that in the brightness of the iron or steel, they might discern something to direct.

“He consulted with images.” This is the second kind of divination which he used. שָׂאֵל בְּתַרְפִּימִים so is the Hebrew, he asked of or consulted with teraphims. This word teraphim is oft used in the Old Testament, and is divers times translated images, whereas in the Hebrew it is teraphim; so you have it, Gen. xxxi. 19, 34, 35; 1 Sam. xv. 23; xix. 13, 16; Zech. x. 2; 2 Kings xxiii. 24. It is fit to inquire therefore what teraphims were: not instruments of brass to distinguish the minutes or parts of hours, nor astrological images made to speak; but, as Slindler observes, they were images made like men, to this end, that they might in or by them know things to come. So Kircher saith of תַּרְפִּים they were images of men, made to receive and communicate intelligence from heaven about things to come. The teraphim Michal laid in the room of David, was like unto a man, 1 Sam. xix.; and that it was a divining image, may appear by that you find in Gen. xxx. 27. “I have learned by experience,” saith Laban, “that God hath blessed me for thy sake.” The Hebrew is, נִחְשֵׁי I have divined, he had his teraphims by which he could do it; and it is conceived by the learned, that Rachel stole away her father's teraphims upon this ground, that he might not divine by them which way she and Jacob were gone. The Septuagint, Zech. x. 2, calls the teraphim, ἀποθνεγγομίνοι, speaking; and Hos. iii. 4, ἐῖδω, representing, which the Targum renders, mechoni amuntantes; all which do show, that men held a divining virtue to be in their teraphims, and so Nebuchadnezzar conceived, and therefore consulted with his teraphims.

“He looked in the liver.” This is the third kind of divination. When they sacrificed, they opened the sacrifice, and observed the inwards and entrails exactly, especially the kidney, the heart, the milt, and the liver, whence they were called extispices, and aruspices, because they did it at the altar. The liver, as Lavater saith, was fons raticinii, from thence they made their chiefest divinations: if that were sound and good, without blemish, they made successful divinations thereupon; but if vitiated or dislocated, their divinations were untoward and unhappy.

Such divinations as these mentioned were unlawful; Deut. xviii. 10, 11, “There shall not be found among you any one that useth divination, or an observer of times,” &c.; they are abomination to the Lord. Divining in such ways was a grievous sin; 1 Sam. xv. 23, “Rebellion is as the sin of divination;” which is not countenanced by that Prov. xvi. 10, “Divination is in the lips of the king;” for so the Hebrew is: here the word divining is taken in a good sense, and is spoken of the king sitting in judgment, whom God would guide, so that he should find out the truth; for the next words are, “his mouth transgresseth not in judgment.” When the two harlots were before Solomon, pleading each for the live child, and the truth was obscured by their pleading, God endued the king with a divining spirit, so that he found out the truth, and gave a divine sentence; but this makes nothing for the wicked divinations here mentioned.

Ver. 22. “At his right hand was the divination for Jerusalem.” Here you have the issue of his divinations, which determined him, being doubtful before, which way he should go, viz. the right-hand way, and that was to Jerusalem; the arrows, images, and livers, did all concur, according to their divinations, that Nebuchadnezzar should go thither.

“To appoint captains.” The word for “captains” is, כַּרְמִים carim, from כַּר car, which signifies a pasture, a lamb, and battering-rams, which were military instruments, used in sieges; and so it was rendered, Ezek. iv. 2; and so it is rendered in the latter part of this verse, where it is said, “to appoint battering-rams against the gates;” but because the word is twice in the verse, it is rendered in the first place “captains,” for the word signifies the heads and chief men of an army; so you have it, 2 Kings xi. 4, 19. The king having consulted, now fell to action, and appointed captains to lead the army to Jerusalem.

“To open the mouth in the slaughter.” It may be read, to open the mouth to slaughter; so Montanus, Lavater, and Vatablus read the words; and the sense is, the captains should exhort and stir them up to kill and slay their enemies. Or if you will, take opening the mouth here, for making a breach in the wall. For "slaughter," vid. Junius. The captains should come close, besiege the city, make a breach, enter, and slay, and in their entrance and slaying, should open their mouths, and make shouting; as follows,

"To lift up the voice with shouting." When great exploits are attempted by men against their enemies, oft they shout, and make a great noise, that so they may daunt and terrify them. Doubtless the clamour and shouts of those barbarous Babylonians, did much perplex the Jews, made their hearts faint and hands feeble; to see the mounts, forts, and battering-rams at their gates, could not but trouble them, but when they made breaches in their walls, entered and slew men with shouting, this affrighted them and sunk their spirits. They afflicted Jerusalem with shouting, and the Lord threatened Babylon in the same kind; Jer. li. 14, "I will fill thee with men, as with caterpillars; and they shall lift up a shout against thee."

Obs. 1. The Lord knows things to come most certainly, yea, as certainly as if done already. He knew that Nebuchadnezzar would come out of Babylon, what way he would come, and where he would make a stand and consult, which he shows to the prophet, and speaks of as done already, ver. 21, "The king of Babylon stood at the parting of the way, at the head of the two ways, to use divination." The Lord sees things afar off, and knows what shall be in ages to come. Hereby he confounds all idol gods, and proves himself to be the true God. Isa. xli. 22, 23, "Let them bring forth, and show us what shall happen: declare to us things for to come. Show the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods:" if you cannot discover things that lie in the dark, if you cannot foretell what shall be many years hereafter, you are no gods; I can do it, and therefore am God, the true and only God: Isa. xli. 9, 10, "I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done." God had foretold things in Moses' days, that were not accomplished in Isaiah's; and he foretold things in Isaiah's days, that are not yet all fulfilled: see Isa. lx. throughout, chap. lxxv. 17; lxxvi. 22. In Peter's days, the new heavens and the new earth were expected, 2 Pet. iii. 13, and are not yet given out; so, many things hath the Lord foretold in the Revelation, which we wait still to see fulfilled.

Obs. 2. That even heathens, when they are in straits, doubtful what to do, and how to proceed in their undertakings, will not neglect, but use variety of means for resolution. Nebuchadnezzar uses divination, he makes bright the arrows, consulted his gods, he looked into the liver; these were such means as he conceived conducive to such a purpose, though sinful. Heathens have been forward in their straits and doubts to get resolution, Dan. ii. 1, 2, 5, 6, 9; v. 5—8. It is incident to the nature of man, both heathens and others, to run to unlawful means in their necessities. God's own people did it; Hos. iv. 12, "My people ask counsel at their stocks, and their staff declareth unto them;" they consulted with their images, which in disgrace the Spirit of God calls "stocks," and from their staves or rods they took divinations. Such practices let us abhor, but use those means God approves of, and hath appointed, for our resolution in our doubts and straits. Instead of making bright the arrows, let us purge and make bright our consciences, and they will tell us something; instead of consulting teraphims, stocks, and stones, let us consult with God and his servants; instead of looking into the liver of beasts, let us look into the book of God, there we shall find light to dispel our darkness, and to direct our ways: David made God's testimonies his delight and counsellors, Psal. cxix. 24.

Obs. 3. God overrules the wicked acts of men, and makes them subservient to his will and ends. Nebuchadnezzar uses divinations which God had forbidden; and the divination might have been at his left hand for Rabbath, or Philadelphia, which is the same; but God had a purpose to bring him to Jerusalem, to cast up a mount, to build a fort there, to set battering-rams against the gates thereof, and therefore secretly, by his providence, he ordered the divination, that it should be at his right hand for Jerusalem. Whatever the lot is, wheresoever it be cast, "the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord." Prov. xvi. 33; Providence runs through the evil counsels of men, and makes use of them, their counsels and actions, to accomplish the good pleasure and righteous ends of the blessed God: by the arts, policies, methods, wiles, depths, designs of the devil, and devilish men, God carries on his own work, and nothing puts him or his work out of the way. Divinations of heathens promote the work of Heaven. This is a mystery, but full of truth and admiration, that God makes the worst tools and instruments, all wicked men, and their ways, to serve his providence, further his ends, and advance his glory: the devil did it in tempting Eve, and Judas in betraying Christ.

Ver. 23. "And it shall be unto them as a false divination in their sight." The Jews at Jerusalem would not believe this typical prophecy of Ezekiel, representing the coming of Nebuchadnezzar, and besieging of their city: they looked upon what he said as a false and foolish divination. What! hath Nebuchadnezzar made bright his arrows, consulted his teraphims, looked into the liver? we neither care for nor fear him, or his coming. They saw not God's hand in these things which ordered them so; however superstitious and wicked that Nebuchadnezzar was, he was confirmed in his work and way for their ruin.

"To them that have sworn oaths." The Hebrew is, swearing oaths to them. Rabbi David expresses the words thus, Propter juramenta juramentorum ipsius. For the oaths upon oaths made to them. The false prophets had by many oaths confirmed them, that the city should never be taken, whereupon they were secure as men that keep sabbaths, who are at rest. The Septuagint turns those words, ἐβδομαζων τὰς ἑβδομάτας ἀβραῦν, weeking a week, or sabbatizing a sabbath. This variety rises from the Hebrew word שבע which signifies seven, and thereupon a sabbath, and also to swear. In this sense we take it; and the Jews might be secure upon the oaths of their false prophets, but whether they made such oaths is doubtful: rather, because of the oaths between them and the Egyptians, for having violated the oath and covenant with the Babylonians, they entered league with the Egyptians, chap. xvii. 15, who promised them help, horses, and much people, and that against the Babylonians, if ever they should come.

"But he will call to remembrance the iniquity, that they may be taken." The word "he" being שׂר in the original, is hoc, as well as hic, and may make the sense thus, This thing, viz. their slighting the prophecy, as a false divination, and their oathing of it with the Egyptians, shall call to remembrance that iniquity for which they shall be taken: or, This thing, viz. this divination, falling on the right hand of Nebuchadnezzar, and leading him to Jerusalem, will bring to mind the iniquity, that is, the perfidiousness of Zedekiah and the rest, in breaking the oath, that they may be taken. If we read it, "he," that is, Nebuchadnezzar, he will remember the iniquity of Zedekiah, that he and those with him might be taken.

Obs. 1. That the messages and passages of the messengers of God are matter of scorn to profane and wicked men. "It will be unto them as a false divination in their sight." When the prophet portrayed out the way the king of Babylon should come, the things he should do, the siege he should make about Jerusalem, and the effects thereof, all these were reputed by them lying things, false divinations. What he told them in the latter end of the twentieth chapter, they cried out of as parables, dark and obscure things, which they understood not; and here they account his typical threatenings as falsehood and lies. When the false prophets fed them with lying visions and divinations, they were honoured and believed, 1 Kings xxii. 11, 12; Ezek. xiii. 6, but when the true prophets told them the mind of the Lord, they were reproached, as Jeremiah, "Thou speakest falsely," chap. xliii. 2; they were smitten and imprisoned, as Micah, 1 Kings xxii; their lives were sought, Jer. xxxviii. 4; yea, they were put to death, 2 Chron. xxiv. 20, 21.

Obs. 2. That those who break and make oaths for their own ends, making no conscience thereof, God leaves them to injudiciousness of spirit, and to stumble at his word and threats. "It shall be unto them as a false divination in their sight, to them that swear oaths." They swore to Nebuchadnezzar, and violated what they had sworn for their own advantages, and then sought for their security to the Egyptians; but what was the fruit herof? they were given over to injudicious minds and impenitent hearts, so that they discerned not God's proceedings towards them, nor the prophet's language to them. Perfidious and unjust dealings do so blind and harden, that the word and ways of God become snares and stumblingblocks unto them.

Obs. 3. The iniquities of princes and people do not always lie hid, but in time appear for the ruin of those who have committed them. "But he," or, this thing, "will call to remembrance the iniquity, that they may be taken." Zedekiah, his nobles, and people, sinned in breaking with Nebuchadnezzar, and falling in with Egyptians; they thought that time would bring a veil over those passages, that they should be buried in the dark, lie still and never see light more; but those iniquities were brought to mind, when the divination fell on the right hand, and drew Nebuchadnezzar to Jerusalem. He called to mind what cause he had to invade their land, and besiege that city; he remembered how perfidiously they had dealt with him, and thereupon roused up himself and forces, to set upon them with all their might. Princes' and states' iniquities may be couchant and dormant for a season, but at last they will awake, appear, and prove lions rampant. Let not any, great or small, flatter themselves that their sins are forgotten, because they hear not of them; they will be called to mind to their detriment, if not their destruction. Saul's sin in slaying the Gibeonites was unthought of, but by a famine it was called to remembrance, and cost the lives of seven of his sons, 2 Sam. xxi.

Ver. 24. "Because ye have made your iniquity to be remembered," &c. In this verse the Lord gives a definitive sentence concerning the Jews, they "shall be taken with the hand;" and lays down the reasons thereof.

1. They did those things which "made their iniquity to be remembered;" they gloried they had shaken off the Babylonish yoke, which brought their perjury and rebellion to remembrance; God remembered it, Nebuchadnezzar remembered it.

2. They went on in other wicked courses; in all their doings, their sinning appeared, they sinned openly.

You have three words here which seldom meet in one verse, "iniquity," "transgression," and "sin;" the like is in Job xiii. 23, and in Exod. xxxiv. 7.

The word for "iniquity" is $\pi\upsilon$ which signifies, obliquity, crookedness, perverseness, injustice; and is contrary to that which is right and equal; which our English word, iniquity, imports. The word for "transgression" is, $\pi\upsilon\sigma$ which notes rebellion, obstinacy, maliciousness. The third word is, $\alpha\mu\alpha\rho\tau\iota\alpha$ which is, "sin" in a lower degree; any or every going aside from the rule, any aberration from the way of God, any failing in duty. The first of these the Septuagint terms $\alpha\delta\upsilon\kappa\iota\alpha$, the second $\alpha\sigma\iota\beta\epsilon\iota\alpha$, the third $\alpha\mu\alpha\rho\tau\iota\alpha$, injustice, impiety, sin, or error.

"You shall be taken with the hand." By "hand" the prophet means the Assyrian army, which should come, take the city, and them in it.

Obs. 1. Open, impudent sinning, brings to mind former iniquities. They had cast off the Babylonish yoke in an unjust and wicked way; they went on glorying in their shame, and their latter sins brought to mind their former; their transgressions were so open, discovered, their sins so apparent in all their doings, that they made their iniquity to be remembered; they provoked God to plague them for their present and former sins. Thieves, when taken in some wicked acts, their former villanies come to light. As one sin begets another, so one sin discovers another. Many, having sinned in prostituting their bodies to those they should not, afterwards make away the children had by them; so their sins breaking out, former iniquities are brought to remembrance, and themselves to punishment; men discover their sins, and their sins discover them. Here they made their iniquities to be remembered, and their iniquities brought them to remembrance.

Obs. 2. Public sins bring public judgments. They had openly broken with Nebuchadnezzar, they gloried in what they had done, and went on in such vile courses as were apparent to heaven and earth; and because it was so, therefore Nebuchadnezzar is sent against them, to take and ruin them. The Lord never lets in public desolations upon a church or state, till their sins are become public and incorrigible. It was so with Jerusalem at first, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 14—17; and it was so with Jerusalem at last, Matt. xxiii. 37, 38; their sins were public, and God most justly brought public evils upon them.

Obs. 3. That God hath hands to apprehend sinners with. "They shall be taken with the hand." The Babylonish army was the hand of God, and with it he apprehended the sinners in Zion, slew many of them, and led the rest captives into Babylon. The instruments God uses to punish his people sinning with, are sometimes called swords, Psal. xvii. 13; sometimes axes, saws, rods, staves, Isa. x. 15; sometimes his battle-axe, and weapons of war, Jer. li. 20; sometimes his net and snare, Ezek. xvii. 20; his pit, chains, chap. xix. 4; all which are the hand of God, Psal. xvii. 14; and in the hand of God he uses them to do that which hands do; by these he takes plagues, and destroys sinners.

Ver. 25—27. And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end, thus saith the Lord God; Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be the same: exalt him that is low, and abuse him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn, it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him.

These words are an apostrophe to the prince of Israel, declaring what should befall him, and the whole kingdom of Israel. He should be deprived of his kingly dignity, the kingdom ruined, and abide so, till the Lord should give it to him it belonged unto.

Concerning the "prince of Israel," he is,

I. Described to be "profane and wicked."

II. The time is intimated of his misery; both which are in ver. 25.

Ver. 25. "And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel." This prince of Israel was Zedekiah, and the titles given him are, not, Your sacred majesty, or, Your excellency's highness, but, "Thou profane wicked prince." His profaneness and wickedness doubtless was great, though much be not specified in the word; yet something is set down therein. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 12, "He did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord his God, and humbled not himself before Jeremiah the prophet speaking from the mouth of the Lord;" he despised the word and prophet of the Lord; and ver. 13, "He rebelled against king Nebuchadnezzar, who had made him swear by God, but he stiffened his neck, and hardened his heart from turning unto the Lord God of Israel;" he profaned the holy name of God. Being perfidious and obstinate, he fell in with Pharaoh king of Egypt, and sought help of him against Nebuchadnezzar, Ezek. xvii. 15: and so trusted in man, and not in God. He was like the other lions, which learned to catch the prey, and devoured men, Ezek. xix.; and so was cruel, bloody. "He did evil according to all that Jehoiakim had done," Jer. lii. 2; and he did abominations, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 8; and in his days was as gross idolatry in Jerusalem, and in the temple, as ever before: Ezek. viii. then was there the image of jealousy; then did the ancients of Israel worship creeping things, abominable beasts and idols; then did they worship the sun towards the east; then was Tammuz in the temple, and women weeping for Tammuz: so that he upheld the vilest idolatry that ever Jerusalem had, he was the cause of their total ruin. It is not without cause, therefore, that the prophet affixes these titles to the crown. "Thou profane wicked prince of Israel:" and profaneness was not peculiar to the prince, but prophets, priests, and people were under that denomination: Jer. xxiii. 15, "From the prophets of Jerusalem is profaneness gone forth into all the land;" the court prophets countenanced and communicated all the court profaneness; and 2 Chron. xxxvi. 14, "The chief of the priests and people transgressed very much, after all the abominations of the heathen."

Vatablus reads the words thus, And thou, O prince, condemned to death: and he cites the Chaldee paraphrast, in which it is to the same purpose, O thou prince of Israel, who art to be cut off by the sword.

The prophet may seem here to forget himself in speaking so opprobriously of the prince, which the law forbade, Exod. xxii. 28. Eccl. x. 20, they might neither think nor speak evil of the ruler, nor wish evil to him; and here Ezekiel calls Zedekiah the prince of Israel, profane, and wicked: and in so doing he sinned not; for being a prophet, he was to give out what the Spirit of God gave in, and moved him unto. So dealt Jeremiah by Coniah, calling him "a despised broken idol, a vessel wherein was no pleasure," chap. xxii. 23. They would not flatter princes, by being false to truth. When it is done from a private and depraved spirit, then it is ill.

"Whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end." The words in Hebrew are, whose day of his is come, in time or season an end of iniquity. O Zedekiah, the day of thy punishment is at hand, wherein shall be an end of thy wickedness; thou shalt no longer be king, but suffer for what thou hast done.

Some by "iniquity" understand punishment, and so the sense is, thy day is come when punishment, that is, destruction, shall be thy end; thou and thy kingship shall be laid in the dust. The Hebrew for "when" is, wh, which is of the same signification as καρπός is, it notes both time and opportunity of time; and whether by "iniquity," sin, or punishment of sin, be understood, or both, is not much material: God will not suffer thee to go on any longer in thy profane and wicked courses, the time and season is at hand, wherein he will punish thee, and so put an end to thy sinning; as before.

Obs. 1. That princes oftentimes are far from piety and justice. "And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel." Of all princes in the world, the princes of Israel had cause to be holy and just. They were seated where the worship of the true God was; they had the law of Moses, and were commanded to read it continually, and not to depart from it to the right hand or to the left, Deut. xvii. 18—20; they had the sanhedrim, the priests, and prophets to counsel and advise them: yet princes of Israel were profane, they minded not the law of Moses or the worship of God, they despised priests and prophets, they were wicked, they persecuted good men and were perfidious to other princes, both Jehoiakim and Zedekiah were so to Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Kings xxiv. 1, 20. The profaneness and perfidiousness of princes hath been great. Among all the kings of Israel there was none good; they followed Jeroboam and Ahab, who were profane and wicked. Few among the kings of Judah were found good. How profane was Pharaoh, when he said, "Who is the Lord, that I should obey him?" Exod. v. 2. How profane was Belshazzar, when he quaffed in the bowls of the temple! Dan. v. 2—4. How profane was Ahab, that thrust aside the Lord's altar, and set up the Damascene altar! 2 Kings xvi. How profane was Jehoiakim, that cut the roll of Jeremiah in pieces, and cast it into the fire! Jer. xxxvi. 23. How profane was Herod, who mocked Christ, set him at nought, and arrayed him in a scornful manner! Luke xxiii. 11. They were kings that gave their power and strength to the beast, and made war with the Lamb, Rev. xvii. 12—14. You may read the horrible profaneness of Antiochus in 1 Mace. i. 46—52; he sent letters to Jerusalem to forbid what God had appointed; he commanded them to offer swine's flesh, and unclean beasts; that they should defile their souls, and pollute themselves with uncleanness; that they might forget the law, and change all the ordinances; and if they would not do so, they should die for it. Kings and rulers have been the greatest enemies to the ways of God and Christ; they, above others, have set themselves against them, Psal. ii. 2, 3. Hence they are counselled to "be wise" and to "kiss the Son," ver. 10, 12.

Obs. 2. That the prophets and ministers of God are not to fear the faces or frowns of the greatest, but to reprove them sharply, being evidently guilty. Thus dealt Ezekiel with Zedekiah, "Thou profane wicked prince of Israel:" though he were great, yet he spares him not, but brands him with his wickedness, and sets it upon record for after generations. John Baptist did the like by Herod: when he was upon taking his brother Philip's wife, he told him it was unlawful, and would be an incestuous match, Mark vi. 18; he was faithful in his ministry, and would not flatter Herod himself. Neither magistrates nor ministers should fear or flatter the greatest, because they are agents for and ambassadors of the great God of heaven, in comparison of whom the greatest on earth are as potsherds.

Obs. 3. That as princes have their times for sinning, so there are times for their suffering. Zedekiah's day was come, when iniquity should have an end; he had his times to show his profaneness and wickedness, and God had his time to reckon with him for the same. Princes may abound in wickedness, go long unpunished, but there is a day, a time, coming, wherein they shall smart for their lewdness. David tells you, the day of wicked men is coming, wherein they shall smart for their lewdness. David tells you, the day of wicked men is coming, Psal. xxxvii. 13, that is, the time and season set for their destruction; which Peter expresseth thus, 2 Epist. ii. 3, "their judgment lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not," it is making towards them, and coming on swiftly, and will be bad to them when it comes. Jer. l. 27, "Woe unto them! for their day is come, the time of their visitation;" that day is a visiting day; God is the visitor, and he will so visit them as shall breed amazement. Job xviii. 20, Bildad, speaking of the calamities which should befall the wicked in his day, saith, "They that come after him shall be astonished at his day, as they that went before were affrighted;" the day of God's visiting those who are eminently wicked, as princes and great ones, is so dreadful, as that it affrights the living which behold it, and astonisheth the generations that come after it. You may see what he doth at such times, Job xii. 17—19, 21; Psal. lxxvi. 12. Psal. cx. 5, he strikes "through kings in the day of his wrath."

Ver. 26. "Thus saith the Lord God; Remove the diadem, and take off the crown." This verse contains a judicial sentence against Zedekiah, and declaration of mercy towards Jehoiachin.

"Remove the diadem." The verb here is infinitive, which may be read, Thus saith the Lord, to remove the diadem, that is, I am now resolved to take the diadem from Zedekiah's head, and to making him: but it is usual among the Hebrews to put infinitives for indicatives and imperatives, and therefore some read it, I will take it away: others, Take away, remove the diadem. The word for "diadem" is מצנפת the same with צניף both from צנף to wrap, or compass about; and sometimes it is expressed by "hoods," which compassed the heads of women about, as Isa. iii. 23; sometimes by "mitres," which compassed the heads of priests about, as Zech. iii. 5; sometimes by "diadem," as Isa. xxviii. 5, which compassed the heads of kings, as here it did Zedekiah's. Some would have the high priest here meant, by the word mitznepeth, which they render hidarim, and belonged to him, Exod. xxviii. 4; but here is no speech of the high priest, it is spoken of the king, and notes his crown, not the high priest's mitre, and so the next words import.

"Take off the crown." In Hebrew it is, Lift up the crown: it now sits close to his head, and because he hath strengthened himself by making a league with the Egyptians, he thinks it so fast, that it shall not be removed; but lift it up, take it away, it shall no longer rest there. Of the word "crown" was spoken before, chap. xvi. 12; the word is קטרת, gnaterah, from קטר to surround, to cover on every side. Kings' crowns do compass and cover their heads. So did the king of Rabbath's, which Joab took from the king's head, 2 Sam. xii. 30; the weight of which was a talent of gold, which the Annotations say, was sixty pounds weight; and Ainsworth, on Exod. xxxviii. 24, saith, a talent weighed one hundred and twenty pounds, and Didote, one hundred and twenty-five. Whatever the natural weight of the crown and diadem was, the metaphorical weight exceeded it, viz. the cares, fears, and troubles of it were exceeding great. Crowns and diadems were insignia regalia; and when the Lord saith to the prophet, "Remove the diadem, take off the crown," he intends not that the prophet should do any such thing with his own hand, but that he should declare by his prophesying, that now the time was come, wherein Zedekiah should be stripped of all his regalities, be unkinged, and made as another man.

"This shall not be the same." This, not this, is the original. The Septuagint, αὕτη ὁ στέφανος ἴσται, This shall not be such. This crown shall not be this man's any longer; or, This crown shall not be thine, O Zedekiah; or, This crown, viz. this kingly government, shall not be this, an end of it is now come, thou art the last that shall be in Judea. Junius reads the words thus, This diadem, the crown shall be no more. Of this land, monarchical government shall down, great confusion shall follow; this shall not be the same. Thou dreamest, through the delusions of the false prophets, that Nebuchadnezzar will not come to invade the land, or if he do come, that thou shalt vanquish him by the help of Egypt, and so that thou and thy posterity shall reign still; but this shall not be, all regal power shall cease from thee and thy posterity.

"Exalt him that is low." The word for "low" is, השפלה from של which signifies, to be humbled, oppressed; and so "low" is opposite to proud, haughty, and those who are lifted up; it refers to one who is like a valley, not a mountain, and that was Jehoiachin, who yielding himself, by the counsel of Jeremiah, to Nebuchadnezzar, was carried into captivity, and there imprisoned; God's eye was upon him, and him, being depressed, oppressed, and low, he would have exalted. Some read, I will exalt, some, Exalt; the Hebrew is infinitive, and may be read indicatively or imperatively.

"Abase him that is high." The former words and these may be read thus, Heighten him that is low, and make him low that his high. This high person was Zedekiah, who through his pride and haughtiness of spirit, would not endure the Babylonish yoke: but perfidiously breaking with Nebuchadnezzar, fell in with the king of Egypt, grew confident, and despised the Assyrian power. He had high thoughts, high hopes, high confidences, he was become very mountainous; but this mountain must be levelled. Jeconiah, or Jehoiachin, being a valley, was exalted, Jer. lii. 31; 2 Kings xxv. 27; and Zedekiah being a mountain was abased, 2 Kings xxv. 6, 7; Jer. lii. 8—11.

Obs. 4. The Lord doth strip great ones, even kings and princes, of their glory, depose and abase them for their iniquities. Zedekiah was profane, perfidious, cruel, unjust; and what saith the Lord? "Remove the diadem, take away the crown, abase him that is high." Whoever be the instruments that take wicked kings, that spoil and punish them, it is God that commands and commissions the doing thereof. Nebuchadnezzar and his army were the hand that did the things here; they took Zedekiah, they pulled off his crown, slew his sons, all the princes, put out his eyes, bound him in chains, carried him to Babylon, imprisoned him there; but they could not have done these things, unless they had had commission and power from above: when kings are pulled down and removed, it is the Lord doth it, Dan. ii. 21.

Job xii. 18, "He looseth the bond of kings;" the Vulgate saith, the belt of kings, that is, their authority and power, say some expositors. Vatablus hath it, disciplinam, that tyrannical government they use he dissolves, and casts them into reproach, prison, captivity, and so "girdeth their loins with a girdle" of sackcloth and calamity; Vulgate is, he girds their loins with a rope. And ver. 19, "He leadeth princes away spoiled:" the word is, כְּהֵינִים which though some turn priests, yet it signifies also princes and rulers, 2 Sam. viii. 18; and where our translators, who were much affected to priesthood, have put it priest in the text, as Exod. ii. 16; Gen. xli. 45; xlvii. 22, 26, yet in the margin they have put prince: and such God leads away spoiled; spoiled of their glory, their diadems, crowns, and princely robes; spoiled of their power, their soldiery, and strong holds; spoiled of their stratagems and designs; spoiled of their territories, dominions, and revenues; spoiled of their friends, comforts, and hopes. And whither doth he lead them? In dementiam, saith Junius and Tremellius, into madness and brutishness: and so he led Nebuchadnezzar, for his pride and other sins, to bellow and graze amongst the beasts. Into contempt, saith Job, chap. xii. 21, being led out of all desirable and delightful: "He poureth contempt upon them;" that is, he fills them with contempt and scorn, who were wont to be honoured of all, and confer honours upon others: and how grievous this is you may judge by that of Zedekiah, who chose rather to see Jerusalem on fire, than to yield himself into the hands of the Chaldeans, for fear of mocking, Jer. xxxviii. 18, 19; but afterwards he had scorn and misery enough, being roasted in the fire thereof. The Lord throws wicked princes from their height of glory and greatness, into extreme misery. You know how Adoni-bezek was served; and in Isa. xxii. 15—18, you may read of Shebna, who was a great man, "Behold, the Lord will carry thee away with a mighty captivity, and will surely cover thee?" and with what would he cover him? with misery and shame; for it follows, "He will surely violently turn and toss thee like a ball into a large country: there shalt thou die, and there the chariots of thy glory shall be the shame of thy Lord's house." God cast this Shebna, who was proud and high, into extreme misery and disgrace; he was driven out into a foreign land, where he was either torn in pieces by dogs or buried with the burial of an ass.

Obs. 2. The Lord pulls down and puts an end to kings and kingdoms at his pleasure. "This shall not be the same;" this crown shall be no more for thy head, any of thy posterity, or for the kingdom of Israel. Here God pulled down the kingdom of Israel or Judah, which it had stood near five hundred years, and put a period to monarchical government. Josephus, in his tenth book of the Jewish Antiquity, chap. 10, saith, that the kingly government lasted five hundred and fourteen years, six months, and ten days, from the beginning of Saul's reign to the end of Zedekiah's. Kingship began with them in God's wrath, and ended in his fury, 1 Sam. viii.; Ezek. xix. 12. The Assyrian empire lasted some one hundred and twenty years, and then God pulled it down, it was the same no more. The Athenian government by kings was some four hundred and ninety years, and then the Lord said, "This shall not be the same," he changed it into a popular government. The kingdoms of the earth are the Lord's, and he deals with them as he sees good, he breaks them in pieces, and gives them new forms, at his pleasure: Dan. ii. 20, 21, "Wisdom and power are his; he changeth the times and the seasons; he removeth kings, and setteth up kings;" he takes away one form of government, and sets up another; he puts down monarchy, and sets up aristocracy. After the continuation of monarchical government amongst us near six hundred years, the Lord hath said, "Remove the diadem, take off the crown, this shall not be the same;" he hath put a new form upon us, which must have its time, and period also.

What the Lord hath done here, and did long since in Israel, he is about to do in other kingdoms of the earth. The kings generally are so profane and wicked, that the Lord hath a controversy with them, and is speaking to this effect, if not by his prophets, yet by his providences; "Remove the diadem, take off the crown: these shall not be the same."

Seeing it is God which makes such changes, let not us stumble at his providences and dispensations. We are too apt to look at the tools he doth his work by, and to quarrel upon that account, and not to look at his hand which useth those tools. If kings lose their crowns, if their glory be laid in the dust, if posterity be excluded, if great alterations be made, it is the Lord's doing, and should be marvellous in our eyes, and not matter of murmuring.

Obs. 3. That as God brings down the haughty and proud ones, so he raises the humble and dejected. "Abase him that is high, exalt him that is low:" God minds the oppressed, Jehoiachin lay a long time in prison, and that in Babylon, even thirty-seven years, but he was not forgotten; God moved Evil-merodach to bring him out of prison, and lift up his head, Jer. lii. 31; and so made that good, in Job xii. 18, in another sense than you heard before; "He looseth the bond of kings," he brings them out of their disgrace, restraint, and misery, and girds their loins with a girdle of honour, liberty, and comfort. Psal. cxxxviii. 6, "Though the Lord be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly," he advances and honours them. Job v. 11, he sets "up on high those that be low." Mary was low, and he set her among the highest; which made her to sing and say, Luke i. 52, "He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree." Let us take heed of high, aspiring thoughts, and remember what Christ hath given out, Luke xiv. 11, "Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Self-exaltation makes way for abasement, and self-abasement makes way for exaltation. Psal. cxlvii. 6, "The Lord lifteth up the meek: he casteth the wicked down to the ground." Those who are meekened and sweetened by their afflictions, the Lord lifts up; but the wicked he casts them off, he casts them down, and down to the ground, into extreme misery.

Ver. 27. "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it." This verse is a threatening of the destruction of the kingdom, and the time of its continuance in that condition, which is, till he come, who is the right owner.

The Hebrew word is, אִפְּסָהּ afsa, from אָפַס which signifies to do crookedly, perversely, untowardly; all which do diminish the glory of what is done; and so here, God would diminish the glory of the crown, yea, the crown itself: "I will overturn it," and bring it to nothing, (for it refers to the crown,) and that should fall to the ground and be no more, the kingdom shall be utterly overthrown and laid waste.

The word is trebled, "I will overturn, overturn, overturn," to show not only the certainty and evidence of the thing, but the gradation and continuance of it; for the kingdom of Judah by certain degrees fell from its height, and was under the dominion of strangers; for after that Zedekiah was deposed by Nebuchadnezzar, there was no crown nor king more in Judah. After the captivity, there were no kings, but governors, captains, rulers, as Zerubbabel, Nehemiah, and others; after them, the high priests had the power, in whose hands it continued, even to Hyrcanus, who usurping kingly authority, saith Pradus, was miserably slain, Herod, a stranger, succeeding.

Sanctius makes this triplication of the word to point out the three great evils Zedekiah suffered. 1. The loss of his kingdom and revenues. 2. The loss of his sons and eyes. 3. His reproachful living in captivity.

A Lapide, and some others, understand by the trebling of the word, the three notable destructions that befell the Jews after this time, the first by Nebuchadnezzar, the second by Antiochus, the third by Titus and the Romans.

Others, by this triplication, judge the time of those three, Assir, Shealtiel, and Pedaiah, to be meant; in whose days the kingdom of Judah was very low, if not quite overthrown, but began to flourish again in the days of Zerubbabel, who was the son of Pedaiah, 1 Chron. iii. 19. But Assir may be read appellatively, and not as a proper name, (it is in the 17th verse of that 1 Chron. iii.) thus, The sons of Jeconiah the bound, for he was then bound, was a prisoner in Babylon; and so the word is used, Isa. xlii. 7, "to bring out the prisoners;" the Hebrew is, שָׁסַר and if it be taken so, this triplication is marred.

Chenitius hath another exposition of this triplication of the words, which the learned may see in his Harmony upon the Gospel, the first part, third chapter, the latter end.

Men are various in their thoughts about the triplicity of these words, but do generally agree in this, that the overthrow of the kingdom and kingly dignity is designed out thereby.

"It shall be no more." In Hebrew thus, even this hath not been; but here the preter-tense is put for the future, and so the Septuagint reads it, neither shall this be the same. Vatablus hath it, Etiam hæc non fuit, which he interprets thus, This alteration shall not be before Nebuchadnezzar come, to whom the judgment belongs, and to him will I deliver Zedekiah: so he. The French is, et ne sera plus, it shall be no more, the crown shall be no more, the crown of Judah; no king shall reign therein any more.

All the sons of Zedekiah were slain, Jer. lii. 10; and of Jehoiachin, Jeconiah, or Coniah, it is said, Jer. xxii. 30, "Write ye this man childless, a man that shall not prosper in his days: for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah;" none of them shall ever come to kingly dignity.

"Until he come whose right it is." The sense is, The crown shall neither fit nor be fastened to any head, till he come that hath the true right to it; and that is neither Nebuchadnezzar nor Zerubbabel; nor Aristobulus, Alexander, or Hyrcanus, who assumed kingly dignity to themselves, in time of the Maccabees; but Christ the Messiah, who is the true Heir and Successor of David: when he comes, he shall raise up the kingdom of Judah, being miserably afflicted, destitute, and lost to the eye of the world; he changing it into a spiritual kingdom, shall restore it to as high, yea, a higher, glory than ever it had. The crown here was reserved and laid up for the Lord Christ, who was born King of the Jews, Matt. ii. 2; to whom the angel told Mary, that the Lord should give the throne of his father David, and that he should reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and have an endless kingdom, Luke i. 32, 33; upon this account it was, that Nathanael called him "the King of Israel," John i. 49; and that Christ said, "The Father hath committed all judgment unto the Son," John v. 22. The Father had appointed Christ to be King and Ruler, Micah v. 2; gave him power, Isa. ix. 6; he was to succeed David, sit upon his throne and kingdom to order the same, ver. 7; and his right thereunto both Matthew, in his first chapter, and Luke, in his third, do clear up, showing how he descended from David.

"And I will give it him." Christ, when he comes, shall not be kept off from his right; "I will give it him;" and he shall have the crown, it will fit his head, and sit fast upon it: though he come in a mean and low way, yet he shall be King, and reign.

Obs. 1. The Lord doth lay the glory of crowns and sceptres in the dust when he pleases. "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it." There is no crown so sure to any mortal's head, no kingdom so stable, but the Lord can pluck away the crown, shake the kingdom to pieces, throw out the possessors, and dispossess their heirs. He pulled the crown from Zedekiah's head, he brake his kingdom in pieces, he threw him out of his throne, deprived him and his sons of ever inheriting more.

Sometimes the Lord doth suddenly overturn empires and kingdoms: as Belshazzar's by Darius the Median, Dan. v. 30, 31; sometimes he proceeds gradually; and so he did with the kingdoms of Israel and Judah, Hos. v. 12. "I will be unto Ephraim as a moth, and to the house of Judah as rottenness." A moth eats up a garment by degrees, now it makes one hole in it, and anon another; so rottenness enters by degrees into a tree, first into one branch, then another, after into the body and root; so God by degrees ate up, wasted, and consumed those kingdoms. But he it suddenly or gradually, he overturns them when he pleases. God overturned the Persian monarchy, by the goat which had the notable horn, Dan. viii. 5, that was Alexander the Great, king of Greece; and when he was grown very great, ruled according to his will, his kingdom was broken, divided to others, and not to his posterity, Dan. xi. 3, 4; the Lord plucked up his kingdom, and quartered it among those who were not his heirs. The Lord made the sceptre depart from Egypt, Zech. x. 11; he cut off him; held the sceptre from the house of Edom, Amos i. 5. He breaks the staves of the wicked, and the sceptres of the rulers, Isa. xiv. 5; crowns, sceptres, kingdoms, he tumbles down, and lays in the dust.

Obs. 2. When God overturns crowns and kingdoms, he keeps them in such a condition while he pleases. "I will overturn, overturn, overturn: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is;" this was near five hundred years; for from Zedekiah's deposal to the birth of Christ were four hundred ninety and two years, which was a long season for his crown and kingdom to lie in darkness, and a desolate condition. Hosea told us long since, that the children of Israel should "abide many days without a king, and without a prince," chap. iii. 4. The kingdom of Israel was overturned by the hand of God above a hundred years before the kingdom of Judah, and lies overturned to this day; and so hath been above two thousand years in a sad, dark, distressed condition. When kingdoms, sceptres, and thrones are once overturned, they are not quickly raised up again. Their sins were great which caused the Lord to overturn them, and he lets them lie under the punishment of their iniquity many days and years. When kingdoms are down, many struggle to lift them up again to their former dignity, glory, and greatness; but it must not, it cannot be, till the Lord's time come, till he please to put forth his hand and do it.

Obs. 3. The Lord Christ, the promised Messiah, was the true King of Judah, and Prince of Zion, "Until he come, whose right it is, and I will give it him." The Father had appointed him to be King, given him the kingdom, and made it known long before his coming in the flesh. He was spoken of, Gen. xlix. 10; he was the Shiloh, the Prosperer, unto whom the gathering of the people should be; he gathered Jews and Gentiles together. He was spoken of, Numb. xxiv. 17, "There shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel;" so in Psal. xlv. 6, 7, "The sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre, and God hath anointed thee." See Isa. xi. 1, 2; xlii. 1—3; Jer. xxiii. 6; Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24; Dan. vii. 14, 27; Zech. ix. 9. In these places, and many other, the kingdom of Christ, his right thereunto, and the Father's donation thereof unto him, are spoken of. The people's hearts were towards him, and they would have made him a king, John vi. 15. However he appeared to the world, the apostles beheld glory and majesty in him, John i. 14; 2 Pet. i. 16; and Pilate wrote over his head, "This is Jesus, the King of the Jews," Matt. xxvii. 37. Christ was not a contemptible person, whatever men thought of him; the Father designed him to be a King, gave him a kingdom; the prophet foretold his kingly dignity; he was born a King, died a King, he lives and reigns at this day King of Zion, and of all saints, Rev. xv. 3. We have no cause to be ashamed of our King, but ought to honour him as we honour the Father, seeing all judgment is committed to him, John v. 22, 23.

Obs. 4. The wisdom and goodness of the Lord towards his people, that when he tells them of the severest judgment, he mingles some mercy. "I will overturn, overturn, overturn;" "overturn" the church, "overturn" the state, "overturn" them for a long time; which was very sad and bitter; yet even now, when he is in a full career of overturning, he tells them of the coming of Christ, who should be their King, wear the crown, and raise up the kingdom again. This was great mercy, in the depth of misery; if they lost an earthly kingdom, they should have a spiritual one; if they lost a profane and temporal king, they should have a King of righteousness, an eternal King. It is the method of the Lord, when he is bringing in dreadful judgments upon his people, that have provoked him bitterly, to lay in something that may support and comfort those who have served him faithfully. Amos ix. 8—11, "Behold, the eyes of the Lord God are upon the sinful kingdom, and I will destroy it from off the face of the earth; saying that I will not utterly destroy the house of Jacob, saith the Lord:" there was mercy mingled with judgment. So in the next verse: "For, lo, I will command, and I will sift the house of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth:" here again is mercy in the midst of judgment. So again in the two next verses: "All the sinners of my people shall die by the sword, which say, The evil shall not overtake nor prevent us:" and what then? "In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof; and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old:" here is goodness with severity.

Obs. 5. That how contrary soever God's actings appear, yet he will make good his promises; he is mindful of them, and will be faithful. The Lord had promised to set up his Son Christ to be King in Zion, the hill of his holiness, Psal. ii. 6; that the government should be upon his shoulder, Isa. ix. 6; that he would "cause a Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David, and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land," Jer. xxxiii. 15. What likelihood was there that these things should be, when the Lord overturns the land, plucks up all by the roots, and lays all in a dead condition, and that for many days and years? They might have thought and said, Surely, this death of the crown, of church and state, will be the death of all those and other promises; but it was not so. Though a sentence of death was upon the land, upon the Jews, yet the living God kept life in the promises, he minded them, and said, I will give it to him, he shall have this land, the kingdom and the crown, he shall sit upon Zion, reign and execute judgment. The actings of God sometimes are such, that to man's apprehensions they will make void the promises of God. Psal. lxxvii. 7, 8, saith Asaph, "Will the Lord cast off for ever? and will he be favourable no more? is his mercy clean gone for ever? doth his promise fail for evermore?" God's hand was heavy upon him, his proceedings with him such, as his soul was greatly afflicted, questioned the truth of his promises, and was ready to despair. But what saith he in the tenth verse? "This was my infirmity:" there was no infirmity in God; he had not forgotten his promise, it was not out of his sight, though out of Asaph's. Man's faith may fail him sometimes, but God's faithfulness never fails him; Psal. lxxxix. 33, God will not suffer his faithfulness to fail. God's operations may have an aspect that way; the devil's temptations, and our unbelieving hearts, may not only make us think so, but persuade us it is so, whereas it cannot be so, for the Lord will not suffer it, he will not make a lie in his truth or faithfulness; so the Hebrew is: he is a God that cannot lie, he is Truth, speaks truth, and not one of his promises can or shall fail; which may afford strong consolation unto all that are under any promise of God.

Ver. 28, 29. And thou, son of man, prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord God concerning the Ammonites, and concerning their reproach; even say thou, The sword, the sword is drawn: for the slaughter it is furnished, to consume because of the glittering. Whiles they see vanity unto thee, whiles they divine a lie unto thee, to bring thee upon the necks of them that are slain, of the wicked, whose day is come, when their iniquity shall have an end.

In these verses and the rest, to the end, is contained the prophecy against the Ammonites.

Two ways were spoken of in the 19th, 20th, and 21st verse; one leading to the Ammonites, the other to the Jews. Nebuchadnezzar using divinations to discover unto which of these he should go, Divine Providence overruled the divination, so that he was to make his military expedition unto Jerusalem; hence, lest the Ammonites should be secure, and insult over the Jews, whose judgments were now coming upon them, the Lord commands the prophet to denounce judgment, yea, the same judgment unto them.

In his prophecy we have,

I. The judgment, which is the sword, ver. 28.

II. The causes of it:

1. Reproach, ver. 28.

2. Impiety, and inhumanity, ver. 29.

III. The place where it shall be, ver. 30.

IV. The similitudes to which the judgment is likened, ver. 31.

V. The event thereof, ver. 32.

VI. The ratification of the prophecy, ver. 32.

"Concerning the Ammonites." The Hebrew is, to the children of Ammon. These Ammonites came of the Jewish race, for they were from Lot, and his younger daughter, Gen. xix. 38, who being with child by him, named her son Ben-Ammi, who was the father of the Ammonites, and for Lot's sake, who was the root of them, the Lord showed them kindness long after; Deut. ii. 19, when the Jews came into Canaan, they must not distress them, nor meddle with them. The Ammonites' land was given to the children of Lot for a possession; and so the Moabites, ver. 9, had their land upon that account; but the Ammonites, though descended from the Jews, were bitter enemies to them, and made war against them; see Judg. xi. 4; 1 Sam. xi. 1, 2; 2 Chron. xx. 1. They were notorious idolaters; they had Molech and Milcom among them, 1 Kings xi. 7; 2 Kings xxiii. 13; they were cruel and bloody, Amos i. 13.

"Concerning their reproach." Some would have the words taken passively here, for the "reproach" they suffered from the Chaldeans; but they are rather to be taken actively, for the "reproach" which the Ammonites put upon the Jews. So Vatablus understands the words, and other interpreters. A Lapidé affirms, that the Ammonites upbraided the Jews and their God as weak and unwarlike, because Nebuchadnezzar was coming to them, and durst not meddle with the Ammonites. It is certain the Ammonites bore the Jews no good will, and were glad of opportunities to vent that ancient hatred they had against them: when, therefore, they saw that Nebuchadnezzar should come, besiege their city, lay all waste, and carry them into captivity, they insulted over the Jews; they said, Where is your God? why doth he not appear for you, defend you against that cruel oppressor Nebuchadnezzar, and deliver you? We see what your God is; our Molech, our Milcom, doth more for us than your God doth for you. Zeph. ii. 8, "I have heard the reproach of Moab, and the revilings of the children of Ammon, whereby they have reproached my people, and magnified themselves against their border." Our prophet is more plain and full, bringing in the Ammonites scoffing at the calamities of the Jews: chap. xxv. 3, 4, "Say to the Ammonites, Hear the word of the Lord; Thus saith the Lord God: Because thou saidst, Aha, against my sanctuary, when it was profaned; and against the land of Israel, when it was desolate: and against the house of Judah, when they went into captivity: behold, therefore, I will deliver thee to the men of the east for a possession," &c.

"The sword, the sword is drawn." By "sword" is meant war, all warlike instruments, and all those evils which attend the same. Here is an epizeuxis, a doubling of the word, "the sword, the sword," which is emphatical, and imports certainty and progress of it to destroy. You Ammonites think the sword is drawn only against the Jews, and that when they are slain it shall be put up, but it is not so: "the sword, the sword is drawn" for slaughter of you Ammonites, as well as the Jews: you have little cause to insult, reproach, or flatter yourselves you shall be secure; your destruction is decreed, it is coming, only the Jews' is first, yours after.

The word for "drawn" is, פְּזִיזָה solutus est: it was bound up before in the sheath, now it is loosed, unsheathed; now it is at liberty, and in readiness to do execution, even among you Ammonites, at my pleasure.

"For the slaughter it is furbished." Not only it is drawn, but it was "furbished," מְרִיבָה filed, scoured; מֵרֵט whence it comes, signifies, to pluck up hairs, or, pull out feathers by the roots, to excoriate, or flay off the skin; and metaphorically, is applied to things which contract rust, and signifies, to remove rust. When swords have been long in their sheaths, undrawn, unused, they become rusty; that rust is like a hairy or feathery skin upon the blades, which must be removed, and that is the furbishing of them. The sword here was not "furbished" for sight, but for use, for slaughter.

"To consume, because of the glittering." The Hebrew is, to sustain by reason of the shining. It is "furbished," that it may suffice for the slaughtering of many, and that it may terrify with its "glittering" those that are to be destroyed. The Syriac, thou art whetted and shining. Lavater, that it may consume, because of the brightness or lightening of it. The sword and military instruments were so glittering, that, like lightning, they should strike sudden terror into them, and quickly consume them.

Obs. 1. When God is bringing, or brings, judgments upon his people for their iniquities, then the wicked, then their enemies take advantage and revile them. The Ammonites, understanding that Nebuchadnezzar was marching with his forces to Jerusalem, they reproached them, being glad that the day of their calamity and suffering was at hand. The Ammonites were their neighbours, they were as brethren, coming from the brother of Abraham, yet they reproached the Jews, and added affliction to affliction; Zeph. ii. 8, both Moab and Ammon reviled and reproached the Israelites, and "magnified themselves against their border."

The rabbies say, that when the Chaldeans carried the Jews captive, through the lands of the Moabites and Ammonites, the Jews wept, and they reproached them, saying, Why do you afflict yourselves? why do you weep? are you not going to your father's house? they meant Chaldea, which was Abraham's country and habitation. These and many other reproachful speeches doubtless they used against the Jews, when they were spoiled and led into captivity, and "magnified themselves against their border." They said, now their border, their land should become theirs; and they did take the advantage, and invaded their possessions. Jer. xlix. 1, "Concerning the Ammonites, thus saith the Lord; Hath Israel no sons? hath he no heir? why then doth their king (that is, the king of the Ammonites) inherit Gad, and his people dwell in his cities?" that is, Seeing Israel hath sons and heirs of his own, and I have given the possessions of Gad, being carried away with the ten tribes, unto Judah and Benjamin, why do the Ammonites usurp, and take possession of that which is none of their own? Thus they reproached and wronged the Jews. So likewise did the Edomites; Psal. cxxxvii. 7, "In the day of Jerusalem," that was, in the day Nebuchadnezzar's forces took and plundered it, they cried, "Rase it, rase it, even to the foundation." In reproach of, and despite to, the Jews, they cried out so, when Jerusalem was destroyed; the adversaries saw her, and did mock at her sabbaths, they scoffed at all her festivals, religion, and worship: Where is your God, whose days you have so religiously observed? why did he not defend you from this day of your sufferings? either he was infirm, and could not, or unfaithful, and would not.

Obs. 2. The Lord takes notice of the enemies' reproaching his people. He tells the prophet of the Ammonites' reproachings. Ezekiel was in Babylon, he knew nothing of it, but God heard and observed it; Zeph. ii. 8, "I have heard the reproach of Moab, and the revilings of the children of Ammon." God's ear is very open in this case, and though his people hear not, yet he heareth; Jer. xlviii. 27, he saith in his indignation unto Moab, "Was not Israel a derision unto thee?" put it off if thou canst, deny it if thou darest. I saw it, I heard it. This is some comfort to the church and people of God, that he observes not only the wrongs wicked men do unto his people, but also the reproaching speeches they utter against them; Lam. iii. 6, Jeremiah comforted himself in this, "Thou hast heard their reproach, O Lord, and all their imaginations against me." When we are reproached, and mischief is imagined against us by wicked ones, let us make use of this Scripture, and comfort ourselves therein, not breaking out into bitterness and passion.

Obs. 3. Reproaching and reviling God's people, when they are in affliction, draws judgment upon the reproachers and revilers. The Ammonites reproached the Jews when the Babylonish sword came upon them, and here the prophet must tell them the sword is drawn, furnished for slaughter and consumption of them. Reproach in this kind is a provoking sin; God's name, truths, ordinances, suffer when his people are reproached for his correcting hand upon them for their iniquities. Jer. xlvi. 26, 27, Make ye Moab drunken; that is, let the cup of God's wrath be given him, let him have judgment after judgment, drink so deep of divine fury, that he shall not be able to stand: and why was this? he magnified himself against the Lord; he derided Israel, ver. 27; he magnified himself against their border, Zeph. ii. 8; and this is called magnifying himself against the Lord, (for what is done against his people, and their borders, is done against him,) and Moab must be made drunk for it; yea, Moab also shall wallow in his vomit, he also shall be in derision, he shall be derided and scorned in his misery, as a drunken man who lies wallowing in his vomit: Moab for reproaching should be reproached; yea, grievously afflicted, yea, utterly destroyed. Zeph. ii. 8, 9, both Moab and Ammon reviled, reproached the Jews, and magnified themselves against their border: "Therefore as I live, saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Surely Moab shall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrah, even the breeding of nettles, and saltpits, and a perpetual desolation." The meaning is, not that they should be consumed by fire from heaven, as Sodom and Gomorrah were, but they should suffer extreme and severe judgments at the hands of the Lord, and be perpetually desolate, as they were.

Ver. 29. "Whiles they see vanity unto thee, whiles they divine a lie unto thee." The Hebrew is, In seeing to thyself a vain thing, in divining to thyself a lie. The Septuagint runs to that purpose, In thy vision for vanity, and in thy prophesying a lie to thyself. The Ammonites, like other nations, had their false prophets, diviners, and soothsayers, as you may clearly see from Jer. xxvii. 3, where the prophet, under the type of bonds and yokes put upon his neck, prophesieth the subjection of the nations unto Nebuchadnezzar, and among others, the Ammonites; and, ver. 9, he forbids them to hearken to their prophets, diviners, dreamers, enchanters, sorcerers, which told them they should not serve the king of Babylon. They held them asleep by telling them, either Nebuchadnezzar would not come to them, or if he did, they were a strong people, had strong cities, and needed not to fear any enemy; but they saw vanity, and divined a lie unto them: and this is the sense of the words, both according to the Hebrew and our translation.

"To bring thee upon the necks of them that are slain." Their false prophets and diviners put them on to insult over and trample upon the Jews, when they were slain by the Chaldeans; assuring them of safety. Or thus, to give thee to the necks of them that are slain; so the Hebrew may be rendered; and then the meaning is, Thy false prophets and diviners, by their vanities and lies, do subject thee to the sword of Nebuchadnezzar, and make way for thy destruction, like the Jews.

"Of the wicked, whose day is come." These words, "of the wicked," are joined with the former in the Hebrew, to the necks of the slain of the wicked: and so is the Septuagint. All translations and expositors do join them; and they may refer either to the slain, or slayers, noting their wickedness. Some do refer them to the one, some to the other. Piscator by "wicked" understands the Chaldeans, and reads the words thus, upon the necks of them who are slain by the wicked.

"Whose day is come, when their iniquity shall have an end." The "day" of the Jews, that was "come," wherein God's judgments should cut them off, and put an "end" to their iniquity. Of these words, see ver. 25.

Obs. 1. When the Lord threatens sinful nations with sore judgments, they have those amongst them which divert them from the truth, possess them with delusions, and put them upon destructive practices. The Ammonites were threatened here with the Babylonish sword, but they neither believed Ezekiel nor Jeremiah, who told them the same thing, chap. xxvii. Their false prophets, their diviners, beat them off from it, possessed them with vanities and lies, put them upon insulting over the Jews, when the hand of the Lord was most heavy upon them, and so brought them to suffer by the same sword the Jews did. It is just with God to give men and nations over to believe lies, and lying prophets which shall lead them to destruction, when they have stopped their ears against the true prophets. Ahab would not believe Micajah, but the false prophets, who spake words according to his mind; but they were vanity, lies, and he smarted for it, 1 Kings xxii.

Obs. 2. Though the Lord forbear sinful nations long, yet he hath his days and times of reckoning with and punishing of them. The Jews' day was come, and their iniquity had an end; the Ammonites' day came, and their iniquity had an end: God punished them severely for their sins, Ezek. xxv. Nebuchadnezzar and the Babylonians were forborne long, but God had his time for them; Jer. xxvii. 7, "All nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son, until the very time of his land come: then many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of him." Babylon and its king had a time to sin and a time to suffer. God stayed many days, yet had his day, and came at the day appointed, Jer. l. 31; li. 13, "O thou that dwellest upon many waters, abundant in treasures, thine end is come, and the measure of thy covetousness." Babylon was insatiably covetous, robbing the nations of their riches, but all her wealth could not purchase one day's respite from the wrath of God, nor all her waters preserve her from the fire of his indignation; the fire God sent in his day burnt up their habitations, and licked up the water of Euphrates, whereon Babylon sat. God bare long with us, and the nations about us, but his day is come, he is visiting; we, they, have had our times of sinning, and now must have our times of suffering.

Ver. 30—32. Shall I cause it to return into his sheath? I will judge thee in the place where thou wast created, in the land of thy nativity. And I will pour out mine indignation upon thee. I will blow against thee in the fire of my wrath, and deliver thee into the hand of brutish men, and skilful to destroy. Thou shalt be for fuel to the fire; thy blood shall be in the midst of the land; thou shalt be no more remembered: for I the Lord have spoken it.

Some interpret these words of the Babylonians, as if God would deal with them after he had done with the Jews and Ammonites, which he did, according to the prophecies in Isa. xiii. and Jer. xxv. 50, 51; but this prophecy is against the Ammonites, whose land the Babylonish king laid waste some five years after the final destruction of Jerusalem, as Sanctius saith, citing the tenth book of Josephus' Antiquities for it.

"Shall I cause it to return into his sheath?" You Ammonites think that when the sword hath done execution upon the Jews, it will be sheathed, quiet, and proceed no further; but "shall I cause it to return into his sheath?" no, I will not give it any such commission, or if I do, it shall be for a short time, it shall come to you, and slay you as it hath done them. The Hebrew, הָיָה is infinitive put for an imperative, and so is rendered by some expositors, Put the sword, or, thy sword, into the sheath: thou thinkest to draw the sword, to defend thyself against the Chaldeans when I send them upon thee, but it shall be in vain, thou shalt not be able to stand against them; I will make thy strength and weapons useless.

"I will judge thee in the place where thou wast created." That is, I will punish the Ammonites in their own land, where they were born, where my hand created or framed them. They shall not be carried to Babylon, and be preserved there, but they shall be destroyed in their own country, at their own door; yet some were captives, Jer. xlix. Of this expression, "I will judge thee," was spoken, Ezek. xvi. 38.

"In the land of thy nativity." The Hebrew is, in the land of thy mansions, or peregrination. In terra negotiationum tuarum, saith Piscator, in the land of thy traffic, where thou hast pleasure and profit.

Ver. 31. "I will pour out mine indignation upon thee," &c. Here you have the resemblances to which God's judgment is likened.

1. It is compared to a flood, or torrent; to a great rain, or water, that runs swiftly, and bears down all; of which before, chap. vii. 8; xiv. 19; xx. 8, 13, 21.

2. To a wind, or storm; I will blow against thee. I will make such a wind, such a storm, as shall throw down all the greatness and glory of the Ammonites.

3. To a fire, which, where it kindles and fastens, consumes all to ashes. Of this before, chap. xv. 7.

"And deliver thee into the hands of brutish men." The word for "brutish" is, בְּעָרִים from בָּעַר to burn, and therefore in the margin it is, burning. God would deliver them into the hands of the Chaldeans, who were burning, that is, choleric, hasty, furious men, Hab. i. 6, "a bitter and hasty nation." The word also signifies, to be brutish, foolish, Psal. lxxiii. 22; I was foolish, brutish, and knew not; so that בָּעַר is, a man without knowledge, a barbarian, and so the Septuagint speaks, into the hands of barbarous men.

"Skillful to destroy." In the original, artists of corruption. In killing men they were very expert; they had been sundry times before at Jerusalem, slain many Jews, and knew how to destroy Ammonites.

Ver. 32. "Thou shalt be for fuel to the fire." Thou shalt be meat to the fire, that shall eat up thee, and thy habitations. As fire is fed by wood, coal, straw, turf, and such combustibles, so should the fire of God's wrath be fed with their vineyards, habitations, towns, cities, persons.

"Thy blood shall be in the midst of the land." Thou shalt be slain openly, lie in thy blood, unpitied, unburied.

"Thou shalt be no more remembered." This judgment shall deprive thee of life, and also of thy name; thou shalt have no monument to make mention of thee, but thy memory shall altogether perish, thou shalt be so handled, that not a vestige of thee shall be left.

Obs. 1. The Lord oft doth cross the thoughts and blast the hopes of wicked men. The sword came to the Ammonites when they thought it should not come; they hoped by their swords to beat back the Babylonians, and God bade them put up their swords into the sheaths, they should do them no good, the Babylonians should prevail. Zedekiah and the Jews thought Nebuchadnezzar would not draw his sword against them; if he did, they hoped the Egyptian sword would prove stronger than the Babylonian, but they were deceived in both: see Ezek. xvii. 12, 17. When princes and states trust in their strong men, and look for help, deliverance by them, the Lord disappoints them, and makes the pomp of the strong to cease.

Obs. 2. The Lord punishes sinners in the midst of their conveniences, pleasures, and profits. "I will judge thee in the place where thou wast created, in the land of thy nativity." There they had most conveniences, delights, contents, and thither God brings the sword, there he cuts them off: there they sinned, there they were impious, consulting with false prophets, diviners; there they were barbarous, inhuman, mocking at the calamities of the Jews when God visited them; and there God punished them. Thus hath God dealt with them in Ireland, in the land of their nativity, in the places of their delights and conveniences; where they sinned, there they suffered.

Obs. 3. Suddenly and easily can the Lord destroy sinful nations. "I will pour out mine indignation upon thee, I will blow against thee in the fire of my wrath, and deliver thee," &c. Floods, winds, storms, fires, come suddenly; and blowing is an easy thing: if God do but blow upon a nation in his wrath, it is undone; Isa. xl. 7, "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth: because the Spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it." If the Lord "blow" with a spirit of indignation upon a land or people, they wither away quickly, and come to nothing. Ver. 24, speaking before of princes, judges, and their stock, which seem to be rooted like mighty oaks and tall cedars, it is said, "He shall blow upon them, and they shall wither, and the whirlwind shall take them away as stubble." Let God "blow" upon princes, and their glory fades, their roots dry up. If God let out the fire of his wrath, who, what is not meat, fuel, for that fire? princes, people, cities, nations, are.

Obs. 4. Wicked nations, and persons, God takes away the name and memory of them. "Thou shalt be no more remembered" in way of merey, or for honour; but if at all, in way of wrath, and for reproach. Many nations since the fall of man, for their sins, are defunct, extinct, and buried in the darkness of oblivion.

Obs. 5. Judgments come not upon nations without the Lord, but because the Lord hath appointed them. The Ammonitish nation must be fuel for the fire, no more remembered; and why? "For I the Lord have spoken;" I, that am faithful, and will not falsify my word; I, that am able, and can inflict what is threatened; I have spoken, decreed, and appointed such things, and they must come to pass.

CHAPTER XXII.

Ver. 1—12. Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Now, thou son of man, wilt thou judge, wilt thou judge the bloody city? yea, thou shalt shew her all her abominations. Then say thou, Thus saith the Lord God; The city sheddeth blood in the midst of it, that her time may come, and maketh idols against herself to defile herself. Thou art become guilty in thy blood that thou hast shed; and hast defiled thyself in thine idols which thou hast made; and thou hast caused thy days to draw near, and art come even unto thy years: therefore have I made thee a reproach unto the heathen, and a mocking to all countries. Those that be near, and those that be far from thee, shall mock thee, which art infamous and much vexed. Behold, the princes of Israel, every one were in thee to their power to shed blood. In thee have they set light by father and mother: in the midst of thee have they dealt by oppression with the stranger; in thee have they vexed the fatherless and the widow. Thou hast despised mine holy things, and hast profaned my sabbaths. In thee are men that carry tales to shed blood; and in thee they eat upon the mountains: in the midst of thee they commit lewdness. In thee have they discovered their fathers' nakedness: in thee have they humbled her that was set apart for pollution. And one hath committed abomination with his neighbour's wife; and another hath lewdly defiled his daughter-in-law; and another in thee hath humbled his sister, his father's daughter. In thee have they taken gifts to shed blood; thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortion, and hast forgotten me, saith the Lord God.

Is this 22nd chapter, you have three messages of the Lord to the prophet. The

I. Is from the beginning to ver. 17, wherein a large catalogue of Jerusalem's sins are set down, with intermixture and addition of some threatenings and judgments.

II. Is from ver. 17—23, wherein is declared what the house of Israel is likened unto, and what the Lord will do with it.

III. Is from ver. 23 to the end, wherein is laid forth the general corruption of all sorts, both prophets, priests, princes, and people, with certainty of their destruction.

Ver. 1. "Moreover, the word of the Lord," &c. Prophets stir not till God stirs them; after God speaks to them, they may speak to others. God hath more still to communicate unto prophets, notwithstanding he hath communicated much: "Moreover the word," &c.; besides all delivered, this I have had from the Lord.

Ver. 2. "Wilt thou judge, wilt thou judge the bloody city?" The Hebrew word שפט signifies to judge; and because in judging two parties are to be dealt with, one wronging, the other wronged, hence the word notes sometimes, to plead for, to defend; sometimes, to sentence and punish: in this place, the former of these is most suitable, Son of man, wilt thou excuse, defend, and plead for this city? I tell thee it is a bloody city, a city that hath wronged me, and must not be pleaded for. Of these words were spoken before, chap. xx. 4.

If we read them as Montanus, Cœolampadius, and some others do, thus, Wilt thou not judge, wilt thou not judge the bloody city? that is, wilt thou not reprove, and tell it thoroughly of its iniquities? what! wilt thou faint, give over, and wink at the wickedness thou seest? is it not a part of thy prophetic office, to lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and to tell my people of their transgressions? Remember thine office, connive not at their sins, but cry out against them. In this sense, it affords this note: That prophetic men are oft discouraged, ready to cease from their work, and need to be roused and quickened thereunto by the Lord.

"The bloody city." The Hebrew is, the city of bloods, Jerusalem, which is so called, because she had shed much innocent blood, and was become very cruel: Jer. xix. 4, Ye "have filled this place with the blood of innocents;" and 2 Kings xxi. 16, Manasseh shed so much innocent blood therein, that he filled Jerusalem from one end to the other therewith: yea, so bloody was Jerusalem, that she filled the land with blood and bloody crimes, Ezek. vii. 23; ix. 9; and how bloody this city was, appears in verses 3, 4, 6, 9, of this chapter.

Obs. The sins of a city and nation may be such, that God will not have his prophets to plead or intercede for them, but to cry out against them. "Son of man, wilt thou judge, wilt thou judge the bloody city?" I know thou art very charitable, and ready to speak for them, but the city is so bloody, and full of abominations, that I will not have thee to appear or move for them, but thou must set their sins in order before them, and thunder out my judgments against them. When there is a fulness of sin, so that it is universal in all sorts, sinners are grown impudent and obstinate, then the Lord stops his ears and the mouths of his prophets, he will have no pleading for such a people. This was the case of Jerusalem, sin had spread itself through all ranks of people, as you shall find in this chapter, and her children were "impudent and hardhearted," Ezek. iii. 7.

Ver. 3. "The city sheddeth blood in the midst of it, that her time may come." Jerusalem shed blood in the midst of herself, so is the Hebrew; that is, publicly, fearlessly, freely, against law and light of nature, without all shame.

"That her time may come." She fills up the measure of her sins, that so the time of her destruction may make haste.

"And maketh idols against herself." In the former words was a violation of the second table, and in these is a violation of the first. Of the word "idols," or, dunghill gods, hath been spoken in former chapters. The Septuagint hath, devices, Jerusalem devised idols, and ways of worship, she fetched in the gods of other nations, and devised some of her own, but they were against herself; she thought they made for her, but they tended to her destruction.

Ver. 4. "Thou art become guilty in thy blood that thou hast shed." The word for "guilty" is, אשם and the original אשם signifies, to do wickedly, shamefully. Jerusalem, in shedding of blood, had done wickedly, shamefully, and so became guilty with a witness, exceeding guilty; she cut not off the wicked, to take guilt off from herself and the land, but she murdered the innocent, and multiplied guilt thereby upon herself and the nation.

"Thou hast defiled thyself in thine idols which thou hast made." Thou hast made idols, thinking thereby to please God, and pacify his anger, but they have defiled thee, made thee hateful unto God, and increased his wrath much more against thee. God had forbidden them to make to themselves idols or images, Exod. xx. yet they did make them, defiling thereby both the worship of God and their own souls, and so hastened their own destruction.

"Thou hast caused thy days to draw near, and art come even unto thy years." Thou hast, by thy transgressions, broken the thread of my patience, and hastened judgment to come upon thee, I gave ‘hree time to repent, and prevent my wrath from breaking out against thee, but thou, having abused my patience, mispent thy time, art become worse; and now vengeance is at thy gates, and ready to enter. The time is come for the sword to visit thee, and that thou shalt go into captivity.

“Therefore have I made thee a reproach unto the heathen.” Jerusalem was the habitation of God, Psal. lxxvi. 2; the city of the great King, Matt. v. 35; which the Lord took pleasure to protect and defend, Isa. xxxi. 5: it was the perfection of beauty, Psal. l. 2; the holy city, Matt. xxvii. 53; very honourable: but this city, and the inhabitants thereof, did the Lord make a “reproach” unto heathens. The word for “reproach” is, הרפה which notes, reproach, disgrace in word or action; and doubtless the Jews met with reproachful words and actions from the heathen. They were not yet made a “reproach,” but God intended them to be so: the pretence is put for the future.

“A mocking to all countries.” The Hebrew is, לִקְטָה a vilifying and scorning of a man. It is only in this place, and imports the scorning and vilifying of the Jews in all countries. The Septuagint hath it, for a derision and laughing-stock. It is rendered, Heb. xi. 36, “cruel mockings,” such mockings as argue cruelty and insulting.

Ver. 5. “Those that be near, and those that be far from thee, shall mock thee.” The nations round about thee, the Ammonites, Moabites, Idumeans; and those far off, the Babylonians.

“Which art infamous.” In the Hebrew it is, thou art polluted in thy name. Septuagint, who art named impure. Jerusalem, the faithful city, was become an harlot, Isa. i. 21, and like an “imperious whorish woman,” Ezek. xvi. 30; Jerusalem’s idolatry, blood, uncleanness, and profaneness, had made her infamous, and to be called the filthy, polluted, the oppressing city, Zeph. iii. 1.

“Much vexed.” The Hebrew words are, רבת הבהרה of much contrition; that is, a city greatly to be broken for thy wickedness. Septuagint, πολλή ἐν ταῖς ἀνομιαις, much in wickedness, which brought her much vexation.

From these three verses, thus opened, take these observations.

Obs. 1. That when people become idolatrous, they grow cruel. Jerusalem made idols, and shed blood; bloodiness, cruelty, and idolatry usually go together: she had idols in the midst of her, Ezek. xvi. 24, 25; and she shed blood in the midst of her: she was a public idolatress, and a public murderess. The Babylonians were very idolatrous, Ezek. xx. 32, and they were very bloody, Jer. li. 35. So Rome, which is called Babylon, Rev. xvii. was idolatrous and bloody; those she could not make drunk with the wine of her fornications, those she could not draw to popery and idolatry, she made herself drunk with their blood, ver. 26. How bloody popish idolaters are, the Parisian massacre heretofore, and the Irish of late do witness. When men once make gods, and form ways of worship, to themselves, they are zealous for them, will lavish out gold to maintain them, and be lavish of their blood that oppose them.

Obs. 2. Great sins do accelerate the judgments of God, they put wings unto them, and cause them to make haste. Jerusalem’s bloodiness and idolatries made her time to come, and days to draw near. Sinners, by their lewdness, do abbreviate God’s patience, and swiften his punishments; Psal. lv. 23, “Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days;” the length and strength of their wickedness shortens their days. In Job xxii. 16, it is said, “wicked men were cut down out of time;” and, chap. xv. 32, “It shall be accomplished before his time;” a wicked man, his life is gone, cut off before the just time; like a green tree, cut down before it come to perfection; and so is out of time, and before his time; he might have lived longer, had he not been so wicked: Eccles. vii. 17, “Be not over-much wicked, neither be thou foolish: why shouldst thou die before thy time?” the Hebrew is, not in thy time. Many men, through drunkenness, thefts, murders, duels, uncleanness, do die, not in their time, not in the time they might have lived unto; they die out of time, and before their time: and what is the cause? their own wickedness, and over-much wickedness precipitates their death. Haman’s enmity to Mordecai, and bloodiness against the Jews, brought the halter about his neck before his time. Herod’s pride caused the worms to eat him up before his time. The wickedness of many in our days hath brought them to the block, tempore non suo, out of time, or before their time.

Obs. 3. The sins of nations, cities, and people, do expose them to the reproachings and scornings of all sorts, both far off and near. Jerusalem and her people were very wicked, therefore saith God, “I have made thee a reproach unto the heathen, and a mocking to all countries. Those that be near, and those that be far from thee, shall mock thee;” Lam. ii. 15, “All that pass by clap their hands at thee; they hiss and wag their head at the daughter of Jerusalem, saying, Is this the city that men call The perfection of beauty, The joy of the whole earth?” All passengers, of what nation soever, when Jerusalem suffered, and was made desolate, clapped their hands, hissed, wagged their heads, gnashed their teeth, ver. 16, which were gestures of scorn and insultation, and uttered this bitter sarcasm, “Is this the city that men call The perfection of beauty, The joy of the whole earth?” see Jer. xviii. 15, 16. It was the Jews’ singing against God that made them a perpetual hissing, Lam. i. 8, “Jerusalem hath grievously sinned; therefore she is removed: all that honoured her despise her;” her sin transformed her honour into shame and despite. One of her sins was, that the word of God was a reproach to her and hers, Jer. vi. 10; therefore God made her and hers a reproach, a proverb, a taunt, a curse in all places, whither he should drive them, Jer. xxiv. 9. Not only the Moabites and Ammonites mocked them, when they were leading away captive, Why do you weep? you are going to your father’s house; but also the Babylonians; Psal. cxxxvii. 3, “Sing us one of the songs of Zion;” you say Zion is the joy of the whole earth, let us have a song of it, and see how joyful it will make you here in Babylon.

Obs. 4. Sin makes cities and citizens to have an ill name. Jerusalem’s wickedness made her infamous; her iniquities were great and many, and they caused her to hear ill. Formerly Jerusalem had been renowned, Ezek. xvi. 14, for beauty; the presence, ordinances, and worship of God, Psal. lxxvi. 1—4; renowned for her faithfulness, Isa. i. 21; for her holiness, Psal. ii. 6: for her justice and righteousness, Isa. i. 21: but now, through her idolatry, cruelty, profaneness, uncleanness, she had lost her beauty, faithfulness, holiness, and righteousness, she was become infamous as any strumpet: and, Ezek. xxiv. 6, 9, hath this infamous motto twice written upon her gates, “Woe to the bloody city!” “Woe to the bloody city!” And what were the citizens? rulers of Sodom and people of Gomorrah. Jerusalem was Sodom, Gomorrah: and what a brand was this to that city! and the people were Sodomites and Gomorrahians; and what an infamy was this unto them! How infamous was Jezebel, Jeroboam, and Judah for their wickedness! The Spirit of God resembles wicked men to things that are vile and infamous; as, the smoke of a chimney, Hos. xiii. 3, which blacks and infects; to sepulchres, which are stinking and loathsome, Matt. xxiii. 27; to despised, broken idols, Jer. xxii. 28; to dogs and swine, 2 Pet. ii. 22; to adders and serpents, Psal. lviii. 4; to dragons, Isa. li. 9; yea, to the devil, John vi. 70. If men would not have an ill name, be likened unto vile things, let them not do such things as will make infamous.

Obs. 5. Sin brings sad afflictions upon the sons of men. "Thou art much vexed." Jerusalem's sins multiplied her sorrows; she "vexed the fatherless and widow," ver. 7; she "vexed the poor and needy," ver. 29; and she had much vexation for it. The Ammonites, Egyptians, Babylonians vexed her; yea, the Lord vexed her with famine, sword, and pestilence. In Dent. xxviii. 20, it was told the Jews that God would send upon them cursing, vexation, and rebuke, till he had destroyed them; and why? because of the wickedness of their doings, because they forsook God; and, Isa. lxiii. 10, "They rebelled, and vexed his holy Spirit: therefore he was turned to be their enemy, and fought against them." When God is an enemy, and fights against a people, they have nothing but vexation. God makes every creature, every condition, vexatious.

Ver. 6. "Behold, the princes of Israel, every one were in thee to their power," &c. The Hebrew stands thus, The princes of Israel, every one according to his arm, were in thee: an arm, is put for power. Vatablus hath it, Every one of the princes, according to his power and place, did put forth himself to do unjust and cruel things. The "princes," who were set up above others, and empowered to have done justice impartially to all, they abused their power and places, to the defiling of Jerusalem with blood; there was no equity amongst them, tyranny prevailed.

Ver. 7. "In thee have they set light by father and mother." The law of God, and light of nature, teaches men to honour their parents, but Jerusalem had those in it, who violated both these laws. Children were come to such a height of wickedness, that they vilified their parents, and reproached them; both their natural and metaphorical parents. Septuagint, εκακολόγουσιν. Isa. iii. 5, "The child shall behave himself proudly against the ancient, and the base against the honourable;" this was now fulfilled in Jerusalem, and that curse pulled upon them, Deut. xxvii. 16, "Cursed be he that setteth light by his father," &c.

"In thee have they dealt by oppression with the stranger." The word for "oppression" is from pey which signifies, to oppress a man by force or fraud; and though the law was, that they should not vex or oppress a stranger, Exod. xxii. 21, yet now was the wickedness of Jerusalem such, that she by fraud and force did oppress the stranger.

By "stranger" is not meant, any one of other nations that came to Jerusalem, but him who, being VID. HET. IN adopted into the Jewish nation, became EXOD. XXII. 21. a proselyte. God took special care of such; (and so the Septuagint renders the word, strangers;) that so more might be encouraged to come in to the worship of the true God; but they oppressed them, and so shut the door which God had opened.

"In thee have they vexed the fatherless and the widow." Orphans and widows, being deprived of those who should be their help and strength, God himself hath declared for them, Psal. lxxviii. 5, "A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation;" and therefore pe-remptorily forbids the affliction of any widow or fatherless child, Exod. xxii. 22. And the sense is, not only that they should not harm them, but that they should protect them, plead their causes, and do them good; Isa. i. 17, "Judge the fatherless, plead for the widow;" but they were so far from this, that they afflicted and vexed them. The word here for "vexed" is, הני from ני to offer violence, to prey upon; they offered violence to the widows and fatherless, making a prey of them, which was a great vexation to their souls.

Ver. 8. "Thou hast despised nine holy things." The "holy things" were, all those things which were consecrated and dedicated to God, as the priests, the temple, the vessels of it, the sacrifices and sacraments they had, yea, all the ordinances of God, which they despised: the word קדש is, despising, out of pride and disdain. So did the Jews of old, so do many now through pride of heart, despise holy things. Religion was then vilified.

"And hast profaned my sabbaths." Of profaning or polluting the sabbath, you heard, chap. xx. 13, 16. It is the same word for "polluted" there, which you have for "profaned" here. God had commanded them to remember his sabbaths, to sanctify them, and promised great blessings unto them upon the due sanctification of them, Isa. lviii. 13, 14; but Jerusalem "profaned" them, and made them common, or worse than common, days.

Ver. 9. "In thee are men that carry tales to shed blood." The words for "men that carry tales" are, אנשי ריב for which the Septuagint gives you, ἀνδρες ληῆαι, thieves, robbers. Rachil is, one that narrowly observes another's words, and perverts them to the prejudice of him whose they were; the word is from רַחֵל rachel, a merchant, and סו is, one that, by carrying tales, sets to sale the fame, liberty, or life of his neighbour. It signifies also an apothecary, who mingles, blends things together, and sells them for his own advantage; so this carry-tale mingles something of his own with what he heard, and makes his advantage thereby. Montanus renders the words, virī delationis, men of carriage, because they seek out, pick up, or invent matter against another, and carry it to those that be in place, which here made way for shedding of blood. This kind of men are very pernicious. Solomon tells you, that the words of tale-bearers are as wounds, "they go down into the innermost parts of the belly," Prov. xviii. 8; they make way for the wounding and spilling the blood of the innocent. There were wicked princes and magistrates at that time in Jerusalem, glad to have occasions against the innocent, and these murderous tale-carriers possess them with falsehoods, to the prejudice of their lives.

"In thee they eat upon the mountains." They did eat there things offered to idols, in honour to the idols, otherwise it was not sinful to "eat upon the mountains." Of these words before, chap. xviii. 6, 11, 15.

"In the midst of thee they commit lewdness." Of "committing lewdness," see chap. xvi. 43. הַעֲוֹנוֹת the Septuagint translate, ἀνόμια, unholy things, that is, villainous things; thou that shouldst be holy, doest filthy things. So Lavater; and he saith zinnah notes, a villany done not ignorantly, or out of weakness, but on purpose; therefore the translation, which either is Vatablus's, or which he follows, hath it, a plotted wickedness. Chap. xi. 1, 2, Jaazaniah and Pelatiah did devise mischief; and such devised mischiefs are called here, zinnahs, lewdnesses. Jerusalem had those in her who made it their practice: Micah ii. 1, "Woe to them that devise iniquity, and work evil upon their beds!" In the night season, when their thoughts and spirits were most retired, fittest and strongest for meditation, then they devised iniquity: how to root out the righteous, to take away the prophets, to pervert the law, to promote idolatry, &c. and these were lewdnesses.

Ver. 10, 11. "In thee have they discovered their fathers' nakedness: in thee have they humbled her that was set apart for pollution. And one" (or, every one) "hath committed abomination with his neighbour's wife; and another hath lewdly defiled his daughter-in-law," &c. In these two verses are set out the incestuous, adulterous, and whorish doings of Jerusalem. In her, sons lay with their mothers, fathers with their daughters-in-law, brothers with their sisters, and every one with his neighbour's wife; and being not satisfied with those times which were fit for embracing, they humbled, they forced those who were set apart for pollution; all which things were forbidden in the law: see Lev. xviii. and xx. So filthy was Jerusalem at this time, that "they were as fed horses, every one neighing after his neighbour's wife," Jer. v. 8.

Ver. 12. "In thee have they taken gifts to shed blood." There are two sorts of gifts: first, such as are bestowed upon friends, and those who deserve well of us: these are lawful, and when given, testify esteem and thankfulness. And secondly, such as are given to retard, pervert, and corrupt justice: such were the gifts here, and they were forbidden, Exod. xxiii. 8; Deut. xvi. 19. This gift-taking was too common in Jerusalem: Isa. i. 23, "Every one loveth gifts, and followeth after rewards: they judge not the fatherless, neither doth the cause of the widow come unto them;" the fatherless and widows had no "gifts" to give them, therefore their causes could not be heard; they petitioned, but petitions without presents would do no good, for they judged for reward, Mic. iii. 11; and said, Give, give, Hos. iv. 18. If there were no "gifts," there was no justice.

"Thou hast taken usury and increase." Of these words, and this sin, was largely spoken in chap. xviii. 8, whither you are referred.

"And thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortion." Montanus renders the word for "greedily gained," appetebas, fraudabas, thou didst covet or deceive thy neighbours. The Hebrew is בצץ which signifies, to wound, to cut in pieces, and, to exercise covetousness. It notes an insatiable desire, which carries a man out to wrest and wring from his neighbour by any means, and so wounds him, squeezes, and cuts him in pieces.

Obs. 1. That great men, the princes and potentates of the earth, lay out themselves to tyrannize over and oppress the people. "Behold, the princes of Israel, every one were in thee to their power to shed blood." They all agreed in these two things, to oppress, and to oppress to the utmost. This doubtless made Jeremiah say, chap. iii. 5, of Jerusalem, "Behold, thou hast said and done evil things as thou couldest:" thy princes, which had arms and power, they have put forth the same, what they could, to do wickedly, to oppress and shed blood: what could they do more than take away the lives of men? This was the way great ones went of old: see Micah iii. 1—3; and Zeph. iii. 3.

Obs. 2. That forgetfulness of God is the cause of all the sins in a city or people. Jerusalem's sins are here reckoned up: cruelty, idolatry, slighting of parents, oppression of strangers, vexing of fatherless and widows, despising of holy things, profaning of sabbaths, tale-carrying to shed blood, eating upon the mountains, devising wickedness, incest, adultery, bribery, usury, extortion. And what is the root of all these? "Thou hast forgotten me, saith the Lord God." When men mind not what God commands, forbids, what he threatens, what he approves, when they acknowledge not his eye, his power, his judgments, the account they must give to him, they fall into all manner of sins, lewdnesses, and transgressions: when men forget God, they do not, they cannot fear him; and where the fear of God is not, they will not stick to shed blood, Gen. xx. 11, or do any wickedness. In Psal. l. 17—20, many sins of the Jews are recited; and what was the ground of those sins? they forgot God; ver. 22, "Consider this, ye that forget God." See Psal. cvi. 19, 20; Jer. xiii. 25; xviii. 15. When men forget God, they forget his law, which should regulate their lives, and so they live without God, and without law; they follow the lusts of their own hearts, and lie exposed to all evils.

Ver. 13—16. Behold, therefore I have smitten mine hand at thy dishonest gain which thou hast made, and at thy blood which hath been in the midst of thee. Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong, in the days that I shall deal with thee? I the Lord have spoken it, and will do it. And I will scatter thee among the heathen, and disperse thee in the countries, and will consume thy filthiness out of thee. And thou shalt take thine inheritance in thyself in the sight of the heathen, and thou shalt know that I am the Lord.

Having rehearsed Jerusalem's sins, here the Lord comes to set down his dislike of their ways, the judgments that should come upon them, and the end of those judgments.

I. His dislike, in ver. 13.

II. The judgments, in ver. 14, 15.

III. The end of them, in ver. 15, 16.

Ver. 13. "Behold, therefore I have smitten mine hand at thy dishonest gain which thou hast made." Smiting of hands is sometimes a sign of joy, as chap. xxi. 17, and sometimes of grief and anger, as here. God was so provoked with the heinousness of their sins, that he smites his hands together, both to testify his indignation against them, and readiness to take vengeance on them. When parents smite their hands at the lewd doings of their children, it is an argument of anger and grief, not of joy. God hath no hand, but it is spoken after the manner of men.

The word for "dishonest gain" is, בצץ from בצץ opened before. Montanus renders it, covetousness. Others, money gotten by fraud and force; such gain is "dishonest gain." The French is, avarice, that gain which comes in by overreaching, by forcing or sinking of others. That is "dishonest gain," when we do not as we would be done unto.

"And at thy blood which hath been in the midst of thee." Here are only two sins mentioned of all that went before, but the other are intended also; God smote his hands against them, though principally against these. Jerusalem had shed much innocent blood, which cried to God for vengeance, and caused him to smite his hands at her.

Obs. Covetousness and cruelty are sins that sorely provoke God. He smote his hands at their dishonest gain, and bloody doings; his spirit boiled up against them, and he was coming to be avenged on them. The Hebrews say there are twenty-four sins reckoned up in this chapter, and that God threatens the destruction of the city only for covetousness. The Jews were a people greedy of gain, given to covetousness, which makes men cruel, and oft bloody: Prov. i. 19, those who are greedy of gain, they take away the life of the owners, they suck their blood; Amos viii. 4, they "swallow up the needy;" Micah iii. 2, 3, they pluck off their skins, break their bones, and eat their flesh. And if covetous men are not cruel and bloody, yet they are abhorred of God for their covetousness: Psal. x. 3, "The wicked blesseth the covetous, whom the Lord abhorreth;" the word for "covetous," and that here for "dishonest gain," are both of the same verb, and differ very little. God abhors the covetous, and smites his hands at covetousness, and so he doth at bloodiness: Psal. v. 6, he "will abhor the bloody and deceitful man;" the Lord abhors them at the present, and he will make it manifest that he doth abhor them: God hath done it in the gospel, 1 Cor. vi. 10. Rev. xxi. 8, there it appears, that neither the covetous nor the bloody shall inherit the kingdom of heaven. Let us learn of God to smite our hands against these sins.

Ver. 14. "Can thine heart endure?" The Hebrew for "endure" is, נָצַח which Montanns and Oecolampadius render, stabilis, Will thy heart stand, or consist, when I shall deal with thee? The Septuagint is, ἐν ὑποστάσει ἢ καρδίᾳ σου, If thine heart shall stand it out; but the interrogation is more emphatical, Can thine heart stand, or endure? and carries the force of a negation. O Jerusalem! thou thinkest that when my judgments come, thou shalt be able to stand under them, but be thine heart never so stout or strong, my judgments will be too heavy for thee to bear them; when they come, thine heart will fail thee, fail thee of counsel, that thou shalt not know what to do, and fail thee of strength, that thou shalt not be able to do what thou knowest; thine heart will be in thine heels, thou wilt be more forward to flee than to consult, or stand it out upon consultation.

"Can thine hands be strong?" Thou thinkest to do some great matters, if Nebuchadnezzar draw near to thy gates; thou wilt call upon thy strong men to appear and make resistance, but their hands will be feeble, and unserviceable, not fit to handle or use weapons of war. Jerusalem, thou art deluded; consider with thyself, can thine hands be strong when I have "smitten mine hands" against thee? canst thou withstand me, or bear my judgments, when I shall thunder and throw them upon thee with a strong hand? Whatever fancies possess thine head, thou art not able to do it.

"In the days that I shall deal with thee." In the days that men have dealt with thee, thy counsel and power have prevailed; but what wilt thou do "in the days that I shall deal with thee?" I, that am "wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working," Isa. xxviii. 29; I, that work and none can hinder, chap. xliii. 13; I, that am "terrible to the kings of the earth," Psal. lxxvi. 12; I, that plead with fire and sword in my hand, Isa. lxvi. 16; I, that make mountains flow, and nations to tremble at my presence, Isa. lxiv. 1. 2; I, that make fruitful places wildernesses, and break down cities, Jer. iv. 26; what wilt thou do then? Those days are coming upon thee, and they will be the saddest days thou ever mettest with.

"I the Lord have spoken it, and will do it." Thou mayest hope it shall not be, that I will deal severely with thee, in whom I have delighted, and upon whom I have bestowed so many mercies; but know, I have resolved, spoken it, and will do it: I am not man, to repent of what I speak or do.

Obs. 1. Sinful cities and creatures are apt to confide in one thing or other, in their wisdom, strength, power, riches, friends. Jerusalem thought she had wherewith to keep off all judgments, or sufficient to enable her to wrestle with them if they came: "Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong?" Jerusalem thought so, had confidence that way, else the Lord would not have put these questions to her. Ezek. xvi. 15, "Thou didst trust in thy beauty;" in thy wealth, in thy walls, in thy soldiers, in thy counselors, in thy temple, in thy mountains, which were thy beauty. In Jeremiah's days it is evident that the wise, the rich, and strong men of Jerusalem did too much confide and glory in their wisdom, their riches, and strength, chap. ix. 23. Zephaniah saith of Jerusalem, that "she trusted not in the Lord," chap. iii. 2; her confidence was in falsehood, Jer. xiii. 25; that was, in things which proved false and deceitful: one of this kind was the Egyptian strength, Isa. xxx. 2; Ezek. xvii. 17. Not only did Jerusalem confide in falsehoods, but Babylon also, Isa. xlvii. 10; and Rabbah, Jer. xlix. 4; she once trusted in her wickedness, saying, "None seeth me:" the other in her treasures, saying, "Who shall come unto me?" It is not good to lean to our own wisdom, to rest upon our own strength, or strength of others; whoever makes flesh within, or flesh without, his arm, lies under a curse, Jer. xvii. 5; but he that trusts in the Lord, and in him only, he hath the blessing, ver. 7.

Obs. 2. God hath his times to reckon with sinners, to make them smart for their evil doings. "In the days that I shall deal with thee." God had his day to deal with Egypt; Ezek. xxx. 9, "As in the day of Egypt;" he met with Egyptians in the Red sea. He had his day to deal with Midianites; Isa. ix. 4, "As in the day of Midian;" when God smote them by the sword of Gideon, Judg. vii. that was the day God dealt with them. Men have their days to sin, and God hath his days to smite. Ahab had his day to do wickedly, and God had his day to deal with him, 1 Kings xxii. 34, 35. Abaz had his time to transgress, and God had his time to distress him for his transgressions, 2 Chron. xxviii. 19, 20. Ephraim had his days of sinning, and God had his day of rebuke to lay Ephraim desolate, Hos. v. 9. The Jews had their day to make a calf, and God had his day to cut off three thousand of them, Exod. xxxii. 28. Men sin, and think to hear no more of their sins, but God remembers them, and hath his days to visit for them. He hath a day for every one who is proud and lifted up, Isa. ii. 12; he hath a day for those that decree unrighteous decrees, that write grievousness, that wrong widows and fatherless ones, Isa. x. 1—3; he hath his day to deal with them, and so to deal with them, that they shall not know what to do: "What will ye do in the day of visitation?" to whom will ye flee for help? and where will ye leave your glory? Men will be thinking what to do, whither to flee, how to dispose of themselves and what they have, but the day of the Lord will be darkness and distress unto them. Whoever takes a time to sin against God, must expect a time wherein God will deal with him for so sinning; Rom. ii. 6, 9, God "will render to every man according to his deeds;" he hath his day to render "tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doth evil;" he hath his day wherein he will "judge the secrets of men," ver. 16. Would you "see good days, eschew evil, and do good; seek peace, and ensue it," 1 Pet. iii. 10, 11.

Obs. 3. God's judgments discover the vanity and rottenness of human confidences. "Can thine heart endure? can thine hands be strong, in the days that I shall deal with thee?" when I shall bring the sword, plague, and famine? no, thy heart will faint, thy hands will be feeble. If at the tidings of judgments their heart melted, their hands were feeble, every spirit faint, and all knees weak as water, as it is, chap. xxi. 7, what were they at the presence, sight, and sense of those judgments? they were like men without hearts and spirits, without hands and legs. God's judgments are fires which consume men's confidences, and make them see their own weakness. Men think they shall stand in the evil day; but if they cannot stand against the frowns and fury of the creature, how will they stand before the dreadful Creator? if footmen, horsemen, the swellings of Jordan, Jer. xii. 5, weary, sink men, what will the Lord of hosts do? if they cannot bear the lesser judgments, how will they bear the greater? If briars and thorns conceit themselves to be oaks and cedars, can they endure the fire? Isa. xxvii. 4, they will be burnt to ashes. What they said of Jehu, 2 Kings x. 4, Two kings were not able to stand before him, how then shall we stand? he is coming with the sword; may wicked cities more fully say of God, The old world could not stand before him, Sodom and Gomorrah could not stand before him, how then shall we stand? Egypt had men like fatted bullocks, but when the northern storm came upon them, they "turned back, they fled away together, they did not stand, because the day of their calamity was come upon them, and the time of their visitation," Jer. xlvi. 21. You may see what strong, mighty, and courageous men will do, when God deals with them, Joel ii. 14—16; their hearts could not endure, their hands, their feet, were not strong, to act or stand. Let us not sin, provoke the Lord by our vain confidences, for he is stronger than man.

Obs. 4. That the word of the Lord shall take place, whatever men's thoughts are. They thought Nebuchadnezzar would not come, or if he did, that they and the Egyptians should be able to deal with them, and prevent those evils which were threatened by the prophets; but, "I the Lord have spoken it, and will do it." Where he hath a mouth to speak, he hath a hand to do; it is not any power can hinder: "I will work, and who shall let it?" Isa. xliii. 13; not devils or men can do it. Neither will the Lord revoke what he hath said, and so prevent judgments intended; Isa. xxxi. 2, "He is wise, and will bring evil, and will not call back his words." Men often speak, threaten, and then after eat their words, call back their threatenings, saying, they were uttered in passion, inconsiderately, and so show their folly; but God, when he speaks, it is in wisdom, his words shall stand, and not be removed, or called back, Amos vi. 11. Hence is it that, Jer. xlv. 28, the Lord saith, "They shall know whose word shall stand, mine or theirs;" they shall see in a little time that their words are vanity, foolish, and come to nothing, and that my words are the words of wisdom, weighty, and stable. Zech. i. 6, "Did not my words and my statutes take hold of your fathers?" what God said was accomplished, and they could not but acknowledge it; "Like as the Lord of hosts thought to do unto us, so hath he dealt with us."

Ver. 15, "And I will scatter thee among the heathen, and disperse thee in the countries." Of their scattering and dispersing hath formerly been spoken. It was a great comfort to them to have their solemn meetings at Jerusalem, and in the temple; and as great an affliction to be deprived of them, and scattered as dust and chaff among the heathens, whose language they understood not, and whose religion was abomination to the God of Israel.

"And will consume thy filthiness out of thee." The Hebrew is, I will make thy filthiness to fail out of thee: so Montanus, I will make an end of thy filthiness. Thou art now so defiled with idols, blood, and other abominations, that thou art as a heap and bundle of "filthiness," even the filthy city; but I will throw thee into the furnace of affliction, and cause thy "filthiness" to depart from thee. By "filthiness" we may understand, filthy ones, the abstract being put for the concrete. Jerusalem had many filthy persons in it, and God would by his judgments consume them.

Obs. The Lord, by his judgments, doth purge out of cities and nations the wicked, and makes them and their wickedness to cease. "I will consume thy filthiness out of thee;" that is, thy filthy ones, with their "filthiness." God brought the sword, famine, pestilence upon Jerusalem, and by these did cut off and consume the filthy ones there. See Ezek. v. 12; Jer. xiv. 15; xvi. 4; Ezek. xliii. 14. God by his judgments destroyed Jerusalem, and so caused her "filthiness" to be at an end; Ezek. xvi. 40, 41, "They shall stone thee with stones, and thrust thee through with their swords; burn thine houses with fire, and execute judgments upon thee in the sight of many women: and I will cause thee to cease from playing the harlot." The same judgments you have, Ezek. xxiii. 47; and by them he would "cause lewdness to cease out of the land," ver. 48. By his judgments the Lord consumes the filthy out of the city and land, and "filthiness" out of the saints.

Ver. 16, "And thou shalt take thine inheritance in thyself." Hebrew is thus, Thou shalt inherit in thyself; thou shalt be thine own inheritance. Heretofore thou wast mine inheritance, but it shall be so no longer; I will cast thee off, being so filthy as thou art, and thou shalt have no "inheritance" in me, but in "thyself." Some making the word to be from שָׁרַף to wound, to profane, do render it in the first person, thus, I will wound thee: so Symmachus, I will defile thee, and profane thee; so Theodotion, The Septuagint, is, I will possess in thee; that is, I will have a people for my possession among you, when you are scattered abroad among the heathens. It is true God had a people among them when they were in Babylon; but the Hebrew is not in the first person. Piseator hath it thus, Thou shalt be made profane in thyself; thou shalt be cast off by me into banishment, and be no other in my account than a common and profane people; I will account of thee so, and deal accordingly with thee. So the words are to be understood, Isa. xliii. 28; xlvii. 6; where the Lord is said to profane the princes, and pollute his inheritance. This sense may well stand with the first, for if God made them a profane and common people, they had no "inheritance" in him, but their "inheritance" was in themselves.

"In the sight of the heathen." Heathens shall see that thou art a people cast off of thy God for thy wickedness, and exposed to reproach, cursing, and as great miseries as ever any people were.

Obs. 1. That the wickedness of God's people doth disinterest them in God; it makes God disown them, and leave them to themselves. They might think and say they were still the people, the "inheritance," of God, that they had interest in him; but "thou shalt take thine inheritance in thyself," I disclaim thee, I cast thee off as profane, and look upon thee no otherwise than I do upon heathens. It was the wickedness of the ten tribes which made the Lord to say, "Lo-ammi, ye are not my people, and I will not be your God." Hos. i. 9; in which prophet you may read largely of their sins. Chapter viii. 3, tells you, that Israel had cast off the thing that was good, viz. the worship of God; and, ver. 5, "Thy calf, O Samaria, hath cast thee off;" that is, thy false worship hath made me to cast thee off, to declare thee to be none of my city, and thy people to be none of mine. In the twelfth chapter of Jeremiah you have that which bears witness fully to this observation; ver. 7—9, "I have forsaken mine house, I have left mine heritage; I have given the dearly beloved of my soul into the hand of her enemies. Mine heritage is to me as a lion in the forest; it crieth out against me: therefore have I hated it. Mine heritage unto me is as a speckled bird, the birds round about are against her; come ye, assemble all the beasts of the field, come to devour." The meaning of these words is this: That the Jews were once very dear to God, even as dear as any wife can be to a husband; but because, like lions, they carried it stoutly against God, and cried out against him and his prophets, therefore he forsook them, hated them, and gave them into the hands of the Babylonians; and because Jerusalem was as a "speckled bird" in the eye of God, through her variety of gods, altars, superstitions, and idolatries, therefore God caused the birds of all the nations to hoot at and hate her, even as birds do a "speckled bird," inviting them, and all the beasts of the field, to come and devour her. And why all this? they dealt treacherously, ver. 1; they were hypocritical, ver. 2; they were wicked, ver. 4. The Jews had been a people precious in the sight of God, and honourable, Isa. xliii. 4; Jerusalem his habitation, and the people of it his inheritance and his glory, whom he protected, Isa. iv. 5; yet by their sins they provoked God, so as that he gave "his strength into captivity, and his glory into the enemy's hand," Psal. lxxviii. 61.

Obs. 2. That God's judgments bring people to the knowledge of God. It rises from the former verse and this laid together. God would scatter them, consume them, cast them off, leave them to themselves, and they should know that he was the Lord: Psal. ix. 16, "The Lord is known by executing judgments;" his power, his justice, and sovereignty are known thereby, and so men are made to fear, and stand in awe of him. When God is silent, and speaks not by his judgments, men think he is like themselves, Psal. i. 21; and are emboldened to sin, Eccles. viii. 11; but when God thunders by his judgments, they have other apprehensions of him, 1 Sam. vi. 19, 20.

Ver. 17—22. And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, the house of Israel is to me become dross: all they are brass, and tin, and iron, and lead, in the midst of the furnace; they are even the dross of silver. Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye are all become dross, behold, therefore I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem. As they gather silver, and brass, and iron, and lead, and tin, into the midst of the furnace, to blow the fire upon it, to melt it; so will I gather you in mine anger and in my fury, and I will leave you there, and melt you. Ye, I will gather you, and blow upon you in the fire of my wrath, and ye shall be melted in the midst thereof. As silver is melted in the midst of the furnace, so shall ye be melted in the midst thereof; and ye shall know that I the Lord have poured out my fury upon you.

In these words is the Lord's second message to Ezekiel, wherein is set forth,

I. The degenerate estate of the Jews, under the similitude of "dross," ver. 18.

II. God's judicial proceeding with them being "dross," ver. 19—22.

1. He would "gather" them together.

2. "Blow" upon them.

3. "Melt" them.

III. The end of his so dealing with them, ver. 22.

Ver. 17. "And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying." These words we have had oft, and in ver. 1 of this chapter. God being upon bringing judgments upon his people, gives them notice thereof by his prophets; he speaks before he strikes.

Ver. 18. "The house of Israel is to me become dross." The house of Israel, viz. the Jews, had been of high account with God, they were once his chosen people above all others, Deut. vii. 6; they were once "a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation," Exod. xix. 6; they were once so honourable and precious, that God gave and destroyed other nations for their sakes, Isa. xliii. 4; they were once his portion, his inheritance, Deut. xxxii. 9; Isa. xix. 25; they were once his vineyard, and pleasant plant, Isa. v. 7; they were once "a people near unto him," Psal. cxlviii. 14; the dearly beloved of his soul, Jer. xii. 7; his peculiar people, Exod. xix. 5: but now they were become "dross," they had degenerated from their former faithfulness, justice, honesty, sincerity, and purity.

The word for "dross" is, צב סג, which is, whatsoever the fire separates from any metal. Metals have something of an heterogeneous nature to themselves, which being separated by fire or any other way, is that we call "dross." The house of Israel here is not said to be drossy, but to be "dross;" it is fit therefore to see wherein the resemblance lies between them.

1. The "dross" obscures the lustre and glory of the metal, yea, covers it up, so that it appears not; rust and filth compass and hide the gold, so that neither the nature or lustre of it can be seen. So the house of Israel was such at this time, that no gold, no silver appeared: Jer. v. 1, "Run ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man, if there be any that executeth judgment, that seeketh the truth;" Jer. ix. 2, "They be all adulterers, an assembly of treacherous men;" Zeph. iii. 7, "They rose early, and corrupted all their doings;" Jer. vi. 28, "They are all grievous revolvers, walking with slanders: they are brass and iron; they are all corrupters:" there was no pure metal appeared amongst them, especially gold or silver. If there were some righteous, just, holy, faithful ones amongst them, they lay hid under the "dross."

2. "Dross" is a deceiving thing. It is like metal, but is not metal; the dross of silver is like it, and so the dross of gold is like it, but the dross is neither silver nor gold: so the house of Israel was deceitful, hypocritical, like saints, but not saints; see Isa. x. 6; lviii. 2. Chap. ix. 17, "Every one is an hypocrite, and an evil-doer, and every mouth speaketh folly." They professed themselves to be the people of God, yet were not such as they seemed to be, Jer. vii. 2, 4, 9, 10; they were like potsherds covered with silver dross, Prov. xxvi. 23.

3. "Dross" is not bettered by the fire: put it into the fire time after time, it abides so still. God had oft put the Jews into the furnace of affliction, and heated the furnace sometimes very hot, but they were the same still: they had been in the Egyptian fire, 2 Kings xxiii. 33; in the Syrian and Chaldean fire, chap. xxiv. 2, and other fires; but none of them did them any good: Jer. v. 3, "Thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved; thou hast consumed them, but they have refused to receive correction;" and not only did the prophet complain thus, but the Lord himself; chap. ii. 30, "In vain have I smitten their children; they received no correction:" they were nothing the better for all God's blows and fires, "dross" they were, and "dross" they continued.

4. "Dross" is a worthless thing. It is of no value, base, vile, contemptible: such was the house of Israel, and chief in it; Jer. xxiv. 8, Zedekiah the king his princes, and the rest of Jerusalem, were as evil figs which could not be eaten: the kingdom was base, Ezek. xvii. 14; the city a harlot, chap. xvi. 35; she changed the judgments of God into wickedness more than the nations, chap. v. 6; and was more vile than Sodom and Samaria, chap. xvi. 47.

5. It is useless, and to be rejected. The Jews now were so corrupted, so wicked, so unprofitable, that the Lord was casting them off, and out; Jer. vi. 30, "Reprobate silver shall men call them, because the Lord hath rejected them." As the wood of the vine, when fruitless, is not fit for any thing but the fire, Ezek. xv. so the dross of silver is not fit for any thing but rejection. The house of Israel being become "dross," the Lord saith, Jer. vii. 15, "I will cast you out of my sight, as I have cast out all your brethren, even the whole seed of Ephraim:" the ten tribes they proved "dross," and the Lord cast them away, and now he would cast Judah and Benjamin out of his sight; and when he did it, they were the offscouring and refuse in the midst of heathens, Lam. iii. 45.

6. "Dross" is an offensive thing, rust eats into the metal, endangers that, and makes the goldsmith to kindle the fire, to separate it from the gold and silver. So wicked men are offensive to God and good men, and cause the Lord to bring his fiery judgments to separate between the precious and the vile. The wickedness of the house of Israel caused God to bring the sword, famine, plague, captivity, and by these to purge out and consume the filthiness of Jerusalem.

"All they are brass, and tin, and iron, and lead." Before, he had said they were dross; how doth he now call them, brass, iron, tin, lead? these are good metals. True, in themselves they are so, but compare them with silver or gold, they are but as dross, base metals; so tin is reckoned in Scripture account, Isa. i. 25; so brass, iron, and lead are reputed, Jer. vi. 28, 29. When pure religion, judgment, and righteousness were in the house and city of Israel, then she was silver, precious and good metal; but falling to idolatry, oppression, and profaneness, her silver became dross, and her children became brass, that is, "impudent and hardhearted," Ezek. iii. 7; tin, that is, hypocritical, being all in show nothing in substance, chap. xxxiii. 31; iron, that is, cruel, bloody, inflexible, so were the great ones, man in place, chap. xxxiv. 2, 4; Zeph. iii. 3, 4; Jer. v. 5; lead, that is, sottish and stupid, Jer. iv. 22: chap. viii. 9, "They have rejected the word of the Lord; and what wisdom is in them?" that which should have enlightened them, and made them wise, that they rejected, and so were foolish and sottish.

"In the midst of the furnace." In the 11th chapter, 3rd and 7th verses, the city is called a "caldron," and the people the "flesh" to be boiled in it; and here it is called the "furnace," and the people the "brass, tin, iron, lead," to be melted in it. God would make Jerusalem a furnace of affliction, and cast the dross and base metal into it. The Jews had so degenerated from the golden and silvery purity of their fathers, that they had no preciousness in them, nothing left but dross, or that which was base as dross.

"They are even the dross of silver." Their fathers were true believers, sincere worshippers, just dealers, covenant keepers, and so were like unto silver, precious, pure, white, desirable; but these their children were "dross, even the dross of silver," faithless, hypocritical, unjust, perjured. The nations were dross, but not the dross of silver, they were never of higher account than brass, tin, iron, lead; only the Jews were accounted silver, and now they were become the "dross of silver," worse than the nations, 2 Kings xxi. 9.

Ver. 19, 20. "I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem. As they gather silver, and brass, and iron, and lead, and tin, into the midst of the furnace." The Hebrew is, I will gather you with the gathering of silver, that is, with such a gathering, that like as the founder, silver or goldsmith, when he would prove the metals digged out of the mines, what they are, and separate the dregs and dross from them, he gathers them together, and puts them into the furnace; so would the Lord do by the Jews, he would gather them from all parts of Judea into Jerusalem, which was the furnace, when God brought Nebuchadnezzar with his army to besiege it.

"To blow the fire upon it, and to melt it." When the metals are in the furnace, then the founder causes the fire to be blown, the heat to be heightened, till the metals be melted, that so the scum and dross being taken away, they may be malleable and useful.

"So will I gather you in mine anger and in my fury, and I will leave you there, and melt you." The Lord finding his people to be dross, or mingled with base metals, he was greatly provoked; and so, in his anger and fury, gathered them into the furnace, and there left them to be melted.

The fire God used in the melting of them was famine, plague, and sword, which melted many of them; and then the burning coals scattered over the city, Ezek. x. 2, which melted the furnace, and them that were left in it.

Ver. 21. "I will gather you, and blow upon you in the fire of my wrath." The word for "blow upon you" is, נפחתי; the same with that in the 20th verse; that like as the founder blows, and gives not over blowing till the metals are melted, and the dregs separated, so the Lord he would blow upon them, that is, exercise them with severe judgments one after another, till they should be melted and consumed, and the vile separated from the precious. This expression of blowing upon them in the fire of his wrath, is the same with that in the former chapter, ver. 31. "I will blow against thee in the fire of my wrath;" when God blows against any, he blows upon them, and the breath of his nostrils burns as fire.

Ver. 22. "As silver is melted in the midst of the furnace, so shall ye be melted in the midst thereof." Their melting is oft spoken of, ver. 20, 21; and here God was serious in the business, and resolved upon it, nothing should now prevent it, not the intercession of Moses and Samuel, Jer. xv. 1.

"And ye shall know that I the Lord have poured out my fury upon you." Though the greatest part were consumed by those sad and severe judgments God brought upon them, yet some escaped, some were carried into Babylon, another furnace, to melt out their remaining dross; and they were made to know, and acknowledge, that the Lord had poured out his fury upon them.

Of pouring out fury, or fury poured out, see chap. xx. 33.

Obs. 1. That churches or states may degenerate from their preciousness and purity, into vileness and profaneness. "The house of Israel is become dross, even the dross of silver;" it was so degenerated, that it went beyond others in wickedness; which made Isaiah to wonder, chap. i. 21—23, "How is the faithful city become a harlot!" not simply a harlot, but a great and notorious harlot: "it was full of judgment, and righteousness lodged in it," but instead of these, now there was oppression and murder. "Thy silver is become dross, thy wine is mixed with water;" thy money is counterfeit, and thy wine corrupt; or thus, whatever was pure in thee, is now corrupted, the law is corrupted with false expositions, the worship is corrupted with idols and human traditions, justice is corrupted with bribery and bloody oppressions, chastity and sobriety are corrupted with lewd and unclean practices. Jerusalem had lost her excellency, and was become loathsome, as a filthy harlot, doing the work of "an imperious whorish woman," Ezek. xvi. 30; Jer. vii. 9—11, she justified herself in her sinful and shameful practices, and made the house of God a den of thieves. Rome was once a golden city for her faith and holiness, Rom. i. 8; xvi. 19; but now is so corrupt in doctrine, worship, and manners, that she is become "the mother of harlots and abominations," Rev. xvii. 5. The seven churches were once golden candlesticks, but through their corruptions and weaknesses, they soon degenerated into dross.

Obs. 2. That men professing godliness, and living ungodlily, whatever others' thoughts are of them, or whatever they think of themselves, they are not acceptable to God, nor fit materials of a church. "The house of Israel is to me become dross:" they profess my name, and so judge themselves good silver, precious in my sight, and others accord with them therein; but they live wickedly, and to me they are no better than dross, than brass, tin, iron, and lead, too base materials to make a temple for me to dwell in, or a candlestick for me to set a prophetic light in. Such persons, whatever profession they make, whatever parts or privileges they have, they are no silver, but the dross, the excrements of silver, which defile, disgrace the name, the church, the ordinances of God, and must be separated from the gold and silver, 2 Cor. vi. 17. As the prophet saith, "What is the chaff to the wheat?" Jer. xxiii. 23; so, what is the dross to the silver? It is fitter for the dunghill than the temple. Many that appear silver unto men, will be found dross unto God. The best have some dross in them, they are drossy, but not dross. Hypocrites and wicked ones are dross; only hypocrites are the "dross of silver."

Obs. 3. The greatest part of professors, when they come to the trial, will be found corrupt and naught. "All they are brass, and tin, and iron, and lead, in the midst of the furnace." When they came to be tried, what metal they were of, they proved all to be base metal and dross; the furnace discovered them. The prophets told them what they were, Jer. vi. 13; viii. 10; ix. 2—4, viz. covetous, false dealers, treacherous, liars, slanderers, deceivers, &c.; Isa. i. 4, a "sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil-doers, corrupters," &c. But they believed not the prophets, telling them what they were, and what judgments would come upon them for their sins: but notwithstanding all their wickedness, they cried, "The temple, the temple, the temple," Jer. vii. 4; they worshipped God, and called themselves citizens of the holy city, Isa. xlvi. 1, 2. They leaned upon the Lord, and said, Is not the Lord among us? doth not he own us for his people? are not we his portion, and he our God? none evil can come upon us. Thus they flattered themselves that they were good metal, and precious; but when the Lord gathered them into the furnace, he found them dross; they were no better in the account of God than Sodomites and Gomorrahites, Isa. i. 10; Jer. xxiii. 14; the city, and all the inhabitants of it, were a provocation unto him, Jer. xxxii. 31, 32, and he was destruction unto it and them. In the city was found much dross, but little silver; much brass, tin, iron, lead, but little gold. Since the Lord hath put us into the furnace of affliction, have not many been discovered to be dross, who appeared silver before? Are all those pure metal which make profession now? Most will be found brazen, tinny, iron, and leaden; the number of sincere and silver-like Christians will be few. What Paul said to the Corinthians, 2 Epist. xii. 20, that may the Lord say to this city, and professors every where; "I fear, lest, when I come, I shall not find you such as I would, and that I shall be found unto you such as ye would not." Look to it, that you be sincere.

Obs. 4. In the degeneracy of a people, some do degenerate more than others, into a worse condition than the rest. Here some were brass, some tin, some iron, some lead, and some the dross of silver. The house of Israel was degenerated into base metals, which were one worse than another, yea into dross, yea dross (for so the word is in Hebrew) of silver. Some were impudent, some hypocritical, some murderers, some brutish, some idolatrous, some atheistical, some unclean and profane; see Ezek. viii. 10—16. Some did great, and others greater abominations; some did evil with both hands, and that earnestly, Micah vii. 3; the best of them were briars and thorns, ver. 4, and the rest were scorpions, Ezek. ii. 6; and the iniquity of the house of Israel was exceeding great, chap. ix. 9. When once people do degenerate from their honesty, their principles, their profession, some go further than others; Jer. vii. 26, "they did worse than their fathers;" chap. ix. 3, "they proceed from evil to evil;" they stayed not till they became dross, yet one was worse dross than another. In our days hath been great degenerating, and some are degenerated into brass, some into tin, some into iron, some into lead, some into the dross of silver.

Obs. 5. Those who degenerate from God and his ways, from principles of honesty and equity, be it more or less: that they degenerate from them, they shall meet with fury and fire from the Lord. "Because ye are all become dross, I will gather you in mine anger and in my fury, into the midst of the furnace, and blow upon you in the fire of my wrath," to melt you, to consume you. When the church of Ephesus decayed in her first love, that of Pergamos turned aside to doctrines of Balaam and the Nicolaitanes, that of Thyatira to the teachings and seductions of Jezebel; when Sardis abated in her zeal, and Laodicea became lukewarm; the Lord threatened them severely; and at last brake the candlesticks, and put out the lights, Rev. ii. and iii. Be they states, churches, families, or persons that degenerate, God hath no pleasure in them, Heb. x. 38; but will cast them "into great tribulation," Rev. ii. 22, and be unto them a consuming fire, Ezek. xxi. 31. And David tells you, Psal. cxix. 119, that God will put away all the wicked of the earth from him like dross, at the last day; this he will do, and be an eternal consuming fire unto them.

Obs. 6. Melting and consuming judgments upon a people are the wrath of God, whoever be the executioners thereof. Nebuchadnezzar should besiege Jerusalem, and make it like a furnace to melt and consume the Jews, and this the Lord owns to be his doing; ver. 22, "And ye shall know that I the Lord have poured out my fury upon you:" it was not Nebuchadnezzar nor the army's fury, but the fury of the Lord; they were only the vials or vessels by which it was poured out. And now if fury Sept. 3, 1650, were the Scots routed, four thousand slain, and ten thousand taken. have been poured out in Scotland, it is not the army hath done it, but the Lord, who gathered them together, as brass, iron, lead, and tin in a furnace, blew upon them in the fire of his wrath, melted and consumed them as dross; and you must know it was the Lord, not man, that poured out his fury upon them, and those the Lord hath made vessels of mercy unto us, who have been vials of his fury towards them. If you will mourn for God's severity towards them, yet rejoice for his goodness towards us.

Ver. 23, 24. And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, say unto her, Thou art the land that is not cleansed, nor rained upon in the day of indignation.

Here begins the third message of the Lord unto the prophet. The 23rd verse is the same with the 17th and 1st, and we pass it by.

Ver. 24. "Thou art the land that is not cleansed." In this verse is laid down the pollution of the land in general; in the verses following it is more particularly expressed.
